

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

I. LEASES AND AGREEMENTS, IN GENERAL.

1. Parties.

Tenants in tail.]—If a tenant in tail reserves an entire rent upon a farm, in which some leasehold lands are mixed with the entailed lands, the lease is not good against the reversioner. Rees v. Philip, Wightw. 69.

A tenant in tail in remainder during the lifetime of the tenant for life, demised for several terms of ninety-nine years, at different dates, to commence immediately. In ejectment by one of the posterior lessees:—Held, that by virtue of 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 9, the leases without entry of the lessees, operated not by way of interesse termini, but as grants of estates or interests out of a remainder to which the tenants of the preceding estates had attained. Doe d. Agar v. Brown, 2 El. & Bl. 331; 17 Jur. 1161; 23 L. J., Q. B. 432.

A., tenant in tail, made a lease for years to B., not conformable to 32 Hen. 8, c. 28. A. died, and C., the next in tail in remainder, applied to B. to attorn, and demanded rent from him. B. did not attorn; and, after some negotiation, refused to pay any rent, on the ground that D. was entitled to the estate:—Held, that B. did not become tenant to C., and that C. could maintain ejectment against B. without serving him with notice to quit; and that the setting up the title of D. amounted to a disclaimer of the title of C. Doe d. Phillips v. Rollings, 4 C. B. 188; 17 L. J., C. P. 263.

If a tenant in tail makes an agreement, not under seal, to let land for fourteen years, and then dies, the issue in tail cannot be compelled specifically to perform the agreement by granting a lease under 32 Hen. 8, c. 28. Osborn v. Marlborough, 13 Jur., N. S. 559; 14 W. R. 886; 14 L. T., N. S. 789—V. C. 8.

Tenants for life and remaindermen.]—A tenant for life, with remainder to A., B. and C., in common in fee, granted a lease of the estates to D. for twenty-one years, which lease was confirmed by A. and C.:—Held, that the lease was good as against A. and C., and that B. could not impeach it in a suit for partition, in which he was a co-plaintiff with A. Story v. Johnson, 2 Y. & C. 586.

When a demise is determined by the expiration of the landlord's estate, and the tenant continues to hold under the remainderman, paying the same rent, the question whether a term contained in the former tenancy is adopted into a new contract of demise is a question of fact. If such a tenant continues to hold under the remainderman, and nothing passes between them except the payment and receipt of rent, the new landlord is not bound by a stipulation contained in the former tenancy, which is not known to him, in fact, nor is according to the custom of the country. Oakley v. Monck, 4 H. & C. 251; 1 L. R., Exch. 159; 35 L. J., Exch. 87; 14 W. R. 406; 14 L. J., N. S. 20—Exch. Cham.

A tenant for life granted a lease containing a covenant that he would, at the expiration of the term, pay and allow the lessee, a nurseryman, for all fruit trees and shrubs then on the premises which had been planted by him. At the expiration of the lease, the lessee continued in possession, and paid rent, and upon the death of the tenant for life, he paid the same rent to the remainderman, who was not aware of the covenant in the lease:—Held, that there was no evidence that the tenancy continued upon the terms of the lease, so as to bind the remainderman by the covenant. Id.

A tenant for life having power to grant leases in possession may bind himself by covenant to grant a lease in reversion expectant on the determination of a subsisting term; but a trustee having a similar power cannot, for he is bound to exercise the power for the benefit of the estate. Moore v. Clench, 45 L. J., Chanc. Div. 80; 1 L. R., Ch. Div. 447; 24 W. R. 169; 34 L. T., N. S. 18.

Joint tenants.]—Where a farm was demised to A. and B. jointly, and A., by agreement, underlet part of it to C., and gave receipts for payment of rent, and a notice to quit, in his name alone:—Held, that A. and B. could not maintain a joint action against C. for pulling down a shed which stood on part of the premises demised. Steel v. Western, 7 Moore, 29.

As to the nature and incidents of the various estates in land,—see ESTATE.

A tenant from year to year may make a lease for twenty-one years. Mackay v. Mackreth, 4 Dougl. 213; 2 Chit. 461.

As to the nature and incidents of tenancies from year to year,—see this title, XVI.

Outstanding equitable interests or liens.]—A. agreed to demise premises to B. There was an outstanding equitable interest vested in C.:—Held, that B. was bound to accept a demise from A., in which C. joined, and was not justified in insisting on A. obtaining a release from C., in order to enable him alone to make a valid demise. Reeves v. Gill, 1 Beav. 375.

A lease granted after a judgment signed against the lessor is void. Doe d. Putland v. Hilder, 2 B. & A. 782.

Ecclesiastical persons, corporations, &c.]—A new lease made by the warden and poor of an hospital, under their corporate seal, before the expiration of a former lease, to a lessee, who had then only a part interest in the first lease, but to whom the entire interest was assigned within three years afterwards, is binding on the succeeding warden and poor of such hospital. Grumbrell v. Roper, 3 B. & A. 711.

Churchwardens only cannot execute leases as a body corporate of parish lands under 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 17. Phillips v. Pearce, 8 D. & R. 43; 5 B. & C. 433.

Leases by the churchwardens of A., in which the demised tenement is described as parcel of the lands of the parish church of

A., and payment of the rent to them, are prima facie evidence that the tenement is parish property. Doe d. Higgs or Hobbs v. Cockell, 6 N. & M. 179; 4 A. & E. 478.

Leases granted by deans and chapters for long terms of years, not in conformity with the disabling and restraining statutes, are not void, but voidable only. Pennington v. Cardale, 3 H. & N. 656; 27 L. J., Exch. 438.

By 18 Eliz. c. 10, s. 3, all leases made by spiritual persons other than for the term of twenty-one years, or three lives, whereupon the accustomed yearly rent or more shall be reserved, are void:—Held, that, in order to render a lease valid under this statute, it must be made of land which had been previously let, or on which some rent had been reserved. Doe d. Tennyson v. Yarborough, 7 Moore, 258; 1 Bing. 24.

A lease for twenty-one years, made within three years of a former existing lease, by a vicar, of premises belonging to a vicarage situate in London, not being the capital messuage or dwelling-house used for the habitation of the vicar, nor having ground to the same belonging above the quantity of ten acres, is a valid lease, notwithstanding the restraining statutes 13 Eliz. c. 10, 14 Eliz. c. 11, and 18 Eliz. c. 11. Vivian v. Blomberg, 3 Scott, 681; 3 Bing. N. C. 311; 2 Hodges, 255.

A perpetual curate, whose curacy has been augmented by a grant of lands under the Queen Anne's Bounty Acts, cannot make a lease for three lives without the consent of the ordinary. Doe d. Richardson v. Thomas, 1 P. & D. 578; 9 A. & E. 557.

The 5 & 6 Vict. sess. 2, c. 27, does not abridge any right of leasing formerly enjoyed by incumbents. Green v. Jenkins, 1 De G., F. & J. 454; 28 Beav. 87; 6 Jur., N. S. 515; 20 L. J., Chanc. 505; 8 W. R. 380. See Jenkins v. Green, 27 Beav. 440.

As to leases of ecclesiastical property,—see ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

Authority of agents, stewards and bailiffs.]

—An agreement for a lease, made with an agent who acts under a power of attorney, and a lease executed by such agent in pursuance of the agreement, effectually binds the principal. Hamilton v. Clanricarde, 1 Bro. P. C. 341.

If a man describes himself, in the beginning of an agreement to grant a lease, as making it on behalf of another, but in a subsequent part of it says that he will execute the lease, he is personally liable. Norton v. Herron, 1 C. & P. 648; R. & M. 229—Best.

A steward has no general authority to enter into contracts for granting leases of farms for a term of years. Collen v. Gardner, 21 Beav. 540.

A farm bailiff or an agent accustomed to let farms upon the ordinary terms, and receive the rents, has no authority in law to let upon unusual terms unknown to the owner, and the question was left to the jury as one of fact, whether he had express authority, or had been held out by the owner as having it. Turner v. Hutchinson, 2 F. & F. 185.

2. What constitutes the Relation; Validity of Leases and Agreements, generally, and Distinction between them; Confirmation.

How the relation of landlord and tenant may be created.]—If a stranger begins to build on land, supposing it to be his own, and the real owner, perceiving his mistake, abstains from setting him right, and leaves him to persevere in his error, a court of equity will not afterwards allow the real owner to assert his title to the land. Ramsden v. Thornton, 1 L. R., H. L. 129; 12 Jur., N. S. 506.

But if a stranger builds on land, knowing it to be the property of another, equity will not prevent the real owner from afterwards claiming the land, with the benefit of all the expenditure upon it. Ib.

So, if a tenant builds on his landlord's land, he does not, in the absence of special circumstances, acquire any right to prevent the landlord from taking possession of the land and buildings when the tenancy has determined. Ib.

By a deed between A. and B., holders of shares in a building society, and C. and D., trustees of the society, reciting the formation of the society, that A. and B. were entitled to a certain sum out of the funds in respect of their shares, and that for the security of all the payments to become due in respect of the shares, A. and B. had agreed to execute the assurance thereby made, A. and B. conveyed premises to C. and D. as such trustees, upon trust to permit A. and B. to receive the rents until default in payment of their contributions, with a power to C. and D. and the trustees for the time being of the society to appoint a person to receive the rents in case of default, and a power of sale in the like event. The deed also contained a clause whereby A. and B. agreed "to become tenants of the parties hereto of the second part, and to the trustees for the time being of the society of the premises demised henceforth during their will at the net yearly rent of 200*l.*, payable on the usual quarter days:—Held, that this deed did not operate as a demise, so as to sustain an avowry alleging a tenancy under the trustees at the yearly rent of 200*l.*, the general scope of the deed being altogether inconsistent with such a construction. Walker v. Giles, 6 C. B. 662; 18 L. J., C. P. 823.

By an agreement between the defendant, as a brewer, and the plaintiff, reciting that the defendant was in possession of premises whereon the sale of beer had been for some time past carried on by A. on the defendant's account, and that the plaintiff was desirous of carrying on such trade for the defendant, to which he had agreed, it was witnessed that the defendant had agreed, for the consideration therein stated, that the plaintiff should enter upon the premises and carry on thereon such trade for the defendant in the place and stead, and in the same manner and with and on the same privileges and terms as A. had done, until the agreement should be determined by notice. And the plaintiff agreed during all the time he should carry on the trade for the defendant, that all beer sold by him should be had by him from the defendant, and that the plaintiff should not part with the premises to any person without the license of the defendant; and that, when either party should be desirous of putting an end to the agreement, the plaintiff should, on receiving from the defendant a month's notice to quit the trade, deliver up possession of the premises, and should be at liberty to leave the trade and quit the occupation of the premises on giving one month's notice to the defendant:—Held, that this did not create the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties, but that the occupation of the plaintiff was that of servant to the defendant. Mayhew v. Suttle, 4 El. & Bl. 347; 1 Jur., N. S. 803; 24 L. J., Q. B. 54—Exch. Cham.

G. having agreed to let premises to P. for a term of years, P. paying 100*l.* for the fixtures, a lease by deed was prepared and engrossed on parchment: P. paid down only 50*l.* It was agreed between G. and P. that P. should be let into possession as tenant from year to year on the terms of the intended lease until he paid the balance of the 100*l.* At the same time G. signed, sealed, and delivered the deed, which, however, he retained in his own possession. No third person was present. No words qualifying the delivery, or expressly stating that it was an escrow till the payment of the balance, appeared to have been used. G. brought an action for use and occupation against an assignee of P.'s interest; and, on those facts appearing, objection was taken that the action ought to have been on the covenants contained in the deed:—Held, that the circumstances warranted an inference in fact that it was agreed by both G. and P., at the time of the execution of the instrument, that it should not operate as a lease until the payment, and that if there was such an agreement by both, though no express words of delivery, as an escrow, it would operate as a deed till then; and consequently P. was tenant from year to year under the terms in the instrument, and not tenant under a deed, and that the action for use and occupation would lie against him or the assignee of his interest. Gudgen v. Besset, 6 El. & Bl. 986; 3 Jur., N. S. 212; 26 L. J., Q. B. 36.

Agreement in 1859, by M., that he would, by indenture to be forthwith prepared, grant unto A. a lease of a house and premises, to hold the same for the term of three years from the 25th May, at the yearly rent of 84*l.*, payable by four quarterly payments (stating the days, and what covenants should be contained in the lease); "and it is mutually agreed that these presents shall operate as an agreement only, and that, until a lease shall be executed, the rent, covenants, and agreements agreed to be therein reserved and contained shall be paid and observed, and the several rights and remedies shall be enforced, in the same manner as if the same had been actually executed." A. entered, and continued in possession until a quarter's rent became due, but no rent was paid:—Held, that the agreement constituted a tenancy, with a rent reserved, or made payable, within 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 1; and therefore there was a right in M. to follow goods fraudulently removed by A. Anderson v. Midland Railway Company, 7 Jur., N. S. 411; 30 L. J., Q. B. 94; 3 L. T., N. S. 809; 3 El. & Bl. 614.

A., an owner of lace machines, paid 12*s.* a week to B. for permission to place the machines in a room in B.'s factory, and for free ingress and egress to the room for himself and workmen for the purpose of working and inspecting the machines. B. supplied the necessary steam-power for working the machines, payment for which was included in the above sum:—Held, that there was no demise to A. of any part of the room, and no relation of landlord and tenant created between him and B. Hancock v. Austin, 14 C. B., N. S. 634; 33 L. J., C. P. 252; 11 W. R. 833; 8 L. T., N. S. 429.

A. let to B. a defined portion of a room in a factory, with steam-power for working lace machines belonging to B. at a certain sum per annum, payable quarterly; a deduction to be allowed in the event of hindrances in the supply of power beyond seven days in each quarter:—Held, a sufficient demise to entitle A. to distrain. Selby v. Greaves, 3 L. R., C. P. 594; 37 L. J., C. P. 251; 16 W. R. 1127; 19 L. T., N. S. 186.

As to creation of tenancy from year to year,—see this title, XVI, 1.

Want of title of lessor.—When it appears, upon the face of an instrument, that the party intending to demise has no power to demise, the instrument is not a lease. Hayward v. Haswell, 1 N. & P. 411; 6 A. & E. 265; W., W. & D. 158; 1 Jur. 54.

Where there is a demise of premises and an entire rent reserved, if any part of the premises could not be legally demised, the whole is void. Doe d. Griffiths v. Lloyd, 3 Esp. 78—Kenyon.

A lease of lands in which the lessor was seized in fee, and of other lands of which he was seized for life (with power of leasing), at one entire rent, and the lease not well executed according to the power, is good after the death of the lessor for the lands in fee, though not for the other lands; for the rent may be apportioned. Doe d. Vaughan v. Meyler, 2 M. & S. 276.

The lessor of certain lands knew that as to part of them he had no title to grant the lease. The lessee did not know, and had no means of knowing, that such was the case, and the lessor did not disclose the want of title of him:—Held, that it was not necessary in equity, in order that the lessee might be relieved of the lease, that there should have been any affirmative fraud, and that the concealment by the lessor of a fact affecting the title to a material part of the demised premises was a sufficient ground for treating the lease as set aside. Mostyn v. West Mostyn Coal and Iron Company, 1 L. R., C. P. Div. 145; 34 L. T., N. S. 325.

A lease having been granted by deed in terms from which the law implies a covenant for title, and the lessor proving to have no title to part of the demised premises:—Held, that the lessee might refuse to take possession of such part of the demised premises, and elect to keep the remainder, and might in an action for rent due under the lease claim damages for breach of the implied covenant by way of counter-claim. Id.

As to undertaking for title implied in agreement for lease,—see this title, I., 5, a.

As to estoppel of tenant to deny title of landlord,—see this title, X.

Demises of lands out of possession; incorporeal hereditaments.]—By parol, a dwelling-house and premises were demised for a year. The lessee "accepted the lease, and by virtue of the demise entered upon the demised land." Before and at the time of the demise, eight acres, included in it, had been demised to a third party, in whose possession they were, so that the lessee could not, and did not, enter upon them:—Held, that the demise was altogether void. Neale v. Mackenzie, 2 Gale, 174; 1 M. & W. 747—Exch. Cham.

An instrument not under seal, by which land is demised, and which also attempts to demise incorporeal tenements, is not void by reason of such attempt. Reg. v. Hockworthy, 2 N. & P. 383; W., W. & D. 707; 7 A. & E. 492.

A demise of an incorporeal hereditament can only be valid by deed; a demise by parol of a right of hunting and sporting, together with a message, is therefore void. Bird v. Higginson, 4 N. & M. 505; 2 A. & E. 696; 1 H. & W. 61; affirmed in error, 6 A. & E. 824—Exch. Cham.

Condition and existence of the demised premises.]—There is no contract, still less a condition, whereby a lease would be void, implied by law on a demise of ascertained real property only, that it is fit for the purpose for which it was let. Hart v. Windsor, 12 M. & W. 68; 8 Jur. 150; 13 L. J., Exch. 120.

On a demise of land, or the vesture of land (as the eatage of a field), for a specific term at a certain rent, there is no implied obligation on the part of the lessor that it shall be fit for the purpose for which it is taken. Sutton v. Temple, 12 M. & W. 52; 13 L. J., Exch. 17.

Therefore, where A. agreed in writing to take the eatage of twenty-four acres of land from B. for seven months, at a rent of 40*l.*, and stocked the land with beasts, several of which died a few days afterwards from the effect of a poisonous substance which had accidentally been spread over the field, without B.'s knowledge:—Held, that A. was not entitled, therefore, to throw up the land, but continued liable for the whole rent. Id.

There is no implied warranty on the part of a lessor who lets land for agricultural purposes, that no noxious plants are growing on the demised premises. Erskine v. Aderne, 8 L. R., Ch. 756; 42 L. J., Chanc. 835; 21 W. R. 802; 29 L. T., N. S. 234.

Where an intended lessor of a particular house knows that the house is in a ruinous state, and dangerous to occupy, and that its condition is unknown to the intended lessee, and that the intended lessee takes it for the purpose of residing in it, he is not bound to disclose the state of the house to the intended lessee, unless he knows that the intended lessee is influenced by his belief of the soundness of the house in agreeing to take it, or unless the conduct of the lessor amounts to a deceit practiced upon the lessee. Keates v. Cadogan, 10 C. B. 591; 15 Jur. 428; 20 L. J., C. P. 76.

The defendants agreed to let certain gardens and music-hall to the plaintiffs on four specified days to come, for the purpose of giving a series of concerts, at and for a specified rent for each of the days. The defendants were to provide a band of music and certain entertainments, and to issue advertisements of the entertainments. The plaintiffs were to pay 100*l.* in the evening of each of the days, to receive and take all the money paid by persons entering the gardens, and to provide the necessary artists for the entertainments. After the agreement was entered into, and before the day arrived for the first concert, the music-hall was accidentally destroyed by fire:—Held, that as the existence of the hall was necessary for the performance of the contract, the defendants were excused from liability in respect of its non-performance, and that no action would lie against them. Taylor v. Caldwell, 32 L. J., Q. B. 164; 3 B. & S. 826; 11 W. R. 720; 9 L. T., N. S. 356.

In the absence of any agreement on the subject, a person who agrees to take a house, must take it as it stands, and cannot call on the lessor to put it into a condition which makes it fit for living in. Chappell v. Gregory, 84 Beav. 250.

Where a house was described as substantial and convenient, and having five bed-rooms; on a bill for specific performance:—Held, that this was no misdescription, although the house was out of repair, and the wall in some places only half-brick thick, and some of the bed-rooms extremely small inner rooms, without fireplace. Johnson v. Smart, 2 Giff. 151.

When a lessee covenants to pay the rent reserved and keep the demised premises in repair, he is bound, during the term, to perform both covenants as long as the subject-matter of the demise continues to exist, although it was originally of no value. Meath v. Cuthbert, 10 Ir. R., C. L. 395—C. P.

As to letting furnished houses and apartments,—see this title, XIX.

As to effect of destruction of or injury to premises,—see this title, VII., 2.

Immoral or illegal purpose of demise.]—An owner of premises, who grants a lease of them for a term, under which the lessee enters, cannot avoid the lease on the ground that it was obtained by the fraudulent misrepresentations of the lessee as to matters collateral to the lease, e. g., that he was a respectable person, and intended to use the premises for a respectable business; whereas he was not a respectable man, and intended at the time and did afterwards use the premises for an immoral and an illegal purpose. Feret v. Hill, 15 C. B. 207; 2 C. L. R. 1366; 18 Jur. 1014; 23 L. J., C. P. 180.

A lessee of a house which, to his knowledge, had for many years been used as a brothel, assigned the lease absolutely, knowing that the assignee intended to use the house for the same purpose. The original lease contained covenants to deliver up at the end of the term, in good repair, and not to use the house as a brothel; and the assignment contained a covenant to indemnify the lessee from the covenants in the lease. The lessee, having been compelled to pay for dilapidations at the end of the lease, sought to recover the amount from the estate of the assignee, which was being administered in equity:—Held, that the assignment, and everything arising out of it, were so tainted with the immoral purpose, that the lessee could not recover. Smith v. White, 1 L. R., Eq. 626; 35 L. J., Chanc. 454; 14 W. R. 510; 14 L. T., N. S. 350—V. C. K.

In an action for breach of a contract to let rooms, the defendant may justify such breach by the fact that the plaintiff intended to use the rooms for illegal purposes, whether at the time of refusing to perform the contract he assigned or really acted upon such intended use as a reason for such refusal or not. Cowan v. Milbourn, 36 L. J., Exch. 124; 2 L. R., Exch. 230; 15 W. R. 750; 16 L. T., N. S. 290.

Lectures in support of the propositions that the character of Christ is defective and His teachings misleading, and that the Bible is no more inspired than any other book, are blasphemous and illegal, and therefore the proprietor of public rooms, who, in ignorance of the precise subject of the lectures, contracts to let such rooms for the purpose of certain lectures being delivered therein, may, upon subsequently ascertaining the subjects and nature of them, avoid the contract, and refuse to permit the lecturer the use of the rooms, and may justify such refusal, in an action by him for breach of contract, by pleading that he intended to use the rooms for irreligious, blasphemous, and illegal lectures. Id.

Validity of leases for lives.]—A lease for lives, to begin from the day of the date thereof, with seizin delivered afterwards, is good, and shall not be said to convey a freehold to commence in futuro. Freeman d. Vernon v. West, 2 Wils. 165.

By an indenture, premises were demised to M. E., and her heirs, for and during the natural lives of M. E.'s son, J. E., her daughter, M. E., and A. E.'s granddaughter, and the life of the survivor of them. A. E. had a daughter, but he had not a granddaughter at the time of making the indenture, nor previously thereto, though subsequently he had several granddaughters:—Held, that the lease was good for the lives of J. E. and M. E. only. Doe d. Pemberton v. Edwards, 1 M. & W. 533.

An agreement that A. is to have a tenement for life, not being under seal, does not operate to pass an estate for life. Stone v. Rogers, 2 M. & W. 443; M. & H. 140; 1 Jur. 455.

By writing not under seal, reciting that D. had purchased for the residue of a term four messuages, in one of which the plaintiff resided, it was agreed that he should continue to reside in that messuage during the residue of D.'s interest, if the plaintiff should so long live, at the yearly rent of 1*l.*, and D. further agreed to assign all his interest in the premises purchased by D. to the plaintiff on payment of 140*l.* within a stated period:—Held, that this was a lease. Lovelock v. Franklyn, 8 Q. B. 371; 11 Jur. 1035; 16 L. J., Q. B. 182.

In 1813, R. O., being seized in fee of premises, mortgaged them for a term of 500 years to H., who died in 1814, having bequeathed the premises to his widow and executrix, who entered into possession and receipt of the rents. In 1837, R. O. died intestate, and J. O., his heir-at-law, paid off the mortgage, and received possession of the premises from the executrix, but no assignment was executed by her until 1843. In 1840, J. O. demised the premises after his death to his son W. O., during the lives of himself, his wife and child, and the survivor of them, at the yearly rent of 10*l.* The yearly value of the premises was 27*l.* In 1843, J. O. mortgaged the premises to L. for securing payment of 600*l.*, and the executrix of H., by the direction of J. O., assigned the residue of the term of 500 years to a trustee for L. as a further security, and in the meantime to attend the inheritance. Neither the mortgage nor the assignment made any mention of the lease for lives. In ejectment by the heir-at-law of the lessee against the heir-at-law of R. O.:—Held, first, that the lease for lives was not a void conveyance, under 26 Eliz. c. 4, s. 2. Owen v. Owen, 3 H. & C. 88.

Held, secondly, that L. was entitled to the protection of the term of 500 years against the claim of the heir-at-law of the lessee for lives. Id.

As to nature and incidents of life estates,—see ESTATE.

Confirmation of void leases by acceptance of rent, or other acts.]—In general, the acceptance of rent by a person who is entitled to set aside a lease will confirm it. Doe d. Julliffe v. Sybourn, 2 Esp. 667—Kenyon.

Yet acceptance of rent by a tenant in tail, on coming into possession, is no confirmation of a lease made by a tenant for life, which is absolutely void at his death. James d. Aubrey v. Jenkins, Bull. N. P. 96.

Nor can a lease which is void against a remainderman be set up by his acceptance of rent, and suffering the tenant to make improvements after his interest vests in possession. Doe d. Simpson v. Butcher, 1 Doug. 50. S. P., Jenkins d. Yates v. Church, Cowp. 482.

A lease executed by a tenant for life, in which the reversioner, who was then under age, is named, but not executed by him, is void on the death of the tenant for life; and an execution by the reversioner only afterwards is no confirmation of it, so as to bind the lessee in an action of covenant. Ludford v. Barber, 1 T. R. 86. S. P., Doe d. Martin v. Watts, 7 T. R. 83; 2 Esp. 501.

A tenant for life leased premises for twenty-one years, and, before the expiration of that term, died; the trustees of the remainderman, then an infant, continued to receive the rent reserved, and he, on coming of age, sold the premises by auction; in the conditions of sale the premises were declared to be subject to the lease, and in the conveyance to the purchaser the lease was referred to as in the possession of the lessee; and in the covenant against incumbrances that lease was excepted; the purchaser mortgaged, and in the mortgage deeds the like notice was taken of the lease, and the mortgagees for some time received the rent reserved:—Held, that the lease expired with the interest of the tenant for life, and that the notice afterwards taken of it did not operate as a new lease. Doe d. Potter v. Archer, 1 B. & P. 531. And see Roe d. Jordan v. Ward, 1 H. Bl. 97.

Where by lease a mortgagee demised, and the executrix of the mortgagor demised and confirmed, and a power of re-entry was reserved to them or either of them:—Held, that it operated as the demise of the mortgagee, and the confirmation of the mortgagor's representative. Doe d. Barney v. Adams, 2 C. & J. 232; 2 Tyr. 289.

An heir in tail having received, for ten years, rent under a demise for ninety-nine years, granted by his ancestor:—Held, a confirmation of the lease. Doe d. Southouse v. Jenkins, 5 Bing. 469; 3 M. & P. 59.

Where a party takes a lease of an infant's lands, and the infant, on coming of age, mortgages the property to the lessee by deed referring to the lease, this is a confirmation of the lease. Sturly v. Johnson, 3 Y. & C. 586.

The defendant came into possession under a lease from a tenant for life, whom the lessor of the plaintiff succeeded as remainderman; a money rent was to be paid; and, by a further reservation, the tenant was to carry, or cause to be carried, three cart-loads of culm yearly to the landlord's dwelling-house. At the trial this lease was objected to as invalid, but it appeared that the lessor of the plaintiff, at the Michaelmas after the tenant for life died, told his servant to go and look for carts to bring the culm home. The servant went to the tenants, and among others to the defendant, who accordingly brought a load of culm to the dwelling-house, other persons who were tenants doing the same. On the following May-day the defendant sent two other cart-loads of culm to the house, where it was received, other loads being sent in by the tenants at the same time. The jury found that the culm was carried by and received from the defendant in the way of rent under the reservation:—Held, that such finding was grounded on sufficient premises, and that, allowing the lease to be void, the receipt of culm was a recognition of the defendant as tenant from year to year. Doe d. Tucker v. Morse, 1 B. & Ad. 365.

A lease made by a perpetual curate of a curacy augmented by the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, without the concurrence of the patron paramount, though confirmed by the ordinary and immediate patron, is void at common law, and consequently is not set up by acceptance of rent by the successor to the curacy. Doe d. Brammall v. Collings, 7 C. B. 939; 13 Jur. 791; 18 L. J., C. P. 305.

In 1786 a dean and chapter and P. granted a lease of premises for ninety-nine years, reserving a rent to the dean and chapter and another rent to P. This lease purported to be made in pursuance of leasing powers given by a private act of parliament, but was, in fact, not in accordance with them. The rents reserved by the lease had been from time to time regularly paid to and received by the successive deans and chapters, and to and by P. and his representatives. Quære, whether the lease was void or only voidable? but Held, that if voidable, it had been set up by acceptance of rent by each successive dean and chapter, and if void, the payment and receipt of rent were evidence from which a demise from year to year by the dean and chapter would be presumed. Doe d. Pennington v. Tanriere, 12 Q. B. 998; 13 Jur. 119; 18 L. J., Q. B. 49.

Acceptance by an adult beneficiary, after attaining his majority, of rent accruing under an invalid lease, is not a confirmation of the lease or a bar to relief by having the lease set aside. Robson v. Flight, 4 De G., J. & S. 608.

Necessity of entry by lessee.—Entry is not necessary to the vesting of a term of years in the lessee; but for the purpose of maintaining an action of trespass the lessee must enter, since that action is founded on actual possession. Harrison v. Blackburn, 17 C. B., N. S. 678.

A., in 1819, demised lands to B. for 100 years, and, subject thereto, he, in 1820, demised for 200 years to C., who entered. In 1822 D. recovered judgment against A., and issued an elegit, under which the lands were delivered in execution:—Held, that C. was entitled to the possession, as against D., and might maintain trespass against him, it not appearing that B. had entered under the demise to him. Chatfield v. Parker, 2 M. & R. 510; 8 B. & C. 543.

Principles of distinction between leases and agreements.]—Whether an instrument is to be construed as a lease or an agreement depends upon the intention of the parties, to be collected from the instrument itself, and the nature of the subject-matter, without reference to any extrinsic circumstances or subsequent acts of the parties. Doe d. Morgan v. Powell, 8 Scott, N. R. 687; 7 M. & G. 980; 8 Jur. 1123; 14 L. J., C. P. 5. S. P., Morgan d. Dowding v. Bissell, 3 Taunt. 65.

An instrument is not a demise, although it contains the usual words of demise, if its contents show that such was not the intention of the parties. Taylor v. Caldwell, 3 B. & S. 826.

Words of present contract, with an agreement that the lessee should take possession immediately, and that a lease should be executed in future, operate only as an agreement for a lease, and not as a lease itself. Goodtitle d. Estwick v. Way, 1 T. R. 735.

A clause for a future lease does not of itself necessarily intend that the instrument must be only an agreement for a lease, if the intention of the parties appears to be otherwise. Pool v. Bentley, 12 East, 168; 2 Camp. 286.

A memorandum of an agreement to let, which contains words of present demise, and sufficiently ascertains the terms of the intended tenancy, will operate as a present demise, although it provides for the preparation of a future lease. Warman v. Faithful, 3 N. & M. 187; 5 B. & Ad. 1042. S. P., Doe d. Jackson v. Ashburner, 5 T. R. 163.

Instances of instruments held to amount to leases; as distinguished from mere agreements.]—B., being wrongfully dispossessed of premises, executed the following deed:—"Be it remembered that B. hath let, and by these presents doth demise to F. (the premises), as now held by W. F., for the full term of twenty-one years, to commence the 1st day of May or the 1st day of November, whichever first happens after B. recovers the lands from the heirs, &c., F. covenanting and agreeing, on the foregoing conditions, to pay to B. the sum of, &c. Leases, with power of distress, and clauses of re-entry, and all other clauses usual between landlord and tenant, to be drawn and signed at the request of either party as soon as B. recovers the lands," &c.:—Held, that this instrument operated as a present demise. Burry v. Nugent, 3 Dougl. 179; 5 T. R. 165, n.

An instrument dated in March, 1798, whereby the landlord agreed to let, and also, upon demand, to execute to the tenant a lease of a farm; and the tenant agreed to take, and, upon demand, to execute a counterpart of a lease of the farm from the 5th of April, 1798, for fifteen years, under a certain yearly rent, which lease was to contain the usual covenants, and an agreement for re-entry in case of non-payment of rent, and also the further covenants, &c.; and the agreement was to bind until the lease was executed, is a present demise, and therefore requiring a lease stamp, the agreement for a future lease, with further covenants, being for the better security of the parties. Doe d. Walker v. Groves, 15 East, 244.

Agreement for a lease, with stipulations for the lessee to commence with laying out a considerable sum on the premises (the lease to contain certain specified covenants), "and in the meantime, until such lease shall be executed, to pay rent, and to hold the same premises subject to the covenants above mentioned," amounts to an actual demise. Pinero v. Judson, 6 Bing. 206; 3 M. & P. 497.

"G. F. does this day agree to let to J. S. three cottages for ten years; he further agrees to build a brewhouse and make a cellar, at the rent of 35*l.*; he agrees to pay the ground-rent, and has this day received 4*l.* from J. S., in earnest," is an actual demise, and not an agreement for a lease. Staniforth v. Fox, 7 Bing. 590; 5 M. & P. 589.

A memorandum having a lease stamp, by which A. agrees to let B. lands mentioned in an annexed abandoned lease from A. to C., upon the conditions, agreements, &c., contained in the same lease, and by which A. and B. bind themselves to execute a lease similar to such abandoned lease, is itself a valid lease. Pearce v. Chestlyn, 5 N. & M. 652; 4 A. & E. 225; 1 H. & W. 768.

"Sept. 21, 1820.—K. agrees to let, and P. to take, a house in its unfinished state, for the term of sixty years, being the whole term that K. has the same leased to him, at the rent of 525*l.*, payable quarterly, the first payment for the half-quarter at Christmas next; P. to insure the premises, and to have the benefit of an insurance lately paid; a lease and counterpart to be prepared at the expense of P., and to contain all the clauses, covenants, and agreements K. entered into in the lease granted to him," is an actual demise, and not a mere agreement for a lease. Doe d. Pearson v. Ries, 8 Bing. 178; 1 M. & Scott, 259.

The defendant held premises under a lease from H. at a certain rent; and entered into an agreement with N. for the sale of all the household furniture, &c., on the premises, for a certain sum, to be paid by installments, covenanting, on payment of the whole of the purchase-money, to demise the premises to N. for twenty-five years; the lease to contain the like covenants on the part of N., as were contained in the lease under which the defendant held. The agreement also contained a covenant that N. should, in the meantime, and until such lease should be granted, pay the rent and perform all the covenants which would be to be performed by him in case the lease was actually granted; with a power of distress for non-payment of the rent. N. was let into immediate possession under this agreement, and paid rent:—Held, that the agreement amounted to a present demise. Hancock v. Caffyn, 1 M. & Scott, 521; 8 Bing. 358.

A party seized in fee of premises, agreed, with eight other persons, to convey to them in trust for the inhabitants of a parish, to hold from the Lady-day then next ensuing, for the term of ninety-nine years, at a specified rent, payable half-yearly. The agreement then contained covenants by the lessees to pay the rent, taxes, &c., and to keep the premises in repair, and by the lessor for quiet enjoyment; and also a proviso for the execution of a lease containing the usual covenants, to be executed before a day specified; and another, that the lessees, or their successors, should have the option of purchasing the fee-simple in the soil:—Held, that this instrument amounted to an actual demise, and was not a mere agreement for a lease. Alderman v. Neate, 4 M. & W. 704; 1 H. & H. 869; 3 Jur. 171.

The plaintiff, by letter, offered to take a farm of the defendant at a certain specified term and rent; the crops to be valued, and a lease to be prepared at the plaintiff's expense; the whole to be subject to a certificate of the plaintiff's solvency. The defendant, having received the certificate, by letter accepted of the plaintiff as tenant, on the terms proposed; the valuation was deferred from time to time; but the plaintiff, on paying 100*l.* towards the amount, was let into possession:—Held, that the letters of the plaintiff and defendant (at all events, as explained by the above circumstances, and some admissions made by the plaintiff after a distress) constituted an actual demise, on which the defendant was authorized to distrain for rent in arrear, and not a mere agreement for a lease. Chapman v. Bluck, 4 Bing. N. C. 187; 5 Scott, 513; 1 Arn. 15; 2 Jur. 206.

A tenant being in possession under a demise for three years, ending Michaelmas, 1836, at a rent payable at Michaelmas, the landlord and tenant agreed as follows:—"Memorandum of agreement, made 13th December, 1834, P., the landlord, agrees to let the farm to B., the tenant, for fourteen years, determinable at the end of seven years, with twelve months' notice (not stating the commencement), at the yearly rent of 20*l.*, payable half-yearly; a lease to be drawn upon the usual terms by T., and B. agrees to take it upon the said terms."—Held, a present lease, commencing on December 13th, 1834. Doe d. Phillip v. Benjamin, 9 A. & E. 644; 1 P. & D. 440; 2 W. & H. 96.

By an instrument under seal, and stamped with a lease stamp, W., in consideration of the rents, covenants and agreements reserved on the part of C., to be paid, performed and observed, covenanted, promised and agreed with C., that she, W., her heirs or assigns, should and would, at any time during the term thereafter agreed to be demised, upon request made to her or them in writing under the hand of C., for that purpose, grant and execute to C.; and C. consented and agreed to accept and execute a counterpart of a demise or lease of premises therein described, for the term of twenty-one years from a day past, determinable as thereafter mentioned, at a certain rent, payable quarterly; and C.

covenanted to lay out a sum in repairing, painting, &c.; and it was agreed, that there should be contained in the lease and counterpart, by and on the part of C., a covenant for payment of rent, to repair, &c.; and also a covenant for quiet enjoyment, and a power to C., to determine the tenancy on the lease at the end of the third, seventh or fourteenth year of the term of twenty-one years, on giving notice:—Held, an actual demise, and not a mere agreement for a future lease. Curling v. Mills, 7 Scott, N. R. 709; 6 M. & G. 173; 12 L. J., C. P. 816.

On the 28th of October, 1843, the plaintiff, the defendant, and M. entered into an agreement, by which, after reciting that M. was tenant to the defendant of a house at a rent of 25*l.* a year, and had agreed to let it to the plaintiff at a rent of 20*l.* a year from 24th of June, 1844, at which time the defendant agreed to exonerate M. from his tenancy on his paying all rent up to that day, and to accept the plaintiff as tenant from that period, at the rent of 20*l.* a year, M. agreed to let and the plaintiff to take the house from the date of the agreement of the 24th of June then next, at the rent of 20*l.* a year, and M. agreed to find all materials except lath, to put up a partition wall, the plaintiff finding lath and labor. And the plaintiff agreed to take the house of the defendant from the 24th of June, at the rent of 20*l.* a year, and to give or take six months' notice to quit, and the defendant agreed to exonerate M. from his tenancy on the 24th of June, on his paying up all rent due to that time. Immediately after the execution of this agreement M. let the plaintiff into possession. On the 4th of March, the defendant agreed to sell the house to the plaintiff, but this agreement was not carried into effect:—Held, first, that the instrument of 28th of October, 1843, amounted to a lease by the defendant to the plaintiff from 24th of June, 1844. Tarte v. Darby, 15 M. & W. 601; 15 L. J., Exch. 326.

Held, secondly, that it was not affected by the subsequent agreement for the sale of the premises. Id.

Instances of instruments held to be agreements only, not constituting a demise.]—An instrument on an agreement stamp, reciting that A., in case it should turn out that he is entitled to certain premises on the death of B., would immediately demise the same to C., declaring that he did thereby agree to demise and let the same, with a subsequent covenant to procure a license to let from the lord, operates as an agreement for a lease, and not as an absolute demise. Doe d. Coore v. Clara, 2 T. R. 739. S. P., Perring v. Brook, 7 C. & P. 360—Coleridge.

An agreement, by which A. agreed to let her house to B. "during her life, supposing it to be occupied by B. or a tenant agreeable to A." and containing a stipulation that "a clause was to be added in the lease" for a particular purpose, is only an agreement for a lease, and not a perfect lease, the stipulation

Clearly showing it to be executory. Doe d. Bromfield v. Smith, 6 East, 530; 2 Smith, 570.

The following letters constitute an agreement only, and not a demise. On the 21st February, 1825, the defendant wrote to the plaintiff: "I shall be happy to take a lease of your iron ore at a royalty of 1s. per ton, and I will engage to work the several veins of ironstone, limestone, ore, and manganese, in such relative proportions as that the average produce of iron shall not exceed the usual average of the common ores (which I believe to be about forty per cent.), the term to be about forty years from the 24th June next, and the sleeping rent 150*l.* per annum. The relative proportion of the iron ores in weight to be worked together, to be ascertained by a competent person." The plaintiff wrote to the defendant in answer: "I agree to the terms contained in your letter. I shall be ready to grant a lease conformable thereto." Jones v. Reynolds, 1 G. & D. 62; 1 Q. B. 506.

The following instrument is an agreement for a lease, and not a lease: "H. agrees to make and execute to E. a good and valid lease of all that messuage, &c., to hold to E., his executors and assigns, for the term of seven years, from the 24th day of June next, at and under the yearly rent of 105*l.*, clear of all taxes and assessments (except the land tax), payable half-yearly, the first half-yearly payment to be made on the 25th day of December next. And the lease shall contain a covenant on the part of E. to pay the rent, also to keep the premises in repair (damages by fire excepted); also a proviso for re-entry on non-payment of the rent by the space of twenty-one days after the same shall become due, or on non-performance of any of the covenants on the lessee's part to be performed. And E. agrees to accept such lease, upon the terms and conditions above specified, and to execute a counterpart; and E. agrees (when and so soon as the messuages or dwelling-houses on either side of the messuage hereby agreed to be demised shall become tenanted and occupied) to pay to H. an additional yearly rent of 15*l.* during the remainder of the term of seven years. And H. agrees, on or before the 24th day of June next, to erect eight light panels in front of the drawing-room windows, and fence-blind to same windows, to paper the hall and staircase, and all the rooms, save those on the basement and attics. And it is agreed, that by the lease hereby agreed to be granted, the rent therein reserved shall be 120*l.*; and that by a separate deed, to bear date the next day after the indenture of lease, H. shall release to E., out of the annual rent of 120*l.*, the annual sum of 15*l.* E. to prepare lease at his own cost, to be approved of by lessor's solicitor." Rawson v. Eicks, 2 N. & P. 428; 7 A. & E. 451; W. & D. 675.

By articles, dated 2d May, 1838, the defendant agreed with the plaintiff that he would grant him a lease of a messuage, for twenty-one years from Midsummer-day then next, at the rent of 45*l.*, payable quarterly, on the usual days of payment, in every year during the term, the first payment to commence on the 29th September then next: to be entered upon immediately by the plaintiff, he having, on the day of the date, paid 25*l.* to the defendant; and in the lease were to be contained covenants to pay the rent, to repair, &c., and all other usual and reasonable covenants, with a power to either party to determine the lease at the end of seven or fifteen years:—Held, that this instrument amounted to an agreement for a lease only, and not to an actual demise, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover as for the breach of an implied promise for quiet enjoyment. Braahier v. Jackson, 6 M. & W. 549; 8 D. P. C. 784.

By a memorandum, the plaintiff agreed to let to the defendant, and the defendant agreed to take a house, from the 24th June then next ensuing, for the term of twenty-one years, determinable at seven and fourteen years; that the lease to be granted was to contain a covenant on the part of the defendant to purchase the fee-simple for 600*l.*, at any time within the first seven years of the term to be granted, and a covenant on his part for payment of the rent of 35*l.*, quarterly, clear of all deductions for taxes whatsoever; and that the insurance on 500*l.* was to be paid by the plaintiff, and to be repaid by the defendant, as an increased rent; to lay out within twelve months 100*l.* on the premises to keep the premises in substantial repair, and all other usual covenants, as in leases of houses in B.; and that the defendant should execute a counterpart of the lease when tendered to him by the solicitor of the plaintiff, and that the expense of the lease and counterpart was to be borne and paid by the defendant:—Held, that this was an agreement for a lease, and not an actual demise, and that the defendant, having entered and paid rent under the agreement, became tenant from year to year, which tenancy could only be determined by a regular notice to quit, or a surrender in writing. Chapman v. Turner, 6 M. & W. 100.

A party possessed of the residue of a term of years in premises, entered into a written agreement with another to grant him a lease of the same, together with certain fixtures, for a definite period, at a certain rent, payable quarterly; the lease to contain certain covenants; and the agreement further contained a covenant by the lessor to execute such lease when required; and that, until then, it should be lawful for the lessor, at any time after the execution of the agreement, to distrain for any rent due in respect of the demised premises:—Held, that this instrument did not amount to an actual demise. Bicknell v. Hood, 5 M. & W. 104; 2 H. & H. 86; 3 Jur. 774.

Where A. agreed "that he would by indenture demise to B. a house for fourteen years, from the 25th day of December last past, at the yearly rent of 40*l.*, payable quarterly; but if B. should pay A. the 40*l.*

before the expiration of the first quarter, which would be at Lady-day then next, in that case the rent should be reduced to the rate of 83*l.* per annum, payable quarterly:—Held, that the agreement was no demise. Hegan v. Johnson, 2 Taunt. 148.

An agreement executed on the 24th November upon an agreement stamp, setting forth the conditions of letting a farm, and the regulations to be observed by the tenant, that the term was to be from year to year, the lands to be entered upon on the 8d February, 1808, and the housing on the 12th May, and that a lease was to be made upon these conditions, with all usual covenants, at the foot of which the tenant wrote, "I agree to take lot 1 (the premises in question), at the rent, &c., subject to the covenants," is an agreement for a lease, and not a present demise, there being no present occupation, and an express stipulation for a future lease, as well as time given to prepare it. Tempest v. Rawling, 13 East, 18.

Where a lease was granted to one who afterwards took another into partnership, and both applied jointly to the landlord to enlarge the premises, agreeing to pay 10*l.* per cent. per annum on the money laid out, which was accordingly done, and the tenants afterwards dissolved partnership:—Held, that the agreement was only collateral to the lease, and not a new demise. Hoby v. Roebuck, 2 Marsh. 433; 7 Taunt. 157.

Where a tenant was in possession under a memorandum, whereby the lessor agreed to let a house on lease for twenty-one years at the net clear rent of 63*l.* per annum, the tenant to enter at any time on or before a particular day, on paying 50*l.* on entry; and there was a purchasing clause in the lease:—Held, that this only amounted to an agreement for a future lease, and that no lease had been executed. Dunk v. Hunter, 5 B. & A. 322.

Where A. agreed under seal to take and hire of B. a house and premises at a certain annual rent, but the instrument contained no words of demise, and there was nothing to show when the interest was to commence or determine:—Held, that it was no more than an agreement for a lease. Clayton v. Burtenshaw, 7 D. & R. 800; 5 B. & C. 41.

A landlord and tenant, between whom there was a subsisting tenancy, agreed in writing for a letting of the farm upon different terms, the amount of the rent to be settled by valuation, and the tenant to find sureties for his paying the rent. The amount was not settled, the sureties were not given, nor was any rent ever paid:—Held, that the instrument, although it contained words of present demise, did not operate as a lease, or alter the terms of the existing tenancy. John v. Jenkins, 1 C. & M. 227; 3 Tyr. 170.

An agreement was, in substance, as follows:—"Proposals for letting the M. & G. farms in H.,—quantity, 180 acres,—term, 12 years determinable," &c. "Rent, 162*l.* To farm the arable land upon the four-course system," &c.

"All other covenants, except as above altered, contained in a draft lease dated December 1st, 1824, granted by W. P. to J. W."—"June 8d, 1835: Agreed to the above rent, provided the house and buildings are put into tenantable repair on a plan to be mutually determined upon and finally settled within one month from the above date." The agreement was signed by the landlord and the party intending to take:—Held, that it did not constitute a present demise, because the terms were to take effect only upon the performance of a condition, and it was not ascertained when the tenancy was to commence. Doe d. Wood v. Clarke, 7 Q. B. 211; 9 Jur. 426; 14 L. J., Q. B. 233.

By a memorandum, dated the 23d of June, 1842, made between A., as agent for and on behalf of the churchwardens of the parish of St. M. (not naming them), of the one part, and B. of the other part, it was agreed (provided a license could be obtained from the lord of the manor, and upon B. putting the premises into repair) that the churchwardens should grant a lease to B. for twenty-one years from Midsummer-day then next, under the clear yearly rent of 30*l.*, such lease to contain covenants for payment of rent and taxes, and to repair, insure, not to commit waste, and all other usual and proper covenants, and B. agreed to accept such lease, and execute a counterpart, and that until such lease and counterpart should be granted the yearly rent should be payable and recoverable by distress or otherwise, in like manner as if such lease and counterpart had been executed:—Held, that this was properly stamped as an agreement. Doe d. Bailey v. Foster, 8 C. B. 215; 15 L. J., C. P. 263.

As to the distinction between agreements and leases or deeds, in respect of stamps required,—see this title, I., 4.

Distinction between lease and license.]—The property of the soil and bed of the Thames, and of moorings fixed to the soil of the river, is vested in the conservators. W. used certain moorings on the river for the purpose of mooring his hulk, as a floating coal depôt, under an agreement with the conservators, to the following effect: "The conservators of the Thames grant to W. W. liberty and license to fasten, and thenceforth keep fastened, his coal hulk to the moorings placed by the conservators in the river, until either party shall have given the other one calendar month's notice in writing. In consideration whereof W. W. shall pay the conservators, towards the expenses of placing and maintaining and repairing the moorings, the annual sum of 30*l.*" W. was assessed to the poor-rate as an occupier of part of the bed of the river:—Held, that the agreement did not constitute a demise, but only a license to use the moorings, and that W. was, therefore, not an occupier, and not liable to be rated. Watkins v. Milton-next-Gravesend (Overseers), 16 W. R. 1059; 3 L. R., Q. B. 350; 37 L. J., M. C. 73; 18 L. T., N. S. 601.

3. Statute of Frauds; and other Statutes requiring Leases or Agreements to be in Writing or by Deed.

The Statute of Frauds.]—[By 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 1, all leases, estates, interests of freehold, or terms of years, or any uncertain interest of, in, to, or out of any messuages, manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, made or created by livery and seisin only, or by parol, and not put in writing and signed by the parties so making or creating the same, or their agents thereunto lawfully authorized by writing, shall have the force and effect of leases or estates at will only, and shall not, either in law or equity, be deemed or taken to have any other or greater force or effect; any consideration for making any such parol leases or estates to the contrary notwithstanding.]

By s. 2, except, nevertheless, all leases not exceeding the term of three years from the making thereof, whereupon the rent reserved to the landlord, during each term, shall amount unto two-third parts at the least of the full improved value of the thing demised.]

Operation of the statute, generally; and effect of parol demises.]—The first section of the Statute of Frauds, as construed by the second, is meant to vacate parol leases conveying a greater interest in land than for three years, and whereon a rent is reserved. Crosby v. Wadsworth, 6 East, 602; 2 Smith, 559.

Notwithstanding that section, a parol lease for more than three years will create a tenancy from year to year; the intention of the statute being satisfied by its not operating as a term. Clayton v. Blakey, 8 T. R. 3. S. P., Doe d. Rigg v. Bell, 5 T. R. 471.

If, under a parol demise for more than three years, void by the Statute of Frauds, the lessee enters and becomes tenant from year to year, he is bound by an undertaking to repair contained in such void demise. Richardson v. Gifford, 3 N. & M. 825; 1 A. & E. 52. S. P., Beale v. Sanders, 3 Bing. N. C. 850; 5 Scott, 58; 3 Hodges, 147; 1 Jur. 1083.

What leases or agreements are within the statute.]—A parol lease for a term not exceeding three years, warranted by the second section of the Statute of Frauds, may be as special in its terms as a written one. Bolton v. Tomlin, 1 N. & P. 247; 5 A. & E. 856; 2 H. & W. 369.

A verbal agreement to take ready-furnished lodgings "for two or three years" is a contract for an interest in land, and valid as a lease for not exceeding three years. Edge v. Stafford, 1 Tyr. 298; 1 C. & J. 391.

A landlord, who had demised premises for a term of years at 50*l.* a year, agreed with his tenant to lay out 50*l.* in making certain improvements upon them, the tenant undertaking to pay him an increased rent of 5*l.* a year during the remainder of the term (of which several years were unexpired), to commence from the quarter preceding the completion of the work:—Held, that the landlord, having done the work, might recover arrears of the 5*l.* a year against the tenant, though the agreement had not been signed by either party; for that it was not a contract for any interest in or concerning lands within the statute; nor was it, according to that statute, an agreement "not to be performed within one year from the making thereof," no time being fixed for the performance on the part of the landlord. Donellan v. Read, 3 B. & Ad. 899.

Action on an indenture for rent. Plea, that while the defendant was in the occupation of the premises, and before the rent became due, it was agreed that the plaintiff should make some alterations, and in consideration thereof the defendant should relinquish his interest under the indenture, and accept a fresh lease for seven years at an increased rent; and until such lease should be tendered to the defendant he should hold the premises as tenant from year to year, at the increased rent; that the plaintiff executed the alterations; that the defendant relinquished his interest under the indenture, and held the premises under the agreement; and that no new lease was executed; by means of which premises the defendant became tenant from year to year, and all his interest under the indenture was surrendered to the plaintiff by act and operation of law:—Held, first, that the plea could only be proved by an agreement in writing, since the stipulation as to the yearly tenancy was part of the agreement for a future lease, and such agreement was required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing. Forquet v. Moor, 7 Exch. 870; 22 L. J., Exch. 35.

Held, secondly, that, under such an agreement, there would be no surrender of the existing lease by operation of law, until the new lease was granted. Id.

In consideration that A., who was tenant of premises under a parol agreement for a seven years' lease, would give up immediate possession to B., in order that B. might enter thereon as tenant, and also as a compensation for improvements made by A. on the premises, and for the value of articles left thereon by A., B. agreed to pay A. 100*l.* A. accordingly relinquished and gave up possession of the premises to B., who was thereupon accepted as tenant from year to year, at a different rent from that formerly paid by A., and B. afterwards, in part performance of the agreement on his part, paid A. 51*l.* In an action by A. to recover the balance of the 100*l.*:—Held, that the contract, in respect of which he sued, was not a contract for the sale of an interest in or concerning lands. Kelly v. Webster, 12 C. B. 283; 16 Jur. 838; 21 L. J., C. P. 163.

A plaint in the county court stated that the plaintiff assigned to the defendant the agreement for a lease of certain premises, but it was alleged that there was a parol agreement that part of the premises was to be held by the defendant in trust for the plaintiff. Evidence was given on both sides, but the judge, being of opinion that actual fraud had not been proved against the defendant, and there being no resulting trust in the assignment, decided that the Statute of Frauds was applicable, and dismissed the plaint, without coming to any distinct decision upon the evidence:—Held, that the judge ought to have decided that the Statute of Frauds had no application; and the court, upon a consideration of the evidence, decided that the plaintiff was entitled to relief, and reversed the decree. Booth v. Turlle, 16 L. R., Eq. 182—V. C. M.

A. agreed, in writing, to let to B. premises, at a rent of 80*l.*, payable quarterly; and not to raise the rent or give B. notice to quit so long as he continued to pay the rent when due. A., who had only a leasehold interest, to expire in 1881, had also agreed verbally with B. to let him remain in the premises for such term of years, not exceeding A.'s term therein, as B. might desire to continue tenant. A railway company contracted to purchase the interest of B. in the premises, which he described as "held for any term at tenant's option, but not beyond the term and interest of A., which term will expire in 1881." The company disputed B.'s title to the interest described, and paid the purchase-money into court:—Held, that the relation of landlord and tenant made B. a purchaser for valuable consideration to the extent of his lease; that the Statute of Frauds was no bar in equity to B.'s claim; that B. was not a mere tenant from year to year, but had a right to retain possession as long as his landlord's interest existed, and to enforce that right in equity; and that he was entitled to the purchase-money. King, In re, East of London Railway Company, Ex parte, 16 L. R., Eq. 521—V. C. M.

The owner of six leasehold houses agreed in writing to let one of them, numbered 737, to a tradesman, the agreement saying nothing about a restrictive covenant. On the same day he also agreed to let another of the houses, numbered 735, to a grocer, and he agreed with him that the business of a grocer should not be carried on in any of the other five houses. Afterwards he contracted to sell the house No. 737 and a third house numbered 739, to T., also a grocer; and the agreement, which was in writing and dated the 6th of July, 1870, contained nothing about a restrictive covenant, but an underlease was prepared and engrossed which did contain a covenant that the premises should not be used for a grocer's business. An appointment was made for the execution of the underlease and counterpart on a certain day; but on the previous evening T. died suddenly, intestate. It was stated, but on the plaintiff's evidence only, that after the written agreement of the 6th of July, and before T.'s death, T. verbally agreed to the insertion of the restriction, and there was other evidence that he was prepared to execute a counterpart of the engrossment. It having been shown that the insertion of such a restriction would considerably diminish the value of the property:—Held, that the administrator of the intestate could not be compelled to execute a counterpart of a lease

The written agreement of the 6th of July stipulated that the property should be bought "subject to the existing tenancies." The plaintiff alleged that on the 6th of July the lessee of the house No. 737 was under an agreement to consent to a restrictive covenant, and in proof of this the counterpart of a lease, bearing date the day before the agreement of the 6th of July, was produced, containing such a covenant. It having been shown that the lease was antedated and was not in fact executed till after the 6th of July, 1870:—Held, that the administrator was not by this clause bound to execute the counterpart of a lease containing the restriction. Id.

A landlord demised to a tenant a messuage in an unfinished state, by a written agreement. Before and at the time of the tenant's signing the agreement, the landlord verbally promised the tenant to put the messuage into a condition fit for habitation. Among the things which he so undertook to do upon the messuage was the construction of a water-closet. In an action for the breach of his promise to put the messuage into a condition fit for habitation:—Held, that his verbal promise to finish the messuage was collateral to the written lease; that evidence of the promise was admissible at the trial; and that his undertaking to build a water-closet in the messuage was not a contract for an interest in land within the fourth section of the Statute of Frauds, and therefore need not be in writing. Mann v. Nunn, 43 L. J., C. P. 241; 30 L. T., N. S. 526. But see Angell v. Duke, cited infra.

A declaration alleged that before the making of the agreement thereafter mentioned, the plaintiff and the defendant had been negotiating for the letting by the defendant to the plaintiff of a messuage and premises, together with the use of the furniture therein; that the plaintiff had objected to becoming tenant on the ground that the messuage and premises were insufficiently furnished. It further alleged that the defendant, in order to induce, as he did in fact thereby induce, the plaintiff to become tenant, without requiring him to send in furniture previously to the commencement of the tenancy, verbally promised the plaintiff that he, the defendant, would, within a reasonable time after such commencement, send in such additional furniture as might be found necessary; and thereupon, in consideration that the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, had become tenant, without requiring him previously to the plaintiff so becoming tenant to send in the furniture, the defendant promised the plaintiff that he would within a reasonable time send in such furniture. Breach, that he did not perform his last-mentioned promise:—Held, that the declaration was good; that the promise to send in the furniture was collateral to the agreement relating to the tenancy of the house; and that it was not required by the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds to be in writing, as an agreement for an interest in land. Angell v. Duke, 44 L. J., Q. B. 78; 10 L. R., Q. B. 174; 23 W. R. 807, 548; 32 L. T., N. S. 25, 320.

A corporation, being the owner of a graving-dock, issued regulations for its use, that the dock would "be let to parties requiring the same for the repair of vessels" at certain rates; that a book would be kept by the borough treasurer for the entering of the names of vessels intended for repair, and that as far as practicable priority would be given to vessels in the order of entry. A sum of three guineas was to be paid to the borough treasurer on entering each vessel, which "entrance money, and the right of turn for the use of the dock," were to be forfeited if the vessel did not take her turn at the specified time; and the corporation was to have a lien for dockage upon the vessel, with a power to detain the vessel for the same. In an action by a ship-owner against the corporation for not allowing his vessel, for which the entrance fee had been paid, to enter such dock in her turn, according to these regulations:—Held, that the contract for the use of the dock did not amount to an interest in land within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, and that it did not require to be under seal. Wells v. Kingston-upon-Hull (Mayor, &c.), 44 L. J., C. P. 257; 10 L. R., C. P. 402; 23 W. R. 562; 32 L. T., N. S. 615.

The plaintiffs agreed in writing with the defendant to let him a public-house from year to year, with an option for him to call on them to grant him a lease for twenty-eight years, and a stipulation that if he sold such lease for more than 1,200*l.* he should give the plaintiffs half the difference. The plaintiffs subsequently granted him a lease differing from that agreed to be granted in the following particulars:—It was for thirty-two years instead of twenty-eight. The rent was 105*l.* instead of 100*l.* The premium was 800*l.* instead of 1,200*l.* There was no covenant, as had been agreed, against assignment without the lessors' consent, nor binding the lessee to take his beer of the plaintiffs. Some other covenants, burdensome on the defendant, which had been agreed for, were omitted. These alterations were arranged by parol only. The defendant sold the lease for 2,500*l.* The plaintiffs sued upon the agreement for half the difference between that sum and 1,200*l.* The jury found that the stipulation as to dividing the surplus remained in force or was renewed:—Held, that the effect of the alteration of the original terms agreed upon between the parties was that the old agreement was dissolved, and a new one made, incorporating such parts of the old agreement as the parties did not choose to alter; and that as such new agreement related to land, and was not in writing within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, it could not be enforced by action. Sanderson v. Graves, 44 L. J.,

The plaintiff, in a letter, proposed to take a lease of the defendant's house for a term of years, if the defendant would carry out certain alterations. A correspondence and interviews followed, and it was ultimately agreed that the alterations should be made, the plaintiff to pay 75*l.* towards them. The plaintiff wished to have the drawing-room painted in a particular way, and the defendant consented that the plaintiff should send in his own workman to paint it, which he accordingly did, and also laid down gas pipes, with the defendant's consent. Ultimately the plaintiff was prevented from taking possession of the house owing to the default of the defendant in carrying out the alterations to be performed by him, and brought an action for breach of the agreement, with the common counts for work done. The correspondence disclosed no agreement sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds:—Held, that the plaintiff could, under the common counts, recover for the value of the work done by the defendant's consent. Pullbrook v. Innes, 1 L. R., Q. B. Div. 284; 34 L. T., N. S. 95; 45 L. J., Q. B. Div. 178; overruling Hodgson v. Johnson, El., Bl. & El. 686; 23 L. J., Q. B. 88.

Sufficiency of the memorandum or note required by the statute.—One paper, referring to another, in which the terms of an agreement are stated, will constitute a contract sufficiently executed according to the provisions of the Statute of Frauds; but where the first paper was in these words: "I agree to let the premises in G. L., containing three stables, &c., for the same rent, and subject to the same conditions that I hold them myself."—Held, that this paper, even though ratified by the proposed lessee, as it did not state the duration of the term, did not contain enough to constitute a memorandum of an agreement sufficient to satisfy the statute. Pitmaurice v. Bayley, 9 H. L. Cas. 78; 6 Jur., N. S. 1215; 8 W. R. 750; affirming judgment of Exchequer Chamber 8 El. & Bl. 664; 4 Jur., N. S. 506; 27 L. J., Q. B. 143.

The following letter was written by E. to the plaintiff (after taking the defendant over a house belonging to the plaintiff): "I have at length let Town Walls House, subject to certain alterations and repairs, at 40*l.* per annum. A list of the repairs I herewith send you. I think they are so absolutely necessary and reasonable that I have at once set Mr. B. upon the work, so as to bind the person who has taken it." The defendant had previously offered to take the house:—Held, that the letter was not such a memorandum of the bargain as to satisfy the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, inasmuch as it was a mere proposal, and did not specify the commencement or the duration of the term, so as to amount to evidence of a contract. Olarks v. Fuller, 16 C. B., N. S. 24; 12 W. R. 671.

A., having agreed by parol to grant a lease to B., the lease, as agreed upon, was engrossed. A. was afterwards induced not to grant the lease, and his agent wrote to B., informing him that A. had gone away "without executing the lease," and that the matter must stand over; and in another letter A.'s agent wrote declining to carry out "the agreement to grant a lease which your client alleges he has entered into." The answer in the suit admitted the parol agreement and the engrossment of the lease, but insisted on the Statute of Frauds:—Held, that neither the expressions used in the letters of A.'s agent, nor the answer in the suit, constituted a memorandum of the contract in writing within the Statute of Frauds. Jackson v. Oglander, 13 L. T., N. S. 10; 13 W. R. 936; 2 H. & M. 465.

Where the defendant agreed in writing to grant the plaintiff a lease at a specified rent and for a specified term, subject to the same covenants, clauses, and agreements as were contained in an expiring lease under which he then held the property, and the plaintiff filed a claim for specific performance, stating the agreement, and that it was further agreed that he should pay a premium of 200*l.*, which by his claim he offered to do:—Held, that this additional term did not render the Statute of Frauds a valid defense to the claim. Martin v. Pycroft, 2 De G., M. & G. 785; 16 Jur. 1125; 22 L. J., Chanc. 94.

A tenant applied to the landlord's solicitors as to the renewal of his lease. The solicitors sent him a report by a surveyor, who recommended the granting a lease for fourteen years at a given rent if certain repairs were done by the tenant. The tenant wrote back assenting to the repairs and rent, but asking for a term of twenty-one years. No final agreement was come to, but some months afterwards, a negotiation having proceeded between the tenant and landlord without the intervention of the solicitors, the landlord wrote a letter promising the tenant a lease for fourteen years "at the rent and terms agreed upon," to which the tenant wrote back an unqualified acceptance:—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to connect the report and the tenant's previous letter with the subsequent letters; and that, it being conclusively established that there had never been any other rent or terms agreed upon than those mentioned in the report, there was a sufficient memorandum in writing to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Baumann v. James, 3 L. R., Ch. 508; 16 W. R. 877; 18 L. T., N. S. 424.

The report provided for the tenant doing certain specified works and "other works" upon the property, and estimated the expense from 150*l.* to 200*l.* The specified works being such as must evidently cost nearly that sum:—Held, that there was no such uncertainty as to prevent specific performance. Id.

The plaintiff, in a bill for specific performance of an agreement to take a lease of a house, alleged evidence of a verbal agreement, which was denied by the defendant. In order to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, the plaintiff relied on a letter written by the defendant, in which the defendant agreed to take the house for seven years on certain terms, but in which the day of the commencement of the lease was not mentioned; and on another letter from the defendant, mentioning the day of commencement, and adding terms to which the plaintiff did not agree:—Held, that there was no memorandum of agreement sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds. Nesham v. Selby, 13 L. R., Eq. 191; 41 L. J., Chanc. 173; 26 L. T., N. S. 145—R.; affirmed on appeal, 7 L. R., Ch. 406; 41 L. J., Chanc. 551; 26 L. T., N. S. 568.

An offer in writing to take a lease of a theater, signed by the intending lessees and attested by the lessor's agent, but not naming the lessor and only addressed to him as "Sir," followed by an acceptance in writing by the agent, addressed to and received by the intending lessees, but likewise not naming the lessor, which letter was not signed by them nor referred to in any other writing, is not an agreement in writing within the Statute of Frauds so as to entitle the lessor to have the same specifically performed. Williams v. Jordan, 6 L. R., Ch. Div. 517—R.

A memorandum of agreement to grant a lease, not stating any time for the commencement of the lease, construed as an agreement for a lease to commence immediately from the date of the agreement, and held sufficient under the Statute of Frauds. Jaque v. Millar, 6 L. R., Ch. Div. 153; 87 L. T., N. S. 151; 25 W. R. 846—Fry, J.

Action for specific performance of an agreement to take a lease of a house. In order to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds the plaintiff relied on a letter, written by the defendant, in which "the term" was stated "to be for twelve years," but the day of the commencement of the term was not mentioned; and in the same letter, referring to certain covenants, the defendant "suggested that they be similar to those contained in A.'s lease":—Held, first, that there never was any concluded agreement between the parties. Cartwright v. Miller, 86 L. T., N. S. 898—V. C. M.

Held, secondly, that if there had been an agreement, there was no memorandum of the agreement, in writing, sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, as the commencement of the term was not stated. Id.

As to necessity of expressing the proper consideration,—see this title, I., 4.

What signature sufficient to satisfy the statute.—An indorsement on the draft of a lease, signed by the lessee, and stating, that as circumstances prevented him from performing his agreement, he wished the lessor to let the premises, will satisfy the statute. Shippey v. Derrison, 5 Esp. 190—Ellenborough.

The mere circumstance of the name of the party being written by himself in the body of a memorandum of agreement for a lease, will not constitute a signature within the meaning of the statute. Stokes v. Moore, 1 Cox, 219.

A memorandum of agreement for a lease was signed by the lessee, but the name of the lessor did not appear in any part of the memorandum:—Held, that a letter written by the lessee subsequently to the memorandum, referring to the lessor by name, was sufficient to satisfy the statute. Werner v. Willington, 8 Drew. 523; 2 Jur., N. S. 433; 25 L. J., Chanc. 662.

As to the effect of the analogous provisions of the Statute of Frauds in respect of contracts between vendor and purchaser,—see SALE.

Necessity of deed; under the repealed statute, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76.—[By s. 4 of this statute (repealed from the 1st of October, 1845, by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), no lease in writing of any freehold, copyhold, or leasehold land, or surrender in writing of any freehold or leasehold land, shall be valid as a lease or surrender unless the same shall be made by deed, but any agreement in writing to let or to surrender any such land shall be valid, and take effect as an agreement to execute a lease or surrender, and the person who shall be in the possession of the land in pursuance of any agreement to let may, from payment of rent or other circumstances, be construed to be a tenant from year to year.]

While the act was in force, A. and B. entered into a written agreement, not under seal, that A. should let and B. should take premises from a certain day for the monthly rent of 36s., to be paid every four weeks:—Held, that the 4th section prevented this document from taking effect as a lease. Burton v. Reezell, 16 M. & W. 807; 11 Jur. 71; 16 L. J., Exch. 85.

A., who held a long lease of premises, and B., by writing, agreed, by words of present demise, for a lease of three years from the 29th of September, 1845, by A. to B., and that if B. should, at the end of the term of three years, desire to renew his tenancy, then, on notice given by B. six months before the end of such term, A. should renew the tenancy for a further term of three years, or grant an underlease of A.'s term, at the option of B. B. was let into possession, and paid rent, and afterwards gave notice that he desired a renewal of the tenancy, but the renewal was not agreed upon, and the original term of three years expired. A., without giving notice to quit, brought ejectment, laying the demise on the 30th of September, 1848. The 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, was in force from the 1st of January, 1844, to the 1st of October, 1845:—Held, that the demise, not being under seal, operated as an agreement for a lease, and that by the payment of rent B. became tenant from year to year, subject to the terms of the agreement; that his interest expired of itself at the end of the term of three years first mentioned in the agreement, without any notice to quit; and that his having exercised his option to take a renewed term, and given notice accordingly, gave him no interest in the land. Doe d. Davenish v. Moffatt, 15 Q. B. 257; 14 Jur. 935; 19 L. J., Q. B. 438.

In an action by A. against B. for rent on a demise from quarter to quarter, with the rent payable one quarter in advance, a written agreement for this quarterly letting, made while the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, s. 4, was in force, was put in, which was signed by B., but not by A.:—Held, that this was evidence of a parol demise by A., and that it was put an end to by a parol notice to quit. Bird v. Defonville, 2 C. & K. 415—Erle.

An agreement of demise for three years, executed in March, 1845, in writing, but not by deed, was prevented from operating as a lease by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, and was not re-established as a lease by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, which repealed the former act, but took effect only as from October, 1845. Arden v. Sullivan, 14 Q. B. 832; 14 Jur. 712; 19 L. J., Q. B. 268.

—under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3.—[By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3, a lease required by law to be in writing of any tenements or hereditaments, made after the 1st October, 1845, shall be void at law, unless made by deed.]

This statute is retrospective in its operation. Upton v. Towend, 17 C. B. 50.

But it does not apply to agreements for letting turnpike tolls under 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. Shepherd v. Hodsman, 21 L. J., Q. B. 63; 18 Q. B. 316.

A. and B., after 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, came into operation, executed a written instrument, by which A. agreed to let and B. to hire land for a term exceeding three years, at a rent payable monthly. B. entered; and it was afterwards orally agreed that the rent should be paid quarterly:—Held, that 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3, though rendering the lease void, as not being by deed, still made it void only as a lease, and did not prevent it from indicating the terms on which B. held as tenant from year to year; and that consequently B.'s tenancy might be determined, during the term, by a half-year's notice, but, at the end of the term, expired without notice. Tress v. Savage, 4 El. & Bl. 36; 18 Jur. 680; 23 L. J., Q. B. 339; 2 C. L. R. 1315.

A lessee of premises from May till the 18th December, let them by parol to the defendant till the latter day, reserving a weekly rent. The parties intended to create the relation of landlord and tenant, and to pass the interest by lease. The defendant occupied and paid rent till June, and then gave a week's notice to quit, and, at the expiration thereof, left the premises. In an action to recover subsequent rent:—Held, that this might operate as a lease, though it passed all the lessor's interest, notwithstanding 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, and, therefore, the lessee was entitled to recover. Pollock v. Stacey, 9 Q. B. 1033; 11 Jur. 267; 16 L. J., Q. B. 133.

By a writing, not under seal, signed by the plaintiff and the defendant, the plaintiff agreed to take of the defendant a farm at a yearly rental, "the tenancy to commence from the 29th day of September next, for a term of eight years, subject to a lease," to be drawn up by the defendant:—Held, that there was no contract by the defendant to give the plaintiff possession of the farm on the day named; for that possession was to be given only on the commencement of a tenancy under a lease for eight years, and this agreement was void as a lease, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3. Drury v. Macnamara, 5 El. & Bl. 612; 1 Jur., N. S. 1163; 25 L. J., Q. B. 5.

But the statute does not prevent an instrument which (as containing words of present demise, and not being under seal) is void as a lease from being enforced as an agreement in equity. Parker v. Taswell, 2 De G. & J. 559; 4 Jur., N. S. 1006; 27 L. J., Chanc. 812.

An agreement creating a present demise, void as a lease, by the above statute, may still inure as an agreement. Hayne v. Cummings, 10 C. B., N. S. 421; 10 Jur., N. S. 773; 10 L. T., N. S. 341. S. P., Tidey v. Mollett, 10 C. B., N. S. 208; 10 Jur., N. S. 800; 83 L. J., C. P. 235; 12 W. R. 802; 10 L. T., N. S. 380: Bond v. Rosling, 1 B. & S. 371; 8 Jur., N. S. 78; 80 L. J., Q. B. 227; 9 W. R. 746; 4 L. T., N. S. 442.

The following agreement, made in 1861:—"L. agrees to let, and R. agrees to take, the wood-mill, with the house and land adjoining, for the period of three years from Lady-day then next, at the rent of 120l. per annum. A lease for the same to be executed and signed as soon as possible, subject to the permission of the landlord of the mill. L. also agrees to let, and R. agrees to take, the mill, house, land, &c., from this date up to Lady-day then next, on the same terms, and at the same rate of rent; R. to have the sole use of the mill, house, and land, and all machinery and utensils therein contained," operates as an actual demise from its date up to Lady-day, and as an agreement for a lease from that time for a term of three years, and consequently is not void for not being under seal. Rollason v. Leon, 7 H. & N. 73; 81 L. J., Exch. 96; 7 Jur., N. S. 608.

An agreement to let land at a yearly rent, determinable by six months' notice to quit (no term being mentioned), provided that, in case A. and B. erected any buildings upon the land, they were to have the privilege of removing them at any time during their occupation, or otherwise they were to be allowed a beneficial interest in the same to the amount of the sum expended in the erection of the buildings, such beneficial interest to extend over a period of twenty years; that is to say, if A. and B. were required to give up possession of the piece of ground before the expiration of the term of twenty years, they were to be allowed one-twentieth part of the amount expended for each remaining year of the unexpired term of twenty years:—Held, that this agreement conferred on A. and B. such a beneficial interest in the land as constituted them owners within the interpretation clause of the Lands Clauses Act (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), and that, therefore, the company was not entitled to enter on the land until it had satisfied A. and B.'s claim, as provided by s. 84. Rogers v. Hull Dock Company, 12 W. R. 1101; 11 L. T., N. S. 42—V. C. W.; affirmed on appeal, 10 Jur., N. S. 1245; 13 W. R. 217; 11 L. T., N. S. 463; 84 L. J., Chanc. 165—C.

Hand and Hall entered into the following agreement not under seal: "Jan. 26. Hand agrees to let, and Hall agrees to take, the large room, &c., from 14 February next until the following Midsummer twelve months, and with right at end of that term for the tenant, by a month's previous notice, to remain on for three years and a half more:—"Held, that the agreement was divisible, and contained an actual demise for a term less than three years, with a superadded stipulation, that Hall at his option should have a renewal of the tenancy, and that, as to the actual demise, it need not be under seal pursuant to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3. Hand v. Hall, 2 L. R., Exch. Div. 355; 46 L. J., Exch. Div. 603; 25 W. R. 734—C. A.; reversing the judgment of the Exchequer Division, 3 L. R., Exch. Div. 318; 46 L. J., Exch. Div. 242; 36 L. T., N. S. 765; 25 W. R. 512.

By a written instrument not under seal, and dated the 28th of February, 1872, W. purported to demise a messuage to the defendant as tenant from year to year, for so long as he should keep the rent paid, and as W. should have "power to let the premises;" the rent reserved by the instrument was less than two-thirds of the annual value of the messuage. The defendant entered and paid rent quarterly:—Held, that the instrument was void as a lease, first, on the ground of uncertainty; and secondly, on the ground that, not being within the terms of s. 2 of the Statute of Frauds, it ought to have been under seal, pursuant to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, ss. 2, 3. Wood v. Beard, 2 L. R., Exch. Div. 80; 46 L. J., Q. B. Div. 100; 35 L. T., N. S. 866—D. C. A. See Holmes v. Day, 8 Ir. R., C. L. 235—C. P.

Held, also, that the only estate vested in the defendant was a tenancy from year to year. Id.

A lease in writing, not by deed, void under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3, does not require a stamp. Mott v. Turnage, 1 F. & F. 6—Cresswell.

4. Stamping.

Statutes.—[The former statutes imposing duties upon leases, &c., were the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184 (see Schedule, Tit. "Leases"), repealed in 1850 by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97, which enacted a new scale of duties. The duties imposed by the latter act, and by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 83; 23 Vict. c. 15; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 111; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 21; and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 96, continued in force until the taking effect of the 33 & 34 Vict. c. 97, in 1870.

By 33 & 34 Vict. c. 97, Schedule, the following duties are chargeable:—upon any lease or tack—

| | | | |
|---|---|----|----|
| (1.) For any definite term less than a year: | £ | s. | d. |
| (a.) Of any dwelling-house or tenement, or part of a dwelling-house or tenement, at a rent not exceeding the rate of 10 l. per annum... | 0 | 0 | 1 |
| (b.) Of any furnished dwelling-house or apartments where the rent for such term exceeds 25 l. ... | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| (c.) Of any lands, tenements, or heritable subjects except or otherwise than as aforesaid, the same duty as a lease for a year at the rent reserved for the definite term. | | | |
| (2.) For any other definite term or for any indefinite term: Of any lands, tenements or heritable subjects— Where the consideration, or any part of the consideration, moving either to the lessor or to any other person, consists of any money, stock or security: In respect of such consideration the same duty as a conveyance on a sale for the same consideration. Where the consideration or any part of the consideration is any rent: In respect of such consideration: If the term is definite, and does not exceed 35 years, or is indefinite: If the rent, whether reserved as a yearly rent or otherwise is at a rate or average rate: Not exceeding 5 l. per annum... | 0 | 0 | 6 |

| If the term being definite exceeds 35 years, but does not exceed 100 years, six times the several amounts above fixed | | | |

for the respective rates of rent.

If the term being definite exceeds 100 years, twelve times the several amounts above fixed for the respective rates of rent.

(3.) Of any other kind whatsoever not hereinbefore described... 0 10 0

Upon the duplicate or counterpart of any instrument chargeable with any duty—

Where such duty does not amount to 5*s.*, the same duty as the original instrument.

In any other case... 0 5 0

By s. 93, the duplicate or counterpart of an instrument chargeable with duty (except the counterpart of an instrument chargeable as a lease, such counterpart not being executed by or on behalf of any lessor or grantor), is not to be deemed duly stamped unless it is stamped as an original instrument, or unless it appears by some stamp impressed thereon that the full and proper duty has been paid upon the original instrument of which it is the duplicate or counterpart.

By s. 96 (1.), an agreement for a lease or tack, or with respect to the letting of any lands, tenements, or heritable subjects, for any term not exceeding 35 years, is to be charged with the same duty as if it were an actual lease or tack, made for the term and consideration mentioned in the agreement.

(2.) A lease or tack made subsequently to and in conformity with such an agreement duly stamped, is to be charged with the duty of 6*d.* only.

(3.) No lease for a life or lives not exceeding three, or for a term of years determinable with a life or lives not exceeding three, and no lease for a term absolute not exceeding 21 years, granted by an ecclesiastical corporation aggregate or sole, is to be charged with any higher duty than 3*s.*

By s. 97 (1.), where the consideration, or any part of the consideration, for which any lease or tack is granted or agreed to be granted, does not consist of money, but consists of any produce or other goods, the value of such produce or goods is to be deemed a consideration in respect of which the lease or tack or agreement is chargeable with ad valorem duty, and where it is stipulated that the value of such produce or goods is to amount at least to, or is not to exceed a given sum, or where the lessee is specially charged with, or has the option of paying after, any permanent rate of conversion, the value of such produce or goods is, for the purpose of assessing the ad valorem duty, to be estimated at such given sum, or according to such permanent rate.

(2.) A lease or tack or agreement made either entirely or partially for any such consideration, if it contains a statement of the value of such consideration, and is stamped in accordance with such statement, is, so far as regards the subject matter of such statement, to be deemed duly stamped, unless or until it is otherwise shown that such statement is incorrect, and that it is in fact in duly stamped.

By s. 98 (1.), a lease or tack, or agreement for a lease or tack, or with respect to any letting, is not to be charged with any duty in respect of any penal rent, or increased rent in the nature of a penal rent, thereby reserved or agreed to be reserved or made payable, or by reason of being made in consideration of the surrender or abandonment of any existing lease, tack or agreement of or relating to the same subject-matter.

(2.) No lease made for any consideration or considerations, in respect whereof it is chargeable with ad valorem duty, and in further consideration either of a covenant by the lessee to make, or of his having previously made, any substantial improvement of or addition to the property demised to him, or of any covenant relating to the matter of the lease, is to be charged with any duty in respect of such further consideration.

By s. 99, the duty upon an instrument chargeable with duty as a lease or tack for any definite term less than a year of—

(1.) Any dwelling-house or tenement, or part of a dwelling-house or tenement, at a rent not exceeding the rate of 10l. per annum;

(2.) Any furnished dwelling-house or apartments;

Or upon the duplicate or counterpart of any such instrument, may be denoted by an adhesive stamp, which is to be canceled by the person by whom the instrument is first executed.

By s. 100 (1.), every person who executes, or prepares or is employed in preparing, any instrument upon which the duty may, under the provisions of the last preceding section, be denoted by an adhesive stamp, and which is not, at or before the execution thereof, duly stamped, shall forfeit 5l.

(2.) Provided that nothing in this section contained shall render any person liable to the said penalty of 5l. in respect of any letters or correspondence.

By 39 Vict. c. 16, s. 11, an instrument whereby the rent reserved by any other instrument chargeable with stamp duty as a lease or tack and duly stamped accordingly is increased, shall not be chargeable with stamp duty otherwise than as a lease or tack, in consideration of the additional rent thereby made payable.]

What instruments require to be stamped as agreements for leases.—A written paper, signed by an auctioneer, and delivered to a bidder, to whom lands were let by auction, containing the description of the lands, the term for which they were let to the bidder, and the rent payable, was required to be stamped, under 48 Geo. 3, c. 149. Ramsbottom v. Mortley, 2 M. & S. 445.

But a similar paper, not signed by the auctioneer nor any of the parties, is not such a minute of the agreement as was required to be stamped by the same statute, nor such a writing as would exclude parol evidence. Ramsbottom v. Tunbridge, 5 M. & S. 434.

Where there was a parol agreement to demise certain premises upon the terms and conditions contained in a lease of the same premises, granted by the lessor to another person:—Held, that in an action by the lessor against the lessee for rent and non-repairs, the lease could not be read in evidence unless it was stamped. Turner v. Power, 7 B. & C. 625; M. & M. 181.

A memorandum, by which, in consideration that A. will withdraw a distress for a sum exceeding 20l., which B. admits to be due from him as tenant to A., until a future day, B. declares, that, in case of default, it shall be lawful for A. to enter and distrain, and to pursue all remedies for the recovery of the rent, as if no distress had been taken, is admissible to prove the tenancy, without a stamp. Hill v. Ramm, 5 M. & G. 789; 6 Scott, N. R. 571.

To prove a settlement by renting a tenement, a witness produced a book containing the entry of an agreement for a present demise of a house, at 11l. per annum. The witness stated that he let the house as agent to his father, who was present, and that the terms were reduced to writing, to prevent mistake, and signed by the wife of the pauper, on purpose to bind her husband, the husband not being present; but that the entry was not signed by the witness or his father, nor did their name appear in any part. He further stated, that he had no memory of these things but from the book, without which he could not of his own knowledge be able to speak to the fact; but, on reading the entry, he had no doubt that the fact really happened:—Held, that the entry was neither a lease nor an agreement for a lease within the Stamp Act. Rex v. St. Martin, Leicester, 4 N. & M. 202; 2 A. & E. 210.

An agreement of demise, the terms of which have been assented to by the parties to it, although it has not been signed by them, is not admissible unstamped. Chudwick v. Clarke, 1 C. B. 700; 9 Jur. 539; 14 L. J., C. P. 233.

An instrument in these terms, "I hereby certify that I remain in the house, No. 3 Swinton Street, belonging to W. G., on sufferance only, and agree to give him immediate possession at any time he may require," does not amount to an agreement for a tenancy, so as to require a stamp. Barry v. Goodman, 2 M. & W. 768; M. & H. 108.

A., being tenant of premises under an indenture of lease granted by B., a sequestration issued out of the Court of Chancery against the latter. A. then signed the following instrument: "I hereby attorn and become tenant to C. and D., two of the sequestrators named in the writ of sequestration issued in the said suit in Chancery, and to hold the same for such time and on such conditions as may be subsequently agreed upon:—Held, that this was an agreement to become tenant, and required a stamp. Corrish v. Searrell, 8 B. & C. 471; 1 M. & R. 703.

The following letter was produced in an action for the hire of furnished apartments, stamped with a 80s. stamp: "I hereby agree (according to our conversation of last evening) to pay you for the occupation of your first floor, furnished, from Monday, March 4, 1839, to September the 4th, 1839, 52l. 10s. I also agree either to occupy the rooms from 4th September to the 4th December, furnished, on the same terms, viz., 26l. 5s. for three months, or take them unfurnished, at the rate of 84l. per annum." In order to explain, as he contended, that letter, the defendant put in a second, which was not stamped:—Held, inadmissible; for, if treated as a separate and an independent agreement, it should have had a 80s. stamp; and if the terms of the agreement were to be collected from the two letters, a 85s. stamp would be requisite on one of them, by virtue of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184. Atherstone v. Bostock, 2 Scott, N. R. 637; 2 M. & G. 511.

The provision of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, Schedule, tit. "Agreement," that a memorandum or agreement for granting a lease or tack, at rack-rent, of any messuage, land, or tenement, under the yearly rent of 5l., shall be exempted from duty, does not apply to an agreement for a lease of premises, though under 5l. per annum, if the interest agreed for is a beneficial one, as a building lease. Doe d. Hunter v. Boulcot, 2 Esp. 593—Eyre.

An agreement in the following form:—"I, J. T., hereby agree with W. M. to retake of him two acres of land, from the 10th of October, 1840, at which time my tenancy expires, until the 25th of March, 1841, for 10l.;" with a promise by J. T. to allow W. M. to plant fruit-trees, and to deliver up possession at the end of the time; signed by J. T., but not by W. M., is neither a lease nor an agreement in which the matter is of the value of 20l.; and, therefore, requires no stamp. Doe d. Marlow v. Wiggins, 3 G. & D. 504; 4 Q. B. 867; 7 Jur. 529; 12 L. J., Q. B. 177.

An agreement dated April 14th, 1804, not under seal, was made between M. and N., by which N. was to rent of M. the ferry called D. for 6l. 6s. per annum, to be paid half-yearly, for which N. was to have the sole use of the ferry and whatever profit might accrue from it for the time he should hold the same. "Be it also remembered, that N. has this day bought of M. the great ferry-boat for 20l., of which 5l. shall be paid," by installments of 5l., yearly, on April 6th, the first in 1805:—Held, first, that the instrument purporting to convey an incorporeal hereditament was not a lease, because not under seal, and therefore did not require a lease stamp. Mayfield v. Robinson, 7 Q. B. 486; 9 Jur. 826.

Held, secondly, that, as an agreement for a lease, it was not subjected to duty by the clause of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, exempting agreements for leases under the yearly rent of 5l., for that a duty could not be imposed by implication from this exempting clause. Id.

Held, thirdly, that, if the rent only was considered, the subject-matter of the agreement was not of the value of 20l., and therefore no stamp was necessary. Id.

Held, fourthly, that the price of the boat could not be taken into consideration, the agreement as to that not being ancillary to the contract for letting, but being a distinct and separate memorandum of a bygone purchase of goods, and in itself subject to no stamp duty. Id.

— as leases.]—A lease from the Board of Ordnance, which purported to be signed, sealed and delivered, being first duly stamped, was not stamped:—Held, that being a lease from the crown, it was not necessary that it should be stamped. Petrie v. Lamont, Car. & M. 98—Tindal.

A lease in writing, not by deed, void under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 8, does not require a stamp. Mott v. Turnage, 1 F. & F. 6—Cresswell.

A lease for years in consideration of a sum certain, and at a peppercorn rent, does not require an ad valorem stamp. Roe d. Larkin v. Chenhalls, 4 M. & S. 23.

A lease for a term of forty-five years at a substantial rent for the first twenty-three years, and a peppercorn during the remaining twenty-two, is not a lease, "exceeding thirty-five years at a yearly rent" within the meaning of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 83, Sched., tit. Lease, and is not liable to the duty imposed by that statute. Pearson v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 3 L. R., Exch. 242; 37 L. J., Exch. 171; 18 L. T., N. S. 570.

As to the distinction between agreements and leases,—see also this title, I., 2.

— as counterparts of leases.]—A lessee who has executed a counterpart of a lease cannot object to its admissibility in evidence on the ground that the lease itself is not stamped. Paul v. Meek, 2 Y. & J. 116

In an action for rent on a demise, the plaintiff produced a deed properly stamped as a counterpart lease, and proved the same to have been executed by the defendant:—Held, that, although there was no evidence of any lease having been executed by the plaintiff, the presumption was that there was such; and the deed produced was therefore rightly admissible as a counterpart. Hughes v. Clark, 10 C. B. 905; 15 Jur. 480.

— as assignments or surrenders of leases.]—A deed, purporting to be a surrender of a lease, and made in consideration of 120l., and of a new lease to be granted of the premises at an increased rent, was stamped with a 1l. 15s. stamp:—Held, that it did not also require an agreement stamp, as the agreement for the new lease was part of the conveyance, and incident thereto. Doe d. Philippa v. Philippa, 3 P. & D. 603; 11 A. & E. 796.

Where an instrument which was offered in evidence to show a disclaimer, contained terms amounting to a surrender:—Held, that it required a stamp. Doe d. Wyatt v. Stagg, 5 Bing. N. C. 564; 7 Scott, 690; 3 Jur. 1127.

A deed executed by the defendant only, was intended by the parties when executed to be the counterpart of a lease, and was stamped with a duty of 1*l.* 10*s.*; but the grantor having thereby parted with all his interest in the premises, the original deed became by operation of law an assignment:—Held, that the deed so tendered was not admissible for the purpose of proving an assignment, the proper stamp being 1*l.* 15*s.*, under the general clause to the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, applicable to “deeds of any kind, not otherwise charged, or expressly exempted from stamp duty.” Baker v. Gosling, 1 Scott, 58; 1 Bing. N. C. 246.

Amount of stamp duty, as dependent upon character of instrument, as agreement, lease or deed.—The proper stamp to be borne by a written instrument must depend upon what is the leading character of such instrument. Price v. Thomas, 2 B. & Ad. 218; S. C., nom. Pratt v. Thomas, 4 C. & P. 554.

By an indenture, in the form and containing the usual covenants of a lease, A. demised premises to B., and B. and C. covenanted to pay the rent, but C. was not otherwise referred to in the instrument. In an action against C. on the covenant to pay rent:—Held, that the indenture was available against him, though stamped as a lease only, and that a deed stamp was unnecessary. Id.

Under 23 Geo. 3, c. 58, a lease must be stamped as a lease by deed, though it was not by deed; for, though not by deed, it fell within the words of the act which required a stamp to leases, enumerated among other specialties. Goodtitle d. Estwicke v. Way, 1 T. R. 737. S. P., Harker v. Birkbeck, 3 Burr. 1556; 1 W. Bl. 482.

An instrument which is sealed, but which merely amounts to an agreement for a lease, requires a 1*l.* 15*s.* stamp, as a deed not otherwise charged. Clayton v. Burtenshaw, 7 D. & R. 809; 5 B. & C. 41.

Where an instrument contains a written contract of demise in its general terms, with a several operation with respect to the different tenants who sign it for different estates at the different rents, set against their signatures, and one stamp only appears upon the paper, it is matter of evidence to which contract such stamp applies. Doe d. Copley v. Day, 13 East, 241.

If a lease in writing contains a contract for the purchase of goods, it cannot be given in evidence to prove the sale of the goods, unless it has a lease stamp, although it has an agreement stamp. Corder v. Drakeford, 3 Taunt. 382.

By articles of agreement, signed by the plaintiff, W., and the defendant, the plaintiff let to W. a public-house, from year to year, at a certain rent, and W. agreed to buy of the plaintiff all the beer, &c., which should be consumed on the premises during the time, or to pay 30*l.* in liquidated damages for every barrel bought from any other person, and to pay monthly for the beer, &c., bought from the plaintiff; and the defendant agreed “to hold himself responsible for any account of money which might become due from W. to the amount of 30*l.*.”—Held, that an agreement stamp was necessary, in addition to a lease stamp. Wharton v. Walton, 7 Q. B. 474; 14 L. J., Q. B. 321.

An agreement which might amount to a lease, not stamped as such, is an admission by the tenant on a matter collateral to the lease, and relating to a valuation, the subject of the action. Walker v. Atkinson, 1 F. & F. 465—Crowder.

Where a document, void as a lease, is tendered to show the terms of a collateral agreement, it requires a stamp as an agreement. Golden v. Taylor, 2 F. & F. 110—Byles.

An agreement that A. is to have a tenement for life, does not require a lease stamp, the document not being under seal, and therefore not operating to pass an estate for life. Stone v. Rogers, 2 M. & W. 443; M. & H. 146; 1 Jur. 455.

A., being owner of a farm, let it for seven years to B.: and by a written agreement of the same date it was agreed, “that A. should manage the farm for B., B. allowing A. 12*s.* a week, and allowing him and his family to reside and have the use of the dwelling-house and furniture therein, free of rent,” and this agreement was to be put an end to by three months’ notice, or three months’ wages:—Held, that this agreement did not require a lease stamp, as it did not contain a demise of the house, the occupation of it being a mere remuneration for services. Doe d. Hughes v. Derry, 9 C. & P. 404—Parke.

The following document is a mere agreement for a future tenancy, not an actual demise, under 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, and, therefore, properly stamped with a 1*l.* stamp:—“Memorandum of an agreement entered into this 31st of January, 1840, between B. and J. J. agrees to become the tenant of G. farm, at the customary time of entry, under the following conditions: viz. that 260*l.* annual rent, shall be paid at the usual time for the house, premises and lands as agreed upon; and B. agrees to lay out, in the improvement and alteration of the farm-house and new sheds, a sum not exceeding 200*l.*, with the understanding that spars for rafters shall be found from the estate. Cartage for all materials, except stones for walls, to be done or found by J.” Gore v. Lloyd, 12 M. & W. 463; 13 L. J., Exch. 366.

Agreement as follows:—“I, W. E., acknowledge that I am indebted to B., as agent of S., my landlord, in 22*l.*, for arrears of rent for the cottage in my occupation; and I now pay B. 5*l.* on account and in part of such rent, and undertake to pay him 8*l.* per annum, by quarterly payments,” does not require a lease stamp. Eagleton v. Gutteridge, 2 D., N. S. 1053; 11 M. & W. 465; 12 L. J., Exch. 359.

A. and B. entered into the following agreement with C.:—"We agree to hire your cottages and premises, from the 27th of September next, at the rent of 40*l.* per annum, payable quarterly, free from all deductions, and agree to pay 10*l.* on the 30th of October; and in case any quarter's rent shall be in arrear, and unpaid for fourteen days, we engage to quit possession, upon a notice to that effect, giving us seven days further time, being left upon the premises: and in the event of our non-compliance with such notice, we authorize you or your agent to clear the premises, as if you were the occupier, and to resume the possession accordingly, without the aid of legal authority; this right to be without prejudice to any remedy for enforcing payment of the rent that may be in arrear; and further, we engage to preserve the mills, cottages and premises from damage, and to deliver them up in good condition, together with all fixtures belonging to you, when our tenancy expires, reasonable wear and tear being allowed us." In an action for rent due under this agreement:—Held, that it did not require a lease stamp. Glen v. Dungey, 4 Exch. 61; 18 L. J., Exch. 359.

A lease made in consideration of a rent, and also of a covenant to complete houses, was a lease made "for a further or other valuable consideration" besides the rent, within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 83, s. 16, and was chargeable with a deed stamp beyond the ad valorem duty. Bolton, In re, 5 L. R., Exch. 82; 39 L. J., Exch. 51; 18 W. R. 851; 21 L. T., N. S. 720. But by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 44, the holders of such leases made previously to the date of this decision are relieved from the payment of the additional duty, and such leases shall not in future be chargeable with such additional duty.

— as dependent upon amount of consideration.]—The stamp required by 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, for a lease, is regulated by the consideration (whether fine or rent) expressed to be paid, and not by that which is actually paid. Doe d. Kettle v. Lewis, 10 B. & C. 673.

Where a piece of land was demised for ninety-nine years, at an annual rent of 8*l.*, and the lease contained a covenant that the lessee should, within a year from the granting of the lease, build a dwelling-house on the land, and expend 150*l.* at the least upon it:—Held, that a stamp of 1*l.* was sufficient under 55 Geo. 3, c. 184. Nicholls v. Cross, 14 M. & W. 42; 14 L. J., Exch. 244.

A person became the purchaser at an auction, for 45*l.*, of certain grass herbage for a certain time, under certain conditions in a printed catalogue, which were signed by him and which were held to amount to a lease. By one of the conditions the highest bidder was to pay a deposit of 10*l.*, and give a note for the residue, payable on a subsequent day, and to be entitled to immediate possession. The defendant paid the deposit of 10*l.*:—Held, that the purchase-money was in the nature of a fine or premium, though not payable at once, and fell within the first head of the schedule in 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, tit. "Lease," and, therefore, a 1*l.* stamp was sufficient. Cattle v. Gamble, 5 Bing. N. C. 46; 7 D. P. C. 98; 6 Scott, 783; 1 Arn. 405; 2 Jur. 922.

By an instrument in writing, not under seal, reciting that D. had purchased a piece of ground with four messuages built thereon, in one of which the plaintiff resided, it was agreed that the plaintiff should continue to reside therein during the residue of D.'s interest therein, provided the plaintiff should so long live, at the annual rent of one shilling; and in the event of his dying during the term, his widow should reside there on the same terms; and D. further agreed to assign all his interest in the premises so purchased to the plaintiff, on payment within seven years of 140*l.*, together with all expenses:—Held, that the instrument required an agreement stamp as well as a lease stamp. Love-lock v. Frankland, 8 Q. B. 371; 11 Jur. 1035; 16 L. J., Q. B. 182.

It was stated, in an agreement which amounted to a lease, that A. agreed to let premises to B. for two years, at the rent of 50*l.* a year; that B. shall have the right of purchasing the premises at any time during the term, it being understood that A. is possessed of the same premises for his own life and the life of M., and the survivor of them:—Held, that a 30*s.* stamp was sufficient. Worthington v. Warrington, 5 C. B. 635; 17 L. J., C. P. 117.

The plaintiff demised a slate pit at S. and stone quarries at M. to the defendant, under an indenture of lease, to hold the one from Lady-day, 1815, and the other from Michaelmas, 1817, for the several terms of fourteen years from the respective dates thereof, at the yearly rent of 70*l.* for the slate pit, and 130*l.* for the quarries:—Held, that all the premises might be demised by one indenture of lease, and that one ad valorem stamp on the aggregate amount was sufficient under 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, as the letting must be considered as one transaction, there being no evidence of an intent by the parties to defraud the revenue. Boase v. Jackson, 6 Moore, 480; 3 B. & B. 185.

A lease contained a demise of two separate farms, with two habendums, differing from each other; a reservation of a separate rent in respect of each farm, and separate covenants, some applying to one farm, some to the other. The lessee entered on the whole at one time:—Held, that one ad valorem stamp for the amount of both rents was sufficient. Blount v. Pearman, 1 Scott, 55; 1 Bing. N. C. 408.

Where an instrument demises several matters consisting of lands and other interests (some of which are incorporeal tenements), at one fixed rent, one ad valorem stamp is sufficient. Reg. v. Hockworthy, 2 N. & P. 383; W., W. & D. 707; 7 A. & E. 492.

A lease which demised a dwelling-house and land at a rent certain, and then demised two fields, from the succeeding Michaelmas, at the same rent which the lessor received from the persons who then occupied them, does not require, on account of the latter demise, a stamp of 1*l.* 10*s.* It is sufficient if such an ad valorem stamp is affixed as will cover the whole amount of rent to be paid. Pary v. Deere, 1 N. & P. 47; 5 A. & E. 551; 2 H. & W. 395.

The ad valorem stamp duty on a lease is to be regulated by the consideration appearing on the face of it, although it may not be that which is actually paid. Duck v. Braddyll, 1 McEl. 217; 13 Price, 455.

An instrument, which operated as a lease, reserved a rent of 50*l.*, but contained a stipulation, that the landlord should insure the premises for 1,000*l.*, and that the premiums of insurance should be added to the rent of 50*l.*, and become due and payable in like manner as the rent:—Held, that this was not a “deed not otherwise charged” within 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, tit. “Deed,” but was properly stamped with an ad valorem lease stamp of 1*l.* 10*s.*, as on a rent exceeding 20*l.*, and not exceeding 100*l.*; and that, if the premiums of insurance, added to the rent, exceeded 100*l.*, it lay upon the party seeking to impeach the instrument to show that they did so. Wilson v. Smith, 12 M. & W. 401; 1 D. & L. 633; 13 L. J., Exch. 113.

Where a lease had two distinct reservations of rent, one 378*l.*, in respect of house and land, and the other 50*l.*, for furniture and fixtures, a stamp of 3*l.*, sufficient to cover the former, but not sufficient for both, was not enough. Coster v. Cwaling, 7 Bing. 456; 5 M. & P. 399.

By a lease between W. and S., indorsed on a prior lease between the same parties, reciting that, in consideration of money laid out upon the premises by W., S. had agreed to pay a further rent, it was witnessed that, in consideration of the rent reserved by the within-written indenture, and of the covenants, provisos and agreements therein contained, and also in consideration of the further yearly rent, W. demised to S. the premises for the residue of the term granted by the within-written indenture, subject to the provisos, covenants and agreements therein contained, yielding the rent, in addition to the rent reserved by the same indenture:—Held, that the original lease did not require an additional stamp on account of the lease indorsed upon it, and that the indorsed lease did not require a progressive duty, within 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, Sched., Part 1, Deed. Weedon v. Woodbridge, 13 Jur. 630. n.—Q. B.

Necessity of setting forth proper consideration in the instrument.—A lease was not void by 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, s. 22, for omitting to set out truly the whole consideration directly or indirectly paid or agreed to be paid, and consequently such a fact would form no defense in an ejectment for a forfeiture. Doe d. Higginbotham v. Hobson, 3 D. & R. 186.

The plaintiff granted a lease to the defendant, in consideration of a premium of 40*l.*, and being indebted to the defendant in that amount for work done, a settlement of accounts took place between them, when the defendant was allowed the 40*l.* in account, but no moneys in fact passed. The plaintiff having afterwards sued the defendant for 37*l.* 4*s.* for rent and goods sold, the defendant claimed to set off the 40*l.* as money received for his use, on the ground that it was not expressed in the lease, and therefore he was entitled under 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, s. 24, and 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, to recover it:—Held, that the effect of those statutes is to put leases for a premium on the same footing as conveyances upon a sale, so that in all cases where the consideration is not expressed in the lease, the amount may be recovered back. Gingell v. Parkins, 4 Exch. 720; 19 L. J., Exch. 129.

A., being seized in fee of land, contracted with B. to execute to him a lease of the land and a house to be built thereon by B., for ninety-nine years, at a rent of 9*l.* 5*s.* The house having been built, B. contracted with C. to sell him his (B.'s) interest in the land and house for 850*l.*, which was accordingly paid. In order to effect this contract B. procured an indenture to be made between himself, A. and C., whereby A. demised to C. the house and land for ninety-nine years, at the same rent. No mention was made in this instrument of the purchase-money:—Held, that the lease was a conveyance, and that B. was liable to the penalties imposed by 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, s. 22, for omitting to set forth the purchase-money. Att. Gen. v. Brown, 3 Exch. 602; 18 L. J., Exch. 836. See Boone v. Mitchell, 1 B. & C. 18.

Failure to stamp; and payment of penalty.]

—If an instrument of demise in writing of apartments for a period of three months certain requires either an agreement or a lease stamp, it is not necessary that it should be stamped before the rule is granted under 1 Geo. 4, c. 87; it is sufficient if the stamp is affixed at any time before the trial of the ejectment. Doe d. Phillipps v. Roe, 1 D. & R. 443; 5 B. & A. 766.

Where an instrument, which was in reality a lease, but which bore an agreement stamp for 15*s.*, was executed in 1805, at which period the amount of the stamp on a lease, according to the act then in force, was 1*l.* 10*s.*, but was stamped in 1834, under 37 Geo. 3, c. 136, s. 2, with a stamp of 1*l.*, being the amount of the stamp then in force:—Held, that the proper duty had been paid. Buckworth v. Simpson, 1 C., M. & R. 834; 5 Tyr. 344; 1 Gale, 88.

An agreement to let a furnished house was drawn up by the plaintiff and sent to the defendant, who returned it unsigned, and sent a letter, in which he wrote, “I approve of the agreement and will sign it;” but, before it was signed, refused to carry it out, on the ground that she found the plaintiff—while assuring her that he meant to use the house as a private residence—was actually advertising it as a boarding-house:—Held, first, that the agreement required a 2*s.* 6*d.* stamp, but might be admitted on payment of the penalty.

Cavaleiro v. Puget, 4 F. & F. 537—Crompton.

Held, secondly, that if the letter amounted to an adoption of it as a final agreement, it would be sufficient within the Statute of Frauds. Id.

Held, thirdly, that if the defendant was deceived into adopting it, by a willful misstatement as to the plaintiff's object, that would support a plea of fraud. Id.

5. Contracts for Leases.

(n) How made; Interpretation and Effect.

When agreement to give lease is finally concluded.—A paper sent to a solicitor as instructions to prepare a lease, may be treated as the final agreement for the lease, if the evidence shows that it was only so sent to be put into a formal shape; but the act of so sending it is evidence to raise a prima facie presumption that it did not contain all that the parties meant, but might afterwards be modified by either of them. Ridgway v. Wharton, 6 H. L. Cas. 238; 27 L. J., Chanc. 46; 4 Jur., N. S. 173.

If contracting parties agree on terms, of which there is sufficient evidence, but contemplate in addition a more formal document, it becomes a question of intention merely whether they intend it as a memorial of the terms already agreed on, or as the instrument by which alone they mean to be bound. Id.

Negotiations having commenced between the plaintiffs and the defendant respecting a lease of a house by the plaintiffs to the defendant, they forwarded a draft lease, which defendant sent to his solicitors, intimating that he would leave the matter in their hands. After a correspondence between the solicitors of each party with reference to the terms of the lease, the defendant's solicitors wrote to the plaintiffs' solicitors, "We have just seen our client, and have altered this draft lease in accordance with his instructions. We trust there will be now no impediment to prevent an early completion; and we shall be glad to receive the draft as soon as you can, that we may engross the counterpart. R. & B." To this the plaintiffs' solicitors replied by letter, forwarding the draft and engrossment of lease and counterpart, claiming, as solicitors to the lessors, to be entitled to engross both at the expense of the lessee, and requesting the defendant's solicitors, when they had compared, to return the engrossments of the lease and counterpart, when they (the plaintiffs' solicitors) would be prepared to exchange. The defendant's solicitors objected to this, and the negotiation went off. The plaintiffs having brought an action against the defendant for the breach of an agreement to accept a lease on terms previously agreed upon:—Held, that there was no evidence of an authority from the defendant to his solicitors to sign an agreement to accept a lease on terms previously agreed upon; and that, supposing there had been such authority, the letter of the defendant's solicitors was only a proposal, which was not accepted in its entirety, the claim to engross the counterpart lease being a substantial part, and not a consequence of the agreement, and that, therefore, there was no signed agreement or memorandum thereof to satisfy the fourth section of the Statute of Frauds. Forster v. Rowland, 30 L. J., Exch. 390.

Conditional agreements.—On the 4th of November, 1858, A. let premises to B. for a term of four years, from Michaelmas preceding, at a yearly rent, payable quarterly, the agreement containing the following condition: "The condition of this agreement being binding on B. is, that A. shall make good and support the floor of the warehouse of the premises within twenty-eight days of the date of this agreement; if not done, this agreement to be void." Within the twenty-eight days A. entered with workmen, and afterwards departed, stating that he had made all secure. B. paid rent at Christmas, and at Lady-day. Early in April, 1859, the warehouse floor having broken in, the attention of the commissioners of sewers was called to the state of the premises, and the result was that in May an order was made upon A., under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 122, directing him to secure and repair the same. At the end of April A. informed B. that he was about to pull down the premises, and offered to assist B. in removing his printing presses and plant. After the date of the commissioners' order A. entered the premises, and pulled down the ground floor story (including the warehouse-floor) and took no steps to replace or repair it. B. thereupon obtained other premises, and he and his under-tenants went out, and on the 28d of June B. sent A. the key, with a letter, stating that he had been forced out of the premises by A.'s willful and unnecessary destruction of the warehouse-floor. &c. A. received the key, read the letter, and said nothing, and a few days afterwards entered and pulled down the whole house for the purpose of re-building it:—Held, that these facts showed an agreement for a determination of the tenancy on the 28d of June, and consequently that A. could not sue for the quarter's rent. Furnivall v. Grove, 8 C. B., N. S. 490; 30 L. J., C. P. 3.

The following words in an agreement for letting do not create a condition:—"A. (the tenant) hereby agrees that he will not underlet the premises without the consent in writing of the landlord." Shaw v. Coffin, 14 C. B., N. S. 372.

An agreement for a tenancy was in these terms: "Mr. T. engages to complete the whole work necessary by the 14th June next." Then followed an enumeration of the matters to be done by T.; and the agreement concluded: "In consideration of these conditions being fulfilled, Mr. M. engages to take the house, No. 51 B. park, for three years, at the annual rent of 130*l.*, to be paid quarterly. Rent to begin from Midsummer next."—Held, that the completion of the "work necessary" by the day named for that purpose was a condition precedent to the landlord's right to sue M. for not becoming tenant. Tidey v. Mollett, 16 C. B., N. S. 298; 10 Jur., N. S. 800; 33 L. J., C. P. 235; 10 L. T., N. S. 880.

On a contract in a letter of the defendant assented to by the plaintiffs, to take a farm off their hands, provided he was accepted by their landlord on the covenants in their lease:—Held, that they were bound to procure and deliver to him the lease, and it having been deposited as security for a loan, and they not having procured it, the plaintiffs were nonsuited. Barton v. Banks, 2 F. & F. 213—Blackburn.

A lease of a house was granted by S. to the lessee for twenty-one years from Christmas, 1856, determinable at the end of the first seven or fourteen years upon six months' notice by either party, with power of re-entry if the lessee assigned possession without the lessor's consent. In October, 1861, the lessee agreed in writing, without the lessor's consent, to sell his interest in the premises to the plaintiff, the terms of which were, that he was to pay 1,800*l.* for the lessee's improvements, which sum was to be repaid to the plaintiff if he was ejected by the lessee in the first instance; and "if the lessor exercised the power of determining the lease at Christmas, 1863, and if the plaintiff then leaves the house," the sum of 1,100*l.*, part of the 1,800*l.*, was to be returned to the plaintiff. The lessor gave notice of determining the lease at Christmas, 1863, and subsequently granted a new lease at a largely increased rent to C., the aunt of the plaintiff, who had resided with him in the house since October, 1861, and with whom the plaintiff continued to reside in the house under the new lease, so that he did not actually and as a matter of fact leave the house:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the 1,100*l.*, inasmuch as the lease to C. was a new lease to a different person for a different term, and at a different rent from the original lease, and the plaintiff had not got the equivalent for which he bargained as a consideration for the 1,100*l.*, as he had lost his interest in the house as tenant, which, by a reasonable construction, amounted to leaving the house. Rideout v. Lucas, 14 L. T., N. S. 738—Exch. Cham.

On a contract for a lease conditional on the lessor's ability to grant it, a bill for specific performance by the lessee is premature if filed before he can show that the lessor is able to grant the lease. Abbott v. Blair, 8 W. R. 672—C.

But the lessor's acceptance of a deposit on a premium for the lease, and subsequent interest on the balance, sufficiently removes the condition, so as to entitle the lessee to file a bill, and is so far an estoppel. Ib.

As to what agreements are sufficiently certain to be enforced specifically,—see this title, I, 5, b.

Stipulations as to covenants to be inserted in lease.—If an agreement for a lease contains no stipulation as to covenants, the party agreeing to take the lease has a right to a lease containing only usual covenants, and a restriction against particular trades, not being a usual covenant, cannot be introduced into the lease. Proper v. Parker, 3 Mylne & K. 280.

Where in an agreement for the lease of a house, to be granted by the defendant to the plaintiff, it was stipulated that the lease should contain the usual covenants between landlord and tenant, and that the house should not be converted into a school, it is immaterial whether the plaintiff had or had not notice that the defendant derived his title under a lease from another person; because the agreement amounts to a representation on the part of the defendant, that he was at liberty to grant a lease conformably to the terms of the agreement. Van v. Corpe, 3 Mylne & K. 269.

Under a power to make leases for years, determinable on lives, of premises usually so leased, reserving the usual rents and heriots, and so as there should be contained usual and reasonable covenants, a lease was granted in 1831. This lease contained a covenant to do suit and service at the courts of the manor of W., but no covenant to pay fines. In what was taken as the pattern lease, executed in 1749, there was a covenant to pay fines, as well as to do suit and service. It appeared, that, from a date prior to 1749, there had been no courts baron or customary courts held for the manor, and no evidence was given of the existence of any freehold or copyhold tenants:—Held, that the covenant to pay fines was not a usual or reasonable covenant, the omission of which avoided the lease. Doe d. Egremont v. Williams, 11 Q. B. 688; 12 Jur. 455; 17 L. J., Q. B. 154.

A. agreed to let, and B. to take, a piece of land, with liberty to build thereon such warehouses, glasshouses, kilns, houses for workmen, and erections necessary for carrying on the business of a glass manufactory, as he should think fit, for sixty-one years, at a certain rent; and B. agreed to pay the rent, to build in a substantial manner, and not to use the premises for any other purpose than a glass manufactory during the term; a lease and counterpart to be executed in conformity with the agreement, in which should be inserted all usual covenants:—Held, that this agreement did not warrant the insertion in the lease of an affirmative covenant by the lessee that he would carry on the business of a glass manufactory on the premises during the term. Doe d. Bute v. Guest, 15 M. & W. 160.

Under a contract for a lease of a mill, to contain "all usual and necessary covenants and provisos," and particularly a covenant on the part of the lessee to keep the mill in good tenantable repair:—Held, that the lessee was not entitled to have introduced into the covenant the words, "damages by fire or tempest only excepted." Sharp v. Milligan, 23 Beav. 419.

There is nothing unreasonable in a covenant not to sublet without license, or in a proviso for re-entry on the whole premises on breach of any covenant in the lease. Haberdashers' Company v. Isaac, 3 Jur., N. S. 64—V. C. W.

Under an executory agreement to grant a lease of an hotel, with general and usual covenants:—Held, under the circumstances, that the lease ought to contain a power of re-entry on the lessee's becoming bankrupt or taking the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors' Act. Haines v. Burnett, 27 Beav. 500; 29 L. J., Chanc. 289; 5 Jur., N. S. 1279; 1 L. T., N. S. 18.

A., who was under an agreement to take the lease of a house, the lease to contain all "usual covenants," agreed to assign all his interest to B., and forwarded him a copy of the agreement for a lease. In answer to inquiries by B., A. stated that the lessee would not have to do substantial repairs:—Held, first, that A.'s statement was a misrepresentation of a matter of law, and not of fact, and that A. was not bound by it. Kendall v. Hill, 6 Jur., N. S. 968—R.

Held, secondly, that, upon the facts in the case, B. was bound to repair the house in the event of damage by fire. Ib.

Covenants in restraint of trade in a trading locality are not considered usual covenants. Wilbraham v. Livesey, 18 Beav. 200.

A covenant not to assign without the leave of the landlord, is a fair and usual covenant. Morgan v. Slaughter, 1 Esp. 8—Kenyon.

Under a power to a tenant for life to lease for years, reserving the usual covenants, a lease made by him, containing a proviso, that in case the premises were blown down or burned, the lessor should rebuild, otherwise the rent should cease, is void; the court finding that such covenant is unusual. Doe d. Ellis v. Sandham, 1 T. R. 705.

The reasonableness of a covenant by a lessee, in a lease of lands renewable forever, that he and his heirs shall always live upon the lands, or pay an additional rent, with remedies by distress and entry, is properly triable at law; and a court of equity ought not to interpose or give relief against it. Ponsonby v. Adams, 2 Bro. P. C. 431.

A party contracted for an assignment of a lease of a public-house, which in the agreement was described as holden at a certain net annual rent under usual and common covenants. And the lease contained a covenant by the tenant to pay land-tax, sewers'-rate, and all other taxes, and a proviso for re-entry if any business but that of a victualer should be carried on in the house; and it was proved that a considerable majority of public-house leases contained such a proviso:—Held, that the covenant to pay land-tax, sewers'-rate, and other taxes, was a common covenant in a lease, reserving a net rent; and that the proviso for re-entry must, with reference to a lease of a public-house, also be considered usual and common. Bennett v. Wonnack, 7 B. & C. 627; 1 M. & R. 644; 3 C. & P. 96.

Upon a negotiation between A. and B. for the grant of a lease, B., the proposed lessee, informed the agent of A. that he wanted the premises for the purpose of carrying on therein the business of a retailer of beer, and inquired whether there was anything in the original lease to restrain the tenant from carrying on such business therein, to which inquiry the agent, being ignorant of the contents of the lease, but knowing that such trade had been carried on upon the premises for some years, replied that there was nothing, so far as he knew, to prevent the tenant from carrying on the proposed trade. B. therefore consented to take a lease, and a memorandum to the following effect was drawn up and signed by the parties:—"Lease, twenty-one years from Lady-day, 1853. Lease and counterpart to contain all usual and proper covenants, and particularly those contained in the lease under which the premises are held, so that the same in no way restricts the trade of a retailer of beer. Lessee not to require production of the lessor's title."—Held, that A. duly performed his contract by being ready to grant a lease without a covenant to restrict the lessee from using the premises as a beer-shop, notwithstanding that there were such restrictive words in the lease under which he himself held. Hayward v. Parke, 16 C. B. 295; 1 Jur., N. S. 781; 24 L. J., C. P. 217.

Under an agreement for a lease to contain "all usual and customary mining clauses," the landlord is not entitled to have inserted in the lease a proviso for re-entry on breach of any of the covenants by the lessee, or otherwise than on non-payment of rent. Hodkinson v. Crowe, 44 L. J., Chanc. 680; 10 L. R., Ch. 622; 23 W. R. 885; 33 L. T., N. S. 388; reversing the decision of Bacon, V. C., 19 L. R., Eq. 501; 33 L. T., N. S. 122; 44 L. J., Chanc. 238.

Semble, that the rule is not limited to mining leases. Ib.

Stipulations as to term.—It is a settled rule of law that an agreement for a lease for seven or fourteen years means a lease for fourteen years, determinable by the lessee, but not by the lessor, at the end of seven years. Powell v. Smith, 14 L. R., Eq. 85; 41 L. J., Chanc. 734; 20 W. R. 602—R.

An agreement for a lease for seven, fourteen or — years entitles the lessee, in the absence of other stipulations, to a lease for fourteen years, determinable at the end of seven years at his option only, though the lessor proves that he supposed such an agreement gave to him, as well as to the lessee, the option of determining it at that time. Ib.

A land agent having no power to grant leases without reserving to his principal the power of determining them at the expiration of every seven years, entered into an agreement for a grant to an intending tenant of a lease for seven or fourteen years. The tenant was put into possession of the farm, and took the stock on it from the outgoing tenant at a valuation. The lessor, who did not know the rule of law above mentioned, refused to grant a lease without reserving to himself the right to terminate it at the end of seven years, as well as giving such right to the tenant:—Held, that the lessor was not entitled to have a power of determining the lease at the end of seven years; for his ignorance of the law was no excuse, and he could not repudiate his agent's act after letting the tenant take possession of the farm on the faith of it. Ib.

As to commencement and duration of term, —see this title, II., 2.

Implied undertaking of lessor for title.]—By agreeing to grant a lease, a party does not impliedly engage for a general warranty, nor undertake to deliver an abstract of his title. Grillim v. Stone, 3 Taunt. 433.

Nor that he has a good title to the fee-simple, and will deliver a written abstract. Tempe v. Brown, 6 Taunt. 60.

An agreement to grant a lease contains an implied undertaking on the part of the intended lessor that he has title to grant such lease; and if he has not, he is liable to an action at the suit of the intended lessee. Stranks v. St. John, 36 L. J., C. P. 118; 2 L. R., C. P. 376; 15 W. R. 678; 16 L. T., N. S. 283.

Upon a contract for the sale of an agreement for a lease, it is not an implied condition that the lessor has power to grant the lease. Kintrea v. Peraton, 1 H. & N. 357; 25 L. J., Exch. 287.

Under a parol demise, the law implies an agreement for quiet enjoyment, but not of good title. Bundy v. Cartwright, 8 Exch. 913; 22 L. J., Exch. 285.

A declaration that the defendant had agreed to let premises to the plaintiff on certain terms, and that, in consideration that the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, had promised to perform all things in the agreement contained on his part to be performed, the defendant promised the plaintiff that he had good right and title, and full and lawful power and authority, to let the premises to the plaintiff without restriction as to the purpose for which the same should be occupied:—Held, bad, inasmuch as the promise alleged could not be implied from the relation of landlord and tenant, and was without consideration to support it. Jackson v. Cobbin, 1 D., N. S. 96; 8 M. & W. 790.

By a memorandum A. agreed to let premises to B. for two years at a certain rent: and that B. should have the right of purchasing the premises at the end of or at any time during the term for a given sum; "it being understood that A. was possessed of the premises for his own life and the life of M., and of the survivor of them:"—Held, that by this agreement A. bound himself to make title to the premises, for the lives of himself and M. and the life of the survivor. Worthington v.

Warrington, 5 C. B. 635; 17 L. J., C. P. 117.

As to effect of want of title of lessor,—see this title, I., 2.

As to estoppel of tenant to dispute title of landlord, see this title, X.

Agreements for under-leases.]—A party who enters into an agreement for an under-lease, without inquiring into the covenants of the original lease, has constructive notice of all usual covenants in the original lease. Flight v. Barton, 8 Mylne & K. 282.

But where a party entered into an agreement under a lease for an under-lease, and informed the lessee of the nature of the business which he meant to carry on in the premises, and the lessee did not apprise him that there was a covenant in the original lease prohibiting such business:—Held, that the silence of the lessee was equivalent to a representation that there was no such prohibitory covenant. Ib.

It is the duty of a person contracting for an under-lease to inform himself of the covenants contained in the original lease, and if he enters and takes possession of the property he will be bound by those covenants. Cosser v. Collinge, 8 Mylne & K. 283.

Where an under-lessee covenants to observe the covenants of the original lease, it is the same as if those covenants had been inserted at length in the under-lease. Piggott v. Stratton, 29 L. J., Chanc. 1; 1 De G., F. & J. 33; 6 Jur., N. S. 129.

The principle that a person who contracts to take an under-lease and takes possession is bound by the provisions of the original lease, applies only where there has been a fair opportunity of ascertaining what such provisions are. Hyde v. Warden, 37 L. T., N. S. 567—C. A.

Obligation to accept lease.]—By an agreement to take a lease, the landlord was to put the premises in repair. The tenant took possession, and on his application the repairs were made after delay. A lease was then tendered containing certain covenants in the landlord's lease:—Held, that the delay in doing the repairs, and the tenant's previous ignorance of the covenants, would not excuse him from accepting the lease. Nash v. Cockrane, 3 Jur. 973—C.

The tenant of business premises covenanted by a deed of arrangement, made between himself and the administrator of his deceased partner, in whom the premises were vested, to accept a lease of the premises for a term at a rent named in the deed, and it was stipulated that the lease should contain a covenant by him to keep the premises in repair, and other covenants usual in leases of a like nature. He retained possession of the premises till his death, but was never called upon to execute a lease:—Held, that the administrator was entitled to rank as a specialty creditor in respect of his claim for rent and dilapidations in the same manner as if a lease had been executed in pursuance of the deed

On the day of the date thereof. Kidd v. Boone, 40 L. J., Chanc. 531; 13 L. R., Eq. 89; 24 L. T., N. S. 356—V. C. B.

As part of the same arrangement the tenant gave to the administrator a bond to secure part of a sum due from him to the partnership, and thereby bound himself, in case he should not punctually pay the installments therein mentioned, to pay the remainder of the sum due. The installments were not paid regularly:—Held, that the administrator was entitled to claim as a specialty creditor for the whole sum. Id.

(b) When and how Specific Performance may be compelled.

Enforcing by bill in equity, generally.]—A tenant having committed breaches of covenant by waste, or treating the land in an unhusband-like manner, is not entitled to a specific performance of an agreement for a lease. Hill v. Barclay, 18 Ves. 63.

When the conditions of an agreement between landlord and builder, whereby the landlord agrees to grant leases of successive plots of land as the houses upon each of them are built to a certain stage, are by the terms of the contract separable, there is no rule of equity to prevent them from being separately enforced by way of specific performance. Therefore, where the assignee of the builder's interest had completed the houses upon some only of the plots agreed to be built upon:—Held, upon a bill for specific performance, that he was entitled to the leases of those plots, even though disclaiming all interest in the remaining plots. Wilkinson v. Clements, 42 L. J., Chanc. 38; 8 L. R., Ch. 96; 27 L. T., N. S. 834; 21 W. R. 90.

A lessee of premises covenanted with his under-lessees of part, that in case he obtained an extension of the term or a renewal of his lease, he would give to the under-lessees a like renewal or extension of his under-term. A lease was subsequently taken from the ground landlord for an extended term, in the name of a trustee, for the separate use of the lessee's wife. The under-lessees filed a bill against the lessee, his wife, and her trustee, charging that the extended lease had been taken in a trustee's name, in order to defeat their rights under the lessee's covenant, and praying that the wife and her trustee might be decreed to grant an under-lease to the plaintiffs for the extended term:—Held, that the relief sought could not be given, as the suit was virtually one for specific performance against persons who were not parties to the original covenant or contract to renew the under-lease. Lumley v. Timms, 28 L. T., N. S. 157; 21 W. R. 819—R.

To a suit for specific performance, by the purchaser against the vendor of a leasehold interest, it is not a defense that the lease contains a covenant against alienation without the consent of the landlord, and that it does not appear that the consent of the landlord has been obtained. Leitch v. Simpson, 5 Ir. R., Eq. 613—V. C.

A lessee of a house agreed to sublet two rooms for a part of his term, taking a fine; he afterwards became bankrupt and his trustee disclaimed the lease. The landlord commenced an action of ejectment against the sub-lessee. The sub-lessee filed his bill to restrain the action, and to compel the landlord to grant him a lease according to the terms of his agreement with the first lessee. The provisions of the agreement differed from those of the lease:—Held, that the sub-lessee had no equity to enforce the provisions of the agreement against the landlord. Taylor v. Gillott, 33 L. T., N. S. 795; 24 W. R. 65; 20 L. R., Eq. 682; 44 L. J., Chanc. 740—V. C. H.

— where terms of agreement are uncertain or indefinite.]—An agreement to take a lease of a house, if put into thorough repair, and the drawing-rooms "handsomely decorated according to the present style," is too uncertain for the court to enforce. Taylor v. Portington, 7 De G., M. & G. 328.

Where terms for letting farms provided that all materials required for building proposed to be built, or that might thereafter be built, should be led at the expense of the tenant; that the landlord should drain, the tenant lending tiles; that gates, buildings, "&c." should be left in repair by the tenant, the landlord finding new gates when required; that the landlord reserved to himself all customary rights and reservations, such as liberty to cut and plant timber, search for and work mines or minerals, "&c." allowing the tenant for any reasonable damages:—Held, that these stipulations did not render the agreement uncertain, so as to be incapable of being enforced specifically. Parker v. Taswell, 2 De G. & J. 559; 27 L. J., Chanc. 812; 4 Jur., N. S. 1006.

A., by contract in writing, agreed with B. to take a lease of "those two seams of coal, known as the two-feet coal and the three-feet coal, lying under lands hereafter to be defined in the Bank End estate," and B. agreed to let to A., "the before-mentioned seams of coal:"—Held, that the contract was sufficiently definite to enforce, and that the true construction of it was, that the boundaries of the estate, which consisted of about twenty-seven acres, were to be thereafter defined. Heywood v. Cope, 25 Beav. 140; 27 L. J., Chanc. 468.

— in cases of mistake.]—The court will not refuse to decree the specific performance of an agreement, on the ground that one of the contracting parties has mistaken its legal effect. Powell v. Smith, 14 L. R., Eq. 85; 41 L. J., Chanc. 734; 20 W. R. 602—R.

Therefore, when a lessor's agent had contracted to grant a lease for seven or fourteen years, which the lessor understood to mean a lease determinable at the lessor's option, and alleged that the agent had acted without authority:—Held, that the lessee was entitled to have the agreement specifically performed, and to have a lease for fourteen years, determinable at his own option at the end of seven years. Ib.

Held, also that the lessee having been put into possession of the farm under the agreement, the lessor was precluded from disputing the agent's authority. Ib.

Contract by a railway company to grant a lease of the whole of a house No. 1, and part of a house No. 2:—Held, part of the house No. 1 being evidently intended to be retained by the company, that only that other part of it designated in a plan was meant to be included in the lease, and a bill to compel a lease of the whole house was dismissed. Richards v. North London Railway Company, 20 W. R. 194—R.

Where a tender for a lease of a farm was accepted under the mistaken impression that the quantity of land inserted therein by the person making the tender was the same as that intended to be let, and it was subsequently discovered that the quantity of land inserted in the accepted tender was of larger amount than was intended to be let:—Held, that as the mistake was one which related to quantity only it did not touch the essential terms of the contract, and that specific performance could be granted with an abatement. McKenzie v. Hesketh, 26 W. R. 189—Fry, J.

Effect of part performance of agreement by possession, expenditures, &c.]—A parol agreement was entered into for a lease, on terms which, by direction of the proposed lessor, the proposed tenant instructed a solicitor to reduce to writing. The solicitor took down the terms as stated by the tenant, and afterwards prepared from them a draft agreement, embodying these and other terms, and sent it to the lessor, who afterwards, and without objecting to it, let the tenant into possession, and directed the solicitor to prepare a lease in conformity with the draft agreement, but subsequently objected to the lease so proposed, and gave the tenant notice to quit:—Held, that the delivery and taking of possession were a sufficient part performance of the agreement, as expressed in the draft, to exclude a defense founded on the Statute of Frauds. Pain v. Coombs, 1 De G. & J. 34; 3 Jur., N. S. 847.

A landlord having verbally agreed with his tenant to grant him a lease for twenty-one years at an increased rent, with the option of purchasing the freehold, died before the execution of the lease. Before his death the tenant had paid one quarter's rent at the increased rate:—Held, that this constituted a sufficient part performance of the agreement to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, and specific performance was decreed. Nunn v. Fubian, 1 L. R., Ch. 35; 35 L. J., Chanc. 140—O.

It was part of an agreement to purchase a farm that the vendor should, for twelve years from the completion, be at liberty to require, at his own expense, and the purchaser agreed to grant him, a lease of the farm, at a rent to be estimated at a specified percentage on the outlay in making the purchase. The vendor, just before the completion, wrote a letter to the purchaser, agreeing to pay the percentage on the amount of the purchase-money (which had been already paid), but stating that the letter was a temporary thing until the completion of the purchase, and the execution of an agreement already prepared and intended to be executed. The agreement referred to had been engrossed, and provided for the payment of a rent calculated on the aggregate amount of the purchase-money and expenses of the purchase and of repairs, but left the amount in blank. It was never signed, but the vendor remained in possession, and paid rent calculated on the aggregate amount:—Held, that there was a sufficient part performance to exclude a defense founded on the Statute of Frauds, to a bill for specific performance of the agreement to take a lease. Powell v. Lovegrove, 8 De G., M. & G. 357.

A tenant having entered into possession of a farm, and expended moneys under an agreement that the landlord would grant a lease for twenty-one years, and make such improvements and repairs as he and the landlord should jointly agree:—Held, that the stipulation as to repairs was not of the essence of the agreement; and that the impossibility of the strict performance of that stipulation, in consequence of the death of the landlord, was no sufficient reason for allowing a demurrer to a bill for specific performance, where the tenant had so long a possession, and had expended money on the faith of the agreement. Norris v. Jackson, 3 Giff. 896; 8 Jur., N. S. 930; 10 W. R. 228; 5 L. T., N. S. 576.

Possession and expenditure on the faith of a parol agreement to grant a lease of a farm, are sufficient to entitle the tenant to a lease, although the agreement is denied by the landlord. Farrall v. Davenport, 8 Giff. 863; 8 Jur., N. S. 862; affirmed on appeal, 8 Jur., N. S. 1043—C.

A., a tenant in possession, filed a bill against B. for the specific performance of a parol agreement for a lease of thirty years. A. had contracted to sub-let, and his sub-lessee had expended money in alterations and repairs, with the knowledge and approval of B.:—Held, that the outlay by the sub-lessee was as much a part performance of the agreement as if made by A., who was therefore entitled to specific performance. Williams v. Evans, 19 L. R., Eq. 547; 44 L. J., Chanc. 819; 23 W. R. 466; 32 L. T., N. S. 350—V. C. M.

The Statute of Frauds cannot be pleaded to a verbal agreement to allow the occupation of a leasehold house for life on payment merely of ground rent, rates, and taxes, if there has been a part performance by possession under the agreement and the agreement has affected the mode of living of the occupying party. Coles v. Pilkington, 19 L. R., Eq. 174—V. C. M.

Effect of delay, laches, &c.]—Agreement for a lease for five years, from the 1st April, 1840, the landlord undertaking to erect, by that time, a new warehouse on part of the ground to be demised, and to put the old warehouse in repair, the amount of rent to be determined with reference to the amount of the landlord's expenditure on the buildings. The new building was not erected, nor the old warehouse repaired, on the 1st April; but no objection was made by the intended lessee, who then occupied part of the premises under a former agreement, and shortly afterwards the whole premises were destroyed by fire:—Held, upon a bill filed in equity by the landlord for specific performance of the agreement, and for the defendant to rebuild the premises, and to accept a lease, that it was a condition precedent, that the premises should be put in repair before the lease was granted, and that, as the landlord had not performed his engagement within the time limited, the contract could not be enforced in equity. Counter v. Macpherson, 5 Moore P. C. C. 88.

A plaintiff filed a bill for specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease of certain coal mines, entered into on the 28th February, 1872. A dispute arose as to the terms of the agreement, and on the 26th September, 1872, the defendant gave the plaintiff notice that, unless he acquiesced in his views he should rescind the contract, and on the 29th October, following, the defendant stated his intention of abiding by that notice. On the 4th November, 1872, the plaintiff's solicitor wrote to the defendant's solicitor that he was instructed to file a bill for specific performance of the contract. The bill was not filed until the 2d April, 1873:—Held, that the effect of the notice of September, 1872, was to put the parties at arms' length, and that the plaintiff, if he intended to insist on his rights, ought to have proceeded at once; that the delay in filing the bill was fatal to the application for specific performance. Huxham v. Llewellyn, 28 L. T., N. S. 577; 21 W. R. 570—R.

At the expiration, in July, 1857, of a lease under which by assignment he was in possession of property, B. signed an agreement to accept from A. a new lease for thirty-one years, at the same rent as was reserved by the old lease, and payment of 600*l.* on the day fixed for completion (1st August, 1857), with interest if the lease should not be completed on the day fixed. A draft lease was sent to B. for his approval, but was not returned, and no steps were taken by A. to press for completion. B. remained in possession and paid rent, but no payment of the 600*l.* or interest was ever made or demanded. In 1871 A. died. On a bill by her legal personal representative:—Held, that as B.'s possession and payment of rent must be referred to the new agreement, and not to a holding over after the expiration of the former lease, the lapse of time did not operate as a bar to specific performance, which was accordingly decreed, with interest on the 600*l.* from the 1st of

In 1855 A. agreed with B. that, "in the event of B. marrying his daughter," he would grant him a ninety-nine years' lease of a shop at C. "should he at any time require it," at a rent of 30*l.* per annum. B. was let into possession of the shop and married A.'s daughter, and duly paid the rent to A. and his assigns until March, 1874, when his then landlord gave him notice to quit. On a bill for specific performance of the agreement:—Held, that B. by his laches and his acts had precluded himself from the relief to which he might have been entitled. Davenport v. Walker, 34 L. T., N. S. 168—V. C. B.

The fixed rule of equity that specific performance of an agreement for a lease will not be granted after a long lapse of time will not be relaxed merely on account of possession and payment of rent during the whole of such time. Powis v. Lord Dynevor, 35 L. T., N. S. 940—Q. B. Div.

In 1844 the plaintiff verbally agreed with the agent of a predecessor in title of D., to build a shop, and hold the same on lease at a rent of 5*s.* per annum. The plaintiff built the shop and occupied and paid rent for it up to the time of action brought, but no lease was executed, nor were negotiations for a lease had. In 1876 the plaintiff sued D. for specific performance:—Held, that specific performance ought not to be decreed. Ib.

Effect of insolvency or bankruptcy of parties.]—It is no defense to a bill filed against a landlord for specific performance of an agreement for a farming lease, by a person to whom the benefit of the agreement has been assigned, that the party with whom the landlord contracted has become insolvent, provided the assignee is solvent, and in a condition to enter into the usual covenants, and there is no evidence that the contract was entered into upon considerations personal to the assignor. Crosbie v. Tooke, 1 Mylne & K. 481.

When a landlord agrees to grant a lease to A., his executors and assigns, upon certain conditions, and A. assigns his interest in the contract to B., and then becomes bankrupt, B., on performing the conditions, has a right to enforce the agreement specifically, notwithstanding his assignor's bankruptcy; and this right is not affected by a proviso, that, in case of the bankruptcy of A., the landlord shall have power to re-enter and sell the benefit of the contract and the premises, and hold the proceeds, subject to his own claims, for the use of A.'s estate. Morgan v. Rhodes, 1 Mylne & K. 435.

Insolvency is a good ground upon which the court will refuse specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease; but there must be proof of general insolvency; and a particular default in the payment of rent to the landlord of the premises last occupied by the person contracting for the lease, will not disentitle him to the specific performance of the contract, when there is the testimony of unexceptionable witnesses to his responsibility. Neale v. Mackenzie, 1 Keen, 474.

Award of damages, and rescission of the contract.—The plaintiff agreed with the defendant to take a lease of premises belonging to the defendant for the purpose, as the defendant knew, of carrying on a trade which the plaintiff was about to commence. In consequence of his willful refusal to fulfill his agreement, the plaintiff was unable for fifteen weeks to commence his trade:—Held, that, in addition to judgment for specific performance of the agreement, damages must be awarded in respect of the loss of profits from his trade during the fifteen weeks; and 250*l.* damages were awarded. Jaques v. Millar, 6 L. R., Ch. Div. 153; 37 L. T., N. S. 151; 25 W. R. 846—Fry, J.

After a decree for the specific performance of an agreement by the defendant to take a lease, and for payment by him of the costs and damages, he absconded:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an order rescinding the contract. Watson v. Cox, 21 W. R. 810; 42 L. J., Chanc. 279—V. C. B.

As to recovery of damages, in action at law,—see this title, I., 5, c.

Enforcement by mandamus.—The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 123, s. 68, which gives an action for a mandamus "to fulfill any duty in the fulfillment of which the plaintiff is personally interested," does not apply to a personal contract, and, therefore, a declaration on an agreement for the lease of a house, claiming a writ of mandamus commanding the defendant to prepare a lease in accordance with the agreement, is bad on demurrer. Benson v. Paul or Paull, 6 El. & Bl. 273; 2 Jur., N. S. 425; 25 L. J., Q. B. 274.

As to specific performance of contracts, generally,—see CONTRACT OR AGREEMENT; of contracts to convey land,—see SALE.

(c) Recovery of Damages for Breach of Contract.

Nature of the remedy; and upon what agreements action lies.—A party who lets premises agrees to give possession, and if he fails to do so, the lessee may recover damages against him, and is not driven to bring an ejectment against a wrongful occupier who refuses to quit. Cox v. Clay, 5 Bing. 429; 3 M. & P. 57.

By an agreement in writing, the defendant agreed to let to the plaintiff premises for the term of one year from the 29th September, 1854, and so on from year to year as long as the parties should agree:—Held, that there was an implied contract on the part of the defendant to give the plaintiff possession of the premises. Jinks v. Edwards, 11 Exch. 775.

The plaintiff agreed in writing to take of the defendant a farm at a yearly rent, the plaintiff paying all rates and taxes, and agreeing to keep the buildings in repair, the defendant agreeing to find bricks, &c., for such repairs, and to lay out a sum of money in repairs, "the tenancy to commence from the 29th of September next, for a term of eight years, subject to a lease," to be drawn up by the defendant's solicitor:—Held, no breach of this agreement, that the defendant did not, before or on the 29th of September, or at any time subsequently, give to the defendant possession of the farm, or enable him to enter thereon. Drury v. Macnamara, 5 El. & Bl. 612; 1 Jur., N. S. 1163; 25 L. J., Q. B. 5.

An agreement not under seal between two persons, by which one agrees to let, and the other to take premises for the term of seven years, and by which it is agreed that a good and sufficient lease of the premises shall be prepared, may be good as an agreement; so that an action may lie upon it for not accepting the lease when prepared, although it would be void as a lease, in consequence of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 8. Bond v. Roeling, 30 L. J., Q. B. 227; 1 B. & S. 871; 9 W. R. 746; 4 L. T., N. S. 442.

Pleading and evidence in actions.—A declaration stated that, by contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant, he agreed to procure as soon as possible, and within four months from the making the contract, sufficient land for a communication between a railway and certain gas works, and stowing a certain quantity of coals, "and to grant a lease of the land to the plaintiffs for a term of five years from the date of the contract," determinable at the end of three years "of the said term" by notice from the plaintiffs, which notice never was given; that the plaintiffs should pay to the defendant for the land, half-yearly, an annual rent equivalent to four per cent. on the money paid by the defendant for the purchase, the first payment to be made six months after possession of the land should be given to the plaintiffs, from which time only the rent was to run; and that, upon the termination of the term of five years, by effluxion of time or by notice, the defendant should pay to the plaintiffs all the moneys expended by them for laying down sidings for the communication, and building sheds and erections on the land for the purposes mentioned in the contract (less five per cent. for deterioration). A plea, that no lease of the land was ever granted to the plaintiffs by the defendant, pursuant to the agreement; nor did the term of five years in the contract mentioned and contemplated ever come into or have any existence:—Held, a bad plea. For that the granting of the lease by the defendant was not a condition precedent to his liability to repay the money, and the meaning of the word "term" was not in the agreement restricted to a term created by lease, but included a period of five years during which the plaintiffs should occupy, after being put into possession under the contract. Bowes v. Croll, 6 El. & Bl. 255.

A declaration stated, that it was agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant, that the plaintiff should purchase of the defendant a house and shop fixtures, specified in an inventory, for 150*l.*; that 125*l.* should be paid on taking possession, and the remainder by bills of exchange; and that the defendant should grant, and the plaintiff should take, a lease of the messuage for twenty-one years, at the rent of 60*l.* The indenture tendered by the plaintiff stated that, as well in consideration of 150*l.* paid by the plaintiff to the defendant, as of the yearly rents and covenants, the defendant demised and leased all that messuage:—Held, that the consideration was not truly stated, and, therefore, that the instrument was not such a lease as was agreed to be granted by the defendant to the plaintiff. Vonhollen v. Knowles, 12 M. & W. 602; 13 L. J., Exch. 140.

By an agreement between A. and B., reciting that B. had, as he was advised and believed, legally and effectually put an end to a lease granted to C., of a farm, by entry thereon under a power therein contained, by reason of the bankruptcy of C., and that B. had agreed to grant a lease of the farm to A., for twenty-one years, at the same rents as the same had been held by C.; it was agreed that B. should grant, and A. accept, a lease at a certain rent, payable quarterly; the lease to commence on the 29th of September, 1844, if B. could then legally make and execute the same, or so soon after as he should be in a situation to grant the same; that such lease should contain the same covenants as the lease to C.; and that A. should pay to B., on possession being delivered to him, 500*l.*, as a premium for the lease so to be granted. A. was let into possession, and occupied the farm for about two years, paying the rent; and he also within that time paid B. 250*l.*, in part of the 500*l.* premium; but the fiat against C. having been superseded, B. was unable to grant the lease to A. A. thereupon brought an action for the breach of contract, alleging, in his declaration, that he had always been ready and willing to accept a lease:—Held, that the recital in the agreement, and proof of a declaration made by B., that C.'s lease was void and good for nothing, were prima facie evidence as against B., that he had power to grant the lease, but that it appearing also by the recitals in the agreement that the lease to C. was supposed to be void by reason of C.'s bankruptcy, such prima facie case was rebutted by proof of the supersedeas of the fiat against C., and consequently that B. was entitled to the verdict upon an issue as to his ability to grant the lease. Wright v. Colls, 8 C. B. 150; 13 Jur. 1056; 19 L. J., C. P. 60.

Held, also, that A., was entitled to recover back the 250*l.* as money paid upon a consideration which had failed. Ib.

A contract provided that a lease should be drawn, prepared, and executed at the sole expense of the lessor. In an action on the agreement by the lessee:—Held, that it was not necessary to aver that a lease was tendered to the lessor for execution. Price v. Williams, 1 M. & W. 6; 1 Gale, 362.

In a declaration on an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, that the defendant would take a house of the plaintiff and execute a lease for the same term as the plaintiff held, less ten days, an averment that the plaintiff accepted the defendant as tenant, and tendered him a lease for his execution, is sufficient, although there was no averment of the plaintiff's readiness and willingness to grant the lease. Collins v. Willmott, 13 W. R. 204; 11 L. T., N. S. 840.—Q. B.

By an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, the former agreed that upon payment to him by the latter of 1,440*l.*, by installments on certain days, he would grant the defendant a lease of a certain parcel of land, and the defendant agreed to accept such lease and execute a counterpart. A declaration assigned for breach non-payment of the moneys:—Held, that the declaration disclosed a sufficient cause of action, the granting of a lease not being a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to demand payment of the money. Baggallay v. Pettit, 5 C. B., N. S. 637; 5 Jur., N. S. 868; 28 L. J., C. P. 160.

A count stated, that in consideration that the plaintiff agreed with the defendant to sell and transfer to him, by the 22d of January, a lease of a farm for 500*l.*, and the implements, stock, &c., at a valuation, the defendant agreed to purchase the same, subject to his being approved of as a tenant by S.; and also, at and upon making the agreement, to pay down 500*l.* as a deposit, and to complete the purchase, and pay the valuation by the 22d of January; that the defendant being unable to pay the 500*l.* upon the making the agreement, in consideration that the plaintiff dispensed with payment down of the 500*l.*, and would take the defendant's I O U for the same, he promised the plaintiff that he would pay the 500*l.* as soon as he could write to his banker, at Berwick, and procure his banker to remit the same. Breach, that the money was not paid:—Held, that the count disclosed a sufficient consideration for the defendant's promise. Davis v. Nisbett, 10 C. B., N. S. 752; 8 Jur., N. S. 211; 31 L. J., C. P. 6; 9 W. R. 840.

A plea, that before the defendant could procure his banker to remit, and before any demand of payment of the I O U, the defendant was disapproved as a tenant by S., is a good answer to the count. Ib.

A plea, on equitable grounds, that before demand of payment of the I O U, the defendant was disapproved of as tenant by S., and the plaintiff was thereby rendered unable to sell and transfer the lease, is not a good equitable defense, inasmuch as the plea discloses no ground upon which the defendant could be liable to an injunction in a court of equity. Ib.

Replication to this plea, that it was part of the agreement that the 500*l.* should be forfeited in case of non-completion of the agreement by the defendant on the 22d of January; that it was agreed that, for the purpose of obtaining the approval by S. of the defendant as a tenant, he should apply to S. to accept him as such tenant; and that, before any disapproval of S., the defendant applied to S. to accept him as tenant, and afterwards the defendant withdrew such application, and declined to be accepted as tenant by S.; and that such disapproval was procured and occasioned by the act of the defendant, and from his unwillingness to fulfill the agreement, and not otherwise:—Held, that, assuming the plea to be an answer to the count, the replication was a good answer to the plea. Id.

Where a declaration stated, that, in consideration that the plaintiff would procure S. to grant a lease to the defendant, the latter promised to pay the plaintiff 170*l.* and it was proved that S., having agreed to grant a lease to the plaintiff, the latter originally undertook to assign it to the defendant for the consideration mentioned; but that afterwards, a lease, to which the plaintiff was a party and assented, was granted immediately by S. to the defendant, in which the consideration to be paid by the latter to the plaintiff was not mentioned:—Held, that the evidence merely amounted to proof of the substitution of a new contract to procure a lease from S. to the defendant, in lieu of the original contract; and, consequently, that there was no variance. Boone v. Mitchell, 1 B. & C. 18.

The plaintiff, in the first and third counts, alleged, that, at the time of making the agreement with the defendant, he was possessed of a house, for a certain term of years, to expire on the 25th December, 1826; and, in the second, that he was entitled to the term, under and by virtue of a certain contract. The proof was, that the plaintiff was possessed for a term of only twelve years; and there was no contract or agreement under which he was at that time entitled to an extension of the term:—Held, that this was a variance, although it appeared that he had since become possessed of a lease to expire in December, 1826. Routledge v. Grant, 1 M. & P. 717; 4 Bing. 653; 8 C. & P. 267.

Measure of damages.—A. agreed with B. to grant the latter a lease of a house as soon as he became possessed thereof, to bear date from the 21st December, 1825, for fourteen or twenty-one years. At the date of the agreement the house was under a lease which would not expire till Midsummer, 1827, the legal estate being in trustees, first to pay debts, and secondly to pay an annuity to T., and subject thereto to the use of A., if he attained twenty-four. In June, 1825, after A. had attained twenty-four, but before the outstanding lease expired, he and the trustees joined in a fresh lease to C. for twenty-three years:—Held, that A. was liable to an action before the expiration of the lease, which would not be out until Midsummer, 1827, but that the measure of damages would only be the value of a lease for so much of the term as upon a calculation of the probable period of the annuitant's death would be likely to be subsisting at the arrival of that period. Ford v. Tiley, 9 D. & R. 443; 6 B. & C. 825.

A. entered into possession of premises under an agreement with B., under which he was to hold them as tenant for two years, at the yearly rent of 50*l.*, with liberty to make, at his expense, such alterations in and additions to the premises as he might think proper, the same being improvements, and A. to have option of purchasing the premises at any time during the two years for 600*l.*, "it being understood between the parties that B. was possessed of the premises for his own life and the life of C., and of the survivor of them." It being, however, discovered that B. had not the precise interest mentioned in the agreement, A. brought an action to recover damages for the breach of contract, and also compensation for the money expended by him in improvements:—Held, that he was only entitled to recover the value of the proposed lease, and not the value of the improvements. Worthington v. Warrington, 8 C. B. 184; 18 L. J., C. P. 350.

To an action for breach of a contract to grant the plaintiff a good and valid lease, the defendant pleaded payment into court, and no damages ultra:—Held, that the plaintiff might recover damages beyond his expenses, for the loss he had sustained by reason of the non-performance of the contract. Robinson v. Harman, 1 Exch. 850; 18 L. J., Exch. 202.

Held, also, that evidence to show that the plaintiff knew the defendant had no title was inadmissible, after the plea of payment into court, which admitted the contract. Id.

The plaintiff agreed with F. to let him land on a building lease for ninety-eight years, from Christmas, 1835, at a peppercorn rent, for three years, and then at 115*l.* a year, payable quarterly, F. to build on the land, and cover in the messuages within the first three years, and to accept a lease: proviso for re-entry on default. F. entered, but did not build the houses, whereupon the plaintiff brought ejectment, and recovered possession on June 12th, 1839. After re-entry, the plaintiff agreed with a new tenant to let him the premises for the residue of F.'s term, at a peppercorn rent, for the year ending Midsummer, 1840; 70*l.* for the year ending Midsummer, 1841; and 140*l.* a year for the rest of the term. The plaintiff, in an action for breach of F.'s agreement, claimed as damages the difference between the rent which he would actually receive down to Midsummer, 1841, and that which would have accrued down to the same period if F. had kept his agreement:—Held, that the jury was not bound to award that amount, but might give their verdict on an estimate of the plaintiff's real damage, taking into consideration the increased rent secured to him by the second agreement. Oldershaw v. Holt, 12 A. & E. 590; 4 P. & D. 307.

A. entered into an agreement for the transfer of his tenancy in a public-house, and the sale of the goodwill to B. The subject-matter of the agreement, which was in writing, was therein described as "the house and premises he now occupies, known by the sign of the White Hart." There was a coach-house which belonged to the White Hart, and which, at the time of the agreement, was not in the occupation of A., but in that of S., who held it as tenant to A. for a period which had not expired at the time fixed for the completion of the transfer by the agreement. The agreement contained a variety of stipulations with regard to the transfer of the licenses, the payment of rates and taxes, and the purchase of fixtures, furniture, and stock at a valuation by B., and concluded as follows:—"If either party shall refuse or neglect to perform all and every part of this agreement, they hereby promise and agree to pay to the other who shall be willing to complete the same, the sum of 100*l.* as damages, and recoverable in any of her majesty's courts of law." The purchaser refused to perform the agreement on the ground that it included the coach-house, and that A. could not perform his part, not being able to deliver up possession of that portion of the premises on the day fixed for completion, and A. accordingly brought his action to recover the 100*l.* as liquidated damages:—Held, that the words, "he now occupies" formed an essential part of the description of the subject-matter of the agreement, and could not be rejected as falsa demonstratio, and consequently that the agreement did not include the coach-house, and A. was entitled to succeed; but that the 100*l.* was not liquidated damages, but a penalty, and therefore A. could only recover the damages found by the jury to have been actually sustained by him. Mages v. Lovell, 9 L. R., C. P. 107; 43 L. J., C. P. 181; 80 L. T., N. S. 169; 23 W. R. 334.

6. Leases.

(a) Form and Requisites; Execution and Delivery; Cancellation.

Statute.—[The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 124, facilitates the granting of leases, and provides forms which may be usefully adopted in practice.]

As to requirements of statute of frauds, and similar statutes,—see this title, I., 3.

Duty to prepare lease and counterpart.]—In a written agreement for a lease, it was stipulated that if the tenant should be desirous to take a lease of the premises, "he the said (landlord) will, at the request and costs of the said (tenant), grant and execute to him a lease thereof."—Held, that, upon this agreement, the tenant was not bound to pay for the counterpart of the lease, although the lease was to contain covenants to be performed by the tenant; and that, if the landlord required a counterpart, he must be at the expense of it himself. Jennings v. Major, 8 C. & P. 61—Denman.

To an action for breach of an agreement to execute a lease, it is no answer to allege that the intended lessee had not prepared the lease and tendered it for execution to the intended lessor. Cantley v. Powell, 10 Ir. R., C. L. 200—Q. B.

Effect of non-execution by lessor.]—Action on an indenture for a term of ten years, by the plaintiffs to the defendant, for not yielding up the premises occupied by him during the term in good repair. Plea (setting out the indenture, by which the plaintiffs, as the master and governors of an hospital, demised, under their common seal, to the defendant, who covenanted with such master and governors), that the indenture was not at any time during the term signed by the plaintiffs, nor did they sign any lease in writing:—Held, that the defendant was liable on his covenant, whether the plaintiffs had executed the indenture or not. Cooch v. Goodman, 2 D. & G. 159; 2 Q. B. 580; 6 Jur. 779.

To an action on a covenant against the assignee of a lease, of which the declaration averred that the party under whom the assignee claimed executed the counterpart:—Held, that a plea that the indenture was not executed by the plaintiff, or by any agent of the plaintiff, thereunto lawfully authorized in writing, was no answer. Aveline v. Whison, 4 M. & G. 70; 12 L. J., C. P. 58.

Declaration on a deed made between the plaintiff and the defendant, whereby the plaintiff demised to the defendant a messuage, with the appurtenances, for seven years, and the defendant covenanted with the plaintiff, that he would yearly and every year, during the term, keep the premises in repair, and give them up in repair at the end of the term; by virtue of which demise the defendant entered upon and enjoyed the premises. The breach laid was for not keeping the premises in repair during the term. The defendant pleaded that his part of the deed was executed by him after the alleged day of the execution thereof, and that the plaintiff's part was never executed by him, or by any agent of his thereunto lawfully authorized, nor was there ever any demise of the premises to the defendant, nor was there ever any lease of any part of the premises put in writing and signed, or made, signed, sealed or delivered by the plaintiff, or by any agent of his thereunto lawfully authorized by writing or otherwise; and that although before the making of the deed the plaintiff demised the premises for one year, and so on from year to year, by virtue of which demise the defendant entered and occupied the premises for a term, to wit, for nine years, which term ended before the commencement of the suit, the defendant never did occupy the premises under any demise from the plaintiff, other than that last mentioned, or for any term granted by the deed; and that there never was any consideration for the execution by the defendant, on his part, of the deed, and that his covenant therein was void:—Held, in substance, a good answer to the action. Pitman v. Woodbury, 3 Exch. 4.

Action upon an indenture between commissioners of an inland navigation, under the authority of several acts of parliament, on the one part, and the defendant on the other part, whereby the commissioners demised the tolls of the navigation to the defendant for one year, at a rent payable monthly, together with some other payments, and the defendant covenanted with the commissioners, parties to the indenture, and also with the whole body of the commissioners in a separate covenant, for payment of the rent. The declaration alleged an entry by virtue of the demise, and an occupying and receiving the tolls during the entire year. Breach, non-payment of the rent. Plea, that the commissioners never executed the lease, and that the entry and occupation were at the will of the commissioners only, and not under the demise. Replication, that the defendant entered, and received and enjoyed the tolls by the permission of the commissioners, under the terms of the indenture:—Held, that, as the lessors had not executed the lease, the lessee had never received the consideration for which he had stipulated, namely, a permanent estate during the demise, and under its terms; and, therefore, that he was not liable to be sued upon his covenant in that instrument. Swatman v. Ambler, 8 Exch. 72; 23 L. J., Exch. 81. See Morgan v. Pike, 23 L. J., C. P. 64.

To an action on a covenant in a lease for years by the lessor, a plea, that the lessee was tenant for a term of years, if he should so long live, and that the lease was never executed by the reversioner, is a bad plea. Hov v. Greek, 10 Jur., N. S. 1187; 34 L. J., Exch. 4; 18 W. R. 80; 11 L. T., N. S. 315; 3 H. & C. 391.

—by lessee.]—In ejectment on the title, the defendant relied upon twenty years' adverse possession, to obviate which the plaintiff gave in evidence a lease, the last life in which died within the twenty years; but, though both the lease and the counterpart were attested as "signed, sealed and delivered" by the lessor, neither of them was executed by the lessee, and both, being seventy years old, came out of the custody of the lessor:—Held, that, though the plaintiff was entitled, under all the circumstances of the case, to have had a question as to the fact of the delivery submitted to the jury, he was not entitled to a direction in his favor, and that the verdict directed for the defendant should stand. Miltown v. Goodman, 10 Ir. R., C. L. 27—C. P.

Effect of alteration after execution.]—An alteration of a lease, to which others besides the lessor and lessee are parties, after the execution of it by such third parties, but before the execution by the lessor and lessee, does not avoid it. Hall v. Chandless, 12 Moore, 316; 4 Bing. 123.

Delivery; and right to possession of instrument.]—A. being lessee of premises under a lease for twenty-one years, determinable at the end of seven or fourteen years, gave notice to quit at the end of seven years, but did not yield up possession pursuant to such notice. Disputes having arisen, A. gave C., who was entitled to the residue of the term, an undertaking that, in consideration of his granting a new lease to B., he would "deliver up to C. the said lease:"—Held, that the delivery of the lease to C. with the seal cut off, was a breach of the undertaking, although the seal was also delivered at the same time. Richardson v. Barnes, 4 Exch. 128; 18 L. J., Exch. 469.

Trover does not lie by a lessor against a lessee to obtain possession of the indenture of lease, upon the expiration of the term by forfeiture or otherwise. Ball v. Ball, 3 Scott, N. R. 577; 3 M. & G. 242.

A lessor who has determined the term by re-entry for breach of covenant has no title to the lease as against the lessee. Elworthy v. Sandford, 3 H. & C. 330; 34 L. J., Exch. 42; 13 W. R. 1008; 10 L. T., N. S. 654.

Cancellation.]—Canceling a lease by the mutual consent of both parties does not destroy the estate vested in the lessee, and the lessor may therefore maintain an action on the demise for the recovery of the rent. Ward v. Lumley, 5 H. & N. 87; 29 L. J., Exch. 322.

A declaration on a demise, for rent, stated that the plaintiff by deed demised to the defendant certain premises. Plea, that the plaintiff did not by deed demise the premises. Since the rent became due the deed was canceled by the mutual consent of both parties:—Held, that the canceled deed was evidence in proof of the issue. Ward v. Lumley, 5 H. & N. 656; 29 L. J., Exch. 322; 8 W. R. 184.

(b) Principles of Construction; Operation and Effect, in General.

General rules for interpretation.]—The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3, which enacted that a lease required by law to be in writing shall be void at law unless made by deed, has made no difference in the interpretation of written instruments. Stratton v. Pettit, 16 C. B. 420; 3 C. L. R. 925; 1 Jur., N. S. 662; 24 L. J., C. P. 182.

The intention of the parties, as declared by the words of the instrument, must govern the construction; and where there is an instrument by which it appears that one party is to give possession of premises, and the other to take it, that is a lease, unless it can be collected from the instrument itself that it is an agreement only for a lease to be afterwards made. Id.

It cannot be inferred as matter of law that words occurring in a lease are used by the parties in a peculiar sense in which they are understood in the district in which the property demised is situate. Clayton v. Gregson, 6 N. & M. 694; 5 A. & E. 302.

It is a question for the jury, in what sense the words were used in the particular case. Ib.

When a material word appears to have been omitted in a lease by mistake, and other words cannot have their proper effect unless it is introduced, such lease must be construed as if that word was inserted, although the particular passage where it ought to stand conveys a sufficiently distinct meaning without it. Wight v. Dickson, 1 Dow, 141, 147.

The word "term," in a covenant in a lease, may signify either the time, or the estate granted. Evans v. Vaughan, 6 D. & R. 349; 4 B. & C. 261.

A lease contained a covenant by a lessor to do certain work, and at the end of the covenant were these words, "and the whole of which is agreed to be left to the superintendence of the defendant and the plaintiff's son:"—Held, that this was neither a condition precedent to nor concurrent with the covenant. Jones v. Cannock, 3 H. L. Cas. 700.

When the term mentioned in the reddendum in a lease differed from that stated in the habendum, and the counterpart throughout stated the term as in the reddendum, the habendum was corrected so as to agree with the reddendum. Burchell v. Clark, 2 L. R., C. P. Div. 88; 46 L. J., C. P. Div. 115; 35 L. T., N. S. 690; 25 W. R. 334—C. A.; reversing S. C., 1 L. R., C. P. Div. 602; 45 L. J., C. P. Div. 671; 35 L. T., N. S. 372; 25 W. R. 8.

Counterparts.]—The production of the counterpart of an old lease, coupled with evidence of the payment of rent to the lessee by his under-tenants for a number of years, is sufficient evidence of the lessee's interest under such lease. Doe d. Manton v. Austin, 2 M. & Scott, 107.

An expired lease may be presumed to have been destroyed, where reasonable diligence has been unsuccessfully used to secure its production. Ib.

Lands at A. were conveyed to a charity in 1763. In 1783 the charity, being then incorporated as the Magdalen Hospital, granted a lease for ninety-nine years to G. of all their lands at A. not included in the site of the hospital. The lease reserved no beneficial rent to the lessors, and contained no onerous covenants binding on the lessee. In 1876 the governors of the hospital brought an action against the defendants, who were in possession of premises alleged to be comprised in the lease, to have the lease declared void under 13 Eliz. c. 10, and for possession. The lease having been declared voidable on demurrer, the defendants denied that they were in possession under the lease, and asserted a freehold title in themselves in fee. Since 1853 they or their predecessors had dealt with the property as if seized in fee. At the trial of the action it was proved that, assuming the hospital to be owners in 1788 of the lands conveyed to them in 1763, the premises in question were comprised in the lease:—Held, that a counterpart of the lease in the possession of the plaintiffs was admissible as evidence against the defendants, although there was no other evidence of the identity of the property comprised in the lease with that conveyed in 1763, and although there was no evidence that G. entered under the lease, or that the defendants claimed under him; for that, first, where persons are found to be owners of property, there is a presumption, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that they have remained owners of the same property; and, secondly, that the defendants being in possession, it must be presumed that G. entered, and that the defendants were in possession by devolution from him, so as to ascribe to them a rightful rather than a wrongful possession. Magdalen Hospital v. Knolls, 37 L. T., N. S. 428—Fry, J.

Held, also, that the fact that the defendants had dealt with the property as owners in fee did not rebut the presumption that they held under the lease. Ib.

The rule as to lease overruling counterpart applies only where there is inconsistency between those two documents compared with each other, and not where the lease is inconsistent with itself. Burchell v. Clark, 25 W. R. 334; 46 L. J., C. P. Div. 115; 2 L. R., C. P. Div. 88; 35 L. T., N. S. 690—C. A.; reversing S. C., 1 L. R., C. P. Div. 602; 45 L. J., C. P. Div. 671; 35 L. T., N. S. 372; 25 W. R. 8.

Explaining by collateral writings or parol agreements, or by extrinsic facts.]—Where a tenant was to hold land according to certain rules in writing, under which a former tenant held, but the length of his term was agreed on orally:—Held, that, to show the expiration of the term, it was not necessary to produce the rules. Hey v. Moorhouse, 6 Bing. N. C. 52; 8 Scott, 156.

In an action to recover back a sum alleged to have been overpaid by a tenant to his landlord, upon a settlement between them in relation to a distress for arrears of rent, it appeared that the defendant held the premises under a lease from Michaelmas, 1832:—Held, that a memorandum written in the margin of the draft of the lease, whereby the tenant engaged to pay rent for the preceding half-quarter, was admissible for the purpose of negating the claim. Cotons v. Garment, 1 Scott, 275; 1 Bing. N. C. 318.

By a lease reciting that A., one of the lessors, was an original lessee for the term of his natural life, and that B., the other, was a person to whom A. had granted a lease for a term of years certain, seven of which would remain unexpired on the 29th September following the date of the lease, A. and B. demised to the lessee the premises from the 29th day of September, for and during the two several terms thereinafore mentioned

(the rent to be paid to both the lessors and their executors), if the lessee should so long live, and the term and estate of the original lessee should so long continue. Under the lease there was subscribed a memorandum, providing that the rent reserved should be paid during the first seven years to the intermediate lessee, and afterwards to the original lessee, during the term of thirty years, if his interest should so long continue; and that the new lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, should have liberty to quit a part of the premises at any time during the term, upon giving twelve months' notice:—Held, that the lease and memorandum must be taken together, and construed as one entire instrument; and that the intention of the parties, expressed by both, was to extend the habendum beyond the term of the life of the lessee, and give him a lease for thirty-seven years, determinable on the death of the lessor. Weak d. Taylor v. Escott, 9 Price, 595.

A draft lease was prepared by a lessor, in pursuance of a written contract, which was not objected to by the lessee, who afterwards refused to complete:—Held, that the draft lease could not be used for the purpose of controlling or explaining the contract itself. Heywood v. Cope, 25 Beav. 140.

A. leased a farm to B.; before taking it, B. complained to A. of the quantity of game upon it, and A. thereupon told B. that he was about to kill and to keep down the game, and to dismiss most of his keepers, and discontinue letting the shooting, but said that he did not wish this arrangement to be inserted in the lease. The lease was accordingly drawn up and executed, without containing any reference to A.'s undertaking, but it reserved to A., his friends and agents, the game and right of sporting over the farm. The shooting was afterwards re-let during B.'s lease, and a large head of game kept up. A. died, and in a suit to administer his estate, B. brought in as a creditor a claim on account of damage done to his crops by the game:—Held, that the evidence established the fact that there had been a parol agreement collateral to the lease, and upon the faith of which the lease had been executed; that such agreement was valid, and B.'s claim must be admitted. Erskine v. Adeane, Bennett's claim, 3 L. R., Ch. 756; 43 L. J., Chanc. 849; 29 L. T., N. S. 234; 21 W. R. 802.

The Goldsmiths' Company entered into an agreement with the plaintiff to grant to him a long lease of ground on which he was about to erect new buildings. The agreement contained a proviso that nothing therein should give the plaintiff any rights of light and air over certain adjoining ground and buildings. A form of lease was annexed to the agreement, and the lease was afterwards granted according to the form, and contained an express demise of lights; but there was no proviso in the lease similar to the one in the agreement. The Goldsmiths' Company afterwards demised the adjoining ground to the defendant, who commenced building so as to intercept the plaintiff's light:—Held, that the lease must be read as if the proviso in the agreement was inserted in the lease. Salaman v. Glover, 44 L. J., Chanc. 551; 20 L. R., Eq. 444; 32 L. T., N. S. 792—V. C. B.

In 1855, S., an owner in fee of two mills, leased one to P., who carried on there the business of a bleacher. The refuse from his works was discharged through a drain, partly open and partly covered, into a natural stream or watercourse, 800 or 400 yards distant, and upon which the other mill was situate. This discharge of the refuse took place about seven times a fortnight, and polluted the stream. In 1858, P. surrendered his lease, and S. granted a new lease to the defendant. In this lease the defendant was described as a "bleacher," and the demise was of the premises "late in the occupation of P." There was a clause that all buildings created by the defendant for the purpose of bleaching should, at the end of the term, become the property of S. In 1858 the plaintiff purchased both mills. The defendant discharged the refuse from his works through the drain into the stream in the same manner that P. had formerly done. The plaintiff, who carried on in the other mill the business of a paper maker, brought an action against the defendant for polluting the stream:—Held, that the lease might be explained by the state of the premises at the time it was granted, and the mode in which they had been previously enjoyed; and that, thus explained, there was an implied grant by S. to the defendant to use the stream for the purpose of his business of bleaching, and therefore the plaintiff, who was in the position of S., could maintain no action against the defendant. Hall v. Lund, 11 H. & C. 676; 9 Jur., N. S. 205; 32 L. J., Exch. 118; 11 W. R. 271.

II. TERM.

1. Nature of Estate or Interest of Tenant.

Definition.—The word "term," in a covenant in a lease, may signify either the time, or the estate granted. Evans v. Vaughn, 6 D. & R. 349; 4 B. & C. 261.

Leases for lives.—A demise by A. to B. for the term of his natural life, may inure as a demise either for the life of A. or of B., according to circumstances. Doe d. Pritchard v. Dodd, 2 N. & M. 838; 5 B. & Ad. 689.

Seem, that if the habendum is to B., his executors, administrators, and assigns, presumption is created in favor of a demise for the life of A. Ib.

Such presumption is confirmed by a covenant by A. with B. for quiet enjoyment during the life of A. Ib.

Such a covenant per se would amount to a demise. Ib.

A lease was granted in pursuance of an agreement between A. and B., by which "A. agreed to let her house to B. during her life, supposing it to be occupied by B. or a tenant agreeable to A.," and "a clause was to be added in the lease," to give A.'s son an option to possess the house when of age:—Held, that such lease only insured for the joint lives of A. and B. Doe d. Bromfield v. Smith, 6 East, 530; 2 Smith, 570; 2 T. & R. 436.

Lease to A., her heirs and assigns, habendum to A. and her assigns, for and during the natural life of B:—Held, in ejectment by A., the heir of B., that the words "and her assigns," in the habendum, must be rejected as repugnant to the premises. Doe d. Timmins v. Steele, 3 G. & D. 622; 4 Q. B. 663; 7 Jur. 555.

Lands, held under a lease for lives, having been devised to Mary for life, and, after her death, to Thomas absolutely, they joined in surrendering the lease, and procured a new one for lives to themselves and their heirs as joint tenants; Thomas devised the lands, but Mary survived him and devised them:—Held, that the legal estate granted by the new lease was vested in the devisee of Mary, in trust for the heir of Thomas and also of his devisee. Hill v. Hill, 8 Ir. R., Eq. 140—V. C.

As to validity of leases for lives,—see this title, I., 2.

A lease for 2000 years is not to be construed as a lease, but merely as a term to attend the inheritance. Denn d. Bargwell v. Barnard, Cowp. 695.

Option to purchase premises.]—A lease for years contained a covenant on the part of the lessor, that if the lessee should be desirous, at the expiration of the term, of purchasing the premises, and should give to the lessor six calendar months' notice in writing of such desire, and should pay to him 2,000*l.*, the lessor would sell and convey the premises to the lessee; the expense of the preparation and verification of the abstract to be borne by the lessee, he expressly accepting the title. The lessee gave notice, but did not pay the money:—Held, that the payment of the money was a condition precedent to the right of purchase, and that the money not having been paid, no binding contract arose. Weston v. Collins, 34 L. J., Chanc. 353—C.

A lease for twenty-one years contained a proviso, that if the lessees should be desirous of purchasing the fee, and should give to the lessor, his heirs or assigns, notice of such desire, they should be entitled to become the purchasers of the premises at the price named, and the lessor, his appointees, heirs, or assigns, would, on payment of the purchase-money, do all acts for conveying the premises to the use of the purchasers. The lessor died, having devised all his real estate to trustees, who disclaimed, and leaving an infant heir. The lessees having served on the infant and his guardian notice of their election to purchase:—Held, that such notice was effectually served, and constituted a valid and binding contract, which the court would not refuse to carry out on the ground that the infant could not give a discharge for the

A lessee, who had the option of purchasing the freehold at any time within seven years, by giving three months' notice, and paying a certain sum at the expiration of such notice, gave the required notice three months before the seven years elapsed, but did not pay the money on or before the day the notice expired:—Held, that the lessee was not entitled to a decree for specific performance, the time of payment being one of the two conditions of the contract. Ranelagh v. Melton, 10 Jur., N. S. 1141; 13 W. R. 150; 11 L. T., N. S. 409; 34 L. J., Chanc. 227; 2 Drew. & Sm. 278.

An owner of a plot of ground agreed to grant a lease of it to A. as soon as the latter had erected a villa thereon. But it was stipulated that if A. should not perform the agreement on his part, the agreement for a lease was to be void, and that the owner might re-enter. A. was to insure in a particular way, and he was to have the option of purchasing the fee within two years. A. erected the villa, but insured in a wrong office and in a wrong name:—Held, that the contract for a lease was independent of the option to purchase, and that, notwithstanding the forfeiture of the first, the latter still subsisted, and a specific performance of the contract for sale was decreed. Green v. Low, 22 Beav. 625; 2 Jur., N. S. 848.

2. Commencement, Duration, and Termination.

Commencement of term.]—A lease from a certain day commences on the next day. Anon., Loft, 275.

The words "from the day of the date," mean either inclusive or exclusive, according to the context and subject-matter; and the court will construe them so as to effectuate the intention of the parties. Pugh v. Leeds, Cowp. 714.

A lease of lands by deed, to hold from the feast of St. Michael, must be taken to mean from New Michaelmas, and cannot be shown by extrinsic evidence to refer to a holding from Old Michaelmas. Doe d. Spicer v. Lea, 11 East, 312.

Where a lease was dated 25th March, 1783, habendum "from the 25th March now last past," and the deed was not executed until some time after the date:—Held, that the term commenced on the 25th March, 1783, and not on the 25th March, 1782. Steel v. Mart, 6 D. & R. 392; 4 B. & C. 272.

By indenture of lease of the 28th April, 1834, the lessor of the plaintiff demised to E. a messuage, to hold from the 1st of May then next, for forty years, at the rent of 25*l.* a year. E. covenanted not to underlease without the consent in writing of the lessor; and there was a proviso for forfeiture in case he should be adjudged bankrupt. With the lessor's consent in writing, E. underleased three rooms in the messuage to the defendant for twenty-one years, by a lease dated the 25th March, 1839. In January, 1840, E. was adjudged a bankrupt, and the lessor of the plaintiff brought ejectment for the whole of the messuage, except the rooms leased to the defendant, and entered under a writ of possession on the 12th May, 1841. The defendant continued to occupy the three rooms; and in February, 1843, an execution having issued against him, the lessor of the plaintiff served the sheriff with notice that there was a sum of 25*l.*, being one year's rent, due in November, 1842, in respect of the premises occupied by the defendant as his tenant, and requiring the sheriff to pay the same to him. The sheriff accordingly paid over to the lessor of the plaintiff 25*l.* out of the levy. On the 24th April the defendant was served with a six months' notice to quit:—Held, that the tenancy must be considered as commencing on the 12th May, 1844, and that a demise on the 4th May was before title had accrued to the lessor of the plaintiff, and, therefore, the ejectment was not maintainable. Doe d. Lloyd v. Ingleby, 14 M. & W. 91; 14 L. J., Exch. 246.

By an agreement dated the 31st August, 1838, W. agreed to let, and R. to take, a house, at a yearly rent, payable quarterly, "to commence from the 29th September next, and the first quarter's rent to become due and payable on the 25th December next." Though not so stated in the agreement, the house was, at the time of making the agreement, in the occupation of C., as tenant to W., who quit- ted on the 26th of September:—Held, that, under this agreement, the tenancy commenced on the 29th of September. White v. Nicholson, Scott, N. R. 707; 4 M. & G. 95.

Cognizance that the plaintiff was tenant to H., at a certain rent, and that the defendant distrained for the rent of a half-year ending the 29th of September, 1841. Plea, that, after rent became due, H., by indenture pur- porting to be made the 1st of February, 1841, but made after the 29th of September, 1841, released the rent. The defendant, in his rep- lication, set out the indenture, dated the 1st of February, 1841, being a demise to the plaintiff of the premises, to hold from the 30th of July, 1840, for fourteen years; the first payment of rent to be made on the 25th of March then next:—Held, that the indenture had not the effect of releasing the tenant from payment of the rent due under a parol con- tract before its execution. Cooper v. Robinson, 10 M. & W. 694; 12 L. J., Exch. 48.

A memorandum of agreement for a lease did not specify the date when the lease was to commence:—Held, that the lease was to commence on the date of the agreement itself, and specific performance of the agreement was ordered accordingly, with damages. Jaques v. Millar, 6 L. R., Ch. Div. 153; 37 L. T., N. S. 151; 25 W. R. 846—Fry, J.

Duration of term, in general.—The habendum in a lease only marks the duration of the tenant's interest, and its operation as a grant is merely prospective. Shaw v. Kay, 1 Exch. 412; 17 L. J., Exch. 17.

A lease for one year, and so for two or three years, as the parties shall agree, means for two years, and, after every subsequent year begins, is not determinable till that is ended. Harris v. Evans, 1 Wils. 262; Amb. 329.

But it is a lease for one year only, without such subsequent agreement. Id.

A lease for years, if the lessee so long lives, with a remainder to another for the residue of the term, must be construed to give the remainder-man a power to enjoy during all the residue of the years to come. Wright d. Arm v. Cartwright, 1 Burr. 282; 1 Ld. Ken. 529.

The defendants entered into an agreement "that they should become tenants of the premises, at 37*5l.* a quarter, the tenancy to commence on the 14th June, they paying a quarter's rent on that day; and that they should give security to pay one quarter's rent in advance as long as they should continue tenants:—Held, that, under this agreement, the defendants did not become tenants from year to year, but from quarter to quarter only, and therefore that proof of such an agreement did not support an allegation, that the de- fendants held "as tenants for a term of years, from year to year, for so long," &c., or "for the residue of a certain tenancy for a term of years," &c. Wilkinson v. Hall, 4 Scott, 301; 3 Bing. N. C. 508; 3 Hodges, 56.

A general parol demise, at an annual rent, where the bulk of the farm is inclosed, and a small part in the open common fields, is only a lease from year to year, and not for so long as the usual round of husbandry extends. Doe d. Bree v. Lees, 2 W. Bl. 1171.

Upon a demise "until Michaelmas next, and no longer," with the privilege of using part of the premises for specific purposes till Lady-day following, ejectment may be brought for those parts to which the privilege does not extend, in the interval between Michaelmas and Lady-day. Doe d. Waters v. Haughton, 1 M. & R. 208.

Demise of freehold and copyhold lands, at an entire rent, habendum so much as was freehold for twenty-one years, and so much as was copyhold for three years, warranted by the custom, and covenant for renewal of the lease of the copyhold every three years, toties quoties, during the twenty-one years, under the like covenants; and that in the meantime, and until such new leases should be executed, the lessee should hold the land, as well copy- hold as freehold:—Held, that this was only a lease of the copyhold for three years, and that the lessor after the three years might recover the premises in ejectment against the lessee, there not having been any fresh lease granted. Penny d. Eastham v. Child, 2 M. & S. 255.

A printed instrument, purporting to be a form of a devise of a farm, originally con- tained in the habendum words creating a tenancy from year to year, but on producing the instrument in evidence, they were found to be struck through, and were proved to have been so struck through before the execution of the instrument by the party charged. The remaining words of demise were "for the term of one year fully to be complete and ended," and stood immediately preceding those which had been struck out. However, many subsequent stipulations remained in the lease, which seemed to be only applicable to a tenancy for longer than a year, or determinable by notice to quit:—Held, first, that the words struck through might be looked at to ascertain the real intention of the parties in so crasing them, and consequently that the tenancy was for one year only; and next, that the stipulations inapplicable to such a tenancy must be considered as struck out, or as surplusage, unless the tenancy should continue for more than a year. Strickland v. Maxwell, 2 C. & M. 539; 4 Tyr. 846.

By the same instrument of demise, after a covenant for payment of rent by the tenant, it was agreed, "that in case the tenant should duly observe and perform the several covenants and agreements thereinbefore contained on his part and behalf," and should peaceably quit the farm in pursuance of notice to do so, he should be entitled to away-going crop, to be taken from lands in seed or turnips the previous summer, such crop being to be left for the landlord, or his in-coming tenant, at a valuation to be made by arbitrators or an umpire:—Held, that this clause did not give the tenant the right of possession of the land to the exclusion of the landlord, after the determination of the year's tenancy, but at most only a right to go on the land to improve the crop; and that the landlord might maintain trespass quare clausum fregit, for taking possession of the crop, and hindering him from having the use and occupation of the land, after the year was expired. Id.

By an indenture of lease dated in 1784 and executed by the lessor, he demised certain premises to hold to the lessee and his assigns for the term of ninety-four and a quarter years, yielding and paying therefor during the said term of ninety-one and a quarter years hereby demised a yearly rent. The number of years was not mentioned in any other clause of the lease. But the counterpart, executed by the lessee, which was otherwise identical with the lease, had ninety-one in the habendum as well as in the reddendum. In an action by the assignee of the reversion to recover possession against the assignee of the lessee after the lapse of the ninety-one and a quarter years:—Held, that, there being a manifest clerical error in the lease, the counterpart might be looked at to ascertain where the mistake lay, and that, on the true construction of the lease and counterpart taken together, the "ninety-four" in the lease must be rejected, and the lease read as a grant for ninety-one and a quarter years only. Burchell v. Clark, 2 L. R. C. P. Div. 88; 40 L. J. C. P. Div. 115; 25 W. R. 334; 35 L. T., N. S. 690—C. A.; reversing the judgment of the Common Pleas Division, 1 L. R., C. P. Div. 602; 45 L. J., C. P. Div. 671; 25 W. R. 8; 35 L. T., N. S. 372.

— under leases for optional periods.]—A lease for seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years, as the lessee shall think proper, is a good lease for seven years, whatever it may be for the fourteen or twenty-one years. Ferguson v. Cornish, 2 Burr. 1032; 3 T. R. 463, n.

Lease of lands by indenture for twenty-one years, with proviso that it should be determinable by the lessee or the lessor at the end of the first seven or fourteen years, and a memorandum indorsed six years after the execution of the lease, "of its being agreed between the parties, previously to the execution, that the lessor shall not dispossess, nor cause the lessee to be dispossessed, of the said estate, but to have it for the term of twenty-one years from this present time;" which memorandum was signed by the parties, and stamped with a lease stamp, but not sealed:—Held, that the lessor might, notwithstanding, determine the lease at the end of the first fourteen years; for the memorandum did not operate as a new lease and surrender of the first lease. Goodright d. Nicholls v. Mark, 4 M. & S. 30.

A lease in 1785, for three, six or nine years, determinable in 1788, 1791, 1794, is a lease for nine years, determinable at the end of three or six years, by either of the parties, on giving reasonable notice to quit. Goodright d. Hall v. Richardson, 3 T. R. 462.

If a lease is granted for seven, fourteen or twenty-one years, the lessee only has the option at which of the above periods the lease shall determine. Dann v. Spurrier, 3 B. & P. 899, 443; 7 Ves. 231. S. P., Price v. Dyer, 17 Ves. 863.

So, where the lease was for fourteen or seven years, on the ground that every doubtful grant must be construed in favor of the grantee. Doe d. Webb v. Dixon, 9 East, 10.

Where there was an agreement that a tenant should be at liberty to quit at Lady-day, in which case the landlord engaged to take the fixtures at a valuation, or to permit the tenant to let the house:—Held, that the construction of this agreement was, that the tenant had an option in the event of his quitting. Colton v. Lingham, 1 Stark. 39—Le Blanc.

And a letting by the tenant to an under-tenant until Lady-day was not an exercise of his right of option. Id.

A proviso in a lease for twenty-one years, that, if either of the parties should be desirous to determine it in seven or fourteen years, it should be lawful for either of them, his executors or administrators, so to do, upon twelve months' notice to the other of them, his heirs, executors or administrators, extends, by reasonable intendment, to the devisee of the lessor, who is entitled to the rent and reversion. Ibe d. Bamford v. Hayley, 12 East, 464.

A letting, in 1845, to a yearly tenant, and if he should wish a lease, that the lessor will grant the same for seven, fourteen or twenty-one years, at the same rent, is sufficiently certain to be specifically performed. It is to be construed as an optional lease for twenty-one years from 1845, determinable at the end of seven or fourteen years, at the option of the tenant. Hersey v. Giblett, 18 Beav. 174; 23 L. J., Chanc. 818.

Under such a contract, the landlord might call on the tenant to exercise his option, and, in default, might determine the tenancy, but this might afterwards be waived by a receipt of rent. Id.

A lease was granted to A. for fourteen years, with a proviso for terminating the lease at the end of the first seven years, if the landlord should so desire; on his giving notice of his desire in writing, B. joined in the covenant. The landlord gave a notice, in terms a notice to quit, not expressing in terms his desire to terminate the tenancy under the proviso, but referring to the lease and its determinable quality:—Held, that this was a termination of the lease under the proviso, and discharged the surety. Giddens v. Dodd, 3 Drew. 483; 25 L. J., Chanc. 451.

A lease for twenty-one years, determinable at the end of seven or fourteen, if the parties so think fit, is not determinable without the joint assent of lessor and lessee. Fouell v. Tranter, 3 H. & C. 458; 34 L. J., Exch. 6; 13 W. R. 145; 11 L. T., N. S. 317.

A demise for seven years, with a proviso that, notwithstanding anything before contained, if notice should not be given to determine the lease at the end of the seven years, it should be considered a lease upon the same covenants, from year to year, until notice to determine it, continues after the seven years until put an end to by notice, and the covenants continue binding. Brown v. Trumper, 26 Beav. 11.

B., by an indenture, dated and made 19th July, 1851, granted, demised and leased to A. premises, habendum to A. from 25th December, 1849, for and during and until the full end and term of fourteen years thence next ensuing, determinable as therein mentioned; proviso, that it should be lawful for either B. or A. to determine the demise at the expiration of the first seven years thereof, by six months' notice, and thereupon that demise, and every covenant therein contained, should cease and determine accordingly:—Held, that the seven years were to be reckoned from 25th December, 1849, and that the lease might be determined on 25th December, 1856. Bird v. Baker, 1 El. & El. 12; 4 Jur., N. S. 1148; 28 L. J., Q. B. 7.

A. agreed to let premises to B. for three years, and, at the expiration of that term, to grant him a lease for an extended term. A. died, and three years having expired, B. continued to hold on under his executors for four years without asking for a lease. He then required a lease:—Held, that B.'s option had not determined, and that he was entitled to the extension of the term. Moss v. Barton, 35 Beav. 197.

A person entitled to leasehold premises for a long term of years agreed to underlet them to a tenant for three years, and, whenever called upon to do so by the tenant, to grant to him a lease for three years, seven years, or the remainder of the term that he had it in his power to grant, such lease to contain all the usual covenants for protecting the interests of the grantor. The three years expired without the option being exercised. The tenant, however, continued in possession until he became bankrupt, and his interest in the premises was sold by his assignee to a purchaser, who entered into possession and filed in equity a bill for specific performance of the agreement:—Held, first, that the option might be exercised at any time during the tenancy. Buckland v. Pupillon, 36 L. J., Chanc. 81; 2 L. R., Ch. 67; 12 Jur., N. S. 992; 15 W. R. 92; 15 L. T., N. S. 378.

Held, secondly, that the bankrupt had such an interest in lands as passed to his assignee either under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 142, or under s. 145. Id.

Held, thirdly, that such interest was not prevented from so passing by the absence of the word "assigns" in the agreement. Id.

Determination.—Where a lease is to commence from the 25th March then next, for twenty-one years, fully to be completed and ended, the term does not end until the last moment on the 25th March in the last year. Ackland v. Lutley, 1 P. & D. 636; 9 A. & E. 879.

A lease for so long as the lessee should continue to inhabit the farm-house and actually occupy the land, and not let or part with the lease; upon his ceasing to inhabit immediately becomes forfeited. Doe d. Lockwood v. Clarke, 8 East, 185. And see Doe d. Norfolk v. Hawke, 2 East, 481.

A lease to A., his executors, &c., for a year, and so on from year to year, for so long a time as it shall please the lessor and A., his executors, &c., does not expire on the death of A., but vests in his executors. Muckay v. Mackreth, 4 Dougl. 213; 2 Chit. 461.

A tenancy from year to year, so long as both parties please, is determinable at the end of the first as well as of any subsequent year, unless in creating such tenancy the parties use words showing that they contemplate a tenancy for two years at least. Doe d. Clarke v. Smarridge, 7 Q. B. 957; 9 Jur. 781; 14 L. J., Q. B. 327.

Where the interest of a tenant is determined by the death of a tenant for life, under whom he holds, the possession ceases with the interest, and he cannot maintain trespass unless he does some act indicating an intention to continue in possession. Brown v. Notley, 3 Exch. 210.

L. was the holder of a lease of premises from S. for twenty-one years, determinable at the will of either party at the end of the first seven or fourteen years. The first seven years would expire at Christmas, 1863. L. had expended considerable sums on the premises, for which he was to receive 1,800*l.* from R., to whom he agreed to assign the lease. The agreement contained these stipulations:—"If R. is rejected by S., the 1,800*l.* to be repaid to R. If S. exercises the power of determining the lease at Christmas, 1863, and R. leaves house, 1,100*l.* are to be returned to R. If at Christmas, 1863, the tenancy of R. is continued, the 1,800*l.* to be retained by L." R. entered into possession, and his aunt, Mrs. C., resided with him. In May, 1863, S. gave notice of an intention to determine the tenancy. At Christmas, 1863, Mrs. C. became lessee to S., under a new lease, at a largely increased rent. R. continued to live in the house after his aunt, Mrs. C., had become the lessee. R. claimed the return of the 1,100*l.* under the agreement:—Held, that the agreement must be construed as applying entirely to a legal termination of R.'s tenancy, which, having taken place, he was entitled under the agreement to the return of the 1,100*l.* Lucas v. Rideout, 3 L. R., H. L. Cas. 153; S. C., in Exch. Cham., 14 L. T., N. S. 738, affirmed.

When it is a part of the terms of a tenancy created by parol that the tenant shall be allowed to place goods on land not comprised within the letting, the tenant, who has acted upon such license, though not by deed, and though it was afterwards revoked by the determination of the tenancy, has a right to go and remove the goods which he has so placed there, and is entitled to have a reasonable time to do so. Cornish v. Stubbs, 5 L. R., C. P. 334; 39 L. J., C. P. 203; 22 L. T., N. S. 21; 18 W. R. 547.

If on the death of the landlord the tenant who has held on such terms continues in possession, and pays the same rent to the landlord's successor, it is evidence that the latter has assented to the tenant continuing on all the terms of the original letting. Id.

A lessee is not freed from his covenants by a notice to treat, served by a railway company, until the actual assignment of his interest. Mills v. East London Union (Guardians), 21 W. R. 142; 27 L. T., N. S. 557—C. P.

III. PREMISES.

1. Extent.

Description.—Under a demise of a messuage with all rooms and chambers, with the appurtenances thereto belonging, is to be understood all that is occupied together as an entire messuage at one and the same time; therefore, such a demise will not comprehend a room which had once formed part of the messuage, but which had been separated from it by means of a wooden partition, and had not been occupied with it for many years previously to the demise. Kenslake v. White, 2 Stark. 508—Abbott.

It is to be collected from the recitals of a lease what is intended by the parties to be demised; and where a lease referred to a former demise of premises described as "fifty-nine acres, provincial measure," and after reciting an intention to demise the "said estate," went on to demise "the same, being forty acres, statute measure:"—Held, that the soil of a road, which was set out and made between the times of making the first and second leases, and was part of the premises demised by the first lease, passed by the second. Doe d. White v. Osborne, 4 Jur. 941—C. P.

Under a lease of premises, "together with all ways appertaining, or with any parts thereof used or enjoyed," a right of way passes, although not expressly mentioned, upon proof that it is used with the premises at the time the lease is granted. Kooystra v. Lucas, 1 D. & R. 506; 5 B. & A. 880. But see Harding v. Wilson, 3 D. & R. 287; 2 B. & C. 96; Morris v. Edington, 3 Taunt. 24; Crisp v. Price, 5 Taunt. 548.

Under a lease of "all that messuage or tenement, called, &c., now or late in the occupation of C.," the boundaries given not accurately defining the premises:—Held, that a gateway under a portion of the messuage, and leading to a yard behind, in which were some small houses not included in the demise, the tenants of which had always used the gateway, did not pass, in the absence of evidence to show that it had been in the exclusive occupation of C. Dyna v. Nulley, 14 C. B. 122; 2 C. L. R. 81.

A lease of land, described by admeasurement "with the houses now erected or being erected thereon" (it being found as a fact, that at the time the lease was executed the foundations of the house had been laid), is in effect the same as though the lease had been of a specific house; and though the dimensions considerably exceeded those stated:—Held, that it was merely falsa demonstratio. Manning v. Fitzgerald, 29 L. J., Exch. 24.

In 1770, P., owner in fee, demised to B. a plot of ground for ninety-seven years and a quarter from the 25th of December, 1765. The trustees of B. demised to S. for ninety-six years, from Lady-day, 1765, a part of the ground upon which a house, called No. 7 Cumberland street, and a stable were built; and they also demised to E., for eighty-nine years, from Lady-day, 1771, another part of the ground upon which a house, called No. 4 Hyde Park place, was built. In 1795, R., being the owner of the leases of both houses, assigned the lease of No. 7 Great Cumberland street to G., reserving the stable, and from that period it was always occupied with No. 4 Hyde Park place. In 1823, the defendant, who had acquired the interest of R. in the lease of No. 4 Hyde Park place, and who was in actual occupation of it, together with the stable (to which he had made a direct communication by a door from the house), obtained from the owner of the reversion of the plot of ground, demised in 1766, a reversionary lease of No. 4 Hyde Park place, for ninety-nine years from the 25th of March, 1822. The house was described in this lease by metes and bounds, and by reference to a plan in the margin, neither of which included the stable, but the lease contained the following words which were not contained in the lease of the 23d December, 1774:—"Together with all out-houses, edifices, buildings, stables, yards, gardens, ways, watercourses, lights, areas, vaults, cellars, easements, profits, and commodities whatsoever to the premises demised, belonging or appertaining." There was also a covenant to deliver up at the end of the term "racks, mangers, stalls," &c. In 1840 the owner of the reversion of the plot of ground demised in 1766, granted to D. a reversionary lease of No. 7 Great Cumberland street, for fifty years, by the following description:—"Together with the capital messuage or tenement, coach-house and stable, erected and built thereon, and which said messuage (but not the stable) is now in the possession of D.," and which stable is now in the possession of M. On the expiration of the lease of the 23d of December, 1774, the plaintiff, to whom the reversionary lease of No. 7 Great Cumberland street had been assigned, brought ejectment to recover possession of the stable:—Held, that the stable did not pass to M. under the general words in the reversionary lease of 1823, as "belonging or appertaining" to the demised premises. Maitland v. Mackinnon, 1 H. & C. 607; 9 Jur., N. S. 255; 32 L. J., Exch. 49; 7 L. T., N. S. 427.

A piece of land having been conveyed, together with a right of way from it over a new road to a high road; the person to whom it was conveyed demised the piece of land by parol to a yearly tenant; the demise being general, and making no mention of the right of way:—Held, that the right of way having been made appurtenant to the land, it passed by the parol demise to the yearly tenant, although not expressly mentioned in the parol demise. Skull v. Glenister, 11 W. R. 368; 16 C. B., N. S. 81; 33 L. J., C. P. 185.

Before the date of the deed, A. was owner of a row of houses running from north to south, with a garden at the back of each to the east. In the rear of the gardens, and divided from them by a wire fence, was a shrubbery with a gravel walk, which was used in common by the occupiers of all the houses. This shrubbery was bounded on the east and north by the fence of S. By the instrument the premises demised to B. were described as the first house south in the row called, &c., with the garden and shrubbery to the rear and north side thereof, and extending to S.'s fence, either way, and also liberty of way and passage to and for such person for the time being occupying the premises intended to be hereby demised, in, along and over the walk in the rear of the houses, inclosed by a wire fence from the garden ground, or ground occupied with such several houses. The fence of S. ran along the south side of the garden belonging to the house demised to B., as far as the wire fence dividing the garden from the shrubbery.

Afterwards, A., by an indenture demised to C. another house in the same row, with a reservation of a similar right of way:—Held, that the premises demised to B. included at least some portion of the angle of the shrubbery at the back of his garden, between the wire fence and the fence of S. to the east; and therefore that C. had no right to walk over the whole of the land comprised in that angle. Curling v. Mills, 6 M. & G. 173; 7 Scott, N. R. 709; 13 L. J., C. P. 316.

A., being seized in fee of a moiety of lands, and B. being seized for life of the other moiety, they in 1805, by deed reciting that they were entitled thereto as tenants in common, and that they had agreed to grant a perpetual lease to C., his heirs, &c., granted and demised the same to C., his heirs, executors and assigns, forever, to hold from a day past unto and to the use of C., his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, forever; yielding and paying therefor yearly to A. and B., their heirs, &c., the clear yearly rent of 120*l.*, half yearly. The deed contained all the covenants usually found in an ordinary lease:—Held, that in the absence of proof that at the date of the deed the premises were in the occupation of tenants, so that a reversion only could pass, and the expressed intention of the parties precluding the court from presuming that there had been livery of seisin, the deed could not operate as a conveyance of the fee, subject to a rent charge, but created only a tenancy from year to year. Doe d. Robertson v. Gardiner, 13 C. B. 819; 21 L. J., C. P. 222.

Premises were demised by the description of "all that cottage or tenement, with the garden thereto adjoining and belonging, situate, &c.; and also a piece or parcel of land lying near to the cottage or tenement, containing by estimation three quarters of an acre (more or less), lately used as garden ground:"—Held, that under such description, an adjoining piece of waste land would not pass, unless it had been theretofore used as an outlet of the garden. Kingsmill v. Millard, 11 Exch. 313; 3 C. L. R. 1022.

A reservation in a lease of "the free running of water and soil coming from any other buildings and lands contiguous to the premises demised in and through the sewers or watercourses made or to be made within, through, or under the premises," extends to water and soil coming to and from—though not actually first arising upon or out of—the contiguous lands or buildings, but does not extend beyond such water and soil as are the product of the ordinary use of the land and buildings for habitation. Chadwick v. Marsden, 36 L. J., Exch. 177; 2 L. R., Exch. 285; 15 W. R. 964; 16 L. T., N. S. 666.

A., the owner of certain freehold houses and land, with a yard adjoining thereto, demised, by parol, several of the houses. The tenants were in the habit of passing over the yard, and using a common pump and privy there. There was no evidence whether the yard formed part of the demise or not. In an action by one of the tenants against the landlord for excluding him from the yard, the judge left it to the jury to say whether the landlord at the time of the demise had reserved the yard:—Held, that this was a misdirection, the question being whether he had demised it, and not whether he had reserved it. Herbert or Herbert v. Thomas, 1 C., M. & R. 861; 5 Tyr. 503; 1 Gale, 53.

A lease of a colliery contained an implied covenant on the part of the lessor to procure land by compulsory powers, in order to enable the lessees to make a railway to a neighboring canal, without which they had no access to any available market. The lessor did not procure the land, but brought an action against the lessees for rent. The lessees, acting under the advice of their solicitor, paid the rent, and subsequently proceeded to arbitration under a clause in the agreement, and an award was made in their favor. The lessor having commenced a second action for rent, the lessees applied to the Court of Chancery for an injunction to restrain the action; for specific performance of the agreement to provide the land; for a declaration that the award was binding, and for a rectification of the lease if necessary:—Held, that the colliery being valueless without the land, and the provision of the latter being the basis of the agreement, the documents did not carry out the intention. The whole matter was a failure, and the parties, as far as possible, must be put back in their original positions. Acraman v. Price, Davies v. Price, 24 L. T., N. S. 487; 19 W. R. 364—C.

An incumbent agreed to grant, at a future period, a lease of his glebe, containing about 437 acres, "except thirty-seven acres thereof," which were not specified:—Held, that the contract was not void for uncertainty; that the right of selecting belonged to the lessor, he having the first act to do; but that if a lease had actually been granted in the uncertain form of the contract, the right of selecting would then have belonged to the tenant. Jenkins v. Green, 27 Beav. 437; 5 Jur., N. S. 304; 28 L. J., Chanc. 817.

Held, also, that this right of selection must not be exercised oppressively, so as to interfere with the beneficial enjoyment of the rest of the farm. Id.

By an indenture of lease, lands therein described as "bounded on the west by the River Shannon," and as containing thirty-one and a half acres or thereabouts, and delineated upon a map annexed (which, however, did not show any boundary either on the bank or middle of the river), were demised at an acreable rent:—Held, that, in the absence of anything in the lease to rebut the ordinary presumption, it carried to the lessee half of the bed and soil of the river. Dwyer v. Rich, 6 Ir. R., C. L. 144—Exch. Cham.

By a lease, purporting to demise a close containing five acres, at a yearly rent of 10*l.*, the lessor purported to reserve one acre of the close for himself, for such time as he might require it, for his own use, allowing to the lessee 2*l.* out of the thereinbefore specified rent, as long as the lessor should hold one acre:—Held, that the clause could not be construed as an exception to the lessor of that acre, and that his representatives were not entitled to its possession after his death. Moroney v. Macnarama, 6 Ir. R., C. L. 181; 20 W. R. 905—Exch.

As to description of premises in deeds, generally,—see DEED.

2. Use and Enjoyment, in General.

Acts of ownership by tenant.—Where a landlord suffers his tenant to exercise acts of ownership, and makes no objection to it, it is evidence to be left to the jury, whether he did not mean to be bound by those acts of his tenant. Doe d. Winckley v. Pye, 1 Esp. 366—Kenyon.

Tenant's duty to preserve boundaries.—A tenant is bound to preserve the boundaries, and if he permits them to be destroyed so that the landlord's land cannot be distinguished from his, he is bound to restore them specifically, or to substitute land of equal value. Att. Gen. v. Fullerton, 2 Ves. & B. 263.

On a demise of a piece of ground on which a tenant has built, if it corresponds with the abutments, though not with the measured distance as stated in the lease, and the lessor sees the building going on without objecting to it, he will not afterwards be allowed to claim the overplus above the measured distance on the footing of an encroachment. Neale d. Leroux v. Parkin, 1 Esp. 220—Kenyon.

Where a tenant of land for life, or for years or at will, has lands of his own adjoining to that which he so holds as tenant, it is his duty to keep the boundaries between them clear and distinct, so that at the expiration of the tenancy the reversioner or remainderman may be able without difficulty to resume possession of what belongs to him; and if the person having such partial interest neglects this duty, and suffers the boundaries to be confused, so that the reversioner or remainderman cannot tell to what lands he is entitled, a court of equity will give relief by compelling the persons who have occasioned the difficulty, to make good, out of what may be considered to lie in the nature of a common fund, that portion of it which belongs to another; but in order to obtain this relief it must be shown that the tenant is in possession of the specific land originally demised. Att. Gen. v. Stephens, 6 De G., M. & G. 111; 2 Jur., N. S. 51; 23 L. J., Chanc. 888.

Inclosures and encroachments by tenants.—Where the lord of the manor has conveyed land to A., and afterwards other land to B., and it appears that a narrow strip of land passed by one or other of the conveyances, but it is doubtful by which, no presumption arises in favor of A. from the fact that the strip of land lies between a highway and land undisputedly comprised in the conveyance to A. White v. Hill, 6 Q. B. 487; 9 Jur. 129; 14 L. J., Q. B. 79.

Though it is the presumption of law that a strip of waste land between an old inclosure and a highway belongs to the owner of the old inclosure, yet that presumption may be rebutted by showing that there is other land also adjoining the strip to which it may have formerly belonged. Doe d. Harrison v. Hampson, 4 C. & B. 267; 17 L. J., C. P. 224.

When an encroachment by a tenant is on land of which his landlord is not owner, and the power to make it is derived from the tenancy, and it is occupied with and for the purposes of the demised premises, the presumption at the end of the lease is, that the land so encroached upon is part of the demised premises, not that the encroachment was made for the benefit of the landlord. Andrews v. Hales, 2 El. & Bl. 349; 17 Jur. 621; 23 L. J., Q. B. 409.

A tenant taking in land adjacent to his own by encroachment must, as between himself and the landlord, be deemed prima facie to take it as part of the demised land, but that presumption will not prevail for the landlord's benefit against third persons. Doe d. Baldeley v. Massey, 17 Q. B. 373; 15 Jur. 1031; 20 L. J., Q. B. 434.

Where, by a deed reciting that several persons had encroached on a common and inclosed land and built cottages, those parties conveyed all their interest in the land and cottages to trustees for the commoners, reserving to themselves the right to occupy the premises for the lives of themselves and their wives, paying 1s. a year to one of the trustees. A., after the execution of the deed, and while in possession of his part of the encroachment conveyed, made a fresh encroachment on the waste which adjoined the other, and he occupied the two together for thirty-eight years, but five years before his death conveyed to B. the latter encroachment for a good consideration:—Held, in ejectment by the trustees against B., that as A., when the fresh encroachment was made, was a tenant (for life at most) to the trustees, and occupied it with the land of which he was tenant, it must be assumed that he made the fresh encroachment for the aggrandizement of the estate, and that therefore it was part of the holding when the tenancy expired. Doe d. Croft v. Tilbury, 14 C. B. 304; 2 C. L. R. 317; 18 Jur. 463; 23 L. J., C. P. 57.

Where a tenant incloses land, whether adjacent to, or distant from, the demised premises, and whether the land be part of a waste, or belong to a landlord or a third person, it is a presumption of fact that the inclosure is part of the holding, unless the tenant during the term does some act disclaiming his landlord's title. Kingsmill v. Millard, 11 Exch. 313; 3 C. L. R. 1022.

The presumption of law, that where a tenant for years encroaches on land in the neighborhood of that which he holds, he does so for his landlord's, not for his own, benefit, is not rebutted by the fact, that the land taken by encroachment is separated by a brook from that which the tenant occupies; for, in order to fall within the rule, it need not be immediately adjacent; it is sufficient for it to be near. Lisburne v. Davies, 1 L. R., C. P. 259; 12 Jur., N. S. 340; 35 L. J., C. P. 193; 14 W. R. 833; 13 L. T., N. S. 795.

When a man, who has had possession of land on his own behoof for less than twenty years, becomes tenant to another of the adjoining land, he may be held to continue the occupation of the former land on his own behoof, unless there is positive evidence to the contrary. Dixon v. Baty, 1 L. R., Exch. 259; 12 Jur., N. S. 1024; 14 W. R. 836.

A tenant under a lease which contained a covenant to repair, and leave in good repair, all buildings and erections then standing or to be erected during the term, built a farmhouse partly on the land demised, and partly on the waste adjoining belonging to the lessor:—Held, that his acquiescence in the act of the tenant prevented his dispossessing him of the premises built on the waste, and that it must be assumed by implication that the covenant to repair extended to the whole building, and that the landlord was entitled, in a suit for the administration of the tenant's estate, to establish a claim for dilapidations. White v. Wakley, 26 Beav. 17; 4 Jur., N. S. 989; 28 L. J., Chanc. 77.

When a tenant takes in and incloses adjoining land during his tenancy, the presumption of law that he does it for his landlord, so that the land gained by such encroachment will have to be given up at the end of the tenancy as part of the originally demised premises, is not rebutted by the fact that the landlord expressly assented to the inclosure being made; and where such presumption exists, the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 7, does not apply until the original tenancy has ended. Whitmore v. Humphries, 41 L. J., C. P. 43; 7 L. R., C. P. 1; 25 L. T., N. S. 496; 20 W. R. 79.

Use of premises by tenant; and injury to term or to reversion.]—A dwelling-house, with grounds and ornamental water, was demised together, with the control of a plantation (which was on the opposite side of the ornamental water, and belonged to the lessor, but was not demised to the lessee), for the purpose of preventing trespassers thereon, but so as not to interfere with the persons employed by the lessor, his heirs, or assigns. The lease referred to a plan on which the plantation was represented:—Held, that on the construction of the lease as explained by the plan, the lessor was not at liberty, during the term, to destroy the plantation, and an injunction was granted to restrain him from so doing. Nicholson v. Rose, 4 De G. & J. 10.

A shop was demised to C., the landlord retaining the right of occupying the flat roof. Shortly afterwards the landlord demised an adjoining house to another person, with the right of walking and sitting on the roof of the shop. C.'s lease having determined, the landlord demised the shop to the plaintiff by the description of "all that shop as the same was late in the occupation of C." The lease of the house having afterwards determined, the landlord re-let it to the defendant, with the right to occupy the roof of the shop as a photographic studio:—Held, that the words "as the same was late in the occupation of C.," ought to be considered as inserted only for the purpose of identifying the property, and not of limiting the operation of the deed; that the lease to the plaintiff, therefore, gave him a right to the occupation of the roof, and that the erection of a photographic studio by the defendant was an unlawful act. Martyr v. Lawrence, 2 De G., J. & S. 201.

Lands partly adjoining a river were demised for 999 years, by indenture, in which the lessor granted to the lessee liberty to cut a goit or sluice out of the river at a proper and convenient distance above a weir, in the most convenient line, through closes (named) of the lessor, into a close intended for a mill-dam, part of the demised lands, and from time to time and at any times to turn the water of the river through the goit, and liberty, from time to time and at all times during the term, to view, examine, carry and lay down materials, and repair and amend the goit or sluice, when so made as aforesaid, or any of them, when and as often as need or occasion should be; making reasonable satisfaction to the lessor, his heirs and assigns, for all damage done or occasioned to the grass or herbage of the lessor, his heirs and assigns, and the lessee covenanted that he, his executors, administrators, or assigns, would make reasonable satisfaction to the lessor, his heirs and assigns, for all damages to be occasioned to the lands of the lessor by the lessee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, in exercise of any of the liberties, privileges, and powers by the indenture granted, except for the term of two years next ensuing the commencement of the rent, during which time no trespass or damage should be charged or paid for. In an action against the lessee for widening a goit on the lessor's soil to the extent of nine additional feet, he pleaded that the goit was made in due exercise of the liberty contained in the deed, but that the same not having been made of a sufficient width, and completed to a small and an insufficient width only, viz., nine feet, so that, without widening it, as after mentioned, he could not enjoy the tenements as he was entitled by the indenture so to do, he, in further due exercise of the liberty contained in the indenture, cut down the sides of the goit and widened it. Replication, that before the expiration of two years, and before the commission of the trespasses, the lessee, in due exercise of the liberty in the indenture contained, made and completed a goit, being the goit in the plea mentioned, of the width therein mentioned, and the same remained and was used by the lessee continually, from the time the same was so made and completed until the lessee, under color of the indenture, committed the trespass complained of:—Held, that the privilege given to the lessee by the deed was to make a goit once only, and that, after having completed a goit, he could not justify entering the land again and widening the goit from nine to eighteen feet, for that the power to make a goit was exhausted, and the widening was not a repairing or amending within the meaning of the indenture. Dostock v. Silebottom, 18 Q. B. 813—Exch. Chan.

By a lease in 1852, premises were demised to the postmaster-general for 1,000 years, at the rent of one shilling, and the postmaster-general covenanted that he and his successors would at all times during the term use the premises as a post-office for the district, and would not use the premises for any other purpose. Ejectment having been brought on a proviso for re-entry for the breach of the covenant, on the ground that the excise duties and licenses for dogs, men servants, horses, &c., had been received and granted on the premises by the post-office clerks:—Held, that there had been no breach of the covenant. Wadham v. Postmaster General, 6 L. R., Q. B. 644; 40 L. J., Q. B. 810; 24 L. T., N. S. 545; 19 W. R. 1082.

A lease contained a covenant that a house, to be built immediately adjoining the house in which the lessor lived, should be built fit for a private family, under a penalty of 10% yearly additional rent, unless the lessor should convert his house to any public use:—Held, that this was a continuing covenant, and bound the lessee as well to keep as to build the house as a private dwelling-house, and was broken by his converting it into a public house. Bray v. Fogarty, 4 Ir. R., Eq. 544—V. C.

Held, also, that the 10% a year additional rent was a penalty, and not liquidated damages, and that the lessor was not restricted to suing for the additional rent, but was entitled to an injunction to restrain the tenant's converting the house into a public house. Id.

The lessee built another house, not adjoining the house of the lessor, on the plot of ground demised by the lease. This second lease was converted into a public house, with the assent of the lessor:—Held, that this was not such acquiescence in the breach of the covenant as to debar the lessor from relief in respect of the other house. Id.

A landlord sued his tenant for an injury done by him to the reversion, by wrongfully removing from the land large quantities of clay; and for a conversion of the clay. The jury found that the removal of the clay had depreciated the value of the land by 150%.; and that the value of the clay itself was 150%. A verdict was entered for the former sum:—Held, on motion to increase the verdict, by adding thereto the sum of 150%., that the plaintiff was not entitled to receive the value of the clay, as well as compensation for the injury done him by the removal of the clay.

Templemore v. Moore, 15 Ir. C. L. R. 14—Q. B.

The defendant, in December, 1873, demised to the plaintiff premises to be used for refreshment rooms for twenty-one years. The plaintiff put up a stove for the purposes of his business, which made the party-wall so hot as to endanger the adjoining premises. On receiving notice from the defendant's solicitors to abate the nuisance he substituted another stove in August, 1874, but the evil continued. In October, 1874, the defendant commenced an action of ejectment against the plaintiff for breach of covenant. The plaintiff then had the premises examined, and found that in several respects the provisions of the Metropolitan Building Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 123, had been violated. The plaintiff by his bill sought to have the lease canceled, the action of ejectment stayed, and damages awarded. The defendant did not insist on the lease or seek damages for past breaches of covenant:—Held, that as the bill was filed before the Judicature Acts came into operation, and was really for damages and not for the rescission of a contract, as the defendant did not seek to enforce the contract, it could not be sustained. The plaintiff's remedy was at law and not in equity. Thorley v. Glossop, 34 L. T., N. S. 169—V. C. H.

IV. HUSBANDRY; TILLAGES, IMPROVEMENTS, CROPS AND EMBLEMENTS.

1. Contracts and Customs.

Statute.—[88 & 89 Vict. c. 92, amends the law relating to agricultural holdings in England.]

What obligations as to husbandry are implied, generally.—The mere relation of landlord and tenant is a sufficient consideration to raise an implied promise on the part of the tenant to manage a farm in a husband-like manner. Powley v. Walker, 5 T. R. 373.

But a declaration which stated that, in consideration that the defendant had become tenant to the plaintiff of a farm, the defendant undertook to make a certain quantity of fallow, and to spend 60*l.* worth of manure every year thereon, and to keep the buildings in repair, was held bad on general demurrer, because those obligations do not arise out of the bare relation of landlord and tenant. Brown v. Crump, 1 Marsh. 567.

A tenant may, by the general rules of husbandry, carry away straw or hay from the premises. Gough v. Howard, Peake's Add. Cas. 197—Lawrence.

But if a tenant of a farm, during his tenancy, removes a dung-heap, and, at the time of his so doing, digs into and removes virgin soil that is beneath it, the landlord may maintain either trespass de bonis asportatis or trover for the removal of the virgin soil. Higgon v. Mortimer, 6 C. & P. 616—Parke.

The court will not investigate the proper mode of cultivation of a farm; and the implied term of an agricultural contract, namely, to cultivate in a proper manner according to the custom of the country, is not more specific than a general covenant to keep in repair. Dunn v. Bryan, 7 Ir. R., Eq. 143—V. C.

Effect of custom of the country.—The custom of the country applies to a tenancy created by lease in writing, though the witnesses who prove the existence of the custom cannot undertake to say whether it applies where the lease is in writing. Wilkins v. Wood, 12 Jur. 583; 17 L. J., Q. B. 319.

In an action against a tenant, upon promises that he would occupy a farm in a good and husbandlike manner, according to the custom of the country; an allegation, that he had treated the estate contrary to good husbandry and the custom of the country, is proved by showing that he had treated it contrary to the prevalent course of good husbandry in that neighborhood; as by tilling half his farm at once, when no other farmer tilled more than a third, though many tilled only a fourth; and it is not sufficient to show any precise definitive custom or usage in respect to the quantity tilled. Legh v. Hewett, 4 East, 154.

In an action by a landlord against his tenant, the declaration stated that the plaintiff was possessed of a farm, whereon he had laid manure, and thereupon, in consideration that the plaintiff would give up possession of the farm to the defendant, and would permit the defendant to have the benefit of the manure, the defendant promised the plaintiff to pay him so much money as he deserved to have, according to the custom of the country. Breach, non-payment of the value of the manure. At the trial, the plaintiff gave in evidence a written agreement, which stated that the land had been manured with eight loads of manure per acre, and that the tenant agreed that the land, when given up by him, should be left in the same state, or allow a valuation to be made:—Held, that the written agreement excluded the custom of the country, as being inconsistent with it, and that there was therefore a variance between the declaration and the proof. Clarke v. Royston, 13 M. & W. 752.

A tenant agreed to cultivate land according to the rules of good husbandry and the custom of the country. He drained (by brick and tile draining) some parts of the land without the knowledge of his landlord. Upon an action in a county court for a proportion of the money thus expended, it was proved for the plaintiff to be the usage, that where a tenant had laid out money in tile draining the landlord was to repay him five-sevenths of the expense, whether it had been by the consent of the landlord or not; while, on the part of the defendant, witnesses said that such usage was applicable only to cases where the landlord had consented to the outlay. The judge thereupon directed the jury, that it was for them to determine on the evidence what was the custom:—Held, that such custom was not unreasonable, and that the direction was right. Ludlam v. Mousely, 15 Jur. 1107; 21 L. J., Q. B. 64.

The defendant's testator, being in possession of an estate, of part of which he was the owner, and another part of which consisted of crown lands leased to him for a term, expiring on the 10th of October, 1849, contracted with the plaintiff for the sale to him of the former part, and, by agreement, demised to him the crown lands for one year from the 29th of September, 1848; and the plaintiff agreed that he would abide by, perform and keep all and singular the covenants and agreements contained in the crown lease; and the testator agreed that, in case he should be able to obtain a further lease from the crown for fourteen years, he would grant to the plaintiff a lease for thirteen years, subject to the same covenants. By a memorandum subsequently signed by the plaintiff, he agreed to take the crown lands, "subject to the same rents, covenants and obligations in all respects," as were contained and provided for in the leases by which the testator held or should hold the same. The plaintiff, on taking possession, paid to the outgoing tenants, according to the custom of the country, the amount of the valuation for fallows, &c., as well of the other lands as of the crown lands. By the terms of the crown lease, the custom of the country in that respect was excluded. At the desire of the plaintiff, the crown lease was not renewed:—Held, first, that the custom of the country was not excluded by the agreement between the parties. Favell v. Gaskoin, 7 Exch. 273; 21 L. J., Exch. 85.

Held, secondly, that where such a custom exists, there is an implied contract on the part of the landlord, that, if there is no incoming tenant, he will pay the outgoing tenant according to the custom. Id.

Effect of express contracts, generally.]—Where a demise is determined by the expiration of the landlord's estate, and the tenant continues to hold under the remainderman, paying the same rent, the question whether a term contained in the former tenancy is adopted into a new contract of demise is a question of fact. If such a tenant continues to hold under the remainderman, and nothing passes between them except the payment and receipt of rent, the new landlord is not bound by a stipulation contained in the former tenancy, which is not known to him in fact, nor is according to the custom of the country. Oakley v. Monak, 4 H. & C. 251; 1 L. R., Exch. 159; 85 L. J., Exch. 87; 14 W. R. 406; 14 L. T., N. S. 20—Exch. Cham.

A stipulation in a lease that the tenant shall keep a proportion of the land demised for grass, and pay so much per acre for any deficiency below such proportion, is extinguished by severance of the reversion. Womersley v. Dally, 26 L. J., Exch. 219.

As to construction and effect of covenants, in general,—see COVENANT.

—of covenants and stipulations as to mode of husbandry.]—Where, at the sale of the stock of the defendant, the tenant of a farm, W., the tenant of an adjoining farm, bought two cows, and, by the defendant's permission, left them on the defendant's farm for some weeks, bringing provender from his own farm to feed them:—Held, that the manure made by these cows was manure made on the farm, and that the removal of it by W. was a breach of a condition of a bond whereby the defendant stipulated with his landlord that he would "put and spread all the manure and compost then collected in the middenstead, or on any other part of the farm or the meadow land, and would not sell, cart, or convey away dung, compost, or manure from the farm." Hindle v. Pollett, 6 M. & W. 529.

A tenant was bound either to consume the hay on the demised premises, or for every load of hay removed to bring two loads of manure. On quitting possession of the premises he sold part of a rick of hay then left standing to a purchaser, without mentioning his liability to bring manure. The incoming tenant refused to allow the purchaser to take away the hay until the manure was brought. After an interval of a month, during which time the hay had been considerably damaged, the latter consented that it should be removed; the purchaser, however, then refused to accept or pay for the same:—Held, that although the bringing on the manure was not a condition precedent to the carrying off the hay, as between the landlord and tenant; still, that, after the tenant had quitted the possession of the premises, the succeeding tenant had a right to refuse to permit the hay to be removed till after the manure was brought on; and that, as the vendor had not enabled the purchaser to remove the hay in the first instance, he was not entitled to recover the price. Smith v. Chance, 2 B. & A. 753.

A tenant held under the terms of an expired lease, by which it was stipulated that the tenant on quitting the farm should not sell or take away any of the manure in the fold, but should leave it to be expended on the land by the landlord or his succeeding tenant; the lease contained no stipulation as to the tenant being entitled to payment for such manure. By the custom of the country the tenant would have been bound not to sell or take away the manure in the fold, but to leave it to be expended on the land by the landlord or his succeeding tenant, and would have been entitled to be paid for the same:—Held, that, as an express stipulation had been made on the subject, the custom was excluded, and that the tenant was not entitled to be paid for the manure. Roberts v. Barker, 1 C. & M. 806; 3 Tyr. 945.

A covenant by the lessee that he would sufficiently muck and manure the land demised with two sufficient sets of muck within the last six years of the term, the last set to be laid on the premises within three years of the expiration of the term, is satisfied by the tenant's laying on two sets of muck within the three last years of the term, if he should think proper so to do. Pownall v. Moores, 5 B. & A. 416.

Where clover is sown with corn, the land is not thereby restored to a state of permanent pasture, but is still in tillage. Birch v. Stephenson, 3 Taunt. 469.

A covenant in a farming lease not to sow with more than two grain crops during four years, applies to any four years of the term however taken, and not to each successive four years from the commencement. Fleming v. Snook, 5 Beav. 250.

In an action for entering a farm, a plea, after setting out a lease from A. to the plaintiff, which contained covenants by the plaintiff that he would not, at any time during the term, sow, reap, or take from the arable lands, or any part thereof, more than two crops of any sort of corn or grain successively, but would, every third year, summer-fallow or lay the arable lands down with rye grass and clover seeds, or would plant with potatoes, or sow with peas or beans, which should be twice well hoed; stated that, during the term, the plaintiff sowed and took off from fifty acres of the arable lands more than two crops of corn successively; and that he did not nor would, every third year, summer-fallow or lay the arable lands, or any part thereof, down with rye grass, &c., nor did nor would plant with potatoes, nor sow with peas, which were twice well, or in any manner, hoed, &c.:—Held, that this covenant was two-fold; that the tenant would not take more than two crops of grain in succession, and that he would do certain other things; that the plea correctly averred a breach of the first branch of the covenant, but did not show a breach of the second, inasmuch as it did not negative the sowing with beans. Hammond v. Colls, 1 C. B. 916; 8 D. & L. 164; 14 L. J., C. P. 288.

A covenant in a farming lease provided that the tenant should, during the demise, consume and convert into manure, and spread on the premises, all the turnips and green crops of all kinds grown thereon, but that in case he should take or sell off any part thereof, which he was at liberty to do, then that he should, for every ton of vetches, or of any green crop which should be taken or sold off from the premises, bring back and spread thereon one ton of good stable manure, within three months after the selling or taking off such green crops, &c. In an action upon this covenant, the plaintiff set out the first part only, and assigned for breach, that the defendant carried away fourteen acres of turnips, without converting the same into manure and spreading the same on the premises:—Held, that the covenant was an alternative one, and that the plaintiff should have negatived the bringing back within the time limited an equivalent in manure. Richards v. Bluck, 6 C. B. 497; 6 D. & L. 325; 12 Jur. 963.

A farming agreement contained the following clause:—"No hay or straw to be sold off the land without consent of the landlord or his agent, except the value of the straw so sold off be returned in manure on the land:"—Held, per Pollock, C. B., and Parke, B., that if the tenant sold the hay or straw, he was only bound to spend upon the land as much manure as the straw would have produced; per Alderson, B., and Platt, B., that the tenant was bound to return in manure the price or market value of the straw. Lovndes v. Fountain, 11 Exch. 487; 25 L. J., Exch. 49.

A. held a farm as tenant from year to year, upon a written agreement, by which it was stipulated, that he should cultivate the farm "in the same way and manner, or as near thereto as circumstances would admit of, as Parsons (the outgoing tenant) had used and cultivated the same during his occupation thereof, and in all events, according to the rules of good husbandry used and accustomed in the neighborhood." In an action against A., alleging for breach the cutting and carrying away of ashpoles, such user not being as near to the way and manner in which Parsons used and cultivated the farm as circumstances admitted, and being contrary to the rules of good husbandry used and accustomed in the neighborhood, it appeared that the poles in question consisted of shoots growing from old stools, which were seasonable and fit for cutting about every seventeen or eighteen years; that, by invariable custom, they belonged to the landlord, in the absence of a special agreement to the contrary; that, while Parsons held the farm, these poles had never been in a fit state for cutting; that two tenants who had preceded Parsons in the occupation of the farm had cut and sold them as crops; and that A. had, while he occupied, paid the rates for the whole farm, including the wood or spinney in which the poles grew. The judge having omitted to leave to the jury upon what terms Parsons had held the farm, the court granted a new trial. Hood v. Kendall, 17 C. B. 260.

In an action by an outgoing tenant against his landlord for not paying for plowing, crops and manure, according to valuation, pursuant to a deed entered into between them, it being made conditions precedent that the tenant should deliver up possession of the farm-house and stable on a certain day, and of the farm on a later day, and should cultivate on the four-course system, according to the custom of the country:—Held, first, that the first covenant meant only the stable of the farm-house. Newson v. Smythies, 1 F. & F. 477—Martin.

Held, secondly, that the covenant to cultivate meant only so far as was universally obligatory by the custom of the country. Id.

Held, thirdly, that the landlord concurring in the valuation after the tenant had given up possession of the farm, was evidence whence the jury might infer an admission of a substantial performance of the conditions precedent. Id.

As to the import of a covenant to farm on the four-course system, see Rankin v. Lay, 2 De G., F. & J. 15.

On a covenant in a farming lease that the lessee would not sell or carry away from the demised premises any hay, straw or manure which should be grown or produced thereon, without the consent of the lessor first had and obtained, under the increased rent of 10*l.* for every ton so sold or carried away, and so in proportion for any greater or less quantity, but that the lessee would eat and consume the hay and straw by his cattle; the breach alleged was, that the lessee, without the consent of the lessor, did sell a large quantity of hay and straw grown and produced on the demised premises:—Held, that the covenant was one covenant which gave the lessee the right to sell the hay and straw, on payment of the increased rent, and that therefore the breach was not well assigned. Leigh v. Lillie, 30 L. J., Exch. 25; 9 W. R. 55; 6 H. & N. 165.

A tenant of a farm was under a written agreement to pay an additional rent of 10*l.* for every ton, or any less quantity, of "hay, straw or other dry fodder," of the growth of the premises, which should be sold off or taken away, or removed therefrom. At the trial of an action against him to recover damages for a breach of this covenant, it was proved that he had sold and removed a quantity, something less than a ton, of hay, which he alleged was very bad, and utterly unfit to be eaten by cattle. The jury found that the hay so sold was "not fit food for cattle," and thereupon the verdict was entered for the landlord, with leave to move:—Held, that the verdict was rightly entered. What the tenant removed was hay, and came within the meaning of the covenant, although it was hay of very inferior quality, and unfit for food. Fielden v. Tattersall, 7 L. T., N. S. 718—Exch.

A farm lease contained a covenant by the lessee that "he should not nor would, during the last year of the term thereby granted, sell or remove from the said farm and lands any of the hay, straw and fodder which should arise and grow on the said farm and lands:"

—Held, that the prohibition was not restricted to hay, straw and fodder which arose and grew on the farm in the last year of the term, but extended to that which had arisen and grown at any time during the term. Gale v. Bates, 3 H. & C. 84; 10 Jur., N. S. 734; 33 L. J., Exch. 235; 12 W. R. 715; 10 L. T., N. S. 304.

An agreement for an agricultural lease contained a stipulation that the tenant should perform each year for the landlord, at the rate of one day's steam work with two horses and one proper person for every 50*l.* of rent, when required (except at hay and corn harvest), without being paid for the same. In ejectment for a forfeiture:—Held, that the work thus to be performed meant any work for which teams are generally used, and therefore included drawing coals to the palace of the landlord. Marlborough v. Osborn, 5 B. & S. 67; 33 L. J., Q. B. 148; 12 W. R. 418; 10 L. T., N. S. 28.

Held, also, that the tenant was not bound to supply a cart or other vehicle for the purpose of the work. Id.

An agricultural lease contained a covenant on the part of a lessor, that he would "drain with proper drain-tiles, one rod apart, ten acres of the lands not in rye-grass, at his cost, except the carriage of the drain-pipes, which is to be borne and paid by the lessee, and will drain the remainder of the lands demised, in manner aforesaid, upon being paid a further yearly rent of 5*l.* for every 100*l.* so expended:"—Held, that the words "in manner aforesaid" referred only to the mode of performing the work, viz., placing the drain-tiles one rod apart, and consequently that the tenant was not chargeable with the expense of carriage of the drain-pipes beyond the first ten acres. Beer v. Santer, 10 C. B., N. S. 435.

By a lease empowering the lessee to build, he covenanted to cultivate the part of the demised land, on which no buildings should be erected, in a husbandlike manner, and there was a clause of forfeiture for breach of covenant. The lessee built a vitriol factory on the land, with the knowledge of the lessor, but being obliged to discontinue the manufacture by an indictment, he pulled down the manufactory, and paid part of the proceeds of the building materials to the lessor, in pursuance of an agreement between them:—Held, that the lessor had not in equity precluded himself from entering for the non-cultivation of the land after the manufactory was pulled down, and an injunction to restrain an ejectment was dissolved. Hills v. Rowland, 4 De G., M. & G. 430; 22 L. J., Chanc. 964.

The 56 Geo. 3, c. 50, s. 11, which makes a purchaser of farming stock bound by the tenant's covenant to consume such stock on the premises, does not enable a landlord to sell his tenant's hay which he has distrained for rent, otherwise than for the best price, as required by 2 Will. & M. sess. 2, c. 5; and therefore he cannot sell the same under a condition that it shall be consumed on the premises, if by reason thereof he fails to obtain the best price, although the tenant is under a covenant to so use it on the premises. Hawkins v. Waltrond, 45 L. J., C. P. Div. 772; 1 L. R., C. P. Div. 280; 24 W. R. 824; 35 L. T., N. S. 210.

A lease of a plot of moorland was granted to a lessee, who covenanted to bring it into cultivation within five years from the date of the lease, according to the most approved method of husbandry pursued in the neighborhood of the premises, and to keep it in good farming and husbandrylike condition. The former covenant was not performed by the lessee, and thirty years afterwards his assignee converted the land into a place of amusement, and constructed a running path thereon, and charged for admission thereto. The lessor filled a bill to have the covenants of the lease performed, and for an injunction to restrain the present holder of the lease from using the land as a place of public amusement:—Held, that the land not having been brought into cultivation under the first covenant, there could have been no breach of the second to keep it in cultivation. Musgrave v. Horner, 31 L. T., N. S. 632—R.

Rights in respect of tillages and improvements.—Where a farm was taken for fourteen years, and the tenant was to pay a given sum for tillages and improvements done before he entered, and to receive the value of the tillages and improvements which he should leave on the farm, according to a valuation to be made at his quitting; and the tenant, in the first year of the tenancy, said that he would leave and his landlord said he might; but no new bargain was made as to his tillages and improvements:—Held, that he was not entitled to the value of the tillages and improvements which he left on quitting. Whittaker v. Barker, 1 C. & M. 113; 3 Tyr. 135.

A custom for the tenant of a farm in a particular district to provide work and labor, tillage, sowing, and all materials for the same, in his away-going year, and for the landlord to make him a reasonable compensation for the same, is valid in law, notwithstanding the farm is held under a written agreement, provided such agreement does not, in express terms, exclude the custom. Senior v. Armytage, Holt, 197—Thompson.

A custom of a country, by which the tenant of a farm, cultivating it according to the course of good husbandry, is entitled, on quitting, to receive from the landlord or incoming tenant a reasonable allowance for seeds and labor bestowed on the arable land in the last year of the tenancy, and is bound to leave the manure for the landlord, if he will purchase it, is not excluded by a stipulation in the lease under which he holds, that he will consume three-fourths of the hay and straw on the farm, and spread the manure arising therefrom, and leave such of it as shall not be so spread on the land for the use of the landlord, on receiving a reasonable price for it. Hutton v. Warren, 1 M. & W. 466; 2 Gale, 71.

A usage for the off-going tenant of a farm in a particular district to bestow his work, labor, and expense in manuring, tilling, fallowing and sowing, according to the course of husbandry, and for the landlord to pay him a reasonable compensation in respect thereof, is a valid and reasonable usage. Dalby v. Hirst, 3 Moore, 536; 1 B. & B. 224.

A tenant held under a lease, which contained a covenant that he should cultivate the farm according to the custom of the country, and should with the last wheat crop lay down the same with 20 lbs. weight of good clover seed per acre, and continue the same so laid down for feeding, not to exceed three grounds belonging to the farm; and should during all the term consume with stock in the farm all the hay, straw and clover grown thereon; which manure should be used on the farm; and that the lessor and his assignees would allow the lessee to occupy half the rooms in the house, and the barn, yards and granary, until Midsummer-day after the expiration of the term, if necessary, to finish the cropping of the lessee grown on the premises thereby demised. Under the custom of the country the tenant would have been entitled to be paid for the straw and manure on leaving:—Held, that the covenant, containing no provisions as to straw unconsumed on quitting, was not inconsistent with the custom of the country, and therefore the tenant was entitled to be paid for his straw. Muncay v. Dennis, 1 H. & N. 216; 26 L. J., Exch. 66.

An outgoing tenant, administratrix of a late tenant, having (after having had the farm for above a year) assigned to an incoming tenant, in consideration of a debt due to him, all her goods and effects, and all stock, corn, grain on the farm, and all her estate and interest thereon and therein:—Held, that this comprised tenant right or tillages on the farm. Cary v. Cary, 10 W. R. 669—Exch.

A tenant covenanted with his landlord to deliver up possession of a farm and land on a day named, and that in the meantime he would cultivate the land according to the custom of the country, and that upon the delivery up of the land he would surrender and yield up a certain agreement to be canceled, and all his unexpired term and interest in the farm, and would afterwards, on request, execute any further deed for effectually surrendering the term; and the landlord covenanted that if the tenant did on the day named deliver up possession, and did and should in the meantime cultivate the land according to the custom of the country, and also did and should well and truly observe, perform, and keep all and singular other the covenants and agreements thereinbefore contained, and on his part to be performed, he, the landlord, would, upon the delivery up of possession of the land on the day specified, so cultivated as aforesaid, and on such performance of such other covenants as aforesaid, pay the tenant for the manure, tillages, hay, clover and all other things then upon the land as were usually paid for between an outgoing and incoming tenant:—Held, that the delivery up of the agreement was not a condition precedent to payment for the manure, &c. Newson v. Smythies, 4 H. & N. 840; 28 L. J. Exch. 97.

Prima facie the landlord is bound to pay the outgoing tenant for tillages, and the mere fact of the incoming tenant entering upon the land does not render him liable to do so; but it is a question of fact whether the contract between the outgoing tenant and the landlord subsists, or a new contract has been entered into with the incoming tenant. Cold v. Brown, 15 L. T., N. S. 536—C. P.

S. was tenant of a farm, with a right to the use of a part of the premises without payment until the 25th of March next after the expiration of the term, "for threshing and spending the last year's crop;" and by the custom of the country he was entitled, at the expiration of the term, to be paid by the landlord or the incoming tenant for tillages. He gave up the farm to G., as incoming tenant, at Michaelmas, 1870, and before so doing valuers were mutually appointed to value the tillages as between them, with the consent of the landlord, and the valuers duly made and signed their valuation. After G. had entered into possession, but before the 25th of March, 1871, the landlord gave him notice that rent was due from S., and required him to pay the amount of the valuation, which was less than the rent due, to him the landlord, and not to S.; and this G. did on receiving an indemnity from the landlord, but without S.'s consent. S. having sued G. for the value of the tillages, was nonsuited:—Held, that the nonsuit was right, for that the contract to be implied between the incoming and outgoing tenant was subject to the right of the landlord to be paid the arrears of rent out of the valuation. Stafford v. Gardner, 7 L. R., C. P. 242; 20 W. R. 299; 25 L. T., N. S. 876.

S., on quitting the farm at Michaelmas, 1870, gave up to G., and he exercised it, the right which S. had under the lease of converting the straw on the farm (between Michaelmas, 1870, and the 25th of March, 1871), into manure with his cattle. In so converting it the cattle ate a portion of the straw, calculated to be one third of the bulk, and which the valuers in this case valued as browse at 33*l.*:—Held, that S. was entitled to recover this sum from G. Ib.

Right to away-going crops; emblements.]

—When the tenancy of a farm expires, the tenant must give up the possession of the whole of it to the landlord, crops and everything else, unless there is a custom of the country for the tenant to hold over any part, or to take any of the crops; and the proof of the custom lies on the tenant. Caldecott v. Smythies, 7 C. & P. 808—Parke.

If the custom of the country is for an outgoing tenant, for what is called his odd mark, to crop one-third of the arable in wheat, and to reap that wheat after the tenancy has expired, and the tenant so crops more than the proper one-third, the landlord will be entitled to have all that which was last sown, and which is above one-third, unless it is shown that the tenant has a lien upon it for the sowing and the seed. Ib.

Where by the custom of the country as between outgoing and incoming farm tenants, the former was entitled to an away-going share of the crop of wheat sown by him in the last year of his tenancy: and he cut the whole of such crop, and kept the fences of the field in repair until the whole crop was cut and carried away:—Held, that the outgoing tenant had the possession in law of the field until the crop was carried away; and therefore that his vendee of his share of the crop had a good defense to an action by the new tenant for breaking and entering the close in which the crop grew, for the purpose of carrying away his share. Griffiths v. Puleston, 13 M. & W. 358; 14 L. J., Exch. 33.

If a lease contains no stipulations as to the mode of quitting, the off-going tenant is entitled to his away-going crop, according to the custom of the country, even though the terms of holding may be inconsistent with such a custom. Holding v. Pigott, 7 Bing. 465; 5 M. & P. 427.

A tenant held a farm under a lease, containing a condition that the wheat land should be summer fallowed and well manured for the crop. By the custom of the country, a tenant who had sown his land with wheat after a crop of turnips at the wheat-seediness next before the expiration of his tenancy was entitled to cut and carry away one-half of the wheat so sown:—Held, that, as the condition in the lease was confined to the period of holding the farm, and not to the time of quitting, the tenant was entitled to the benefit of the custom, giving him a right to a proportion of the wheat sown by him after turnips, leaving the landlord to his remedy for breach of covenant. Ib.

A tenant, whose tenancy is determined after Lady-day, by an agreement which is silent as to away-going crops, is not entitled to such crops under a custom which gives to the tenant such crops upon a regular expiration of a Lady-day tenancy. Thorpe v. Eyre, 8 N. & M. 214; 1 A. & E. 926.

A custom that tenants, whether by parol or deed, shall have the away-going crop after the expiration of their terms, is good. Wiglesworth v. Dalison, 1 Dougl. 201.

So, a custom that a tenant may leave his away-going crop in the barn of the farm, after he has quitted the premises, is good. Benson v. Delahay, 1 H. Bl. 5. S. P., Lewis v. Harris, 1 H. Bl. 7, n.

The plaintiff, who was the grandson of the deceased tenant of a farm, remained in possession after his grandfather's death. A bargain was made between the plaintiff and M., an incoming tenant, who had agreed to take the farm from the landlord, by which bargain M. was to give the plaintiff 30*l.* for the crops, manure, &c., to be secured by the promissory note of M. and a surety, which note was to be held by D., and was to be by D. attested and handed over to the plaintiff, if the plaintiff delivered up the possession of the lands on the following morning, but he was to remain in possession of the house for a few weeks at a rent of 1*s.* a week, to be paid to M. The note was accordingly drawn, with a clause of attestation, and was signed by M. and his surety, and handed to D. The next morning upon M. and D. requesting the plaintiff to give up the possession, he refused to give up the place; but there was evidence that, on that day, M.'s cattle were on the lands, and that the plaintiff's were not. The plaintiff kept possession of the house for three weeks, when he was turned out by a constable. The note was never attested, and it was not proved how the plaintiff got it into his possession:—Held, in an action by the plaintiff against the makers of the note, that a jury was warranted in saying that the bargain had been complied with on the part of the plaintiff. Eans v. Morgan, 2 C. & J. 453.

In a lease of a farm of 600 acres a tenant bound himself by a covenant never to have more than one-half of the arable land in white crop during the same season, nor to take two white crops off the same field without a green or black crop intervening, and to take only one black crop, i. e., beans, potatoes, &c., between grass and grass; and, at the end of the lease, to leave the turnip or fallow breaks once plowed for the incoming tenant:—Held, that the words "turnip or fallow breaks" meant the land which would, in the natural course of good husbandry, be plowed and left fallow for the purpose of being planted with turnips, and that the tenant was entitled, over and above the way-going cereal crop on the moiety of the lands, to have an away-going black crop in respect of 100 acres more. Hunter v. Miller, 9 L. T., N. S. 159—H. L.

A tenant for a term determinable upon a life, sowed the land in spring, first with barley, and soon after with clover. The life expired in the following summer. In the autumn the tenant mowed the barley, together with a little of the clover plant which had sprung up. The clover so taken made the barley-straw more valuable, by being mixed with it; but the increase of the value did not compensate for the expense of cultivating the clover, and a farmer would not be repaid such expense in the autumn of the year in which it was sown. The reversioner came into possession in the winter, and took two crops of the same clover after more than a year had elapsed from the sowing:—Held, that the tenant was not entitled to emblements of either of these two crops; first, because emblements can be claimed only in a crop of a species which ordinarily repays the labor by which it is produced within the year in which that labor is bestowed; and, secondly, because even if the tenant was entitled to one crop of the vegetable growing at the time of the cessor of his interest, this had been already taken by him at the time of cutting the barley. Graves v. Weld, 5 B. & Ad. 105; 2 N. & M. 725.

A lease of lands contained a condition, "that if the lessee should commit an act of bankruptcy whereon a commission should issue, and he should be declared a bankrupt, or if he should become insolvent, or incur any debt upon which any judgment should be signed, entered up, or given against him, and on which any writ of fieri facias, or any other writ of execution, should issue, it should be lawful for the lessor to re-enter into the premises, and the same again to have, re-possess, and enjoy, as in his former estate." The tenant gave a warrant of attorney, upon which judgment was entered up and his goods taken in execution and sold, and a commission of bankruptcy afterwards issued against him. The lessor entered for the forfeiture:—Held, that he was entitled to the emblements. Davis v. Eytton, 4 M. & P. 820; 7 Bing. 154.

A devisee of real estate is entitled to emblements growing at the time of the death of the deviser, unless the language of the devise clearly shows the intention of the deviser that they should go to some other person. Cooper v. Woolfitt, 2 H. & N. 122; 8 Jur., N. S. 870; 26 L. J., Exch. 810.

To an action for an assault, the defendant pleaded a justification in defense of the possession of a dwelling-house. The plaintiff new assigned that the assault was committed, not in a dwelling-house, but on a bridge, and in certain yards and fields, parcel of a farm. The plea to the new assignment stated that W. was possessed of the dwelling-house, and also of the bridge, yards and fields which belonged and were adjacent to the dwelling-house, and justified the trespass in defense of the possession of the house, bridge, yards, and fields, and averred that the defendant removed the plaintiff from the bridge, yards and fields, and took him by the nearest way to a public highway, near to the dwelling-house, bridge, yards and fields. The replication alleged the seizin of W. in the farm, a demise of it by him to J. as tenant from year to year, the entry of J., an assignment by J. to B. to secure a debt of the present and future growing crops on the farm, with a power to B. in default of payment to take possession. It then alleged a default by J., that W. at the time of the default was in possession of the farm on which there then were growing crops, which belonged to J. after the date of the assignment; that the plaintiff as servant of B. took possession, and continued in possession of the growing crops for a reasonable time, and that before a reasonable time elapsed the defendant removed him, and dragged him from the dwelling-house across the bridge, yards and fields to the highway:—Held, that as the replication stood upon the right of a person, claiming under a tenant from year to year, to remain on the premises, and retain possession of the crops, after the landlord had resumed possession, it should have stated how the tenancy came to an end; that there was no presumption as to a determination by the landlord rather than by the tenant; nor, supposing that B. was entitled to them after his interest as tenant in the premises had determined, that they were ripe or fit for harvesting, or that they needed any cultivation, for which it was necessary that the plaintiff should continue in possession. Hayling v. Okey, 8 Exch. 531; 17 Jur. 325; 23 L. J., Exch. 130—Exch. Cham.

The plaintiff occupied, as yearly tenant of A., who was tenant for life, a small laborer's cottage, with an acre of land, which was partly cultivated as a garden and partly sown with corn or planted with potatoes. The defendant became owner of the cottage and land on the death of A., and distrained for the proportion of rent due from the plaintiff in respect of such cottage and land between A.'s death and the expiration of the then current year of the plaintiff's tenancy, up to which time the plaintiff remained in occupation:—Held, that the plaintiff was tenant of lands in respect of which emblements might be claimed within 14 & 15 Vict. c. 25, s. 1, and that the defendant was therefore entitled to recover such proportion of rent by distress. Haines v. Welch, 38 L. J., C. P. 118; 17 W. R. 163.

When the herd of an evicted tenant held as part of his wages, and had sown with oats and potatoes, three roods of the evicted farm, which contained fifty-eight acres, the evicted tenant was entitled to avail himself of these crops as emblements. Kenna v. Nugent, 7 Ir. R., C. L. 464—Exch. Cham.

If the landlord meant to contend that the claim to emblements was merely colorable, or that the herd held as tenant and not as servant, he ought at the trial to have required those questions to be submitted to the jury. Id.

2. Valuation; and Recovery of Value.

How valuation is made, and its effect.—Upon a contract for the sale of a farm it was, by a letter signed by both parties, referred to a valuer to ascertain and certify the amount of the following particulars: first, the seed, wheat and vetches sown on the several fields of A.'s late farm at Bampton previous to the 25th of December, 1847 (the day possession was given to the purchaser); secondly, the labor of plowing and sowing the same; thirdly, the quantity and cost price at the kiln of the lime carried on the farm since Michaelmas, 1847, but not the cost of carriage; and fourthly, the value of the hay left on the farm at Christmas, 1847. "All the above are to be paid for by B. We mutually agree to abide by your valuation." The valuer having allowed a sum for three plowings of a portion of the land, another sum for lime, and another sum for working out and burning stroyle, the court declined to interfere. Branscombe v. Rowcliffe, 6 C. B. 523.

A person entered upon the occupation of a farm under a written agreement, by which he agreed "to pay 5*l.* for every load of fodder, straw, haum, dung, or turnips, which should be sold or carried off the premises, and the same sum for every load of hay or wheat straw sold or carried off the premises, for which there should not be two loads of good dung or other manure (at the option of the landlord) to be spent on the premises;" and also "to purchase all the hay, sainfoin, and tares now in the yard; also, all the dung and manure now on the premises; also all the straw from the crops now stacked or about to be stacked in the yard, paying a fair price for the same, to be ascertained by valuers on both sides." And the landlord engaged, on the tenant's quitting the farm, to purchase all hay, sainfoin, and tares in the yard, the produce of the farm; also all straw from the crops of the previous harvest that might be on the premises, paying a fair price for the same, to be ascertained by valuers on both sides:—Held, that the tenant, not being by the terms of the agreement entitled to be paid for the manure at the expiration of his tenancy, was only entitled to be paid for the straw at a fodder price, viz., one-half the market price. Clarke v. Westrope, 18 C. B. 785; 25 L. J., C. P. 287.

Held, also, that the incoming tenant having consumed the straw, and the valuers named by the parties not having agreed upon the valuation, or appointed an umpire, the tenant was entitled to maintain an action for it, as upon a quantum meruit. Id.

A. held a farm of B., subject to the following covenants contained in a draft lease under which the former tenant had held:—First, to house the produce on the farm, and thresh, feed and fodder the same thereon, and not to sell or dispose of any part thereof, except as after mentioned. Secondly, that A. should be at liberty to sell hay and wheat straw, except that of the last year's produce, bringing back for every load of hay or straw two loads of manure; and thirdly, that A. should, on the determination of the tenancy, leave all the hay, straw and manure arising during the last year of the tenancy, for the use of B. or the incoming tenant, being paid for the hay and wheat straw at a fair valuation, these latter words "fair valuation" being substituted in the draft lease for "consuming price." In an action by A. against B. to recover the value of hay and wheat straw left by the former tenant at the expiration of his tenancy, it appeared that a valuation had been made by an umpire, who was the only witness called at the trial, and who stated that he had valued not at a "consuming price" nor a "market price," but at a "fair valuation," and the jury returned a verdict in accordance with his valuation:—Held, that there was nothing from which the court could see that the valuation had been made upon an erroneous principle, and what was a "fair valuation" being a question, there was no ground for interfering with the verdict. Cumberland v. Boues or Glamis, 15 C. B. 848; 1 Jur., N. S. 236; 34 L. J., C. P. 46.

Held, also, that the valuation of the umpire was not invalidated by the circumstance of his having altered it after he had delivered it, by striking out an item which ought not to have been included therein. Id.

A usage for arbitrators appointed to determine as between outgoing and incoming tenants of a farm, the value of the away-going crop and the deductions for want of repairs of the farm buildings and fences, to make their award, on inspection of the crops and premises, without notice to the parties and without evidence, may be good; but no usage can justify arbitrators in hearing one party and his witnesses only in the absence of and without notice to the other party. Osmond v. Grey, 24 L. J., Q. B. 69—B. C.—Erlc.

A person who has taken a farm under a person in possession, and claiming as devisee under a will, and has paid for the manure, under a valuation, according to the custom, is liable for the value to the person who afterwards takes out letters of administration, the will having turned out to be invalid. Searson v. Robinson, 2 F. & F. 351—Williams.

By an agreement made between the plaintiff and defendant, the defendant sold to plaintiff all his interest in a farm, together with the growing crops and those already harvested, the covenants and general valuation of the farm and all the stock, both live and dead; and it was agreed between them that all the aforesaid matters and things should become a subject of valuation by two indifferent persons, one to be chosen by each party, and in the event of their not agreeing, then by their referee or umpire, whose decision should be final and binding on both parties. The valuers appointed under the agreement made a valuation at a gross sum, not specifying the value of undivided items, and the plaintiff gave a promissory note for the amount, and took possession of the farm and stock. In a month or so afterwards the plaintiff re-sold the farm, and before giving up possession to the purchaser, discovered that a number of items had been included in the valuation, that, according to the custom of the country, did not form a subject of valuation between an incoming and an outgoing tenant. He did not, however, claim to have the matter re-opened, but duly paid the amount of the promissory note to the defendant when it afterwards became due. He subsequently brought an action against him to recover the whole of the money paid by him as money received to his use, without previously giving any notice of the circumstances to the defendant, or claiming re-payment from him:—Held, that he could not recover the whole or any part of the money which he had paid. Freeman v. Jeffries, 38 L. J., Exch. 116; 4 L. R., Exch. 189; 20 L. T., N. S. 532.

Right of action for value.—Where the outgoing tenant has covenanted with his landlord to leave the manure made by him on the farm, and sell it to the incoming tenant at a valuation, to be made by certain persons, the effect of such covenant is to give the outgoing tenant a right of on-stand for his manure upon the farm; and the possession of and property in it remain in him in the meantime; and, therefore, if the incoming tenant removes and uses it before such valuation, he is answerable to the outgoing tenant in trespass. Beaty v. Gibbons, 16 East, 116.

Where an agreement between an outgoing and an incoming tenant was, that the latter should buy the hay, &c., of the former upon the farm, and that the former should allow to the latter the expense of repairing the gates and fences of the farm, and that the value of the hay, &c., and of repairs, should be settled by third persons:—Held, that the balance settled to be due to the outgoing tenant, for his hay, &c., after deducting the value of the repairs, might be recovered by him in a count for goods sold and delivered, after having failed upon his count on the special agreement, for want of including in it that part of the agreement which related to the valuation of the repairs. Leeds v. Burrows, 12 East, 1.

Prima facie the landlord is bound to pay the outgoing tenant for tillages, and the mere fact of the incoming tenant entering upon the land does not render him liable to do so; but it is a question of fact whether the contract between the outgoing tenant and the landlord subsists, or a new contract has been entered into with the incoming tenant. Codd v. Brown, 15 L. T., N. S. 536—O. P.

The outgoing tenant's remedy for tenant right is against the landlord, and not against the incoming tenant, unless by virtue of an agreement between the parties to that effect. The outgoing tenant is entitled to recover the amount of the tenant right from the landlord upon a quantum meruit; and the ascertainment of the amount by a valuation is not a condition precedent to his right to sue when it is not made such by the terms of the lease. Sucksmith v. Wilson, 4 F. & F. 1083—Martin.

The plaintiff, at Lady-day, 1821, gave up possession of a farm to the defendant, having previously sown forty acres of it with wheat. At a meeting in the previous month, the plaintiff asked the defendant if he would take the wheat at 200*l.*, saying that if he would not, he should not have the farm. The defendant said he would take the wheat, and being asked to whom the dead stock should be valued, replied "To me." The defendant afterwards undertook to pay for the wheat and dead stock on a specified day, and did pay 75*l.* on account generally, and eventually had possession of the farm, the wheat, and the dead stock:—Held, that the contract for the dead stock being distinct from the contract for the sale of the wheat, or the giving up of the farm, the plaintiff might recover for that amount. Mayfield v. Hadsley, 5 D. & R. 224; 3 B. & C. 357.

Assignees of the reversion may be sued by an outgoing tenant on a contract or custom of the country, by which he is entitled to receive, on the termination of his tenancy by notice from the landlord, reasonable allowance for the value of labor bestowed on the land, and the benefit of which he loses by such termination of his tenancy, although he has paid all the rent to the original landlord and received notice from him, the assignees having renewed the notice after the conveyance to them, and possession having been given to them. Womersley v. Dally, 26 L. J., Exch. 219.

The defendant demised a farm for a term of fourteen years; the lease contained a covenant by the lessees not to assign without license, with a proviso for re-entry, and a covenant by the lessor at the expiration of the tenancy to pay for certain things at a valuation. At the expiration of the term, the lessees continued tenants from year to year on the terms of the original lease. They afterwards, by deed, assigned their interest in the premises, with their right to be paid for the things at a valuation, to the plaintiff. He entered into the occupation of the premises, but never paid rent; nor did the defendant ever recognize him as his tenant. The defendant gave the lessees the proper six months' notice to quit, and the plaintiff gave the defendant a similar notice:—Held, that the plaintiff could not maintain an action against the defendant for the amount of the things at a valuation, on the ground (per Mellor and Lush, JJ.), that no new tenancy had been created between them, and that the bare assignment of the parol tenancy did not pass to the assignee a right of action upon the special stipulation; and per Shee, J., on the ground that as the lessees had no power to assign without license, they could not transfer any interest in the premises to the plaintiff. Elliot v. Johnson, 2 L. R., Q. B. 120; 8 B. & S. 38; 36 L. J., Q. B. 41.

Pleadings and evidence in actions.]—A breach of a covenant to cultivate land according to the custom of the country, is sufficiently averred by stating that the tenant did not so cultivate, without specifying instances. Martyn v. Clue, 18 Q. B. 661; 22 L. J., Q. B. 147.

A declaration stated that the defendant covenanted with the plaintiff not to sell or carry away from the premises any manure, made on the premises, without his consent, under the increased rent of 10*l.* for every ton so given, sold or carried away; and also covenanted that he would pay all the increased rent. Breach, that he sold a large quantity of manure made on the premises, to wit, 160 tons, and did allow the same to be carried away from the premises; and the plaintiff claims 2,000*l.* Plea, that the defendant brought upon the premises a quantity of manure, larger and better in quality than that carried away:—Held, first, that the plea was bad. Leph v. Lillie, 6 H. & N. 165; 30 L. J., Exch. 23.

Held, secondly, that the declaration was bad for not alleging that the increased rent was due or that it was unpaid. Id.

To a declaration, charging the defendant, as tenant to the plaintiff, with carrying away, in an untenanted manner and contrary to the custom of the country, several loads of hay off the farm, without bringing back and spending on the premises an equal number of loads of dung, a plea, that there was not any such custom of the country, is good. Hartley v. Burkitt, 4 Bing. N. C. 687; 6 Scott, 497; 1 Arn. 258; 2 Jur. 642.

A count averring that the defendant was tenant to three plaintiffs, and had agreed to farm the lands in a husbandlike manner, and it appearing that the demise was only by two, and that the agreement was also to keep the land constantly in grass:—Held, variances. Saunderson v. Griffiths, 8 D. & R. 643; 5 B. & C. 909.

In an action against a tenant upon promises to cultivate a farm according to the course of good husbandry, and the custom of the country, if the declaration sets out the custom, and the defendant traverses it, the plaintiff must prove it as alleged. Angerstein v. Hindson, 1 C., M. & R. 789; 5 Tyr. 583; 1 Gale, 8.

A declaration stated that the defendants were tenants to the plaintiff of a farm, and by reason thereof it was their duty, as such tenants, to manage and cultivate the farm in a husbandlike manner, according to the custom of the country; and assigned breaches in over-cropping, &c. Plea, that the defendants were not, nor was either of them, tenants to the plaintiff of the messuage, &c., as alleged:—Held, this plea only put in issue the fact of the tenancy, and not the holding subject to a duty to cultivate according to the custom of the country, and that the defendants could not therefore object, on this record, that a lease, under which the land had been originally taken, was not produced by the plaintiff, in order to show that it did not exclude the custom. Hallifax v. Chambers, 4 M. & W. 662; 7 D. P. C. 342; 1 H. & H. 417.

On a contract between outgoing and incoming tenant referring to the lease, the lease must be put in. Tanner v. Washburne, 1 F. & F. 380—Willes.

The rule of law, as to importing into the terms of a tenancy "the custom of the country," does not admit of evidence of the usage of a particular estate, or the property of a particular person, however extensive it may be, it not being shown that the tenant was aware of it. Womersley v. Dally, 26 L. J., Exch. 219.

A count stated that the defendant had become tenant to the plaintiff on the terms and stipulations that the rent should be payable half-yearly, that the defendant "should not sell any straw or manure grown or produced upon the farm, without the written license of the plaintiff, under certain penalties, and that the penalties should be considered as additional rent, and should be recoverable by distress or otherwise as rent." Averments, that, in consideration thereof, the defendant promised the plaintiff to pay all such penalties as he might be liable to pay the plaintiff according to the stipulations; and that the defendant, without license, sold straw on the premises during his tenancy. Breach, non-payment of penalties in respect thereof:—Held, by Lord Campbell, C. J., and Patteson, J., that the promise to observe the terms, one of which was payment of penalties, was supported by the bygone consideration of having become tenant on these terms, and that the stipulation must be construed to be not at any time to sell straw grown during the tenancy: Erle, J., dissentiente, holding that the stipulation should be construed to be, not during the tenancy to sell straw, &c., grown during the tenancy. Massey v. Goodall, 17 Q. B. 810; 15 Jur. 991; 20 L. J., Q. B. 526.

A declaration stated, that in consideration that the plaintiff had become tenant to the defendant of a farm, upon the terms that if the plaintiff should receive from the defendant notice to quit, and should have made expensive improvements upon the farm, for which the subsequent crops should not have compensated the plaintiff, the farm should, on the determination of the tenancy, be looked over by two persons, one to be appointed by each party, and that the persons appointed should determine to what compensation the plaintiff should be entitled; and that the defendant promised the plaintiff that if the tenancy should be determined, and the plaintiff should have made improvements for which he should not have been compensated, the defendant would, at the plaintiff's request, appoint a person for such purposes. Averment, that the tenancy was determined by the defendant; that the plaintiff had made improvements for which he had not been compensated; that the plaintiff, after the determination of the tenancy, appointed D. to determine the compensation, and D. was ready to act, of which the defendant had notice, and was then requested by the plaintiff to appoint some person on his behalf:—Held, that the declaration was bad, as stating a promise which did not legally arise from an executed consideration, and also on the ground that there was no allegation that the plaintiff had requested the defendant to appoint a valuer before the commencement of the suit. Lattimore v. Garrard, 1 Exch. 809.

Declaration, that the defendant became tenant to the plaintiffs upon the terms that the defendant would keep such number only of hares and rabbits as would do no injury to the trees of the plaintiffs, or to the crops of their tenants; and that in case he should keep such a number of hares and rabbits as should injure the trees or crops, he would pay to the plaintiffs or their tenants a fair and reasonable compensation for such injury. Breach, that he did keep such a number of hares and rabbits as did injury to such trees and crops, and had not paid a fair and reasonable or any compensation. Plea, that one of the terms of the tenancy was that in case any such injury should be done "the defendant would pay a fair and reasonable compensation for the same, the amount of such compensation, in case of difference, to be referred" to arbitration, and that a difference arose as to the amount of compensation, but no arbitrator had been appointed nor any award made:—Held, that the plea was bad, for the stipulation as to compensation and reference, though in the form of one sentence, contained in reality two covenants, and such covenants were distinct and independent. Dawson v. O'Ho Fitzgerald, 45 L. J., Exch. 893; 1 L. R., Exch. Div. 257; 24 W. R. 773; 35 L. T., N. S. 220—C. A.; reversing the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, 43 L. J., Exch. 19; 9 L. R., Exch. 7.

V. REPAIRS.

1. Contracts to make.

Duty to make repairs, generally; implied contracts.—There is no implied contract to use demised premises in a tenant-like manner, where the tenant has expressly contracted to repair. Standen v. Christmas, 10 Q. B. 135; 11 Jur. 694; 16 L. J., Q. B. 265.

A. agreed to let, and B. to take, a house at a yearly rent, payable quarterly, and at the end of the agreement was the following stipulation: "A. agrees to take the fixtures at the expiration of B.'s tenancy, and to allow the price at which they may be valued, provided they are in as good condition then as they are now, and B. agrees to leave the premises in the same state as they now are." Though not stated in the agreement, the house was at the time of the agreement in the occupation of C. as tenant to A., who afterwards quitted:—Held, that notwithstanding the existence of express terms of agreement, an implied contract arose on the part of B. to use the premises in a tenant-like manner, and that the agreement was properly described as an agreement to leave the premises, at the expiration of the tenancy, in the same state as they were in at the commencement of the tenancy, and not at the date of the agreement. White v. Nicholson, 4 Scott, N. R. 707; 4 M. & G. 95.

A landlord has no right to enter his tenant's premises to repair them, unless there was some stipulation at the time of the letting to that effect. Barker v. Barker, 3 C. & P. 557—Best.

A. demised to B. for a term of years two messuages; the lease contained a covenant by B., that he would, during the term, keep the premises in repair, and leave them, at the end of the term, in good repair, and in the same state as they were in at the beginning. At the end of the term the messuages were out of repair, and had been converted into a single house. B. held on without a fresh lease, and C. afterwards purchased the reversion of A., and B. continued to hold on under C.:—Held, that B. was not liable, on an implied contract, to put the messuages in such repair and in the same state as they were in at the commencement of the term; that, supposing

B. so liable, C. had no right of action for breaches of the contract committed before he was occupied the reversion. Johnson v. St. Peter's, Hereford (Churchwardens), 4 A. & E. 520; 4 N. & M. 186; 1 H. & W. 730.

A tenant hired of a landlord the ground floor of a warehouse, the upper part of which was occupied by the landlord himself. The water from the roof was collected by gutters into a box, from which it was discharged by a pipe into the drains. A hole was made in the box by a rat, through which the water entered the warehouse and wetted the tenant's goods. The landlord had used reasonable care in examining and seeing to the security of the gutters and the box. In an action by the tenant against the landlord for the damage so caused:—Held, that he was not liable, either on the ground of an implied contract, or on the ground that he had brought the water to the place from which it entered the warehouse. Carstairs v. Taylor, 6 L. R., Exch. 217; 40 L. J., Exch. 129; 19 W. R. 723.

When in a lease of premises there is a covenant by the lessee to repair, and the premises depend for support on a wall, which the lessor has a right to repair and maintain, there is no implied covenant by the lessor to maintain the supporting wall. Colebeck v. Girdlers' Company, 24 W. R. 577; 1 L. R., Q. B. Div. 234; 45 L. J., Q. B. Div. 225; 34 L. T., N. S. 850.

But semble, that such support is in the nature of an easement, and gives the lessee the right to do all things necessary for the preservation of the easement which the lessor could do. Id.

Express contracts; their nature and effect, in general.—An agreement to leave a farm as he found it, is an agreement to leave it in tenable repair, if he found it so. Winn v. White, 2 W. Bl. 840.

A lease, containing a covenant by the lessee to repair the premises at all times (as often as need or occasion should require), and at farthest within three months after notice, is one entire covenant, the former part of which is qualified by the latter. Horsfall v. Testar, 1 Moore, 89; 7 Taunt. 385.

A covenant for a landlord to be allowed to come into a house to see the state of its repair at "convenient times," is not broken by his not being allowed to go into some of the rooms, if he has given no notice of his coming. Doe d. Wetherell v. Bird, 6 C. & P. 105—Denman.

By an agreement under seal, E. covenanted with B., his executors and administrators, that he would at any time thereafter, at the request of B., his executors, administrators, or assigns, execute a demise of certain freeholds for the term of twenty-one years at the yearly rent of 180*l.*, which lease should contain a covenant to keep the premises in good and substantial repair, and all other usual covenants; and B., for himself, his executors, or administrators, covenanted with E., whenever thereto requested by E., to accept such lease, and execute a counterpart. Under this agreement B. entered and paid rent until his death (which took place before the 1st of January, 1870), and after his death his widow and legal personal representative entered and paid rent. No lease was ever executed, and no such request as above mentioned was ever made by either party. Since his death rent had accrued due, and a sum was required for repairs:—Held, that the liability under the deed was from the first, and still was, a specialty; hence that a claim by E. for the sums due for arrears of rent and dilapidations under the covenants agreed to be entered into by B. were debts by specialty against his estate. Kidd v. Boone, 12 L. R., Eq. 89; 40 L. J., Chanc. 531; 24 L. T., N. S. 356—V. C. B.

An action may be maintained by a tenant against his landlord upon a parol agreement by the landlord to put a house in tenantable repair, although a written agreement for a lease made shortly afterwards is silent as to the terms of such parol agreement. Mann v. Nunn, 30 L. T., N. S. 526; 43 L. J., C. P. 241. But see Angell v. Duke, 32 L. T., N. S. 321.

By agreement, reciting a former agreement, for the grant of a lease of copyhold premises to A. for twenty-one years, from the 25th of March, 1820, and that A. had requested, and the plaintiff had agreed, that the defendant should be accepted as tenant, and a lease should be granted to him instead of to A. on the same terms; and that the plaintiff was desirous to let the premises to the defendant so soon as a good license for that purpose should be granted to him by the lord of the manor, but not before; the plaintiff, in consideration of the covenants and agreements on the part of the defendant, covenanted that he would, so soon as a good license for that purpose should have been procured to him from the lord, at the defendant's expense, lease the premises to the defendant for all the residue then unexpired of the term of twenty-one years from the 25th of March, 1820; and the defendant covenanted thenceforth yearly, during the remainder of the term, to pay the plaintiff the rent, and also that he would, from time to time during the term to be granted, keep the premises in repair. The defendant entered upon the premises, and occupied them until the expiration of twenty-one years from the 25th of March, 1820:—Held, that he was liable on the covenant for repair, although no lease had ever been made to him pursuant to the agreement, nor any license obtained from the lord for that purpose. Pistor v. Cator, 9 M. & W. 815; 12 L. J., Exch. 129.

To what premises obligation to repair extends.—A covenant in a building and repairing lease to leave the demised premises, with all new erections, well repaired, extends to the new erections only. Lant v. Norris, 1 Burr. 287.

Under a lease of a farm, the tenant was bound to keep in repair the buildings to be erected thereon during the term; the tenant, with the permission of the landlord, who was lord of the manor, built a house on the waste adjoining the farm, and he enjoyed it with the farm:—Held, that the tenant was also under an obligation to keep the house in repair. White v. Wakley, 26 Beav. 17; 28 L. J., Chanc. 77; 4 Jur., N. S. 988.

A lessor demised "three tenements or dwelling houses, and a field or plot of ground adjoining thereto," and the lessee covenanted "well and sufficiently to repair, sustain and keep the tenements or dwelling-houses, field or plot of ground and premises, and every part thereof, as well in houses, buildings, walls, hedges, ditches, fences, gates, as in all other needful and necessary reparations whatsoever, when and as often as occasion shall require during the term, and at the end or sooner determination thereof, the premises so well and sufficiently repaired into the hands and possession of the lessor peaceably to leave and yield up:"—Held, that the covenant did not extend to houses afterwards built in the field. Cornish v. Cleife, 3 H. & C. 446; 11 Jur., N. S. 181; 84 L. J., Exch. 19; 13 W. R. 389; 11 L. T., N. S. 606.

Where a lessee of a coal mine covenanted at the end of the term to yield up the works and mines, and all ways and roads in such good repair, order and condition, so that the works might be continued and carried on by the lessor:—Held, that such covenant did not include wooden sleepers, or iron tram plates fastened to such wooden sleepers, used for the purpose of a railway. Beaufort v. Bates, 31 L. J., Chanc. 481; 10 W. R. 200; 6 L. T., N. S. 82; 3 De G., F. & J. 381.

A lessor of a house, situate in a borough, covenanted with the lessee to repair and keep in repair all the external parts of the demised premises, except the glass and lead of the windows. The corporation, acting under a local statute passed after the demise, pulled down an adjoining house, and thereby left the wall of the demised house, which had previously divided the two, exposed and without support; the wall thereupon gave way, and the house became uninhabitable. The lessee immediately called upon the lessor to repair, which he, six weeks after the sinking of the wall, finally refused to do. On this the lessee, who had removed to other premises, pulled down and began to rebuild the wall, and, before the work was finished, sued the lessor upon his covenant:—Held, that the wall, even before the neighboring house had been removed, was an external part of the demised premises; the external parts of premises being those which form the inclosure of them, and beyond which no part of them extends. Green v. Eales, 2 Q. B. 225; 6 Jur. 436; 1 G. & D. 408.

Held, also, that the lessor was liable on his covenant, though the injury to the wall was done in the first instance by the corporation, and the local statute had a special clause for the recovery of compensation from them in case of such injuries; for the lessor ought to have set about the repair in time to prevent the mischief which ensued. Id.

In such an action the lessee, after such refusal, having rebuilt an external wall, is entitled to recover the costs thereof, the jury having found that this was the proper mode of restoring it. Id.

He may also recover the price of damage done to plate glass and fixtures in consequence of the sinking of the wall; but the lessee cannot recover the rent paid by him for the occupation of other premises during the progress of the repairs, though, during that time, the demised premises were not safely inhabitable. Id.

Performance and satisfaction, or breach of covenant or other contract to repair.]—A general covenant to repair is satisfied by the lessee keeping the premises in substantial repair: a literal performance of the contract is not to be required. Harris v. Jones, 1 M. & Rob. 173—Tindal.

A lessee covenanted to preserve and keep, and at the end of the term leave the demised premises in good and tenantable repair:—Held, that this covenant would be satisfied by leaving the premises in such a state as, regard being had to the age of the building at the time of the demise, might be considered tenantable. Stanley v. Youngood, 3 Scott, 318; 3 Bing. N. C. 4; 2 Hodges, 132.

The lessee during the term erected a lean-to, with a roof so ill constructed, that it did not exclude the weather, and so left it at the end of the term:—Held, that it was a breach of his covenant to repair. Id.

A lessee covenanted, within the two first years of the term, to put premises in good and sufficient repair, and at all times during the term to repair, pave, scour, cleanse, empty, and keep the messuages, ground, and other the premises, when, where, and as often as need should require; and within the first fifty years of the term to take down four messuages, as occasion might require, and in the place thereof erect upon the premises four other good and substantial brick messuages:—Held, that, if within the fifty years the houses should be so repaired as to make them completely and substantially as good as new houses, the covenant would be satisfied without taking down the old houses. Boelyn v. Radlish, 7 Taunt. 411.

Where a very old house is demised, with the usual covenants to repair, it is not meant that the house should be restored in an improved state, or that the consequences of the elements should be averted; but the tenant has the duty of keeping the house in the state in which it was at the time of the demise, by the timely expenditure of money and care. Gutteridge v. Munyard, 7 C. & P. 129; 1 M. & Rob. 334—Tindal.

A. on becoming tenant to B. of a farm and outbuildings, agreed to keep the same, and at the expiration of the tenancy to deliver up the same, in good repair, order and condition. Breach, that he did not deliver up the same

In good repair, order and condition:—Held, that, on this contract to keep the premises in good repair, the tenant was bound to put them in that condition, and that the tenant was not justified in keeping them in bad repair because he found them in that condition; but the extent of that repair was to be measured by their age and class. Payne v. Haine, 16 M. & W. 541; 16 L. J., Exch. 180.

On a covenant, as often as necessary, well and sufficiently to repair, uphold, sustain, paint, glaze, cleanse, and scour, and keep and leave the premises in such repair, reasonable wear and tear excepted, the tenant, if he has repaired within a reasonable time before leaving, is only bound, in addition to the repair of actual dilapidations, to clean the old paint, &c., and not to repaint, &c. Scales v. Lawrence, 2 F. & F. 289—Willes.

In an action on a covenant to keep premises in repair during the tenancy, the jury may take into consideration the state of repairs at the commencement of the demise, in order to assess the damages for which the defendant is liable. Burdett v. Withers, 2 N. & P. 122; 7 A. & E. 186; W., W. & D. 444; 1 Jur. 514.

So it is competent to the defendant to show the general state and condition of the premises at the time of the demise, but not to go into matters of detail. Young v. Mants, 6 Scott, 277; 1 Arn. 198; 8 C., nom. Mants v. Goring, 4 Bing. N. C. 451.

Under a covenant by a farm tenant "well and substantially to repair, and keep in good substantial repair, and so well and substantially repaired" to yield up at the end of the term, the tenant is bound to give up the premises in as good a state of repair as when he took possession, and they must be inferred to have been then in a tenable state. Brown v. Trumper, 26 Beav. 11.

If a doorway is broken through the wall of a demised house into an adjoining house, and kept open for a long space of time, it amounts to a breach of covenant to repair. Doe d. Vickery v. Jackson, 2 Stark. 293—Ellenborough.

Enlargement of windows, opening external doors, and taking down partitions, are no breach of a covenant to repair and to keep in repair a dwelling-house, together with all such buildings, improvements or additions as should be erected, set up or made by the lessee. Doe d. Dalton v. Jones, 1 N. & M. 6; 4 B. & Ad. 126.

A covenant by a lessee, that he will, during the term, repair, uphold, support, and sustain and maintain the brick walls to the demised premises belonging, is broken, if the lessee, during the term, pull down a brick wall which divides the court-yard at the front of the house from another yard at the side of the house. Doe d. Wetherell v. Bird, 6 C. & P. 195—Denman.

On a covenant to keep premises in repair, it is a breach to pull them down, either wholly or partially, even so far as to open doors in a wall; and it is a breach for which the lessor may sue for and recover substantial damages during the term. Nor is it any equitable defense that it was done with the consent and acquiescence of the lessor, unless it appears that it was with his previous consent. Gauge v. Lockwood, 2 F. & F. 115—Willes. See Bargnis v. Edwards, 2 F. & F. 111.

On a covenant in a lease of a farm and cottages, to keep and uphold and maintain the premises in good repair, the lessee or assignee is bound to keep up the cottages in situ, and to repair them if ruinous, or so as to replace them, as nearly as might be, in the position in which they were when demised, and is liable, having pulled them down, for their value as they stood, without reference to the result of their removal as regarded the general improvement of the farm. Woolcock v. Dew, 1 F. & F. 387—Willes.

Under a covenant that the tenant "should and would substantially repair, uphold and maintain" a house, he is bound to keep up the inside painting. Mark v. Noyes, 1 C. & P. 265—Abbott.

A tenant under a covenant to repair is liable for repairs only, and is not liable for the extra expense of laying a new floor, on an improved plan, or the like. Soward v. Leggatt, 7 C. & P. 618—Abinger.

The term "habitable repair" means a state of repair reasonably fit for occupation of an inhabitant. Belcher v. McIntosh, 8 C. & P. 720; 2 M. & Rob. 186—Alderson.

Where a tenant takes premises which are out of repair, and agrees "to put the premises into habitable repair," this implies that he is to put them into a better state than that in which he found them; and, regard being had to the state of the premises at the time of the agreement, and to their situation, and to the class of persons likely to inhabit them, he is to put them into a condition fit for a tenant to inhabit. Id.

A direction to keep buildings in good repair means, not the state of repair in which they were at the testator's death, but in habitable repair. "Farming buildings" include "farmhouses." Cooke v. Cholmondeley, 4 Drew. 326.

A covenant "forthwith" to put premises into complete repair, must receive a reasonable construction, and is not to be limited to any specific time; and therefore it will be for the jury to say, upon the evidence, whether the defendant has done what he reasonably ought in the performance of it. Doe d. Pittman v. Sutton, 9 C. & P. 706—Denman.

The mere removal and sale by a tenant, during the term, of fixtures, which he does not immediately replace, but which can be replaced before the end of the term, is not in itself a breach of his covenant to repair and uphold the demised premises, and to deliver up the same at the end of the term, together with all things affixed thereto. Doe d. Burrell v. Davis, 10 C. B. 821; 15 Jur. 185.

In an action for a breach of a covenant for repair in a lease, a tenant is not liable for acts done before the time of the execution of the lease, although the habendum of the lease states the premises to be held from a day prior to its execution. Shaw v. Kay, 1 Exch. 412; 17 L. J., Exch. 17.

A breach of covenant to repair is not excused, because the covenantor has bona fide employed persons to repair. If the covenantor's agent has, in fact, not repaired, the breach is not such as equity will relieve against. Nokes v. Gibson, 3 Drew. 681; 8 Jur., N. S. 726; 26 L. J., Chanc. 433.

A breach of a covenant to make a roadway in front of a particular house is not to be relieved against in equity, because, if made before the roadway in front of adjacent houses is made, it would be continually cut up and useless. Id.

By an agreement of demise of a house and grounds, the landlord undertook to keep the premises in repair, and to pay all rates, taxes and charges which might be payable in respect of the premises. In the grounds was a piece of ornamental water, in which during the tenancy an accumulation of mud caused at one spot a public nuisance, and at another spot a nuisance to the tenant, and elsewhere choked up the stream. The tenant, being summoned under the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855, in respect of the public nuisance, employed a contractor to clear out the whole stream to the satisfaction of the inspector of nuisances. Afterwards, at the hearing of the summons, an order was made on him to abate the public nuisance. The whole of the mud was cleared out under the contract, that part which constituted the public nuisance being removed partly before and partly after the date of the order:—Held, first, that the landlord was not, under his agreement to repair, bound to cleanse the ornamental water. Bird v. Elwes, 3 L. R., Exch. 225; 37 L. J., Exch. 91; 16 W. R. 1120; 18 L. T., N. S. 727.

Held, secondly, that no charge on the premises in respect of any part of the work done had been created by the proceedings under the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855. Id.

A., in November, 1863, agreed with B. as follows: "I agree to let to you, for the term of five years, the whole of the warehouse and cellars, now occupied by P. & Co., for the annual rent of £400, the building to be put by me into good tenantable repair." Repairs were thereupon done by A., who knew that the premises were to be used by B. in his business of a silk and linen merchant and warehouseman; and in January, 1866, B., who had previously inspected the premises, entered into possession, making no complaint of their condition or want of repair. The building had originally been a dwelling-house, and had been converted into a warehouse by the addition of two stories, without strengthening the outer wall, which was only fourteen inches thick, and as a warehouse it had been occupied by P. & Co. By reason of the insufficient thickness of the outer wall, and the weight of the linen stored by B. on the premises, the outer wall began to give way some time between March and June, and in October, 1866, a portion of it fell, rendering it necessary to pull down and rebuild the whole wall, which was done by A., B. being for some time deprived of the use of the premises, and otherwise sustaining damage thereby. In an action by him to recover damages for an alleged breach of agreement to put the premises into good tenantable repair:—Held, that A.'s contract was clearly performed at the time B. took possession of the premises, and made no complaint of their state of repair; that there was no contract on his part to put them into good tenantable repair for any particular or specified purpose; and that if B. required any extra support for his goods he should have called A.'s attention thereto while the repairs were going on. McClure v. Little, 19 L. T., N. S. 287.

A covenant by an under-lessee to repair after notice is not broken by a non-compliance with a notice to repair served upon the premises by the superior landlord as such landlord. Williams v. Williams, 30 L. T., N. S. 688—C. P.

Destruction of or injury to premises.—A lessee of a house, who covenants generally to repair, is bound to rebuild it if it is burned by an accidental fire. Bullock v. Dommitt, 6 T. R. 650; 2 Chit. 608. S. P., Digby v. Atkinson, 4 Camp. 275. And see Phillips v. Leigh, 1 Esp. 898.

The assignee of a lease, whereby the lessee covenanted for himself and his assigns absolutely to repair premises without qualification, is bound to repair, notwithstanding they are destroyed by fire. Id.

So, if a lease contains a covenant to keep in repair, as well as a covenant to insure for a specific sum, and the premises are burnt down, the lessee is liable on the former covenant, and the amount is not limited to the sum mentioned in the latter. Digby v. Atkinson, 4 Camp. 275—Ellenborough.

A tenant covenanting to repair, damage by fire only excepted, continues liable to payment of rent, notwithstanding the premises are destroyed by fire. Hare v. Groves, 3 Anst. 687.

If a lessor covenants with his lessee that he will, in case the premises demised shall be burnt down, "rebuild and replace" the same in the same state as they were in before the fire, he is only bound to restore the premises to the state in which they were when he let them, and is not bound to rebuild any additional parts which may have been erected by his tenant. Loader v. Kemp, 2 C. & P. 375—Best.

The lessee covenanted to repair, "casualties by fire and tempest excepted":—Quære, if the landlord was bound to repair in either of the excepted cases? Weigall v. Waters, 6 T. R. 488.

When a lessee covenants to pay the rent reserved and keep the demised premises in repair, he was bound, during the term, to perform both covenants as long as the subject-matter of the demise continues to exist, although it was originally of no value. Meath v. Cuthbert, 10 Ir. R., C. L. 393—C. P.

In 1832, an equitable tenant for life made a lease containing a covenant to keep the demised premises in repair, and, upon the determination of the lease by the death of the lessor, the lessee and his devisee continued in possession, and paid rent to the remainderman, without any fresh express agreement. In 1853, the remainderman assigned the reversion to a purchaser, who, in the following year, demised the premises to the remainderman for a term still unexpired. The premises were burnt in 1859, and no change of tenancy had taken place up to the death of the devisee in 1871:—Held, first, that the devisee's assets were liable, under the covenant, to the expense of rebuilding the premises. Morrogh v. Alleyne, 7 Ir. R., Eq. 487—V. C.

Held, secondly, that the remainderman's title being merely equitable could not be relied on as a bar to his claim. Id.

Held, thirdly, that the Statute of Limitations did not apply. Id.

As to effect of destruction of premises upon obligation to pay rent,—see this title, VII., 2.

As to duty of tenant from year to year to make repairs,—see this title, XVI., 2.

As to obligation to make repairs after assignment of term,—see this title, VIII., 3.

As to operation and effect of covenants to repair,—see also COVENANT.

2. Remedies for Failure to make.

Tenant's right to leave premises.]—Where a tenant of a house undertakes by his agreement to keep it in as good repair as when he took it, fair wear and tear excepted, he is not entitled to quit upon its becoming uninhabitable for want of other repairs during the term; and the landlord is under no implied obligation to do any repairs in such a case. Alden v. Pullen,* 10 M. & W. 821. S. P., Gott v. Gandy, 2 El. & Bl. 845.

In an agreement for a tenancy of buildings for a term, the landlord to do the repairs, there is no implied condition that the tenant may quit if the repairs are not done: Surplice v. Parnsworth, 7 M. & G. 576; 8 Scott, N. R. 307; 8 Jur. 760; 13 L. J., C. P. 215. S. P., Kuttum v. Temple, 12 M. & W. 52; 13 L. J., Exch. 17.

Where B. took possession of a house, and paid 10*l.* to A., who neglected to execute a lease and to make repairs within the period of ten days, as agreed on, notwithstanding which B. still continued in possession:—Held, that, on account of B.'s intermediate possession of the premises under the agreement, he could not, by quitting the house, for the default of A., rescind the contract, and recover back the 10*l.* in an action for money had and received, but could only declare for a breach of the special contract. Hunt v. Silk, 5 East, 449; 2 Smith, 15.

A. agreed to purchase B.'s equitable interest in lands for a term of years at a specified rent:—Held, that A., after paying the rent several years, and acknowledging that a further sum was due, could not resist B.'s claim for such further rent in an action on the agreement, by showing that he had not been able to use the lands; but it seems that B. might have recovered in an action for use and occupation. Conolly v. Baxter, 2 Stark. 525—Ellenborough.

Right of action for breach.]—Upon a covenant to repair and keep in repair during the continuance of a term, an action may be maintained for breaches committed before the term has expired. Luzmore v. Robson, 1 B. & A. 584.

Upon a covenant by a lessor to keep in repair the main walls, main timbers, and roofs of the demised premises, the lessor cannot be sued by the lessee for non-repair, unless he has received notice of want of repair. Makin v. Watkinson, 6 L. R., Exch. 25; 40 L. J., Exch. 33; 23 L. T., N. S. 593; 19 W. R. 286.

Liability for injury to third person from neglect to repair.]—A landlord let premises to a tenant under a lease by which the latter covenanted to keep them in repair. Attached to the house was a coal cellar under the footway, with an aperture covered by an iron plate which was at the time of the demise out of repair and dangerous. A passer-by in consequence fell into the aperture and was injured:—Held, that, the obligation to repair being by the lease cast upon the tenant, the landlord was not liable for this accident. Pretty v. Bickmore, 8 L. R., C. P. 401; 21 W. R. 733; 28 L. T., N. S. 704.

Held, also, that the provision in the Metropolitan Local Management Act, 1855, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 102, makes no difference in this respect. Id.

Parties to actions.]—The executor of a tenant for life may recover for the breach of a covenant to repair, committed by the lessee of the testator in his lifetime, without averring a damage to his personal estate. Ricketts v. Weaver, 12 M. & W. 718; 13 L. J., Exch. 195.

The benefit of a covenant to repair in a joint demise by tenants in common runs with the entire reversion only, and therefore the representatives of all the tenants in common in a lease so jointly made by them must join in suing for a breach of such covenant. Thompson v. Hakewell, 19 C. B., N. S. 713; 11 Jur., N. S. 732; 35 L. J., C. P. 18; 14 W. R. 11; 13 L. T., N. S. 989.

As to parties to actions after assignment of term,—see this title, VIII., 3; after assignment of reversion,—see this title, IX.

Pleadings in actions.]—In schedule B. to the Common Law Procedure Act of 1852, the following specimen of a count (No. 24), upon a covenant to repair, is given: "That the plaintiff by deed let to the defendant a house, No. 401, Piccadilly, to hold for seven years from the — day of —, A.D. —, and the defendant by the said deed covenanted with the plaintiff well and substantially to repair the said house during the said term (according to the covenant), yet the said house was during the said term out of good and substantial repair."

If the covenant to repair contains an exception of "fire and all other casualties," it is fatal on non est factum to state it as a general covenant to repair, omitting the exception. Tempany v. Burnand, 4 Camp. 20. S. P., Brown v. Knill, 5 Moore, 164; 2 B. & B. 395—Ellenborough.

In an action for not repairing premises demised, the declaration stated that the plaintiff "demised certain premises, with the appurtenances (except as therein is excepted), to hold, &c., except, &c., for the term of twelve years, except the last day thereof;" the lease being produced in support of the declaration, was found to contain no exception "of any part of the premises," but only an exception of the "last day of the term:"—Held, not to be a fatal variance, the allegation of the exception being either satisfied in the lease, or it might be rejected as surplusage. Williams v. Hayes, 9 Price, 642.

A landlord may maintain an action for not repairing, against a tenant who occupies premises under a special agreement (which was to be the basis of a future lease), containing a provision that he should keep the premises in tenantable repair, without setting out such special agreement in the declaration. Colley v. Stretton, 3 D. & R. 522; 2 B. & C. 273.

In an action on a covenant to keep premises in tenantable order and repair, and at the end of the term deliver them up in such tenantable repair, the breach assigned was, that the tenant did not nor would sufficiently repair and keep the premises in tenantable order and repair, nor deliver them up in such tenantable repair at the end of the term; but, on the contrary thereof, suffered and permitted the premises to be and continue, and the same were, ruinous and in decay, for want of needful and necessary reparations, and the tenant at the end of the term left them so out of repair:—Held, that, under this breach, the lessor could not recover for voluntary waste, as by removing windows, &c. Edge v. Pemberton, 12 M. & W. 187; 1 D. & L. 407; 13 L. J., Exch. 48.

A declaration stated that the plaintiff agreed to let and the defendant to take the farm of L. at a yearly rent, and the plaintiff undertook to put the premises in repair within twelve months, after which time the defendant undertook to keep them repaired, and that the plaintiff repaired within twelve months, and demised to the defendant on the terms aforesaid, and he became tenant and occupier, but he did not keep in repair. The agreement produced at the trial was to let and take as above, that the plaintiff should keep the buildings insured in 600*l.* (the defendant repaying the premiums), and rebuild in case of fire; and that the plaintiff should repair within twelve months, and the defendant afterwards keep in repair as above stated:—Held, that the variance between the contract declared upon and that proved was a ground of nonsuit. Beech v. White, 12 A. & E. 668; 4 P. & D. 399.

A plaintiff sued upon a deed by which the defendant covenanted and agreed with him to procure a license from the lord of the manor, in which a messuage in the occupation of the plaintiff was situate, to lease the premises to the plaintiff, and to make him a good and sufficient demise of the same; the declaration alleged that it was thereby covenanted, that the lease should contain a covenant, that pending the occupation by the plaintiff under the provisions of the deed, the defendant would, once in every three years, paint the outside of the messuage, and keep the same in good and tenantable repair; and that, until the license should be obtained and the lease granted, the plaintiff should continue in possession of the premises as tenant from year to year, subject to the terms and conditions in the deed specified; breach, the non-repair of the outside of the premises during the continuance of the tenancy from year to year. The deed, on its production at the trial, contained the provisions that, until the license could be obtained, and the lease should be granted, the plaintiff should be considered to be tenant of the premises at the rent and subject to the terms and conditions hereinbefore specified:—Held, that there was no variance between the allegation and the proof, but the declaration correctly stated the legal effect of the deed. Price v. Birch, 1 D., N. S. 720—C. P.

A declaration stated, that the defendant had become and was a tenant to the plaintiff of rooms, on the terms that the defendant should not allow any nails to be driven into the walls, and that, if any damage should arise from so doing, he would pay the cost of repairing the same on vacating the apartments; and that, in consideration thereof, the defendant promised the plaintiff to use the rooms in a tenant-like manner, and not to allow any nails to be driven into the walls. The declaration averred, that the defendant quitted possession, and that he did not use the rooms in a tenant like manner, but, on the contrary thereof, pulled down bells, and broke chimney-pieces and stoves, and drove nails into the walls, and although the costs of repairing the injuries of the walls amounted to 150*l.*, he had not paid that sum to the plaintiff:—Held, on general demurrer, that this declaration showed a sufficient consideration for the defendant's promise, by alleging that he had become tenant on the terms of the special agreement, and that it was not necessary to allege that he became tenant to the plaintiff at his request. Dietrichsen v. Giuhlei, 14 M. & W. 845; 3 D. & L. 292; 15 L. J., Exch. 73.

To an action by a lessor for a breach of covenant, on an indenture of lease in not repairing, the lessee cannot plead in bar that the lessor had only an equitable estate in the premises; for that is tantamount to a plea of nil habuit in tenementis. Blake v. Foster, 8 T. R. 487.

A declaration on a covenant in a lease to deliver timber growing on the demised premises, sufficient for the repairs thereof, averred that there was timber growing on the premises sufficient for the repairs, but that the defendant did not deliver it, and the defendant pleaded that there was not timber growing on the premises sufficient and proper for the repairs:—Held, that the plea was good, although it did not allege that there was not timber growing on the premises sufficient for the repairs or any part thereof. Snell v. Snell, 7 D. & R. 249; 4 B. & C. 741.

Assignees of G., a bankrupt, sued the executor of J. H. A count stated that R. H. demised premises to G., and covenanted to put all the premises forthwith in repair, and during the term maintain in repair, the main walls and the steam engines, by the fair and reasonable wear and usage thereof; that the reversion became vested in J. H.; and that, though R. H. had not put into repair, J. H. had not done so, or maintained in repair according to the covenant. To the first breach, for not putting in repair, the defendant pleaded, first, that a reasonable time for performance elapsed in the time of R. H., and he broke the covenant; secondly, that not only was this so, but that G. brought an action against J. H. and R., as executors of R. H., for such breach, and recovered compensation:—Held, that there could be but one breach of the covenant as to putting in repair, and that as such breach occurred in the time of R. H., these pleas were good. Coward v. Gregory, 12 Jur., N. S. 1000; 36 L. J., C. P. 1; 15 W. R. 170; 15 L. T., N. S. 279; 2 L. R., C. P. 153.

To the second breach, for not maintaining in repair, the defendant pleaded, first, that G. brought an action against J. H., as an assignee of the reversion, for not maintaining in repair, and recovered compensation; and that the want of repair complained of was only a continuance of that for which the former action was brought; secondly, that there had been such recovery by action, as mentioned in the plea to the first breach and the preceding plea to the second breach, and that G. did not expend the sums recovered on the premises, or put them in repair, and that if he had done so, no breach would have occurred:—Held, that the breach was continuing; that the former recovery went in mitigation of damages, and not in bar, even on equitable grounds; and that the pleas were therefore bad. Id.

The defendant also pleaded to the second breach, that the default arose from G. not keeping a covenant to maintain in repair all except what the landlord was to maintain; to which the plaintiff replied, that the landlord had never put in repair:—Held, that the putting in repair was a condition precedent to the tenant's covenant coming into force, and that therefore the replication was good. Id.

The defendant also pleaded to the second breach, that the want of repair was not occasioned by fair and reasonable wear and usage:—Held, that these words only applied to the steam-engines, &c., and that, therefore, the plea was bad. Id.

Evidence.—A tenant occupied premises, under an agreement containing a proviso to keep the premises in tenantable repair, and the landlord declared generally, that "the defendant became tenant of the premises, and in consideration thereof undertook to repair," without setting out the agreement:—Held, that such agreement was admissible to prove the fact of tenancy as the consideration for the promise to repair. Colley v. Streeton, 3 D. & R. 522; 2 B. & C. 273.

In an action against a tenant for not leaving premises in repair, evidence as to a prior promise on the part of the lessor to put them in repair is not admissible, and it would be a misdirection to tell the jury to have regard to such promises; but they may measure the extent of the repairs to be done by the age and class of the premises. Haldane v. Newcombe, 12 W. R. 135; 9 L. T., N. S. 420—B. C.—Crompton.

In ejectment for a forfeiture, under a covenant to keep in tenantable repair, it is not necessary to show that the premises were not in repair on the day of the demise; but if proved to be out of repair a short time previously, it is incumbent on the defendant to give evidence that they have been put into repair before the right to re-enter accrued. Doe d. Hemmings v. Durnford, 2 C. & J. 667.

A stamped agreement for a lease of premises for seventeen years and a half, to which the plaintiff was no party, but made between the defendant and other persons, from whom the plaintiff derived title to the premises, is admissible to prove the defendant's promise to keep the messuages in repair. Dyer v. Ashton, 2 D. & R. 19.

Measure of damages.—Where a tenant for years agrees to keep the premises in repair during the tenancy, and before the expiration of the term an action is brought against him for breach of this agreement, the plaintiff is entitled to recover nominal damages only. Murriott v. Cotton, 2 C. & K. 553—Rolfe.

A. leased premises to B., from the 25th March, 1823, for sixteen years wanting ten days; and B. covenanted with A. to keep the premises in repair, and to paint once in every five years of the term, and to leave the premises in repair. B. underleased the premises to C., from the 24th June, 1834, for four years and three quarters, wanting eleven days; and C. covenanted with B. to keep the premises in repair (the covenant so far being in the same terms as in the original lease), and to paint once during the term, and to leave the premises in repair. A. sued B. for breaches of this covenant, and B. let judgment go by default, and upon the writ of inquiry the damages were assessed at 04*l.* 10*s.*, being the amount of dilapidations proved by a surveyor, whose estimate had been laid before B. previously to the commencement of the action. B. afterwards sued C. for the amount of the dilapidations and the costs of the action brought against him. The jury found the amount of the dilapidations to be 57*l.* 10*s.*:—Held, that B. was not entitled to recover also the amount of the costs in the former action. Penley v. Watts, 7 M. & W. 601.

A defendant held premises under a lease, with a covenant to keep and yield them up in repair. At the expiration of the lease, at Christmas, 1868, the premises were dilapidated to an amount fixed by the jury at 22*l.* The plaintiff (the reversioner) had before this time made a verbal agreement with a third person to grant him a lease for a long term, and he at once proceeded to pull down the premises:—Held, that the plaintiff was, notwithstanding, entitled to recover substantial damages. Rawlings v. Morgan, 18 C. B., N. S. 776; 11 Jur., N. S. 564; 34 L. J., C. P. 185; 13 W. R. 746; 12 L. T., N. S. 348.

Upon an appeal from the decision of a county court in an action for dilapidations, evidence was given that the judge told the jury that it was not like an action for goods sold and delivered, and that the plaintiff might rest upon general evidence in support of his particulars of demand, without proving every item especially, as the jury had viewed the premises with the particulars in their hands, and would therefore be able to judge if the plaintiff had made out his case. The court directed a new trial. Smith v. Douglas, 16 C. B. 81.

Upon the execution of a writ of inquiry in an action for dilapidations, two surveyors were called on each side; those called for the plaintiff estimated the dilapidations, the one at 119*l.*, the other at 124*l.*; those called for the defendant estimated them, the one at 63*l.* 15*s.*, the other at 68*l.*; the jury returned a verdict for 36*l.* 10*s.* The court ordered that the inquisition be set aside without costs, unless the defendant would consent to the verdict being entered for 63*l.* 15*s.* Weeding v. Mason, 2 C. B., N. S. 382.

When a railway company gives the lessee for years of a house notice to treat, and an award is made, and eventually a conveyance executed, and thereupon possession given to them, such lessee is liable to his landlord at all events up to that time, on a covenant to repair and keep in repair, and the measure of damages is the diminution of the market value of the reversion at that time. Mills v. East London Union (Guardians), 8 L. R., C. P. 79; 42 L. J., C. P. 46; 27 L. T., N. S. 557; 21 W. R. 142.

The defendants' predecessors in title obtained an act for the formation of a road which was to pass under a railway by means of a bridge. By the act it was provided that the undertakers should not enter upon or interfere with the railway, or execute any work whatsoever under or affecting the same, until they should have delivered to the company plans, drawings and specifications of the works intended to be executed under or affecting the railway and works thereof, such plans, &c. to describe the manner of executing the intended works, and the materials to be used for the purpose, nor until those plans, &c., should have been examined and approved by the engineer of the company; and that "the same works should be executed and thereafter maintained by the undertakers at their sole expense in all things, according to such approved plans, &c., under the superintendence and to the reasonable satisfaction of the engineer of the company." And it was further provided that the undertakers should from time to time be responsible for and make good to the company all costs, losses, damages and expenses which might be occasioned to the company by reason of the execution or failure of any of the intended works, or of any act or omission of the undertakers. The bridge was accordingly constructed of brick piers and iron pillars, of iron girders resting upon the piers and pillars, and of timber and wood-work. In the construction of the bridge, the brick and iron-work was done by the defendants' predecessors in title, under the superintendence of the plaintiffs' engineer. The timber and woodwork, the superstructure, was done by the plaintiffs' engineer at the expense of the undertakers, and with materials provided by them. The structure was completed in 1864. In 1872 certain repairs became necessary to the superstructure of the bridge, which repairs were executed by the company, who claimed to be reimbursed their outlay in so doing by the defendants, although the defendants had had no notice nor any knowledge or means of ascertaining that the repairs were necessary:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the expenses so incurred. London and South Western Railway Company v. Flower, 1 L. R., C. P. Div. 77.

In an action, brought during the term, for a breach of covenant to repair, if the evidence shows that the premises were out of repair before action the lessor is entitled to nominal damages, although the lessee expended money, after action, in repairing the demised premises. Morony v. Ferguson, 8 Ir. R., C. L. 551—Q. B.

In an action for breach of covenant to keep in repair, brought by the lessor or his assignee during the pendency of the term, the damages may, but need not necessarily, be the present value of a sum equal to the cost of repair, that sum being payable at the end of the term; or the damages may, but need not necessarily, be the injury caused by the want of repair to the salable value of the reversion; and, save in very extreme cases, it is the province of the jury to decide which of these modes is, in the particular case, the appropriate one. Meigs v. Kavanagh, 11 Ir. R., C. L. 431—Exch.

As to repairs after assignment of lease,— see this title, VIII., 3; after assignment of reversion,—see this title, IX.; in cases of tenancy from year to year,—see this title, XVI.

VI. RATES AND TAXES.

1. Contracts to pay.

What rates, taxes, &c., are included in agreements.]—If a party agrees to take a lease at a net rent, he cannot object that the lease contains a covenant for him to pay the land tax and sewers' rate. Bennett v. Womack, 3 C. & P. 96; 7 B. & C. 627.

A tenant verbally agreeing "to pay all taxes," is bound to pay the land tax, although not specifically mentioned. Amfield v. White, R. & M. 246—Bayley.

Upon the construction of an agreement to demise a farm for fourteen years, "at the yearly rent of 40*l.*, payable quarterly, free of all outgoings," and by which the parties agreed "to grant and accept a lease on the above and other usual terms:"—Held, that the landlord was entitled to a net rent, payable free of land tax and tithe commutation rent-charge. Parish v. Sleeman, 1 De G., F. & J. 326; 6 Jur., N. S. 385; 29 L. J., Chanc. 96; 8 W. R. 166.

A. demised land to B. upon a building lease, at the yearly rent of 60*l.*, clear of all rates and assessments, the sewers' rate and land tax excepted, with the usual covenant for payment of rent. B. having by building on the land increased its ratable value to 800*l.* per annum:—Held, that he was only entitled to deduct the sewers' rate and land tax upon the original rent, and not in respect of the improved value. Smith v. Humble, 15 C. B. 321.

A., who was tenant of premises under a lease, in which he covenanted to pay "all such parliamentary, parochial, and county district and occasional levies, rates, assessments, taxes, charges, impositions, contributions, burdens, duties, and services whatsoever, as during the term should be taxed, assessed, or imposed upon or in respect of the premises," underlet the premises to B., who covenanted in the underlease to perform the covenants on the lessee's part in the lease to A. A district board of works, acting under the Metropolis Management Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, compelled B., as occupier of the premises, to pay the expense of executing drainage works from the premises, which the board was authorized by the act to obtain the payment of from the occupier, the act allowing such occupier to deduct the same out of the rent due from him to the owner, provided it did not affect any contract between landlord and tenant:—Held, that this was an expense included in the terms of the covenant in the original lease, and against which the occupier, B., undertook to bear A. harmless, and that therefore B. was not entitled to deduct the same from his rent. Sweet v. Seager, 2 C. B., N. S. 119; 3 Jur., N. S. 588.

terms expiring at Midsummer, 1854, granted an annuity to T. and another to E. for three lives, and to secure such annuities demised the premises to T. and E., separately, for forty-three years, if the lives should last so long. In 1827 the residue of the terms granted to L. became vested in the plaintiff, subject to the annuities and underleases to T. and E. In 1825, L. having died, his executors let T. and E. into possession, and they covenanted by deed to pay off certain arrears of ground rent and other charges, and made the same chargeable on the premises. The plaintiff, in 1830, became tenant to T. and E. of the premises, at a rent payable to them in moieties. T. was the survivor of the cestuis que vie: he died in 1851, and the defendants were his executors. From his death till Midsummer, 1854, W. E., as agent for E. and the defendants, demanded and received the rents, and paid over one moiety to E., and the other to the defendants, deducting payments in respect of ground rent, rates, taxes, insurance, repairs, and commission. The plaintiff did not know of T.'s death:—Held, that he was entitled to recover back the amount of rent after T.'s death: that the plaintiff must be taken to have had notice of the deed of 1825, and to be bound by it: that the sums mentioned in it must be taken to have been paid; but that the plaintiff must be taken to have sanctioned the continued payment of the ground rent, rates, and taxes, and that a set off to that amount must be allowed. Barber v. Brown, 1 C. B., N. S. 121; 8 Jur., N. S. 18; 26 L. J., C. P. 41.

Where a party took a part of premises, the whole of which were rated at a certain annual value, and the lessor covenanted to pay all taxes then chargeable thereon, and the lessee covenanted to pay all fresh taxes which might thereafter be charged on the premises, or any part thereof:—Held, that the true construction of these covenants was, that the lessor should pay such taxes as were charged on the premises at the time of making the lease, at the then annual value, and that the lessee should pay all fresh taxes, and all such additions to those formerly chargeable as were occasioned by the improved value of the premises. Watson v. Atkins, 3 B. & A. 647.

Under a covenant by a tenant for the payment of 80*l.* yearly rent, all taxes thereon being to him allowed, but that he would pay all further or additional rates on the premises, or on any additional buildings or improvements made by him; and a covenant by the landlords to pay all rates on the premises, or on the tenant, in respect of the yearly rent of 80*l.*, except such further or additional taxes as might be assessed on the premises; the tenant is bound to defray all increase of the old as well as the new rates, beyond the proportion at which the premises were rated at the time of the deed, which was 20*l.* in respect of the 80*l.* rate. Graham v. Wade, 16 East, 29.

By a local act for draining lands in the county of Lincoln, it was declared, that "the taxes to be charged and assessed by virtue of the same should be paid by the tenants of the lands, &c., charged with the same respectively, who might deduct and retain the same out of the rents payable to their respective landlords." Where, therefore, a tenant had quitted lands liable to a drainage tax under that act, and, after he had quitted, the collector levied the tax in arrear upon property which he had left in possession of the succeeding tenant:—Held, that the tenants to be charged with the tax were those in whose time the tax accrued due, and not the tenants for the time being, and, consequently, that the succeeding tenant might maintain an action against the landlord for money paid to his use. Dawson v. Linton, 1 D. & R. 117; 5 B. & A. 521.

A tenant of a piece of ground, at a fixed annual rent, covenanted not to build without the license of the lessor, and the lessor covenanted to pay all taxes charged or to be charged during the term. At the time of executing the lease the lessor gave the lessee a license to build, which he did, and thereby much increased the annual value of the premises:—Held, that the lessor was liable to pay taxes in proportion to the rent received, and not according to the improved value. Watson v. Home, 7 B. & C. 285; 1 M. & R. 191.

The tenant compounded his taxes under the provisions of a local act, whereby his premises were assessed at a less annual sum than the improved annual value:—Held, that the tenant paid taxes in respect of the whole improved annual value, and that the landlord was to pay that proportion of the taxes paid which the rent bore to such improved annual value. Id.

An assessment levied under an act, enabling the owners of land to raise money for repairing a bridge, to the repair of which they were liable ratione tenuræ, is not a parliamentary tax charged upon the demised premises within the meaning of a covenant in a lease to pay rent, "free and clear of and from any land-tax, and all other taxes and deductions whatsoever, either parliamentary or parochial, then already taxed, charged or imposed, or thereafter to be taxed, charged or imposed upon the premises or any part thereof, or upon G., his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, in respect thereof, the landlord's property tax or duty only excepted." Baker v. Greenhill, 2 G. & D. 435; 2 Q. B. 148; 6 Jur. 710.

A sewers' rate, not being imposed directly by act of parliament, is not "a parliamentary tax." Palmer v. Earith, 14 M. & W. 428; 14 L. J., Exch. 256.

A lessee covenanted that he would pay all taxes, charges, rates, tithes or rent-charge in lieu of tithe dues, and duties whatsoever, as then were or should at any time thereafter during the demise be taxed, charged, assessed or imposed upon the demised premises:—Held, that the covenant was not confined to rates payable by the landlord, but meant all rates then imposed on the lessee in respect of his occupation, and all future rates which might be imposed on the land itself. Hurst v. Hurst, 4 Exch. 571; 19 L. J., Exch. 410.

A declaration, after setting forth an agreement, by which the defendant took of the plaintiff's rooms, part of a house, and agreed to pay, without saying to whom, the proportion of the rates and taxes "which might be assessed on the premises so taken" by him, averred, that afterwards, rates amounting, to wit, to 150*l.*, were assessed on the house, being the rates whereof the proportion was agreed to be paid as aforesaid; that such rates were afterwards assessed, became due, and were paid by the plaintiff; that the proper proportion payable by the defendant was a proportion, to wit, one-third, amounting to, to wit, to 50*l.*, of all which the defendant had notice, and was requested by the plaintiff to pay that sum. Pleas, first, as to 12*l.* 10*s.*, tender and payment into court; secondly, as to the residue, traverse of the request to pay; and fourthly, as to the residue, that the proper proportion payable by the defendant was a proportion amounting to 12*l.* 10*s.*, without this, that the proper proportion, to wit, one-third, amounting, to wit, to 50*l.*:—Held, first, that the defendant was bound to pay his proportion of the rates to the plaintiff. Hooper v. Woolmer, 1 L. M. & P. 634; 10 C. B. 370; 20 L. J., C. P. 63.

Held, secondly, that his liability to do so was a primary and not a collateral liability; and, therefore, that no request to pay was necessary. Id.

Held, thirdly, that under the agreement to pay a proportion of the rates assessed on the premises so taken by him, he was bound to pay a proportion of the rates assessed on the house of which such premises were a part. Id.

Held, fourthly, that the fourth plea was bad, as traversing only the precise amount of the proportion stated in the declaration, which was immaterial. Id.

The lessor of lands was, at the date of the lease, also the owner of the tithe rent-charge upon such lands. The lease contained a covenant by the lessee to pay "all taxes and assessments whatsoever for or in respect of the demised premises, save and except the level tax, property tax, and land tax," which were to be paid by the lessor:—Held, in an action under the covenant by the assignees of the reversion and of the tithe rent charge, against the lessee for non-payment of tithe rents, that the words "taxes and assessments" in the covenant did not include the tithe rent-charge, and that the action was therefore not maintainable. Jeffrey v. Neale, 6 L. R., C. P. 240; 40 L. J., C. P. 191; 24 L. T., N. S. 362; 19 W. R. 700.

In a lease of a house and premises, the lessee covenanted with the lessor to "bear, pay, and discharge the sewers' rate, tithes, rent-charge in lieu of tithes, and all other taxes, rates, assessments, and outgoings whatsoever, which at any time or times during the demise should be taxed, rated, charged, assessed, or imposed upon the demised premises, or any part thereof, or upon the landlord or tenant in respect thereof, or on the rent thereby reserved" (except the landlord's property tax):—Held, that the lessee could not recover from the lessor the expenses of making a drain, which, under 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90, s. 10, the lessor, as owner, might have been required by the sewer authority to make, but which the lessee had made under an arrangement with the lessor, by which the expense was to be borne by the party liable. Crosse v. Rao, 9 L. R., Exch. 209; 23 W. R. 6.

By a lease, the tenant agreed to pay the rent, "without any deduction in respect of any taxes, rates, assessments or charges whatsoever, the landlord's property tax only excepted:"—Held, that he was bound to pay the tithe rent-charge imposed upon the demised hereditaments. Lockwood v. Wilson, 43 L. J., C. P. 179; 30 L. T., N. S. 761; 22 W. R. 919.

When liability to pay becomes fixed.—A local act for the parish of Marylebone makes the occupiers of houses liable to be assessed to parochial rates. The lessor, landlord, owner, or proprietor of houses let out in parts is to be deemed the occupier, and be liable to the payment of rates; and every person renting or occupying any such part is to be liable and compellable to pay such rates, and may deduct the same out of the next or any other rent due to such lessor, &c.:—Held, that to render the occupier of part liable to pay, and to enable him to deduct the rates for the whole of the house, the landlord must be assessed to the rates. Lobban v. Cook, 8 H. & N. 238; 27 L. J., M. C. 234.

A local act gave a corporation power to call on the owner (i. e., the person receiving the rack rent) of any houses, to pave the street opposite to his houses, and in default to do it themselves, and recover the expenses from such owner by action, and also, as an additional remedy, by obliging all his tenants to pay to the extent of their unpaid rent, whether the expenses were incurred before their own particular houses or not. A. let a house to B., who covenanted to pay and discharge "all taxes, rates, assessments and impositions payable in respect of the demised premises." The corporation, on default by the landlord, paved the street before the tenant's house; the landlord paid the money expended by them in his default, and sought to recover it from the tenant on his covenant:—Held, that he was not liable. Tidswell v. Whitworth, 36 L. J., C. P. 103; 2 L. R., C. P. 326; 15 W. R. 427; 15 L. T., N. S. 574.

A lease contained a covenant by the lessee to pay all rates and taxes, and a proviso for re-entry on breach:—Held, first, that the non-payment within a reasonable time of a poor-rate, which had been duly assessed, allowed and published, was a breach justifying a re-entry by the landlord, and that it was not necessary to show that the rate had been demanded of the tenant, or that express notice of it had been given to him. Davis v. Burrell, 10 C. B. 821; 15 Jur. 658.

Held, secondly, that if the covenant meant to pay on demand, a personal demand was not necessary, but that a demand on the premises of the tenant's son was sufficient. Id.

2. Deducting from Rent.

Right of tenants to deduct sums paid.—By the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, s. 96, the owner shall allow the occupier to deduct out of the rent from time to time becoming due in respect of the premises the sums of money which the occupier pays to the vestry or district board for works done by them under the act:—Held, that to entitle the occupier to avail himself of that provision, the money must have been actually paid; and, consequently, that a distress for rent which became due after service of a notice from the vestry, made before payment to the vestry clerk, was not illegal. Ryan v. Thompson, 3 L. R., C. P. 144.

A lessee covenanted that he would, during the continuance of the term, pay and discharge "all taxes, rates, duties and assessments whatsoever which during the continuance of the demise should be taxed, assessed, or imposed on the tenant or landlord of the premises demised in respect thereof." The vestry of the parish, having under the provisions of the Metropolis Management Acts, paved the street upon which the demised premises abutted, assessed the sum payable by the owner as his proportion of the estimated expenses at 49l. 2s. 6d., gave the occupier a notice under s. 96 of the act of 1862, requiring him to pay it, and, upon his failure to do so, took proceedings against the owner before a magistrate, and compelled him to pay:—Held, that this was a duty or an assessment, assessed or imposed upon the owner in respect of the premises, within the covenant. Thompson v. Lapworth, 3 L. R., C. P. 149; 37 L. J., C. P. 74; 16 W. R. 312; 17 L. T., N. S. 507.

The exception in s. 8 of 37 & 38 Vict. c. 54, to the right of a tenant of a mine to deduct one-half of the rate newly imposed by that act, and paid by him, from the rent, payable to his lessor, namely, "unless he has specifically contracted to pay such rate in the event of the abolition of the exemption" does not take effect in favor of the lessor, unless the lease has in terms anticipated the imposition of this new liability, and thrown it upon the tenant; and a covenant to pay the rent, "free of and from all rates, taxes, tithe rent charges, expenses and deductions whatsoever, parliamentary, parochial or of any other nature," will not deprive the tenant of his right to make the deduction given by the above section. Devonshire v. Barron Hamatite Steel Company, 42 L. J., Q. B. Div. 90; affirmed on appeal, 46 L. J., Q. B. Div. 435; 2 L. R., Q. B. Div. 286—C. A.

As to set-off against rent, generally,—see this title, VII., 4.

Recovering back from landlord after payment of rent without deduction.—If a tenant pays taxes which he alleges ought to have been paid by his landlord, and afterwards pays rent for two years subsequently, without making any deduction, he cannot recover the amount against the landlord. Saunderson v. Hanson, 3 C. & P. 314—Tenterden.

A broker, who, when receiving rent under a distress, deducts a sum purporting to be for land tax, is not to be considered as allowing the land tax, so as to affect the landlord's right, but as merely, from not knowing how to act, consenting to receive the money without the sum deducted. Id.

Where a tenant has voluntarily paid his full rent, without deducting a landlord's tax, for upwards of a year, he can neither recover it back, nor plead it as a payment in replevin. Andrew v. Hancock, 1 B. & B. 37; 3 Moore, 278. And see Fuller v. Abbott, 4 Taunt. 105.

By an agreement marsh lands were demised subject to a condition that the tenant should pay all outgoings, rates, taxes, scots, &c., whether parochial or parliamentary, which were and might be chargeable on the lands. An assessment was made by the commissioners of sewers for the permanent benefit of the lands, in certain proportions, upon the owners and occupiers. For four years the tenant paid, in the first instance, both his own share and that of his landlords, and upon each half-year's settlement of accounts for rent due with the landlord's agent, who was ignorant of the agreement, the sum so paid was allowed towards the rent, and the receipts were given for the balance:—Held, in an action brought upon the agreement to recover the sums so allowed as arrears of rent, that the facts supported a plea of payment of the rent. Waller v. Andrews, 3 M. & W. 312.

A plea in bar to a cognizance for a distress for rent, stated that divers sums had been from time to time duly assessed on the premises for land tax, and paid by the plaintiff, wherefore he deducted the amount of the tax, which the defendant, as landlord, was liable to bear in respect of rent:—Held, that this plea was bad; first, in not stating the specific periods for which the respective sums were assessed or paid; and, secondly, in not stating that the payment was made after the rent distrained for had accrued, or was then accruing due. Stubbs v. Parsons, 3 B. & A. 516.

As to recovering back rent from landlord, —see this title, VII., 4.

VII. RENT.

1. Contracts to pay; Reservation.

Covenants and agreements to pay, in general.—There is an implied covenant for payment of rent under the words "yielding and paying." Iggulden v. May, 9 Ves. 330; East, 237; 3 Smith, 209; 2 N. R. 440.

Where it appears on the face of a lease, as set out in a declaration, in an action on the covenant for rent, that the lessor has only an equitable interest, the covenant for the payment of the rent may be properly treated as a covenant in gross. Pargeler v. Harris, 7 Q. B. 708; 10 Jur. 260; 15 L. J., Q. B. 113.

Upon the marriage of A., the grandson of W., from whom A. had large expectations, a house and lands were settled upon A., and it was agreed that the grandfather should occupy the house and lands, and also some glebe-lands belonging to A. There was evidence as to the rent that was to be paid, which was about the actual value. A. never enforced the rent during the eight years of his grandfather's occupancy, which ceased with his death, but had received sums in money and goods equal to about half the alleged rent. Stuart, V. C., allowed an exception to the master's report, allowing the rent as alleged. But Cranworth, C., reversed his decision, coming to the conclusion that there was either an express contract to pay the rent, or an agreement to occupy as any other tenant, and pay a quantum meruit; the sums and goods paid to go towards the rent. Alington v. Booth, 3 Jur., N. S. 50—C.

Where a contract was made by the plaintiff and A., that A. should build houses on the plaintiff's land and procure tenants for the same at a given rate, and himself pay the rent till he so procured tenants from the Michaelmas then next ensuing:—Held, that, under this contract, no tenancy was created between the plaintiff and A. Taylor v. Jackson, 2 C. & K. 22—Erle.

The plaintiff being the owner of a farm, and lessee of the tithe commutation rent-charge, under a dean and chapter, at a rent of 60*l.* per year, let the land verbally to the defendant at a rent of 400*l.* a year, tithe free:—Held, that, as by 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 80, in the event of the defendant distraining for the tithe rent, she would be compelled to allow the same to the plaintiff in account, the plaintiff was tenant to the defendant, at a rent of 400*l.* Meggison v. Bowes, 7 Exch. 683; 21 L. J., Exch. 284.

A declaration averred that the plaintiffs, being tenants to H., of chambers at a certain rent, payable quarterly, underlet them to the defendant, who undertook to pay the rent to H., and agreed that if he did not do so he would indemnify the plaintiffs in respect thereof, and that the defendant did not pay the rent to H., nor indemnify the plaintiffs:—Held, that whether the contract meant that the defendant was to pay to H. the rent due from the plaintiffs to H., or to pay the rent under the demise from the plaintiffs, the promise of the defendant to pay did not extend beyond the term of his own tenancy. Smith v. Coles, 1 L., M. & P. 794; 10 C. B. 6; 15 Jur. 250; 20 L. J., C. P. 37.

The defendant entered into a written agreement with the plaintiff to take premises at a rent of 20*s.* a week, payable on demand, and subject to four weeks' notice to quit on either side. During the continuation of this tenancy, a verbal agreement was made between the parties that the rent should be 16s. a week, and the defendant for several weeks paid this reduced amount, and on one occasion submitted to a distress:—Held, that there was no fresh demise, and that the original rent continued to be the rent payable for the premises. Crowley v. Vitty, 7 Exch. 319; 21 L. J., Exch. 135.

A. demised to B. premises from the 15th of May, 1851, at the yearly rent of 145*l.*, payable on November 14th and May 14th. These premises had been let to C., whose tenancy expired on the 13th May, 1851, and who had omitted to give a notice to quit to one of his under-tenants, who occupied a cottage, at a yearly rent of 5*l.*; and in consequence B. could not obtain possession of that part of the premises. It was then agreed that A. should receive from the under-tenant rent for two half years, and deduct that 5*l.* from the rent to be paid for the whole by B., and that B. should pay 70*l.* to A. on the 14th of November, 1851, and 14th of May, 1852:—Held, that such agreement operated as a new demise, and that A. was entitled to distrain for 70*l.*, which became due on the 14th of November. Watson v. Waul, 9 Exch. 335; 22 L. J., Exch. 161.

W. and B. entered into partnership in 1801 as millers, W. being at the time the freeholder of a steam mill and four acres of land, subject to a mortgage. One of the provisions of the partnership articles was that the business should be carried on upon the mill and premises. The articles also provided that the stock and effects of W. should be taken at a valuation by the partnership, and that the annual sum of 210*l.* should be allowed and paid out of the partnership property to W., his heirs and assigns, in equal half-yearly payments. No formal demise of the mill and land was made to the partnership. In 1870 the partners were adjudicated bankrupt, and W. instituted proceedings for liquidation in respect of his separate estate. The trustee of his separate estate claimed 700*l.* as arrears of rent under the partnership articles against the joint estate. The mortgagees also served notices upon the trustee of the joint estate, requiring him to pay to them all rent due and thereafter to become due:—Held, that no rent, properly so called, was due under the agreement, the relation of landlord and tenant not having been created. Appleby, Ex parte, Wyche, In re, 20 W. R. 411—C. J. B.

A lease is a sale pro tanto, and a premium reserved on a lease is in the nature of purchase-money, for which, if unpaid, there is a lien on the land; and consequently, unpaid premium is an interest in land within 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 3. Shepherd v. Beetham, 46 L. J., Chanc. Div. 763; 6 L. R., Ch. Div. 597; 25 W. R. 764; 36 L. T., N. S. 909—V. C. M.

As to construction of covenants for payment of money, generally,—see COVENANT.

—to pay additional rent, as penalty or liquidated damages.]—Upon a covenant not to plow up any ancient meadow, and, if he does, to pay an additional yearly rent per acre:—Held, that the increased rent was not a penalty, but a liquidated satisfaction fixed and agreed upon by the parties; and therefore a court of equity ought not to interpose in an action brought for the recovery of it. Rolfe v. Peterson, 2 Bro. P. C. 436.

On a reservation of 5*l.* per acre during the last twenty years of a term for every acre of meadow thereby demised, which the tenant should plow, dig, ear, break up, or convert into tillage during the last twenty years of the term, and so after that rate for any greater or less quantity than an acre, or less term than a year, the rent is due in the last twenty years if the land is then plowed, whether it was first plowed within the last twenty years or before; and the rent continues payable during the twenty years, though the land is again laid down to permanent grass. Birch v. Stephenson, 3 Taunt. 469. And see Howell v. Richards, 11 East, 633.

In an action of covenant by lessor against lessee, on a lease reserving an increased rent for every acre of certain lands converted into tillage, the jury having given damages for the actual injury sustained instead of the increased rent, the court granted the plaintiff a new trial, although it was urged that the verdict was consistent with justice, the judge having expressly directed the jury to find damages to the amount of the increased rent; and it was granted without payment of costs. Farrant v. Olmius, 3 B. & A. 692.

A lease granted by virtue of a power, enabling a tenant for life to make leases without impeachment of waste, contained a proviso, that the tenant should pay a further rent of 10*l.* per acre for plowing up pasture land, or for managing the farm contrary to the covenants. In an action to recover the penalty, a motion in arrest of judgment, on the ground that this amounted to a license to commit waste, was disallowed. Bringloe v. Goodson, 8 Scott, 71; 5 Bing. N. C. 738; 1 Arn. 322.

A farm and lands were demised to a tenant at a yearly rent, and also under and subject to certain yearly payments in case the tenant should not crop, manure, and manage the farm in manner therein specified and covenanted; and also, in case the tenant, in the last three years of the term, should sow more than seventy acres of clover in one year, the additional rent of 10*l.* an acre, for every acre above seventy acres, for the remainder of the term:—Held, that the additional rents were in the nature of liquidated damages, and not of penalties. Jones v. Green, 3 Y. & J. 298.

A lease contained a stipulation, that, for every acre, and so on in proportion for a less quantity of the land which the lessee should suffer to be occupied by any other person without the consent of the landlord, an additional rent should be paid. The tenant undertook to use, occupy, dress, and manure the land according to the custom of the country. The tenant, without the consent of the landlord, suffered other persons to use small portions of the land for the purpose of raising a potato crop. It was proved to be the custom of the country for farmers to pursue that course:—Held, that the landlord was entitled to the additional rent, this being an occupation by other persons. Greenslade v. Tapscott, 1 C., M. & R. 55; 4 Tyr. 566.

In a lease of land, the lessee, in addition to a reserved rent, covenanted to pay a penal rent for pasture land broken up, or "used or converted to any other use than for meadow land:—Quære, whether using the land as a race-course and ground for training horses was a breach of the covenant? at all events, the question is one for a jury, and not determinable by the court on demurrer. Aldridge v. Howard, 5 Scott, N. R. 623; 4 M. & G. 921.

A declaration on an indenture stated, that the plaintiff demised to the defendant a farm for ninety-nine years, at a yearly rent of 100*l.*; and also yielding and paying unto the plaintiff, upon the days of payment of the yearly rent first reserved, over and above the same rent, a further yearly rent or sum, according to the rate of 20*l.* the acre, of any grazing or mowing land which the defendant should cause to be plowed or used in tillage without the consent of the plaintiff; and also yielding and paying unto the plaintiff, upon the days of payment of the yearly rent first named, over and above the rent so reserved, according to the rate of 20*l.* the acre of any of the land which the defendant should underlet, or upon which he should sow potatoes, or from which he should take more than three crops of corn or grain in any one course of tillage, or from which should be taken a second or other crop of wheat without making a clean summer fallow, or from which should be taken a third crop in any one course of tillage, without seeding down the same. "The several eventual or contingent rents, if any such should become due, to be additional to the first-mentioned rent, and to be paid and payable half-yearly, by equal portions, and the first payment to become due and be made at that day of payment of the first-mentioned rent which should first or next happen after such eventual or contingent rent should be incurred, and to continue payable from thenceforth during all the residue of the term created." A breach, that the defendant, in three successive years and in one course of tillage, to wit, 1843, 1844 and 1845, took three successive crops of corn, to wit, of oats, and did not seed down, whereby he became liable to pay a certain other yearly rent, of 125*l.*; and although one half-yearly payment of the rent had become due—viz., on the 25th of March, 1845, yet the defendant had not paid the same. Another breach, that although two other half-yearly payments of the rent had become due—viz., on the 29th of September, 1845, and the 25th of March, 1846, yet defendant had not paid the same. Upon the production of the lease at the trial, it appeared, that in addition to the reddendum as set out in the declaration, it contained the following:—"And also yielding and paying unto plaintiff, upon the days for payment of the rent first reserved, over and above the same rent, the further yearly rent or sum of 20*l.* the acre of land which should be mowed, unless the defendant should once at the least in every three years bring thereon sufficient manure:—Held, that the variance could not be taken advantage of on a plea of non est factum. Boicars v. Nixon (in error), 13 Jur. 834—Exch. Cham.: S. C., in court below, 12 Q. B. 558, n.; 18 L. J., Q. B. 85.

Held, also, that the defendant was liable to the contingent rent reserved in the third branch of the reddendum for taking three successive crops of oats without seeding down. Ib.

In a subsequent action to recover the half-yearly payments due on the 29th of September, 1846, and the 25th of March, 1847, the declaration was as before:—Held, that the sums reserved in the third clause of the reddendum were payable as rent annually during the residue of the term, and not as a penalty on the occurrence of every breach of the covenant. Ib.

A tenant agreed, in case of breach of all or any of the conditions contained in the contract, to pay an additional or penal rent, to be recovered by distress or otherwise as the reserved rent was recoverable by law as between landlord and tenant:—Held, that the additional rent was not a penalty. Wright v. Tracy, 7 Ir. R., C. L. 184—C. P.

In 1862, A. agreed to lease a mine to B. Disputes arose between the parties, and A. brought an action against B. under the agreement, and B. filed a bill against A. to have the agreement set aside. The parties then referred all the matters in dispute between them to arbitration, and the arbitrator awarded that the agreement for a lease was valid; that it should be canceled, and that B. should pay to A. 5,513*l.* B. died, and a suit was instituted to administer his estate, under which A. carried in a claim to rank as a specialty creditor in respect of the sum awarded:—Held, that the sum was awarded by way of damages and not for rent, and therefore was not entitled to rank as a specialty debt. Talbot v. Shrewsbury, 16 L. R., Eq. 26—V. C. M.

A lease contained covenants by the lessee, to pay an increased rent of 20*l.* for every acre which he should plow up over and above one-third part of the demised lands; and also that, in case he should plow up one-third, or greater or less part, he should lay down the same with clover or grass seeds. The lessee plowed more than one third, paid the increased rent for it, and then laid it down in pasture:—Held, that, upon the construction of both the covenants taken together, the increased rent ceased to accrue from the time that the plowed land had been restored to pasture. Domeile v. Forda, 7 Ir. R., C. L. 534—Q. B.

As to distinction between penalties and liquidated damages, generally,—see CONTRACT OR AGREEMENT.

To what parties rent reserved is payable.]

—Upon a lease by tenants in common the survivor may sue for the whole rent; although the reservation is to the lessors according to their respective interests. Wallace v. M'Laren, 1 M. & R. 516.

One of several joint tenants may demand and receive the whole rent due, and give a discharge for it, and such a discharge is good and binding on his companions. Robinson v. Hoffman, 1 M. & P. 474; 4 Bing. 562; 3 C. & P. 234.

One or two joint tenants may demise his or their portion to another, so as to create the relationship of landlord and tenant between them, with a right to distrain in respect of rent in arrear. Cooper v. Fletcher, 34 L. J., Q. B. 187; 13 W. R. 739; 12 L. T., N. S. 420; 6 B. & S. 464.

Where one seized in fee settles lands on himself for life, with remainders to other persons, reserving a leasing power, which he afterwards exercises, reserving rent to himself, his heirs and assigns, those in remainder shall have the rent. Greenaway v. Hart, 14 C. B. 340; 2 C. L. R. 370; 18 Jur. 449; 23 L. J., C. P. 115.

So where one seized in fee settles lands on A. for life, with remainders, and gives him a leasing power, which he exercises, reserving rent during the term to himself, his heirs and assigns, those in remainder shall take it. Id.

The defendant being in possession of premises under a lease from two trustees, of a term which had expired, a new lease was granted for a further term, but was executed by one only of the trustees. The defendant paid rent to both trustees until one of them died, and for the rent due after his death the other trustee brought an action for use and occupation:—Held, that he might maintain the action in his own name and right, and was not bound to sue as surviving trustee. Wheatley v. Boyd, 7 Exch. 20.

B., being mortgagee in fee simple of lands, and the equity of redemption in fee belonging to Billings by indenture of lease and release, dated October, 1839, between Billings of the first part, B. of the second part, T. of the third part, and H. of the fourth part, Billings did limit and appoint, and B. conveyed to H., and Billings confirmed, the lands, to have and to hold the same to H., his heirs and assigns, to the use of H., his heirs and assigns, forever, subject to a proviso for redemption, by Billings, his heirs and assigns, on payment of 5,000*l.* There was a proviso, that if default should be made in payment of that money, it should be lawful for H., his heirs and assigns, to sell. This deed contained a proviso for quiet enjoyment by Billings, until default; also the following:—"Provided always, and it is expressly agreed and declared between and by the parties, that if at any time hereafter, when and so soon as H., and every other person claiming or to claim by, from, through or under him, shall, under or by virtue of any power or authority herein contained, enter into or upon or otherwise become possessed of the premises, or any part thereof, the same shall thenceforth be subjected and be charged to and with the payment to Billings and his assigns of the annual sum of 40*l.*; and the same shall thenceforth be recovered or recoverable by distress or otherwise, upon or out of the mortgaged premises." This conveyance was executed by B. and Billings, but not by H. Default having been made in payment, H. entered into possession for the purpose of exercising the power of sale, and by deed, dated 1847, he conveyed to T., who entered into possession of the lands, and duly paid the 40*l.* rent:—Held, first, that the charge of the rent of 40*l.* a year was not a good reservation of a rent, inasmuch as it was in favor of a person not having a legal estate in the land. Gilbertson v. Richards, 4 H. & N. 277; 28 L. J., Exch. 158.

Held, secondly, that there was no creation of a rent-charge, good at common law, because the releasee in fee simple did not execute the deed of 1838. Id.

Held, thirdly, that the rent was well created by way of use under the statute. Id.

Held, fourthly, that the declaration of this use, though after the limitation of the estate to H., and his heirs and assigns, to the use of H., his heirs and assigns, was not open to objection as being a use upon a use. Id.

Held, fifthly, that assuming that the rent might arise at any time, however distant, the limitation was not void for remoteness as tending to a perpetuity. Id.

By a turnpike act it was provided, that in leases of the tolls, the rent shall be made payable to the treasurer, and that in default, every such lease shall be null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever. A lease was made whereby the rent was reserved to the trustees or their treasurer:—Held, first that the reservation in the alternative was bad within the former part of this clause: and, secondly, that the words "null and void to all intents and purposes" were to be construed as meaning absolutely void, and not voidable only. Pearse v. Morrice, 4 N. & M. 48; 2 A. & E. 84.

As to effect of assignment of rent or reversion,—see this title, IX.

Amount of rent.]—A net rent is a sum to be paid to the landlord clear of all deductions. Bennett v. Womack, 7 B. & C. 637; 1 M. & R. 644; 3 C. & P. 96.

If A. agrees to let, and B. to take a messuage, from a day past, for a term of ten years, "at and under the rent of 80*l.*," this is an agreement by B. to pay a rent of 80*l.*; and therefore, if there is a power of re-entry in case of a breach of "any of the agreements therein contained," A. has a power of re-entry for non-payment of rent, and may bring ejectment, although there is no express agreement to pay the rent. Doe d. Rains v. Kneller, 4 C. & P. 8—Tenterden.

A. demised a colliery to B., and B. covenanted to pay as rent "one-third part of the money that should arise, be made, received, or produced from the sale of the coals;" and covenanted to keep "true accounts of all coal daily raised, and to make and deliver true copies thereof to A.:"—Held, that, taking the two covenants together, the rent was to be calculated on the amount of coal sold, and not on the amount of money actually received. Edwards v. Rice, 7 C. & P. 840—Coleridge.

In an action on an indenture of demise of a coal mine, made on the 8th July, 1805, reserving one-fourth of the coal raised, or the value in money, at the election of the lessor; and if the one-fourth fell short of 400*l.* per annum, then reserving such additional rent as would make up that annual sum, to be rendered monthly in equal portions:—Held, that the lessor having elected to take the whole in money, might declare for two years and three months' rent in arrear. But even if the money rent was reserved annually, the plaintiff might remit his claim as to the three months' rent, and enter up judgment for the two years' rent only. Buckley v. Kenyon, 10 East, 139.

A lease of mines was granted for thirty years in consideration of 250*l.* paid down, and a reservation of 500*l.* to be paid annually during the first ten years, which, with a power of re-entry in case of non-payment, was reserved to the lessor, his heirs and assigns. The payments were to be made clear of all deductions for rates and taxes except property tax, and, if more than one acre per annum was worked, the 500*l.* for that year was to be increased proportionately, but no payments were to be made after the total sum of 5,000*l.* had been thus paid:—Held, that the annual payments of 500*l.* were of the nature of rent, and were not installments of unpaid purchase-money. Barrs v. Lea, 12 W. R. 525; 33 L. J., Chanc. 437—V. C. W.

In a lease of land for twenty-one years, from 25th of March, 1848, it was covenanted that the lessee should pay a stipulated sum for the first year, with a proviso that the rent for each subsequent year of the term should be reduced or increased, according to the average price of wheat in any one year of the term, such average to be taken and ascertained from the then 'current year's averages, which were taken in the month of January in every year, under and by virtue of the Tithe Commutation Act, 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 56, which is the result of the sales during seven years ending on Thursday next before Christmas-day then next preceding:—Held, that the rent must be computed according to each septennial average so published in each year. Kendall v. Baker, 11 C. B. 542; 16 Jur. 479; 21 L. J., C. P. 110.

Time for which rent is payable.—A subsequent agreement may by relation operate to make a reservation of rent from the beginning. M'Leish v. Tate, Cowp. 781.

On a parol demise, rent was to be payable from the Lady-day following:—Held, that evidence of the custom of the country was admissible to show that the parties meant Old Lady-day. Doe d. Hull v. Benson, 4 B. & A. 588. S. P. Denn d. Peters v. Hopkinson, 3 D. & R. 507.

But parol evidence is not admissible to prove an additional rent payable by a tenant, beyond that expressed in the written agreement for a lease. Preston v. Morceau, 2 W. Bl. 1249.

As to commencement and duration of term, —see this title, II., 2.

At what time rent becomes payable.—Under an agreement for the quarterly payment of rent, the first payment becomes due at the end of the first quarter, and the custom of the country to pay rent in advance cannot be imported into it. Doe d. Mitchell v. Weller, 1 Jur. 622.

By an agreement dated the 8th September, the defendant agreed to let a house to the plaintiff for seven years, at an annual rent, payable quarterly, the first payment to be made on the 25th of March following:—Held, that a quarter's rent only became due on the 25th March. Hutchins v. Scott, 2 M. & W. 809; M. & H. 194.

But under a reddendum of a yearly rent, payable by four equal quarterly payments, commencing from the 25th day of March, then instant, the first quarter's rent is payable on the said 25th day of March; and, consequently, the rent is a beforehand rent. Hopkins v. Helmore, 3 N. & P. 453; 8 A. & E. 463; 1 W., W. & H. 386; 2 Jur. 856.

By indenture of 21st March, 1828, a lessor demised a messuage to the tenant, habendum from 25th March then instant, for the term of seven years then next ensuing, wanting seven days, yielding and paying yearly and every year during the term the yearly rent of 285*l.* by four equal quarterly payments, on the 25th March, 24th June, 20th September, and 25th December in every year, commencing from 25th March then instant; and the lessee covenanted to pay the yearly rent of 285*l.* on the days and in the manner appointed:—Held, that 285*l.* was payable for each year; and that either the first payment was to be made on the 25th March, 1828, or a payment on 25th March, 1835, though after the expiration of the term. Id.

By a memorandum in writing, A. agreed to let to B. a house at a yearly rent of 50*l.*, with a proviso that A. should, in consideration of the yearly rent being duly paid, give B. quiet possession of the house; and B. agreed to pay the rent, and all taxes. The memorandum concluded thus:—"likewise the stable and loft over, now occupied by H., at a further rent of 25*l.* per annum, to be paid on the usual quarter-days:"—Held, that the reservation of quarterly payments applied only to the 25*l.* rent, and not to the 50*l.* Coombes v. Howard, 1 C. B. 410.

A. agreed to let to, and B. agreed to take the second floor in a house, to hold from the 25th of March, 1844, for a twelvemonth certain, and thence for the continuance of the term of A.'s interest in the premises, until determined by a six months' notice from B., expiring at any quarter of a year, at the rent of 120*l.* a year:—Held, that, after the expiration of the first twelve months, the rent continued to be payable yearly. Collett v. Curling, 10 Q. B. 785; 11 Jur. 890; 16 L. J., Q. B. 890.

A covenant that half a year's rent shall remain in the hands of the tenant till the last year, means the current half year. — v. Nicholls, Lofft, 893.

The defendant avowed that the rent was payable at Martinmas, to wit, November 23d:—Held, that this must be taken to mean New Martinmas; and the plaintiff having shown that the rent was, in fact, payable at Old Martinmas, the court refused to set aside a verdict given for him. Smith v. Walton, 8 Bing. 235; 1 M. & Scott, 380.

By a memorandum dated the 31st of January, 1840, between B. and J., J. agreed to become the tenant of the S. farm at the customary time of entry, under the following conditions: viz., that 260*l.* annual rent should be paid at the usual time for the house, premises and lands as agreed upon; and B. agreed to lay out in the improvements of the farm-house a sum not exceeding 200*l.*:—Held, that this agreement did not necessarily import, in point of law, that the year's rent was to be payable at the end of the year from the time of entry; but that it might be shown from the contemporaneous or subsequent dealings of the parties, that their understanding was, that the rent should become payable at an earlier period. Gore v. Loyd, 12 M. & W. 463; 13 L. J., Exch. 306.

The plaintiff and defendant agreed that the plaintiff should let, and the defendant take, premises, subject to the approval by the superior landlord of the lease; that the plaintiff should forthwith apply to the superior landlord for a license to demise, and for the defendant to carry on a certain trade, and that the defendant, "until the lease should be granted, should hold and occupy the premises at the annual rent of 130*l.*":—Held, that the rent was not payable until the required consents had been obtained. Brook v. Fletcher and Company, 37 L. T., N. S. 100—Q. B. Div.

When rent is payable in advance.—Where there was a stipulation for "rent to commence at Michaelmas, and to be paid three months in advance, such advance to be paid on taking possession":—Held, that the stipulation could only go for the advance of the first quarter's rent. Holland v. Palser, 2 Stark. 161—Ellenborough.

A. held premises of B. under a lease for three, seven, or ten years, determinable on notice, with a stipulation that the amount of a quarter's rent should be paid by A. on taking possession, which was to be allowed to him for the last quarter's rent "on the determination of the tenancy." After a notice to determine the lease at the expiration of the third year had been given, and before its expiration, the parties verbally agreed that A. should continue tenant for another year, no express mention being made of the terms of the tenancy:—Held, that the above was, in substance, a stipulation for a forehand rent, and that in the absence of any express mention of other terms, A. continued to hold, subject to the terms of the original lease, and consequently, that the payment made on taking possession was applicable to the last quarter of the fourth year. Finch v. Miller, 5 C. B. 428.

In 1851, A. became tenant of premises under terms of a written agreement (not under seal) for a term of three years, the rent payable quarterly in advance. A. occupied the premises for some time, and paid several quarters' rent, and the receipts given to him by the agent of the landlord stated that such payments were in advance, although, in fact, A. never paid the rent in advance:—Held, that although the agreement was void under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 8, as not being under seal, still that the receipts taken were ample evidence of the tenancy being upon the terms of the rent being payable quarterly in advance. Lee v. Smith, 9 Exch. 662; 2 C. L. R. 1079; 23 L. J., Exch. 108.

By an agreement for the sale of a house and land, 75*l.*, part of the purchase-money, was payable on signing the agreement, and 1,500*l.*, the remainder of the purchase-money, was payable, with interest, on a day certain; and after stipulating for the delivery of an abstract of title and the time within which the title should be deemed accepted, the agreement stated that, as the purchaser was to be let into immediate possession, and for the purpose of securing the due performance of the several agreements therein contained, the purchaser admitted himself to be a tenant from week to week to the vendor of the hereditaments thereby agreed to be sold, at the weekly rent of 80*l.*, payable in advance:—Held, that the agreement gave a right of distress to the vendor for the sum payable as a weekly rent. Yeoman v. Ellison, 36 L. J., C. P. 326; 17 L. T., N. S. 65.

An agreement to take a house having been entered into, conditioned to pay two quarters' rent in advance, the tenant entered and failed to perform such condition. In an action to recover that sum:—Held, that a count for use and occupation did not apply to such a case, and that the plaintiff could only recover under a special count on the agreement. Angell v. Randall, 16 L. T., N. S. 489—B. C.

Right to payment in priority.—The estate of a deceased lessee, which was being administered by the court, was indebted to the lessor in 210*l.* for rent secured by covenant in the ordinary way:—Held, that the lessor was not entitled, since 39 & 40 Vict. c. 40, to be paid in priority to other creditors. Shirreff v. Hastings, 25 W. R. 842; 6 L. R., Ch. Div. 610—V. C. M.

2. Destruction of or Injury to Premises; Eviction or Expulsion of Tenant.

Effect of destruction of whole or part of premises.—A lessee, who covenants to pay rent and to repair, with an express exception of casualties by fire, is liable upon the covenant for rent, though the premises are burnt down, and not rebuilt by the lessor after notice. Belfour v. Weston, 1 T. R. 310.

The defendants were tenants from year to year to the plaintiff of the upper floors of a warehouse, at a rent payable quarterly; the premises were destroyed by an accidental fire in the middle of a quarter, and were wholly untenable until rebuilt about seven months after:—Held, that the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties was not determined by the destruction of the premises, but that the defendants remained liable for rent until the tenancy should be in the usual manner put an end to, and that such rent was recoverable in an action for use and occupation. Izon v. Gorton, 7 Scott, 537; 5 Bing. N. C. 501; 2 Arn. 39; 3 Jur. 653.

Where apartments were occupied under a parol agreement to pay an annual rent quarterly, and they were destroyed by fire in the middle of a quarter:—Held, that the tenant was liable to pay compensation for his actual occupation to the time when it ceased. Packer v. Gibbins, 1 G. & D. 10; 5 Jur. 1036; 1 Q. B. 421.

A tenant of premises demised by a written agreement is liable for rent accruing due after the premises have been burnt down, and are no longer habitable. Baker v. Holzapfelf, 4 Taunt. 45.

There is no equity in favor of a lessee of a house liable to repair with the exception of damage by fire, for an injunction against an action under the contract for payment of rent, upon the destruction of the house by fire. Holzapfelf v. Baker, 18 Ves. 115.

A testator directed his trustees to allow A. to occupy a mill, so long as he should think proper to do so, "he, nevertheless, keeping the premises in good and tenantable repair, and repairing," at a rent of 100l. A. accepted the gift, but the premises were afterwards totally destroyed by accidental fire:—Held, that he was bound to reinstate them, and was liable for the rent in the meanwhile, and that he could not escape from the liability to rebuild by declining any longer to retain them. Gregg v. Coates, 23 Beav. 33; 2 Jur., N. S. 964.

By an agreement between F., the receiver appointed in chancery for lands and buildings thereon, and J., it was recited that J. had expended money in improving the premises on the understanding that a lease should be granted to him, on the terms after mentioned, pursuant to a previous agreement with parties at the time interested; and that F., in consideration of the premises, and according to his power, agreed with J. to let to him, and J. agreed to take, the land, with the buildings thereon, lately converted at J.'s expense into a mill, and other things, to hold for twenty-one years, at rent payable quarterly; and it was agreed that, when that agreement should have been approved of by the Court of Chancery, or the master, or if it should be ascertained that such sanction was not necessary, a lease should be executed from F. to J. (and a counterpart by J.), under the terms of the agreement stipulated, which should contain covenants on the part of J. to pay the said rent in manner before mentioned, damage by fire excepted; and that, until the lease should be granted, F. might distrain "for all or any part of the rent hereby agreed to be paid." Provided that the agreement should be in all respects subject to the approbation of the Court of Chancery or the master, F. undertaking to endeavor to obtain such approbation, but if the approbation were refused, the agreement to be void. J. entered into possession and erected new buildings;—Held, that J. was tenant from year to year on such terms as would be inserted in a lease pursuant to the agreement so far as they were applicable to a tenancy from year to year; that, if any part of the premises originally demised was destroyed by fire, the result would be, not to destroy or suspend the whole rent, but to entitle J. to a deduction from the rent according to the proportion which the annual value of the destroyed part bore to the annual value of the whole, taking the whole to be the premises as originally demised, not as improved by subsequent additions made by J. Bennet v. Ireland, El., Bl. & El. 326; 28 L. J., Q. B. 48; 4 Jur., N. S. 1104.

Premises uninhabitable.—Where premises are held under a parol agreement, by which the landlord is to do the necessary repairs, and the tenant quits because the premises are in an untenable state, an action for use and occupation is maintainable, though, by the landlord's default, the tenant has not been, and could not be, during the period for which the rent is claimed, in actual beneficial occupation. Surplice v. Farnsworth, 7 M. & G. 576; 8 Scott, N. R. 307; 8 Jur. 760; 13 L. J., C. P. 215.

In an action by a landlord for rent, the tenant pleaded, in substance, that through the neglect and default of the landlord the house and premises which formed the subject of the letting had become unfit for habitation, in consequence of defects which the tenant was not bound to rectify, and that, the landlord having refused to remedy these defects when required to do so, the tenant quitted, and gave up to the landlord possession of the house and premises before any of the rent claimed had accrued:—Held, a bad plea. Murray v. Mace, 8 Ir. R., C. L. 396—Exch.

As to obligations to repair,—see this title, V. 1.

What amounts to an eviction or expulsion; and its effect.—An eviction by a landlord of his tenant from a part of the demised premises creates a suspension of the entire rent during the continuance of the eviction, but the tenancy is not thereby put an end to, nor is the tenant thereby discharged from the performance of his covenants other than the covenant for the payment of the rent. Morrison v. Chadwick, 7 C. B. 266; 6 D. & L. 567; 13 L. J., C. P. 189.

To constitute an eviction of a tenant by his landlord, which will operate as a suspension of rent, it is not necessary that there should be an actual physical expulsion from any part of the premises; but any act of a permanent character, done by the landlord or by his procurement, with the intention of depriving the tenant of the enjoyment of the premises as demised, or any part of them, will operate as such eviction. Upton v. Townsend, 17 C. B. 30; 1 Jur., N. S. 1089; 25 L. J., C. P. 44.

Where, after a fire on premises let to two different tenants by A., who was entitled to have the premises restored by the superior landlord, out of certain insurance moneys, A. approved of a new plan submitted to him by the superior landlord without the consent of the tenants, and the premises when rebuilt on that plan were, in the one case, a little smaller, and in the other, a little larger than before, and there was evidence of an intention to oust the tenants:—Held, in an action by A. for use and occupation, for rent accruing after the premises were so far advanced in rebuilding as to be permanently altered, that there was an eviction to which A. was a party, and that, therefore, the rent was suspended. Ib.

In an action upon a parol demise, a plea, that during the term it was agreed that the tenant should relinquish the possession to the landlord for a month, after which the possession should be resumed by the tenant; and that he did relinquish the possession, but the landlord would not restore the possession, is bad, as not showing an eviction or a surrender. Dunn v. Di Nuovo, 8 M. & G. 105; 3 Scott, N. R. 487.

In an action by a landlord against his tenant, on a farming lease, assigning breaches on his covenants:—1. To repair; 2, not to plow meadow land; 3, or depasture orchards; 4, or cut, lop, or injure trees, woods, or plantations; 5, or assign or under-let the premises, or any part thereof, without the landlord's consent in writing; he pleaded that, before any of the breaches assigned, he was evicted and kept out of part of the demised premises by the authority of the plaintiff:—Held, that the plea afforded no defense to the action. Newton v. Allin, 1 G. & D. 44; 1 Q. B. 518; 6 Jur. 90.

An owner of a house let the first floor to the defendant, who, being desirous to under-let, put a man in to show the rooms, and put up a bill in the window, stating that the rooms were to be let. The owner, annoyed by this proceeding, and by the conduct of the man, turned him out of the house, and took the bill down, but left the keys in the rooms. In an action for rent, the judge left it to the jury to say whether the assault upon the man was for the purpose of expelling him, or with the intention of evicting the defendant:—Held, right. Henderson v. Mears, 5 Jur., N. S. 709; 28 L. J., Q. B. 305; 7 W. R. 554; S. C., at Nisi Prius, 1 F. & F. 636.

The rent of four houses, demised for a term of years, being in arrear, and the lessee having assigned his lease, and two of the houses being unoccupied, the lessor took possession of these two, first, by putting a police constable in charge of them, and subsequently by putting a person in possession, under a parol agreement to grant a lease of the four houses as soon as possession of the two others was obtained:—Held, that taking possession of the unoccupied houses did not amount to an eviction. Wheeler v. Stevens, 6 H. & N. 155; 30 L. J., Exch. 46; 9 W. R. 233; 8 L. T., N. S. 702.

A lessee of mines of ironstone, coals, and other minerals demised the same for a term of years to the defendant, reserving a royalty upon the ore and coal raised by him, or an annual sum in lieu, if the royalties in any year should not amount to that sum, with power to the lessee to distrain for the rents, reservations and royalties, and with liberty to the defendant, during the demise, to use, jointly with the lessee, a railway then on the land demised; the defendant covenanting to repair the same or to do so jointly with others who might use it, he having leave to divert it at his own expense if he thought fit:—Held, that the fact, that the defendant had been prevented by the plaintiff from using the railway, did not constitute an eviction, so as to disentitle the plaintiff to the rent, the use of the railway being an easement, and not part of the demise. Williams v. Hayward, 5 Jur., N. S. 1417; 28 L. J., Q. B. 374; 7 W. R. 563; 1 El. & El. 1040.

8. Apportionment.

Statutes.]—[By 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 15, after reciting that, whereas, where any lessor or landlord, having only an estate for life in the lands, tenements, or hereditaments demised, happens to die before or on the day on which any rent is reserved, or made payable, such rent or any part thereof, is not by law recoverable by the executors or administrators of such lessor or landlord; nor is the person in reversion entitled thereto, any other than for the use and occupation of such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, from the death of the tenant for life, of which advantage hath been often taken by the under-tenants, who thereby avoid paying anything for the same; for remedy whereof, it is enacted, that where any tenant for life should happen to die before or on the day on which any rent was reserved or made payable upon any demise or lease of any lands, tenements or hereditaments which determined on the death of such tenant for life, the executors or administrators of such tenant for life shall and may, in an action on the case, recover of and from such under-tenant or under-tenants of such lands, tenements or hereditaments, if such tenant for life die on the day on which the same was made payable, the whole, or, if before such day, then a proportion of such rent, according to the time such tenant for life lived, of the last year, or quarter of a year, or other time in which the said rent was growing due as aforesaid, making all just allowances, or a proportionable part thereof respectively.

The 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 23, reciting the above section, and that doubts have been entertained whether the provisions of that act applied to every case, in which the interests of tenants determined on the death of the person by whom such interests have been created, and on the death of any life or lives, for which such person was entitled to the lands demised, although every such case is within the mischief intended to have been remedied and prevented by the act, and that it is desirable that such doubts should be removed by a declaratory law; and also reciting that by law, rents, annuities and other payments due at fixed or stated periods are not apportionable (unless express provision be made for the purpose), from which it often happens that persons (and their representatives) whose income is wholly or principally derived from these sources, by the determination thereof before the period of payment arrives, are deprived of means to satisfy just demands, and other evils arise from such rents, annuities and other payments not being apportionable, which evils require remedy, enacts and declares, that rents reserved and made payable on any demise or lease of lands, tenements or hereditaments, which have been and shall be made, and which leases or demises determined or shall determine on the death of the person making the same (although such person was not strictly tenant for life thereof), or on the death of the life or lives for which such person was entitled to such hereditaments, shall, so far as respects the rents reserved by such leases and recovery of a proportion thereof by the person granting the same, his or her executors or administrators (as the case may be), be deemed within the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19.

By s. 2, from and after the passing of this act (16 June, 1834), all rents-service reserved on any lease by a tenant in fee, of or for any life interest, or by any lease granted under any power (and which leases shall have been granted after the passing of the act, and all rents-charge and other rents, annuities, pensions, moduses, compositions, and all other payments of every description in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, made payable or coming due at fixed periods, under any instrument that shall be executed after the passing of the act, or (being a will or testamentary instrument) that shall come into operation after such date, shall be apportioned so and in such manner, that on the death of any person interested in any such rents, &c., or on the determination by any other means whatsoever of the interest of any such person, he or she and his or her executors, administrators or assigns, shall be entitled to a proportion of such rents, &c., according to the time which shall have elapsed from the commencement or last period of payment thereof, including the day of the death of such person, or of the determination of his or her interest, all just allowances and deductions in respect of charges on such rents, &c., being made, and that every such person, his executors, administrators or assigns, shall have such and the same remedies at law and in equity for recovering such apportioned parts of the said rents, &c., when the entire portion of which such apportioned part shall form part shall become due and payable, and not before, as he, she or they would have had for recovering and obtaining such entire rents, &c., if entitled thereto, but so that persons liable to pay rents reserved by any lease or demise, and the lands, tenements and hereditaments comprised therein, shall not be resorted to for such apportioned parts specifically as aforesaid, but the entire rents, of which such portions shall form a part, shall be received and recovered by the person or persons who, if the act had not passed, would have been entitled to such entire rents, and such portions shall be recoverable from such person or persons by the parties entitled to the same under this act in any action at law or suit in equity.

By s. 3, these provisions are not to apply to any case in which it shall be expressly stipulated that no apportionment shall take place, or to annual sums made payable in policies of assurance of any description.]

Commissioners under the powers of a private act purchased land lying partly in two parishes, for the purpose of forming a metropolitan road, and charged it with the payment of an annual rent. By the Metropolis Roads Act, 1863, 26 & 27 Vict. c. 78, s. 4, it was provided that so much of the road as lay within any parish mentioned in a schedule, which included the two parishes, should be dealt with as part of the common highways of the parish, and all quit-rents and other outgoings payable in respect thereof should be paid as part of the expenses of maintenance:—Held, that the effect of the act was to apportion the rent between the two parishes; and that the representatives of the person from whom the land was bought were entitled to recover from each of the parishes a proportional part of the rent; and that the proper form of declaration was one framed on the statute, and not for use and occupation. Sansom v. St. Leonard (Vestry), Shoreditch, 4 L. R., C. P. 654; 58 L. J., C. P. 286; 18 W. R. 40.

What rents apportionable.—Upon the death of a tenant in tail, the rent shall be apportioned. Page v. Gee, Amb. 198; 3 Swans. 604. S. P., Baillie v. Lockhart, 2 Macq. H. L. Cas. 253.

Land-tax, quit-rent, &c., are not apportionable as between tenant for life and remainderman. Sutton v. Chaplin, 10 Ves. 66.

A lessee of 100 acres of land accepted the lease, and entered upon the land. Upon his entry he found eight acres in the possession of a person entitled under a prior lease from the lessor, and that person kept possession of the eight acres until half a year's rent became due, and excluded the lessee from the enjoyment during that period, the lessee continuing in possession of the remainder. The prior lease was for a term extending beyond the duration of the latter lease:—Held, that the latter demise was wholly void as to the eight acres; and that the rent was not apportionable, and the lessor was not entitled to disstrain for the whole rent or any part of it. Neale v. Mackenzie (in error), 1 M. & W. 747; 2 Gale, 174—Exch. Cham.; reversing the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, in 2 C., M. & R. 84; 1 Gale, 119; 5 Tyr. 1106.

The 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 2, does not apply to rents payable by tenants from year to year, which have not been reserved by an instrument in writing. Markby, In re, 4 Mylne & C. 484; 8 Jur. 767.

The 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 2, applies to cases in which the interest of the person interested in such rents is terminated by his death, or by the death of another person; but does not apply to the case of a tenant in fee, or provide for apportionment of rent between the real and personal representatives of such person, whose interest is not terminated at his death. Broune v. Amyot, 3 Hare, 173; 13 L. J., Chanc. 233; confirmed by Beer v. Beer, 13 C. B. 60; 16 Jur. 223; 21 L. J., C. P. 124.

The 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 2, applies to rents reserved by leases granted after the passing of the act, in pursuance of a power created before the act. Plummer v. Whiteley, Johns. 585; 29 L. J., Chanc. 247; 5 Jur., N. S. 1416. S. P., Lock v. De Burgh, 4 De G. & S. 470; 15 Jur. 961; 20 L. J., Chanc. 384.

The 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, applies where either the instrument creating the life interest or the lease under which the rent is payable is dated after the statute. Llewellyn v. Rous, 12 Jur., N. S. 580; 35 Beav. 591.

An equitable tenant for life under a settlement of freehold leases for lives, obtained a renewed grant for lives to himself. At his death the property was in the occupation of yearly tenants, under parol demises by him:—Held, that the rents were not apportionable either under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, or under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22. Mills v. Trumper, 4 L. R., Ch. 320; 17 W. R. 428; 20 L. T., N. S. 384; overruling S. C., 1 L. R., Eq. 671; 12 Jur., N. S. 329; 14 L. T., N. S. 220; 14 W. R. 630—V. C. S.

The 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, applies to a case of an expiration of a term in trustees to accumulate rents, for payment of debts, legacies and other charges, with remainder to a tenant for life; as well as to the case of an estate for life to A., remainder to B. St. Aubyn v. St. Aubyn, 1 Drew. & Sm. 613; 30 L. J., Chanc. 917; 9 W. R. 922; 5 L. T., N. S. 519.

But the act only applies to rents reserved at fixed periods, and does not apply to royalties in the nature of rents, payable at uncertain periods; such as royalties payable upon the selling of ore from a mine. Id.

The 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, does not, apply to rents reserved by parol. Cattley v. Arnold, 1 Johns. & H. 651; 5 Jur., N. S. 361; 28 L. J., Chanc. 352. S. P., Alexander, In re, 4 Ir. Chanc. R. 257—R.

Therefore, where an owner of the fee demised by parol to tenants from year to year, and died, having devised the estates to a tenant for life, with remainder over:—Held, upon the death of the tenant for life, that the remainderman was entitled to the whole of the rents accruing for the half-year in which he died, without apportionment. Id.

So, also, where the parol demise originated with the tenant for life. Id.

A testator, whose will came into operation before 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, gave the rents of his real estates to his son after he should attain twenty-one, and directed personal estate to be invested in funds or securities, with power to invest in land. The son attained his majority in July, 1854:—Held, that he was entitled to receive the whole of the rents which became due in September on the devised estates and on the purchased estates, without regard to the date of the leases under which the rents became payable. Fletcher v. Moore, 3 Jur., N. S. 458; 26 L. J., Chanc. 530—V. C. K.

A devise was in trust for one for life, the remainder for his first and other sons in tail, remainder for testator's own right heirs. The devisee for life proved to be heir-at-law of the testator, and died intestate and without leaving issue:—Held, that notwithstanding the interposition of an estate tail which might have arisen and prevented the remainder in fee from vesting absolutely, the death of the devisee was not a determination of his interest, within the meaning of 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, and therefore the rents were not apportionable between his heir and his personal representative. Olulow, In re, 3 Kay & J. 689; 26 L. J., Chanc. 513.

A. died in 1838, having, by will, given real estates to trustees, in trust, after keeping up his mansion, to pay five-eighths of the net rents to his widow for life. The widow died in 1847, and rents were receivable on the next rent day, under leases created by A. anterior to 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22:—Held, that the rents were apportionable. Knight v. Boughton, 12 Beav. 812; 19 L. J., Chanc. 66.

The 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, extends to Scotland. Fordyce v. Bridges, 1 H. L. Cas. 1.

The Apportionment Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 35, applies to a specific devise of real estate, and generally as between the real and personal representatives; and that in a case where a will has been made before, and the testator has died after the passing of the act. Hasluck v. Pedley, 44 L. J., Chanc. 143; 19 L. R., Eq. 271; 23 W. R. 155—R.

A testator seized in fee devised real estate by a will dated before the Apportionment Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 35, and confirmed by a codicil dated after the act:—Held, that the rents were apportionable between the executor and the devisee. Capron v. Capron, 17 L. R., Eq. 288; 43 L. J., Chanc. 677; 22 W. R. 847; 20 L. T., N. S. 826—V. C. M.

Semble, that the result would have been the same without the codicil. Ib.

The 33 & 34 Vict. c. 33, has not the effect of altering the usual contract of purchase, so as to entitle a purchaser to obtain, out of the purchase money lodged by him, the portion of the head-rent from the last gale day to the time of his purchase. Keillor, In re, 6 Ir. R., Eq. 329.

Since the Apportionment Act, 1870, a devise of the testator's estate in fee does not, per se, pass rent which had accrued at the time of his death. Roseingraes v. Burke, 7 Ir. R., Eq. 186—V. C.

In what cases apportionment may be made.]

—A lease for years by a rector having ceased by his death, the succeeding incumbent received from the lessee a sum of money as the rent due for the whole year, in the course of which the lessor died:—Held, that the executor was entitled to an apportionment. Hawkins v. Kelly, 8 Ves. 308.

Semble, that if an act of parliament takes away a portion of the subject-matter of a demise, the lessee is not entitled to an apportionment of the rent. Harris v. Morrice, 10 M. & W. 260; 12 L. J., Exch. 43.

The 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 2, does not apply to cases where the party entitled to the rent himself puts an end to the term. Oldenshaw v. Holt, 4 P. & D. 307; 12 A. & E. 590; 1 A. & H. 1; 4 Jur. 1012.

A., in 1836, let land to B. under a building agreement; the rent was to commence at Christmas, 1838, and A. to have a right of re-entry in case of non-performance on the part of B. A. availed himself of this right of re-entry, and brought an ejectment, laying the demise on the 1st January, 1839. In September, 1838, he had re-let the land to C., at a rent to commence in 1840, which was equivalent in amount to that provided for by the first agreement. In an action by A. for breaking the first agreement:—Held, first, that the demise in the ejectment was to be taken as the date of the re-entry by A.; and that he was not entitled to that portion of the rent between the previous Christmas and that day, under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 2. Ib.

Held, that, secondly, it was properly left to the jury, as a mere money calculation, to say whether A. had sustained more than nominal damages by breach of the agreement. Ib.

The devisee of an estate for life is not entitled, as against him in remainder, to an apportionment of rents upon parol leases from year to year, created by his testator, and not since determined by himself by any act inter vivos. Cattley v. Arnold, 1 Johns. & H. 651; 5 Jur., N. S. 361; 28 L. J., Chanc. 352.

A tenant from year to year has a lease for a year certain, with a growing interest, during every year thereafter, springing out of the original contract, and parcel of it; and therefore, where such a tenancy has been created by an owner in fee of lands, who devises them to one for life with remainders over, the interest of the tenant from year to year, unless terminated by the devisee for life by some act inter vivos, does not determine upon the decease of the tenant for life; and, consequently, the rent then accruing due is not apportionable under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 15. Ib.

A. by will directed that, for twenty-one years next after his death, his trustees should receive and accumulate the rents and profits of his real estate, and apply towards payment of his debts and legacies, and, subject to that term, he gave the beneficial interest in the income of his estate, to B. for life:—Held, under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 2, that the rent which fell due after the expiration of the twenty-one years must be apportioned between those beneficially interested in the accumulations, and the tenant for life, who was entitled on the expiration of the term. St. Aubyn v. St. Aubyn, 30 L. J., Chanc. 917; 9 W. R. 922; 5 L. T., N. S. 519; 1 Drew. & Sm. 611.

A tenant in fee demised lands from year to year. He died, having devised the lands for life. The devisee for life received rent, but did not live long enough to have a right to determine the yearly tenancy:—Held, that the administrator of the tenant for life was not entitled to an apportionment of the rent under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 15. Botheroyd v. Woolley, 5 Tyr. 522; 1 Gale, 66.

C. occupied two parcels of land upon an understanding that he should let off a portion of it when he could. He paid the rent agreed upon for more than a year, and he then let off a portion of each parcel to A. and B. separately, who paid rent to D., and C. continued to hold the residue himself. The rent becoming in arrear, the landlord distrained:—Held, that there was evidence that the rent was apportionable, and that the landlord was entitled to distrain. Fletcher v. Trotman, 6 L. T., N. S. 218—Exch. Cham.

The Apportionment Act, 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 2, is not intended to apply as between a mortgagee, of a tenant for life, who has no entered and a remainderman, so as to give the mortgagee a right to rents which he would not have had until entry if the tenant for life had lived. Paget v. Angelsea, Watkins' claim, 43 L. J., Chanc. 437; 17 L. R., Eq. 288; 22 W. R. 507—R.

How apportionment may be made.]—Where a lease was made to A. of two houses adjoining each other, at one entire rent of 65l. 10s., and the lessor conveyed one of the houses by deed (to which the lessee was no party) to B. in fee, at an apportioned rent of 40l.:—Held, that such apportionment should have been made by a jury to give it validity, inasmuch as the grantee had not acquired the same rights and remedies against A., the lessee, as he would have acquired under the legal apportionment by a jury; the lessee not being bound by the apportionment in the conveyance to which he was no party, and the propriety of which he might dispute. Bliss v. Collins, 1 D. & R. 201; 5 B. & A. 876.

When a gift of part of a farm, subject to an entire rent, described it as "containing about ninety-eight acres, subject to the proportion of rent same bears to the whole," and the gift of the other part of the farm had described it as "containing about twenty acres, subject to the proportion of rent to which the entire of the lands is subject," the proportion of the rent to be borne by the twenty acres and ninety-eight acres respectively is to be determined by their relative value, and not by acreage. O'Connor v. O'Connor, 19 W. R. 60—Ir. R.

As to apportionment upon assignment or severance of reversion,—see this title, IX.

4. Payment; Set-off; Recovering back Rent paid.

How payment is made; and what amounts to a satisfaction of the rent, generally.]—A covenant for the payment of rent, at a specified time, when no particular place of payment is mentioned, is analogous to a covenant to pay a sum of money in gross on a day certain, and it is accordingly incumbent on the covenantor to seek out the person to be paid, and pay or tender him the money. Halliday v. Johnson, 8 Exch. 689; 17 Jur. 937; 23 L. J., Exch. 264.

A tenant having made payments to his landlord, and also advances at his request to a firm of which he was a member, on account (as the tenant alleged) of rent not then due:—Held, that if the advances were made on account of the rent, they were an answer to an action for the rent by the landlord's executors. Nash v. Gray, 2 F. & F. 391—Byles.

On the trial of an ejectment in 1835, between landlord and tenant, a verdict was taken by consent for the plaintiff, it being then agreed that the defendant "is not to be called upon for any rent now due." The defendant had, with another person, given a promissory note to his landlord, to secure the payment of a half-year's rent due at Lady-day, 1834:—Held, that this agreement extinguished the landlord's claim on the note. Howell v. Lewis, 7 C. & P. 566—Denman.

The payment of rent by a tenant to an authorized agent, who pays over the rent to his principal, is evidence as against the tenant of the principal's title, although the agent does not disclose his principal's name at the time. Hitchings v. Thompson, 5 Exch. 50; 19 L. J., Exch. 140.

B. leased a farm to A. for fourteen years, by deed, reserving rent payable quarterly. The lease contained various clauses by which A. and B. agreed to do certain things, and concluded with the following clause: "And the landlord further agrees and orders that K., or his appointed agent, is to receive all rents from the tenant at all times when it becomes due during the term hereby granted, and his receipt to be a full and sufficient discharge from all liability."—Held, that, K. having no interest in the rent, the agreement or authority for him to receive it was revocable. Venning v. Bray, 2 B. & S. 502; 8 Jur., N. S. 1033; 31 L. J., Q. B. 181; 10 W. R. 56; 6 L. T., N. S. 327.

As to time when rent is payable,—see this title, VII., 1.

Right to set off, against rent, payments of ground rent or other charges.]—A payment of ground rent by the occupier, in default of the mesne tenant, will operate as a discharge of the growing rent as well as of the rent actually due. Carter v. Carter, 5 Bing. 406; 2 M. & P. 723.

A plaintiff in replevin cannot plead in bar a set-off to an avowry for rent. Laycock v. Tuffnell, 2 Chit. 531.

But, to an avowry for rent, the tenant may plead payment of a ground rent to the original landlord. Sapaford v. Fletcher, 4 T. R. 511.

So, to an avowry for rent, the plaintiff in replevin may plead payment of an annuity, secured out of the lands demised, previously to the demise to him, for the arrears of which the grantee of the annuity threatened to distrain. Taylor v. Zamira, 2 Marsh. 220; 6 Taunt. 524.

In an action on a covenant for rent, the defendant pleaded that he was under-tenant of parcel of certain premises, for the whole of which the plaintiff, his lessor, covenanted to pay rent to the landlord paramount, and showed that he, the defendant, paid to the landlord paramount, under threat of distress, more rent than he owed to the plaintiff; the plaintiff traversed that any rent was due from himself to the landlord paramount:—Held, that this replication was not supported by proving that the plaintiff assigned his term in the residue of the premises to K., who assigned them to the defendant, who covenanted to pay in discharge of the plaintiff the whole rent reserved to the landlord paramount. Sturges v. Farrington, 4 Taunt. 614.

If a tenant, with the assent of his landlord, pays interest upon a mortgage charged on the premises demised, it is equivalent to a payment of rent pro tanto. Dyer v. Bouley, 9 Moore, 196; 3 Bing. 94.

To an avowry of a distress for rent the plaintiff pleaded that, before the defendant had any interest in the premises, they were mortgaged in fee; that the mortgagor remained in possession, and demised to the defendant; that the defendant, the mortgage money being still due, demised to the plaintiff; that afterwards, the mortgage-money being still due, and interest thereon, and 14*l.*, avowed for by the defendant, being also in arrear, the mortgagee gave notice to the plaintiff to pay the 14*l.* to him, instead of the defendant, and threatened, in case of non-payment, to put the law in force, and was then about to put the law in force, wherefore the plaintiff necessarily paid that sum to the mortgagee, and so the said sum was not in arrear:—Held, that the plea was good, being a plea of payment, and not of nil habuit in tenementis. Johnson v. Jones, 1 P. & D. 651; 9 A. & E. 809.

To an avowry for rent a plea in bar of payment to a ground landlord or other incumbrancer amounts to a plea of riens in arrears, and should be so pleaded. Jones v. Morris, 3 Exch. 749; 18 L. J., Exch. 477.

To an action for two years and a half rent, a plea, that, before the premises were demised to the defendant by the plaintiff, the plaintiff conveyed all her interest therein to A.; that the plaintiff, up to the time of the demise, was in possession of the premises; that, after the commencement of the suit, A. gave notice to the defendant, and demanded payment of such portion of the rent reserved as might, on a just apportionment, be found due, and threatened the defendant, in case of non-payment, to eject him, and put the law in force; that 40*l.* 10*s.* was the sum due on a just apportionment, wherefore the defendant paid the same to A., is bad, as a plea of payment, inasmuch as the alleged payment was not in satisfaction of any charge upon the land or of any debt due from A. Boodle v. Cambell, 8 Scott, N. R. 104; 2 D. & L. 60; 7 M. & G. 386; 8 Jur. 475; 13 L. J., C. P. 142.

In 1840, A., being lessee of a warehouse and cellar, under a demise from B., and also lessee, under C., of other adjoining property, comprising a vault, D. became tenant from year to year to A. of the warehouse and cellar, and the vault, at an annual rent of 185*l.*, made up of 140*l.* for the warehouse and cellar, and 45*l.* for the vault. On the 27th October, 1845, A. became bankrupt, 92*l.* 10*s.* being at that time due as rent from D. to A. His assignees, upon being appointed, elected to take the property held under B., and on 26th of February, 1846, elected not to take the property held under C. At Christmas, 1845, rent to the amount of 114*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* became due from A. to C., for which amount, on the 19th February, 1846, C. distrained upon the goods in the vault held by D., who, to relieve himself of that distress, paid that sum to C. An action having subsequently been brought by the assignees of A. against D., to recover the 92*l.* 10*s.*, and also 35*l.* for a quarter's rent, due at Christmas, 1845, for the warehouse and cellar:—Held, that D. was not entitled in such action to avail himself of the payment of 114*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, made by him to C. Graham v. Allsopp, 8 Exch. 186; 18 L. J., Exch. 85.

On a bill in equity for an injunction to restrain proceedings at law for rent, on the ground of an agreement under which the landlord was indebted more than the amount of the rent:—Held, that it was a legal set-off. Townrow v. Benson, 8 Madd. 203.

A. rented land of B., who was trustee of property (a part of which was this land), the rents of which B. was to pay in certain shares; one of those shares belonged to the wife of A.; B. having in his hands a greater amount due to A. in right of his wife than the rent amounted to:—Held, that this could not be set off against the rent without a special agreement to that effect. Wilson v. Davenport, 5 C. & P. 531—Parke.

Where a tenant of leaseholds, who had paid certain rents to one of the persons beneficially entitled thereto, filed a bill against the landlord, claiming to set off such payments and a private debt due from the landlord, against the rent due to the landlord as trustee, a demurrer for want of equity was allowed. Pratt v. Keith, 10 Jur., N. S. 305; 33 L. J., Chanc. 528—V. C. K.

By an agreement that a lessee should spend 200*l.* in repairs, to be inspected and approved of by the lessor, and to be done in a substantial manner, the lessee was to be allowed to retain the sum out of the first year's rent of the premises:—Held, that the lessor's approval was not a condition precedent to the lessee's retaining the rent. Dallman v. King, 4 Bing. N. C. 105; 5 Scott, 382; 3 Hodges, 283.

As to right of tenants to deduct rates and taxes from rent,—see this title, VI., 2.

Effect of payment and receipt.—Submitting to a distress or paying rent is only a prima facie evidence of a landlord's title as against a tenant. Cox v. Knight, 18 C. B. 645; 23 L. J., C. P. 314.

Where the only evidence of a tenancy is payment of rent, the person paying is in all cases at liberty to explain the payment and to show on whose behalf it was received. Doe d. Harvey v. Francis, 2 M. & Rob. 57—Patteson.

Where payment of rent unexplained would ordinarily imply a yearly tenancy, it is open to the payer or receiver of such rent to prove the circumstances under which such payment was made, for the purpose of repelling such implication. Doe d. Lord v. Crago, 6 C. B. 90; 12 Jur. 705; 17 L. J., C. P. 263.

In an action by overseers for use and occupation, and for rent of parish lands, evidence that the defendant and his ancestors had for upwards of a century, up to the last ten years, paid rent for the land as "common land" (he refusing to produce the deeds under which he professed to hold), is sufficient evidence to go to the jury, in the absence of any evidence that the payments were made by way of chief rent or rent-charge. Harden v. Hesketh, 28 L. J., Exch. 187.

A payment of rent by mistake or misrepresentation, to a person not entitled to demand it, does not preclude the tenant from showing that the person to whom it was paid was not entitled to it. Rogers v. Pücher, 1 Marsh. 541; 6 Taunt. 202.

The receipt of rent is no waiver of a continuing breach of covenant. Doe d. Batter or Baker v. Jones, 5 Exch. 498; 19 L. J., Exch. 405.

In 1635 the Earl of Pembroke became tenant, either at will or from year to year, of six acres and a half of charity lands lying interspersed within his Roehampton estate, for which 6*l.* per annum had ever since been paid. In course of time this estate became split up into several portions, passing into the hands of new purchasers from time to time. From recitals in early conveyances it appeared that the whole estate was treated as subject to this charge of 6*l.* per annum; together with three other perpetual charges of 40*l.*, 10*l.*, and 1*l.* per annum. According as parts of the estate were sold off, those parts were exonerated from these charges; until at last the mansion-house and thirty-one acres of the estate, the property of the defendant, alone remained charged therewith. The defendant and his ancestor had paid this 6*l.* per annum for many years. Upon an information by the trustees of the charity for a commission to mark out the boundaries of the six acres and a half:—Held, that although the defendant had for a long series of years paid the 6*l.* to the parish, upon receipts purporting to be for rent of parish land, he was not precluded from saying that he did not hold the land; and that he was at liberty to refer to his title-deeds to show the animus solventis, and to rebut the entries in the parish books, which were relied on to show that he had by his payments admitted himself to be an occupier of parish land. Att. Gen. v. Stephens, 6 De G., M. & G. 111; 2 Jur., N. S. 51; 25 L. J., Chanc. 888.

The plaintiffs were children of L. The tenant paid rents to an agent of the family, who gave a receipt "on account of the family of the late Mrs. L.:"—Held, evidence of a joint letting, and of a tenancy to them jointly. Last v. Dinn, 28 L. J., Exch. 84.

B., having leased his land to the plaintiff at a rent payable quarterly, subsequently mortgaged the land to the defendant, who allowed B. to remain in receipt of the rent. Subsequently to the mortgage, B. applied to the plaintiff, who was not aware of the mortgage, to pay him a year's rent in advance, and the plaintiff did so. After the payment, and before the rent had become due, the defendant gave notice to the plaintiff to pay the rent to him, and the plaintiff refusing to pay it, the defendant distrained for it:—Held, that payment of the rent before it became due was not a good payment as against the mortgagee, and that the plaintiff was still liable to pay him the rent. De Nicholls v. Saunders, 5 L. R., C. P. 589; 39 L. J., C. P. 297; 18 W. R. 1106.

An alteration in the landlord's receipts for rent, of the names of the occupying tenants, does not, unless known to have been assented to by all the parties interested, afford any evidence from which can be inferred either a change of the tenancy or a transfer of the legal rights. Bourke v. Bourke, 8 Ir. R., C. L. 221—C. P.

As to confirmation of lease by receipt of rent,—see this title, I., 2.

As to tenancy from year to year, arising from receipt of rent,—see this title, XVI.

Recovery back by tenant, of money paid as rent.—If A., who is tenant for life, subject to forfeiture, with remainder over to B., leases to C. for a term, and afterwards, apprehending that he has forfeited, acquiesces in B.'s claiming and receiving the rent from C., his executor may, on showing that he acquiesced under a false apprehension, recover from C. the amount of the rent erroneously paid to B. Williams v. Bartholomew, 1 B. & P. 326.

Where a tenant pur autre vie pays rent by mistake, after the life has dropped, he may recover back the rent, as money had and received, such action not being brought for the purpose of trying the title to the land. Barber v. Brown, 1 C. B., N. S. 121; 3 Jur., N. S. 18; 20 L. J., C. P. 41.

As to recovery of money paid as rates and taxes,—see this title, VI., 1.

5. Remedies for Recovery.

(a) Actions.

When action lies; defenses, &c.]—An action lies for rent reserved by indenture, and accruing before a re-entry for a forfeiture, notwithstanding the lessor, under such re-entry, is to have the premises again, "as if the indenture had never been made." Hartshorne v. Watson, 4 Bing. N. C. 178; 5 Scott, 506; 6 D. P. C. 404; 1 Arn. 15; 2 Jur. 155.

Where premises are demised by indenture at an entire rent, and there is a covenant by the lessee to pay such rent, no action for rent in arrear can be brought on such covenant, unless the lessee has been let into the full possession of the premises demised. Holgate v. Kay, 1 C. & K. 341—Rolfe.

Where, in such an action, the defendant in his plea sets forth the lease, and then avers, that "he entered and was possessed" of the premises thereunder, this will not estop him from proving, that, when he entered, he found some part of the premises in the possession of a third party under an adverse title. Id.

By a lease it was stipulated that the lessees should be at liberty to retain a rent of 1,100*l.* a year, or any part thereof, upon giving the lessor a bond to pay whatever they so retained, at the end of seventeen years, with interest. The lessees having omitted to pay the rent or give a bond, and the lessor having sued for the rent, the court refused to stay proceedings, on an affidavit, that, since the commencement of the suit, the lessees had executed and tendered to the lessor a bond for the amount retained and to be retained. Jones v. Wingfield, 3 M. & S. 849; 10 Bing. 308.

In an action for rent, where the title to the land is not in question, the tenant is estopped from saying the lease is not a good one; as that being a lease for lives it could not be granted without livery of seizin, or by lease and release, or bargain and sale; and that being a lease of a freehold it could not commence in futuro; for let the lease be what it will, the covenant is good; and, if otherwise, the tenant might enjoy the land, and yet the landlord have no remedy for his rent. Monroe v. Kerry, 1 Bro. P. C. 67.

S. and M. carried on business in premises rented by M. of C. Being about to dissolve partnership, their respective attorneys gave a joint order to an auctioneer to take possession of the goods upon the premises, to "realize the same with all convenient dispatch, and to hold the proceeds as stakeholder until we shall join in directing you as to the disposition thereof." The auctioneer took possession, and sold the goods by auction, under conditions, one of which was as follows:—"Each lot shall be paid for immediately after the sale and previously to its removal. Each and all lots shall be taken to be delivered at the fall of the hammer, after which time they shall remain and be at the exclusive risk of the purchasers, and the auctioneer shall not be called upon for compensation for any injury or loss sustained after that time." After the lots were sold, but before all had been taken away by the purchasers, the agent of C. told the auctioneer that he could not allow the things to go until he was paid rent then in arrear. The rent was the private debt of M., who asked the auctioneer to pay it out of the proceeds of the sale. S. gave him notice not to pay the rent, and the attorneys gave him notice to pay the net proceeds to S., he being entitled to the whole. The auctioneer paid the rent to C., and the balance of the proceeds to S.:—Held, that the auctioneer was not justified in paying the rent, and that S. was entitled to maintain an action against him to recover the residue of the proceeds. Sweeting v. Turner, 41 L. J., Q. B. 58; 7 L. R., Q. B. 310.

The 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, applies only to a case where there is a subsisting tenancy; and therefore, where the sheriff seizes goods after the tenancy has been determined, he will not be liable to an action for selling the goods upon the land without paying over a year's arrears of rent to the landlord. Cox v. Leigh, 43 L. J., Q. B. 123; 9 L. R., Q. B. 333; 22 W. R. 780; 30 L. T., N. S. 494.

As to effect of assignment of lease,—see this title, VIII.; of rent,—see this title, IX.

As to limitation of actions for rent,—see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS AND SUITS.

Form of action.—[By 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 4, debt may be brought against tenants for lives for rent.]

In debt for rent by the assignee of the lessor, the venue is local, but, in covenant under the same circumstances, it is transitory. Thrall v. Cornwall, 1 Wils. 165.

The assignee of rent may maintain debt for arrears of the rent. Allen v. Bryan, 5 B. & C. 512.

Debt lies on an express covenant for payment of a freehold rent charged on land conveyed in fee. Varley v. Leigh, 2 Exch. 446; 17 L. J., Exch. 280.

A landlord cannot maintain an action of covenant for rent against an under-tenant. Halford v. Hatch, 1 Dougl. 183.

Declarations.—In schedule B., Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, the following form, No. 23, of count upon a lease for rent, is given: "That the plaintiff let to the defendant a house, No. 401 Piccadilly, for seven years, to hold from the — day of —, A. D. —, at £— a year, payable quarterly, of which rent — quarters are due and unpaid."

A declaration for rent stated a demise of a messuage, land, and premises with the appurtenances. The proof was of a demise of a messuage and land, together with the furniture, utensils, and implements:—Held, that as the rent issued out of the real property, and not out of the furniture, it was sufficient to allege and prove a demise of the real property, and therefore there was no variance. Farewell v. Dickenson, 6 B. & C. 251; 9 D. & R. 345.

The proper mode of declaring in an action on a covenant in a lease, is to set out, that by indenture certain premises therein mentioned were demised, without stating them particularly, subject among other things to a proviso, setting out the substance of the covenant and the breach. Dundas v. Weymouth, Cowp. 665.

A declaration at the suit of the executor of a termor, for a breach of covenant after the death of the termor, should state the interest and title of the latter in the premises. Mackay v. Mackreth, 2 Chit. 461; 4 Dougl. 213.

A declaration for rent, by the assignee of a reversion for the life of a third person, against the assignee of the term, omitted to aver that the cestui que vie was living when the rent accrued due:—Held, that the continuance of the life was not to be implied from the mere assertion of title; and an averment in the breach, that, "after the plaintiff became so seized the rent became due, and still is in arrear to the plaintiff," was insufficient, and that the declaration was bad on general demurrer. Fryer v. Coombs, 4 P. & D. 120, n.; 11 A. & E. 403.

In an action for non-payment of rent, on an indenture, by assignee of the lessor against the lessee, the declaration alleged that the lessor was possessed for the remainder of a term of 23 years, commencing from the 25th December, 1797, and that, on the 7th of March, 1811, he, by indenture, demised to the defendant to hold from the 30th of December then last past. Plea, that the lessor was not at the time of making the indenture possessed for the residue of the term as alleged:—Held, that such plea was good on general demurrer, as the averment in the declaration was material and traversable. Carvick v. Blagrove, 4 Moore, 303; 1 B. & B. 531.

Pleas.—In an action on a covenant for seven quarters' rent, a plea showing a surrender before the last four of the seven quarters rent accrued, is bad on demurrer, because it does not go to the whole breach, and the breach is not entire, but part of it may be proved. Barnard v. Duthy, 5 Taunt. 27.

If both lessee and lessor sign a lease, the former is estopped to plead nil habuit in tenementis to an action of debt for rent by the lessor. Wilkins v. Wingate, 6 T. R. 62.

Riens in arriere is a good plea to an action of debt for rent. Warner v. Theobald, Cowp. 588.

If one is sued for rent he cannot, under a plea of never indebted, avail himself of a part payment of money obtained under a distress, or of a judgment obtained against him in a county court for part of the same rent. Harmer v. Bean, 3 C. & K. 807—Parke.

A declaration alleged a demise to the defendant of a messuage for forty-five years, at a rent payable quarterly, and averred that two years and a quarter's rent was due. Plea, that before that rent became due, it was agreed that the defendant should deliver up the messuage, and that, in consideration thereof, the defendant should be discharged from all liability to pay the rent which should subsequently accrue; that the defendant did deliver up the premises, and that the plaintiff accepted the possession thereof, and that the tenancy, and the defendant's interest in the premises, were thereby then surrendered and extinguished:—Held, after verdict, that the plea did not set up a surrender of the tenancy, but afforded a valid excuse for the non-payment of the rent. George v. Wright, 1 W. & II. 266; nom. Gore v. Wright, 3 Nev. & P. 243; 8 Ad. & E. 118; 2 Jur. 840.

Action for 163*l.* 10*s.* for fifty-two weeks' rent on a parol demise for twelve months, from the 25th of February, 1839 (Monday), at 3*l.* 8*s.* per week. A plea, as to so much of the rent as accrued due before and on the 27th of July, 1839 (Saturday), payment and acceptance in satisfaction, is bad, as no weekly rent could have become due on the latter day, and no apportionment of the rent for the fraction of a week was shown. Dunn v. Di Nuoro, 3 M. & G. 105; 3 Scott, N. R. 487.

Action on an indenture, whereby the tenant covenanted to pay the rent of 50*l.* half-yearly, and, over and above the reserved rent, the further yearly rent of 5*l.* for every acre of the demised premises which the defendant should convert into tillage, over and above one-third part thereof. Breach assigned for over-tillage, whereby the defendant became liable to pay 75*l.* additional rent. Pleas, first, that the plaintiff, with a full knowledge of the supposed breaches of covenant, accepted and received from the defendant 25*l.* as and for all the rent due in respect of the premises, up to and inclusive, &c. (covering the time alleged in the breach), without demanding or requiring the payment of such penalty or additional rent, and thereby then and there waived, gave up, and dispensed with his right to receive or recover any nomine pœnæ, or penalty, or such additional rent; and, secondly, that the plaintiff, with a full knowledge, waived, gave up, and dispensed with all claim or right on his part to receive, recover, or to be paid such penalty, nomine pœnæ, or additional rent:—Held, that both pleas were insufficient. Denton v. Richmond, 1 C. & M. 784; 3 Tyr. 630.

In an action for non-payment of rent, on an indenture by husband and wife, and under seal of the wife (according to the provisions of the 82 Hen. 8, c. 28, s. 3), the declaration stated that the husband and his wife, since deceased, demised the premises to the defendant for twenty-one years, and that he covenanted to pay rent to the husband and wife, and heirs of the wife; that the wife died, and that, after her decease, rent became due to her husband: plea, that the husband never had anything in the premises, but in right of his wife, whose estate they were, and that she died before the rent became due, without issue, and that her heir threatened to eject the defendant unless he would attorn and become tenant to him, and that he was accordingly obliged to do so:—Held, that it was not necessary for the defendant to show actual eviction by the heir, and that the plea was a discharge to the action; on the grounds, that the lease was not voidable by the heir, but was a good and subsisting lease, and that he was only entitled to the rent, and could not have entered to evict or eject the defendant without being considered as a trespasser. Hill v. Saunders (in error), 7 D. & R. 17; 4 B. & C. 529; 9 Moore, 288; 2 Bing. 112; 1 C. & P. 80.

To a declaration by A. against B. for 101*l.* 5*s.*, due for two and a half years' rent under a demise by deed, B. pleaded, as to 40*l.* 10*s.*, that, before the making of the deed, A. conveyed parcel of the premises to C. in fee, who devised the same to D., his wife, and their heirs; that, after the commencement of the suit, D. and E. gave notice of their title, and required of him payment of such portion of the rent not paid over to the plaintiff at the time of such notice as might, on a just apportionment, be the just proportional part thereof in respect of the parcel of the premises; and D. and E. then gave notice to and threatened B., that, if he should neglect or refuse forthwith to pay over such proportional part to D. and E., they would immediately eject and expel him from the parcel; that 40*l.* 10*s.* was the sum which, upon a just apportionment of the rent, would be and was the proportional part of the rent in respect of the parcel, and was, at the time of the notice, unpaid to A.; that the rent sued for accrued after the death of C.: that, if B. had not paid the 40*l.* 10*s.* to D. and E., they would have proceeded to eject the defendant from the parcel of the premises; wherefore B., after the commencement of the suit, necessarily and unavoidably paid them that sum; and that A. never had anything in the parcel of the premises, except as appeared in the plea:—Held, that this was neither a good plea of eviction, the notice being subsequent to the rent becoming due, nor a good plea of payment, inasmuch as the alleged payment was not in satisfaction of any charge upon the land, or of any debt due from A. Boodle

v. Cambell, 1 M. & T. 386; 2 D. & L. 66; 8 Scott, N. R. 164; 2 Jur. 475; 13 L. J., C. P. 142.

Action for rent due on a lease. The declaration stated that one Lawless, being entitled to a certain estate, mortgaged the premises to O'Brien, and that afterwards Lawless and O'Brien demised to the defendant, who entered upon the premises demised and became thus possessed of the same; that O'Brien's interest vested in the plaintiff, and that a half-year's rent was due to the plaintiff on the demise. A plea alleged that, before the demise, O'Brien falsely and fraudulently represented that Lawless was entitled to the lands in the lease mentioned, as devisee under the will of his father, and that his will had been duly proved, and that by such false and fraudulent representations the defendant was induced to accept the lease and enter into the covenants therein contained, and averred that Lawless was not so entitled as owner, and the defendant himself, as O'Brien well knew, was entitled to the lands, as heir-at-law. On demurrer, the plea was held bad, for not stating that the defendant repudiated the lease and derived no benefit under it. Meldon v. Lawless, 5 Ir. R., C. L. 547, n.—C. P. S. P., Anderson v. Costello, 5 Ir. R., C. L. 544.

Evidence.—In an action for rent on a demise, the plaintiff produced a deed properly stamped as a counterpart lease, and proved the same to have been executed by the defendant:—Held, that although there was no evidence of any lease having been executed by the plaintiff, the presumption was that there was such; and the deed produced was therefore rightly admissible as a counterpart. Hughes v. Clark, 10 C. B. 905; 15 Jur. 480.

In an action for rent upon an indenture of lease, the defendant pleaded non demisit:—Held, that the counterpart was sufficient evidence of the demise. Houghton v. Kenig, 18 C. B. 235; 25 L. J., C. P. 218.

Action for rent on a lease. Plea, that, before the lease was made, P. impleaded the plaintiffs, and had judgment of elegit against their lands; that the inquisition found the plaintiffs seized of the demised premises then leased to B., subject to two mortgages for years; that the sheriff delivered the premises to P., to hold the same till his damages and costs should be levied; that before the rent became due the defendant was evicted by P., who entered, and ejected, expelled, put out, and removed the defendant therefrom, and kept and continued him so ejected; that the sum of 1,000*l.* was still due to P. which was not levied. At the trial, the lease, elegit, and inquisition were put in, and it was proved that P. had called on the defendant to pay him rent, or he, P., would turn him out; on which the defendant attorned to him without privity of the plaintiffs, his lessors:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover, as P.'s elegit only entitled him to the reversion expectant on the mortgages by the lessors.

Poole (Mayor, &c.) v. Whitt, 15 M. & W. 571; 16 L. J., Exch. 229.

Held, also, that the expulsion as pleaded was not established by the evidence. Id.

VIII. ASSIGNMENT OF TERM; UNDERLETTING; DEATH OF TENANT.

1. Covenants and other Contracts against Assignment or Underletting.

General principles.—The power of assignment is incident to the estate of a lessee, without the word "assigns," unless expressly restrained. Church v. Brown, 15 Ves. 264. And see Greenaway v. Adams, 12 Ves. 395.

A contract to grant a lease, with common and usual covenants, does not comprise a covenant not to assign without a license. Henderson v. Gray, 3 Bro. C. C. 632. S. P., Church v. Brown, 15 Ves. 258; Buckland v. Papillon, 1 L. R., Eq. 477; 12 Jur., N. S. 155; affirmed on appeal, 12 Jur., N. S. 902; 2 L. R., Ch. 67; 30 L. J., Chanc. 81.

A proviso against assignment, without license, in a lease to the lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, is not repugnant for the construction is that it extends to such assigns only as he may lawfully have, viz., by license or by law, as assignees in bankruptcy. Wetherell v. Geering, 12 Ves. 504.

A proviso in a lease, for re-entry upon assignment by the lessee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, without license, ceases by assignment with license, though to a particular individual. Brummell v. Macpherson, 14 Ves. 173.

Where there is a right of entry given for assigning or underletting, if a person is found in the premises, appearing as the tenant, it is prima facie evidence of an underletting sufficient to call upon the defendant to show in what character such person was in possession, as tenant or as servant to the lessee. Doe d. Hindly v. Rickaby, 5 Esp. 4—Alvanley.

But it is not sufficient to prove the defendant, a stranger, in possession of the demised premises, and his declaration that they were demised to him by another stranger. Doe v. Payne, 1 Stark. 86—Ellenborough.

And such evidence would not be sufficient, even if the tenant had conventioned not to part with the possession. Id.

Upon whom binding; covenants running with the land.—Semble, that a covenant by a lessee, that he, his executors and administrators, shall not assign without license, is not binding upon the assignee of the lessee. Paul v. Nurse, 2 M. & R. 525; 8 B. & C. 486.

A covenant that the lessee, his executors or administrators, will not assign, does not bind his assignees. Doe d. Cheere v. Smith, 5 Taunt. 795; 1 Marsh. 350; 2 Rose, 280.

If a lease contains a proviso that the lessee and his administrators shall not set, let, or assign over the whole or part of the premises without leave in writing, on pain of forfeiting the lease, the administratrix of the lessee cannot underlet without incurring a forfeiture. Road. Gregson v. Harrison, 2 T. R. 425.

A parol license to let part of the premises does not discharge the lessee from the restriction of such a proviso. Id.

Executors may dispose of a lease for years as assets, notwithstanding a proviso or covenant that the lessee shall not alien. Seers v. Hind, 1 Ves. 295.

An option given to a tenant to call for an extended lease, will pass to his assignees in bankruptcy, and may by them be assigned to a purchaser. Buckland v. Papillon, 1 L. R., Eq. 477; 12 Jur., N. S. 155; affirmed on appeal, 12 Jur., N. S. 902; 3 L. R., Ch. 67; 36 L. J., Chanc. 81.

But such would not have been the case, if the tenant had been restrained from alienation. Id.

A railway company arranged by private contract the price of the interest of a tenant in land they required, there being a covenant in his lease not to assign without the consent of his landlord:—Held, that the covenant was abrogated so as to enable the tenant to assign to the railway company without the consent of his lessor. Slipper v. Tottenham and Hampton Junction Railway Company, 36 L. J., Chanc. 841; 4 L. R., Eq. 112—R.

By a deed dated March 1st, 1832, the defendant leased a farm for fourteen years; the lease contained a proviso for re-entry by the lessor if the lessees should assign without his license, and a covenant by the lessees not to assign; also a covenant by the lessor at the expiration of the demise to pay for certain things at a valuation. After the expiration of the term the lessees continued to occupy the farm as tenants from year to year on the terms of the lease. In 1864, they by deed assigned their interest in the farm, with their farming stock and valuations, to the plaintiff, in order to raise a sum of money to be paid to their creditors under a composition deed executed at the same time. The plaintiff entered into occupation of the farm but never paid rent. On the 18th March, the defendant, having no knowledge of the assignment, gave the lessees notice to quit, and the plaintiff, as assignee, gave him a similar notice:—Held, that the plaintiff could not maintain an action against the defendant on the covenant for a valuation. Per Mellor and Lush, JJ., on the ground that there was no new contract between the plaintiff and defendant, and that the right of action did not pass from the lessees to the plaintiff by the assignment of the tenancy created by parol between the lessor and lessees. Per Shee, J., on the ground that the lessees, having no right to assign without the license of the lessor, could not transfer any interest to the plaintiff. Elliott v. Johnson, 8 B. & S. 38; 2 L. R., Q. B. 120; 36 L. J., Q. B. 41; 15 W. R. 253.

A first count was upon a covenant in a lease that the lessees and their assigns would maintain and keep in repair the forge and buildings demised, and all buildings which should be erected during the demise, and all additions and improvements thereto, and would maintain and keep in good working order the fixtures, steam engines, tools, utensils and other articles demised, and also which might during the demise be brought or set up on the premises, and would replace and make good all such fixtures, engines, tools, utensils and other articles as should be broken or worn out. The second count was upon a covenant that neither the lessees nor their assigns would assign or part with the possession of the demised premises without the consent in writing of the lessor:—Held, first, that so much of the covenant in the first count stated as related to buildings and to machinery, tools and utensils, which were tenant's fixtures, ran with the land. Williams v. Earle, 9 B. & S. 740; 37 L. J., Q. B. 231; 3 L. R., Q. B. 789; 16 W. R. 1041; 19 L. T., N. S. 238.

Held, secondly, that so much of it as related to tools and utensils, which were not fixtures, did not run with the land. Id.

Held, thirdly, that the assignee was not liable on this count for breaches of the covenant after an assignment by him without the consent of the lessor. Id.

Held, fourthly, that the covenant mentioned in the second count ran with the land and bound an assignee to whom the premises had been assigned with the consent of the lessor. Id.

Held, fifthly, that the lessor could recover damages indirectly in respect of those breaches of covenant which had already occurred, and future breaches; the measure of the damages being such a sum as would, so far as money could, put the plaintiff in the same position as if he had retained the liability of the defendant instead of having an inferior remedy against a person less able to perform the covenants or compensate for breaches of them. Id.

What amounts to a breach.]—A covenant not to assign or otherwise part with the premises, or any part thereof, for the whole or any part of the term, is broken by an underlease. Doe d. Holland v. Worsley, 1 Camp. 20—Ellenborough.

Although underleases are not within the general words of provisos concerning assignments. Kinnersley v. Orpe, 1 Dougl. 55. S. P., Church v. Brown, 15 Ves. 264.

A covenant not to assign, transfer, set over, or otherwise do or put away the lease or premises, does not extend to an underlease for part of the term. Crusoe d. Blencowe v. Bugby, 2 W. Bl. 706; 3 Wils. 234.

A lessee who covenanted "not to let, set, or assign, transfer, make over, barter, exchange, or otherwise part with the indenture," &c., with a proviso that the landlord might in such case re-enter, gave a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, on which the lease was taken in execution and sold:—Held, to be no forfeiture of the lease. Doe d. Mitchinson v. Carter, 8 T. R. 57.

But it being found by verdict that the:

tenant gave such warrant of attorney to a creditor for the express purpose of enabling such creditor to take the lease in execution under the judgment:—Held, that this was in fraud of the covenant, and the landlord, under a clause of re-entry in the lease for breach of the condition, might recover the premises in ejectment from a purchaser under the sheriff's sale. Doe d. Mitchinson v. Carter, 8 T. R. 300.

A lease of the opera-house contained covenants on the part of the lessee; Secondly, not to grant away, assign, dispose of, &c., the stalls or boxes, "for any longer period than one year or season." On the 21st of December, 1851, the lessee leased certain boxes for one year, to commence from March, 1852. On the first of August, 1852, he made another lease of the same boxes, to a different person, with this habendum, "from the 1st of February now next ensuing, or from such subsequent day during the year, upon which the theater shall be opened, and thenceforth for the full term of one year, to be computed from that day:—Held, that this was not a breach of the covenant. Croft v. Lumley, 6 H. L. Cas. 672; 4 Jur., N. S. 903; 27 L. J., Q. B. 321.

Thirdly, "not to charge nor incumber the theater, or the income thereof, or the terms hereby granted, by mortgaging the same, or granting any rent-charges or any other incumbrance whatever." The lessee was greatly in debt. In respect of his debts, he granted warrants of attorney (one of which was to secure payment of bills, not then due, and another provided that it was a concurrent security, with an indenture therein recited, that judgment was to be entered up when the grantee thought fit, and be registered), and judgments were signed against him, on those warrants of attorney, and upon judge's orders, and registered:—Held, that no breach of this covenant had been committed. Id.

Demise for years to S., and S. covenanted that he, his executors, administrators, or assigns, would not assign the indenture, or his or their interests therein, or assign the premises to any person whatsoever, without consent in writing of the lessor; proviso, that in case S., his executors, administrators, or assigns, should part with his or their interest, contrary to his covenant, that the lessor might re-enter. S. deposited the lease as a security for money borrowed, and became bankrupt, and the lease was sold by direction of the Chancellor to pay that debt:—Held, that the assignees under the commission might assign the lease to the vendee, without the consent of the lessor. Doe d. Goodbehers v. Bevan, 3 M. & S. 353; 2 Rose, 456.

Letting lodgings is not a breach of a covenant not to underlet. Doe d. Pitt v. Laming, 4 Camp. 77—Ellenborough.

Where a lessee of a house and a garden for a term of years covenanted with the lessor "not to use or exercise, or permit or suffer to be used or exercised, upon the demised premises or any part thereof, any trade or business whatsoever, without the license of the lessor," and afterwards, without the license of the lessor, assigned the lease to a schoolmaster, who carried on his business in the house and premises:—Held, that the assignment was a breach of this covenant, and the lessor entitled to re-enter under a proviso for re-entry for non-performance of covenants. Doe d. Bish v. Keeling, 1 M. & S. 95. And see Jones v. Thorne, 3 D. & R. 152; 1 B. & C. 715.

Where a lease contained a proviso for re-entry, in case the tenant should demise, lease, grant, or let the demised premises, or any part or parcel thereof, or convey to any person whomsoever, for all or any part of the term, without the license of the lessor, in writing; and the tenant, without such license, agreed with a person to enter into partnership with him, and that he should have the use of a back chamber and some other parts of the premises exclusively, and of the rest jointly with the tenant, and accordingly let him into possession:—Held, that the lessor was entitled to re-enter. Roe d. Dingley v. Sales, 1 M. & S. 297.

Proviso in a lease for re-entry, and that the lease should be void, if the lessee assigned without license. The lessee by deed assigned all his property, real and personal, to trustees, for the benefit of his creditors, and was afterwards declared a bankrupt:—Held, that the deed of assignment, being an act of bankruptcy, did not operate as a valid conveyance of the lessee's interest under the lease, and that therefore it did not work a forfeiture. Doe d. Lloyd v. Powell, 8 D. & R. 35; 5 B. & C. 308.

A covenant in a lease of a chop-house, not to let, set, assign, transfer, set over, "or otherwise part with the premises demised, or that present indenture of lease," is not broken by proof of a deposit of the lease with the brewers of the lessee, as a security for money advanced and beer supplied to the house, as it could not be deemed to be a parting with the premises within the meaning of the covenant. Doe d. Pitt v. Hogg, 4 D. & R. 226; 1 C. & P. 160; S. C., nom. Doe d. Pitt v. Laming, R. & M. 36.

A. and B., partners in trade, were assignees of a lease which contained a covenant by the lessee, for himself and his assigns, that he would not, neither should his executors, administrators, nor assigns, assign the demised premises without the consent in writing of the lessor. On the dissolution of the partnership, A. assigned all his interest in the premises to B.:—Held, a breach of the covenant. Varley v. Coppard, 7 L. R., C. P. 505; 20 W. R. 972; 26 L. T., N. S. 882.

License or consent of landlord.—If the vendor of a lease, in which is a covenant not to assign, contracts to assign his interest, it is incumbent on him, and not on the purchaser, to procure the lessor's license for the assignment. Lloyd v. Crispe, 5 Taunt. 249.

A lease contained a covenant not to assign without the license of the lessor, with a proviso for re-entry on breach. The lessee became bankrupt, and the assignees assigned to the defendant, who contracted to sell the term to the plaintiff. The plaintiff required the defendant to obtain the license of the lessor, which the defendant failed to do:—Held, that the defendant was bound to obtain the landlord's license to assign, as the assignment by assignees was no breach of the covenant. Winter v. Dumerque, 12 Jur., N. S. 726; 14 W. R. 699—Exch. Cham.

A. assigned his effects to B. for the benefit of his creditors, and a lease of a farm from C., which contained a covenant not to assign without C.'s consent in writing. B. agreed to assign the lease to D.'s nominee, D. to pay the expense of the assignment, and 180*l.* on a day certain for the improvements and manure; to take the crops at a valuation, and to have immediate possession:—Held, that, to support an action on this agreement, B. must show that he had obtained C.'s consent in writing to the assignment, though D. had taken possession of the premises, had cut down the crops, and had paid part of the 180*l.* to B. Mason v. Corder, 2 Marsh. 332; 7 Taunt. 9.

A lease contained a covenant by the lessee not to assign without license, and the lessor covenanted not to withhold his license to assign unreasonably or vexatiously:—Held, that it was unreasonable and vexatious in the lessor to refuse his license to assign to a person wholly unobjectionable, his object in refusing the license being, avowedly, his wish to get a surrender of the lease for the purpose of rebuilding. Lehmann v. M'Arthur, 8 L. R., Eq. 746; 15 W. R. 551; 16 L. T., N. S. 196—V. C. S.

The lease of a farm contained a covenant by the lessees, "that they would not assign or otherwise part with possession of the premises without the written consent of the lessor," with a proviso that "in case the lessees should fail in the observance or performance of any or either of the covenants and agreements on his or their part," it should be lawful for the lessor to re-enter. The lessees sold their interest in the lease to W., and the lessor in a letter consented that W. should take the farm "on the same conditions and in accordance with the lease." W. entered and took possession of the farm, but no assignment of the term was executed to him:—Held, that there was no such breach of the covenant not to assign without the written consent of the lessor, as to enable him to maintain ejectment; first, because W. appeared to have entered into possession at the instance of the lessor rather than of the lessees; and, secondly, because the consent to the assignment did not prohibit the lessees from parting with possession of the premises till a lease had been executed. West v. Dobb, 89 L. J., Q. B. 190; 10 B. & S. 987; 5 L. R., Q. B. 460. See S. C., 23 L. T., N. S. 76; 18 W. R. 1167—Exch. Cham.; 38 L. J., Q. B. 289; 9 B. & S. 755; 4 L. R., Q. B. 634; 20 L. T., N. S. 737; 17 W. R. 879.

In a lease, when there is a covenant not to sublet without consent, but such consent must not be withheld except on reasonable objection, and a heavy rent is reserved by the lease, very strong ground for refusing the consent must be shown, as the refusal throws a heavy burden of rent on the lessees. Sheppard v. Hong Hong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, 20 W. R. 459—V. C. M.

A lessee covenanted with the lessor not to assign the demised premises without the consent in writing of the lessor, "such consent not being arbitrarily withheld;" and it was provided by the lease that if the lessee should assign the premises without the consent in writing of the lessor, "but such consent is not to be arbitrarily withheld," the lessor might re-enter:—Held, that there was no covenant by the lessor, either express or implied, not to refuse his consent arbitrarily, but that an arbitrary refusal would leave the lessee at liberty to assign without the lessor's consent. Treloar v. Bigge, 9 L. R., Exch. 151; 22 W. R. 843; 43 L. J., Exch. 95.

An arbitrary refusal is equivalent to an "unfair and unreasonable" refusal; and a refusal "upon advice," though the grounds of refusal be not specified, is not "arbitrary." Id.

A lease of mines contained a covenant that the lessee should not, without the consent of the lessor, let or assign the mines. The lessor granted to the lessee a license to sublet a part, but the license provided that this should not authorize any further letting or assigning of the part of the mines, the subject of the license, without such consent as was required by the lease. The lessee then agreed to sublet to an under-lessee the part of the mines the subject of the license, the underlease to contain provisions in all respects like those in the original lease:—Held, that, according to the agreement, the underlease ought to contain a covenant by the under-lessee against letting or assigning without the consent of the lessee, and not a covenant against letting or assigning without the consent of the lessor. Williamson v. Williamson, 9 L. R., Ch. 729; 43 L. J., Chanc. 738; 31 L. T., N. S. 291; reversing the decision of Bacon, V. C., 80 L. T., N. S. 154; 17 L. R., Eq. 540; 22 W. R. 682; 43 L. J., Chanc. 382.

As to forfeiture for breach of covenant against assignment,—see this title, XIII.

2. Contracts to assign; and Instrument of Assignment.

Distinction between assignments and agreements to assign.—A. agreed, in consideration and on payment of 200*l.* at stipulated times, to assign to B. the lease of certain premises, for the residue of a term of which A. was assignee, at the yearly rent of 100*l.*, and under and subject to the covenants, provisos, and agreements in the original lease; and B. agreed to accept the lease on payment of the 200*l.* and interest, and in the meantime, and until such assignment was made, to pay the rent and perform the covenants in the lease, and from the same to save harmless and indemnify A.; with a proviso, that, in case of default in payment of any or either of the installments of the 200*l.*, A. should be at liberty to re-enter:—Held, that this was not an absolute assignment, but only an agreement to assign on a given event. Hartshorne v. Watson, 7 Scott, 494; 5 Bing. N. C. 477; 2 Arn. 70.

Construction and effect of agreements to assign.—A. agreed to execute to B. an effectual assignment of the two leases of a house and shop, "as he holds the same for a term of twenty-eight years," and B. agreed to accept "a proper assignment of the leases as above described, without requiring the lessor's title."—Held, that B. was bound to take an assignment of two consecutive leases, though the second was void, being under a power which had not been pursued. Spratt v. Jeffery, 5 M. & R. 188; 10 B. & C. 249. See Shepherd v. Keaghtley, 1 C., M. & R. 117; Waddell v. Wolfe, 42 L. J., Q. B. 138, 140.

An averment on a declaration that the plaintiff was possessed of premises for the remainder of a certain term of years, then unexpired therein, which he agreed to assign, is supported by evidence of a tenancy from year to year. Botting v. Martin, 1 Camp. 317—Macdonald.

A., the defendant in an action on a lease, in consideration of B.'s withdrawing the record, undertook to pay B. certain moneys, B. undertaking to discharge A. from liability to the covenants of the lease, upon his assigning all his interest in the lease:—Held, that the assignment of the lease was not a condition precedent to the discharge; and that, therefore, in an action against B. on the contract, it was not necessary to aver that the defendant had assigned. Phelps v. Protheroe, 16 C. B. 770; 1 Jur., N. S. 1170; 24 L. J., C. P. 225.

In an agreement for the assignment of a lease of a public-house, it was agreed that the intended assignee should take the lease, subject to the payment of the yearly rent and to the performance of the covenants thereby reserved and contained, such covenants being common and usual in leases of public-houses. The lease contained the following clause: "Provided always, and these presents are upon the express condition, that all and every underlease or underleases, deed or deeds of assignment of the premises, or of the devolution of the same by will or act of law, shall be left with the solicitor to the lessor within two calendar months from the date thereof, for the purposes of registration." In an action by the intended purchaser to recover his deposit, the jury found that the above clause was not common or usual in leases of public-houses:—Held, that the clause in question was included in the word "covenant" as used in the contract between the parties, and that the intended assignee was discharged from his agreement to accept an assignment of the lease. Brooks v. Drydale, 37 L. T., N. S. 467—C. P. Div.

Instrument of assignment; and operation and effect, generally.—[By 29 Car. 2, c. 8 (the Statute of Frauds), s. 3, no leases, estates, or interests, either of freehold or terms of years, or any uncertain interest, not being copyhold or customary interest, of, in, to, or out of any messuages, manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, shall be assigned, granted, or surrendered, unless it be by deed or note in writing, signed by the party so assigning, granting, or surrendering the same, or their agents thereunto lawfully authorized by writing, or by act and operation of law.

By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3, an assignment of a chattel interest, not being copyhold, in any tenements or hereditaments, and not being an interest which might by law have been created, without writing, made after the 1st of October, 1845, shall be void at law, unless made by deed.]

The assignment of a parol lease from year to year, otherwise than by deed or note in writing, is void under the Statute of Frauds. Botting v. Martin, 1 Camp. 318—Macdonald.

Where a person transfers all his interest in a term to another, reserving rent to himself, it does not operate as an assignment, but as an under-lease. Preece v. Corrie, 2 M. & P. 57; 5 Bing. 24. See Barrett v. Rolph, 14 M. & W. 348; 14 L. J., Exch. 308.

One who had a term, which expired on the 11th November, let the premises orally from the 11th September to the 11th November for 270*l.*, payable immediately:—Held, that this was a lease of which parol evidence might be given, and not an assignment requiring a writing. Id.

L., being seized in fee, demised to B. for twenty-one years from June, 1814; B. demised to M. for twenty-one years from June, 1814, wanting twenty-one days, and then by deed-poll granted to L. the indenture of lease to M., the premises thereby granted, and the rent reserved, to hold to L., his executors, &c., for the term mentioned in the demise to M.; L., by lease and release, conveyed the premises, the reversion and reversions, rents, issues, and profits, and all his interest in fee, to the plaintiff by way of mortgage; M. assigned his term to the defendant by way of mortgage, but the defendant never entered:—Held, that the conveyance in fee from L. to the plaintiff passed the chattel interest created by B., as well as the fee, and that it was well described in the declaration as an assignment of the chattel interest. Burton v. Barclay, 7 Bing. 745; 5 M. & P. 785.

A lessee for years under-demised for a term longer than the residue held by him, the under-lessee covenanting to pay to the lessee, his executors and administrators, the yearly sum of 75*l.*, by quarterly payments:—Held, that notwithstanding the instrument amounted to an assignment, inasmuch as all the lessee's term was thereby conveyed, an action of covenant lay at the suit of the executor of the lessee, to recover arrears of this rent accruing during the continuance of the lessee's term. Baker v. Gostling, 4 M. & Scott, 539.

A grant by lessees for lives of all their estate, right, title, interest, &c., in the premises, to one and his executors, habendum to him and his executors for ninety-nine years, if the lives should so long continue, in as large, ample, and beneficial way, &c., as the grantors, their heirs, &c.:—Held, no assignment of the freehold, and consequently not of the whole interest of the grantors in their lease. Derby v. Taylor, 1 East, 502.

An assignment of a term to the defendant for certain premises indorsed on the back of the lease, which was executed by the plaintiff, but not by the defendant, is evidence for the plaintiff to show that he has performed his part of an agreement to assign the lease. Hawkins v. Sherman, 3 C. & P. 459—Tenterden.

A parol assignment by a sheriff of a leasehold seized by him under a f. fa. is void by the Statute of Frauds, even although the assignee has paid rent to the head landlord. Doe d. Hughes v. Jones, 9 M. & W. 372; 6 Jur. 802; 12 L. J., Exch. 265; 1 D., N. S. 352.

A demise by an assignee of a part of the premises held by him, at a different rent (payable to himself), and for a period longer than his own term, operates in law as an assignment, and may be so treated in pleading. Wollaston v. Hakewill, 3 M. & G. 297; 3 Scott, N. R. 593.

A demise for a term of years, if it is by deed, and for the whole term which the lessor has in the premises, operates as an assignment. Beardmore v. Wilson, 38 L. J., C. P. 91; 17 W. R. 54; 19 L. T., N. S. 282; 4 L. R., C. P. 57.

An under-lease of the whole term amounts to an assignment. Ib.

Action by the assignee of the reversion of a lease on a covenant to repair. The defendant was the representative of an assignee of the lease, and had made an under-lease ending at the same date as the original term:—Held, that the under-lease amounted to an assignment, and that the assignee of the reversion was not entitled to recover. Ib.

An under-lease subject to, and to commence at the expiration of, an existing under-lease between the same parties, and to last for the residue of the sub-lessor's term, does not amount to a transfer of the original lease so as to destroy the sub-lessor's reversion. Ilyde v. Warden, 37 L. T., N. S. 567—C. A.

C. assigned by deed a lease for the lives of W., J. and H., to hold for the lives of W., J. and H., and the survivors and survivor of them, and covenanted that the lease "was a good, valid, and subsisting lease in the law for the lives of W., J. and H., and the survivors and survivor of them, and was not forfeited, surrendered, or become void or voidable." J. died before the making of the deed:—Held, that there was no breach of the covenant, as C. only undertook that the lease was subsisting, and not that the three lives were in existence at the date of the covenant. Coates v. Collins, 41 L. J., Q. B. 90; 7 L. R., Q. B. 114; 26 L. T., N. S. 134; 20 W. R. 187—Exch. Cham.

A termor of years in premises belonging to B., mortgaged to C. by way of security for debt, the furniture on the premises, with all the freehold hereditaments, goods, and personal property, to which the termor was or might be entitled, except any leaseholds, or any portion of the term or terms for which such leaseholds might be holden, which C., by indorsement on the deed, should declare not to be therein included. The mortgage deed was dated 11th March, 1869. A quarter's rent on the premises became due 25th March. C. was appraised for the first time of the lease held by the termor on the 8th July, and at once indorsed the deed to the effect that the lease was not included in it:—Held, in action for rent by B., that the lease passed under personal property; that, moreover, the words of the exception evidenced such intention; that the lease at once on execution of the deed vested in C.; that C. could not by the indorsement divest himself of it, and so defeat the rights of B., a stranger to the deed. Debenham v. Digby, 21 W. R. 359; 23 L. T., N. S. 170—Exch.

When a lease is held at a full or substantial rent, and contains onerous covenants on the part of the lessee, an assignment (free from actual fraud) to an assignee, who subjects himself to the performance of the covenants, is not voluntary. Greer, In re, 11 Ir. R., Eq. 502—Bauk.

Pleading and proof of assignment.—[The plaintiffs declared upon an indenture made by H. to S. of premises, to hold from Midsummer, 1780, for ninety-nine years, deducing their title to the reversion from the lessor by various mesne assignments, and alleging that "all the estate of S., of and in a great part of the premises, with the appurtenances, by assignment, came to and vested in the defendant, whereupon and whereby the defendant became and was possessed of that part of the premises, and continued so possessed until the commencement of the suit;" and assigned breaches of covenant. The defendant traversed "that all the estate of S. of and in that part of the premises, by assignment, came to and vested in her, as alleged," upon which issue was joined:—Held, that the affirmative of this issue was sustained by proof that the defendant was the executrix of an assignee, though she had never entered or taken the profits. Wollaston v. Hakewill, 3 Scott, N. R. 593; 3 M. & G. 297.

In an action for rent on a lease, by the lessor against the assignee of the lessee, the declaration stated that all the estate of the lessee came to and vested in the defendant, which allegation the defendant traversed. The defendant was assignee of only a part of the demised premises:—Held, that there was a fatal variance, and that the issue must be found for the defendant. Curtis v. Spitty, 1 Scott, 737; 1 Bing., N. C. 756; 1 Hodges, 153.

In an action against an assignee of a lease, the locality of the premises not being stated in the declaration, the question of venue does not arise at the trial on a denial of the lease. Some only of the lessees having executed the assignment, but the defendant and another assignee having executed, and the other having entered:—Held, that the defendant, on a plea denying that the estate of the lessees had come to him, was liable as assignee. Electric Telegraph Company v. Moore, 2 F. & F. 363—Wightman.

3. Rights and Liabilities of Parties after Assignment.

Upon covenants in lease, in general.—The assignee of a lease is not liable to the original lessor for the breach of a covenant which does not run with the land, unless he is expressly named in the lease as a covenantor. Grey v. Cuthbertson, 2 Chit. 482; 4 Dougl. 351.

Nor is he liable for a breach in the lessee's time when he comes into possession afterwards. St. Saviour's, Southwark v. Smith, 3 Burr. 1271; 1 W. Bl. 351.

Restrictive covenants; use of premises.—A restrictive covenant in an assignment of a lease may be enforced by the covenantee against persons with constructive notice, though he has no reversion. Clements v. Welles, 1 L. R., Eq. 200; 35 L. J., Chanc. 265; 13 L. T., N. S. 548—R.

C., being lessee of a house, assigned the lease to W., by a deed by which he covenanted that he, his executors, administrators or assigns, or under-tenants, would not use the premises as a hair-dresser's shop. He afterwards under-leased the house, and assigned his reversion. The defendant, having constructive notice of the covenant, purchased the under-lease, and, with the license of the reversioner, began to use the house as a hair-dresser's shop:—Held, that C. was entitled to an injunction to restrain him from so doing. Id.

When, in a lease, the lessee having covenanted to use the demised premises as a public-house, the lessor covenants not to build or keep any house for the sale of spirits or beer within half a mile of the demised premises, the lessor's covenant does not run with the land so as to enable the assignee of the lease to sue him upon it. Thomas v. Hayward, 4 L. R., Exch. 811; 38 L. J., Exch. 175; 20 L. T., N. S. 814.

In 1853, A. demised a plot of land with a house thereon for ninety-nine years to B., who entered into restrictive covenants for himself, his executors, administrators and assigns, with A., his heirs and assigns, not to build further on the land without first submitting the plans for A.'s approval, and not to do anything which would be a nuisance to or would diminish the value of the adjoining land. In 1858, A. demised the adjoining land for ninety-four years to C., who had built a house on it under a building agreement with A., and who entered into restrictive covenants similar in purport and effect to those in B.'s lease. C. took his lease without notice of the covenants in B.'s lease, and with the general intimation that B. was intending to build on his land. In 1875 the assignees of B.'s lease commenced to build so as to obstruct the access of light and air to the windows in the house demised to C. On action brought by C.'s assignee to restrain A. from giving his consent to building plans, and B.'s assignees from continuing to build:—Held, that the assignee of C.'s lease was not entitled to the benefit of the restrictive covenants in B.'s lease. Minter v. Hansard, 34 L. T., N. S. 719—V. C. B.

Repairs.—Where, in an action of covenant against an assignee of a lease, the plaintiff declared that all the right, &c., vested in the defendant by assignment, and that afterwards the premises were out of repair, and the defendant pleaded that for one period he was possessed of one-sixth of the premises as tenant in common with A., B. and C., and for another period of one-third as tenant in common with B. and C., and that no more or greater interest in the premises ever came to him by assignment:—Held, that the plea was bad in substance, as it could not be a bar to the whole action. Merceron v. Dowson, 5 B. & C. 479; 3 D. & R. 261.

A lessee by deed-poll assigned his interest in the demised premises to A., subject to the payment of rent and the performance of the covenants contained in the lease. A. took possession, and occupied the premises, under this assignment, and before the expiration of the term assigned to a third person. The lessor sued the lessee for breaches of covenant committed during the time that A. continued assignee of the premises, and recovered damages against the lessee:—Held, that the lessee might maintain an action upon the case founded in tort against A. for having neglected to perform the covenants during the time he continued assignee, whereby the lessee sustained damage. Burnett v. Lynch, 5 B. & C. 589; 8 D. & R. 368.

Where a lessee, who was bound by a covenant to repair premises demised to him, underlet part of them with a similar obligation by his tenant to repair them within three months after notice given to him for that purpose; and the premises underlet becoming out of repair, the superior landlord gave notice to his immediate tenant to repair them at the peril of forfeiting his lease; and the under-tenant, after receiving notice to repair, neglected to do so within three months, whereupon the lessee, in order to avoid a forfeiture of his whole estate, entered on the premises, and put them into a tenable repair:—Held, that his under-tenant was liable to pay him the whole expense so incurred, although the former had sold his interest in the premises to a purchaser, who had entirely rebuilt them before the action for the recovery of such expense was brought. Colley v. Streeton, 3 D. & R. 523; 2 B. & C. 273.

A. agreed to take an assignment of a lease of a house which was out of repair, from B., and it was stipulated that all outgoing should be paid by B. up to the 23d April; and by an assignment indorsed on the lease (executed by B. but not by A.), B. assigned the residue of the term, subject to the performance of all the covenants in the lease, which, from the 22d day of April, ought to be observed on the part of the tenant. The lease contained a covenant to keep the premises in repair, and so to deliver them up; and, after the assignment the reversioner sued B., and recovered for dilapidations which occurred before April 22d:—Held, that B. could not maintain an action against A. for these dilapidations, even though it could be proved that A. gave a smaller price, because the premises were out of repair. Hawkins v. Sherman, 3 C. & P. 459—Tenterden.

B., having a term of sixty-one years in land, granted an annuity to W., and, for securing payment, assigned the term, wanting one day, to R. R. then, at the request of W. and of B., demised, and B. demised and confirmed, the premises to S. for thirty-one years, paying rent to W. while the land remained subject to the annuity, and afterwards to B. S. covenanted with W. and R., and their respective executors, and also with B., to pay the rent while the land was subject to the annuity to R., and afterwards to B., and also to repair the premises. The premises came by assignment to G., who failed to repair. W. being dead:—Held, that an action for breach of the covenant to repair was properly brought against G. by R. and B. jointly. Wakefield v. Brown, 9 Q. B. 209; 10 Jur. 853; 15 L. J., Q. B. 373.

On a covenant by a lessee, not naming assigns, to repair and yield up in repair all buildings and erections, an assignee is liable in respect of the non-repair of buildings erected during the term. Minshull v. Oakes, 2 H. & N. 798; 4 Jur., N. S. 170; 27 L. J., Exch. 194.

A covenant to yield up in repair at the end of a term runs with the land, and binds an assignee, though not named. Martyn v. Clue, 18 Q. B. 661; 22 L. J., Q. B. 147.

A declaration by an assignee of part of the reversion, for non-repair of premises, stated that G. held the premises under a lease for ninety-nine years, which expired on the 25th December, 1849; that during the time he so held the premises he granted an underlease to V. and S. for twenty-five years and a quarter from the 25th December, 1823, by which V. and S. jointly and severally covenanted with G. that they would during the term repair, and at the end of the term deliver them up in repair to G.; that during the underlease to V. and S., G. granted his reversion to S. and the plaintiffs, whereupon the term in the underlease was, as to one undivided sixth part, merged in the reversion, and S. and the plaintiffs became, as joint tenants, possessed of the reversion of three undivided sixth parts of the premises, and the plaintiffs became, as joint tenants, possessed of the reversion of two other undivided sixth parts; that V. afterwards assigned to S. his interest in the underlease granted to him and S., whereupon the term as to one undivided sixth part, merged in the reversion in the three sixth parts, whereof S. and the plaintiffs were possessed, and that S. died before the determination of the under lease; and alleged as a breach the non-performance by V. of the covenant to repair after S.'s death, and to leave in repair. Plea, that after G. demised to S. and V., and before the assignment to S. by V., V. and S. demised the premises to T. for twenty-three years from the 25th June, 1825, with covenants by T. to keep and leave in repair; that T. died; and that L. the original lessor sued the plaintiffs for non-repair, and that such action was settled by an agreement, without the privity or consent of V., whereby the representatives of T. agreed to pay 300*l.* and to give up possession to L., and the plaintiffs agreed to pay S. 200*l.*, and to deliver up the lease to a third person in trust for L., but to be produced for the purpose of supporting any claims against V. relating to the premises, and that when such claims should have been satisfied, the plaintiffs would concur in surrendering their estate or interest in the lease; and that in pursuance of the agreement, possession was delivered to L., and that thereby V. had been prevented from performing his covenant:—Held, that the plea was bad, inasmuch as the agreement and the delivery of possession to L. did not operate as a surrender of all the plaintiff's interest, and was not so intended to operate; and the defendant, not being a party to the agreement, might, at the expiration of the under-lease to T., have entered for the residue of the term granted to him and S., and performed his covenant to repair. Badley v. Vigurs, 4 El. & Bl. 71; 2 C. L. R. 1627; 1 Jur., N. S. 159; 23 L. J., Q. B. 377.

Rent.—The lessee, under express covenant to pay the rent and perform the covenants, is liable during the whole term, notwithstanding assignments. Staines v. Morris, 1 Ves. & B. 9.

A common assignment by a lessee, without acceptance of rent from the assignee by the lessor, or some other evidence of his assent, is not sufficient (though the lessor has notice) to discharge the lessee from an action of debt. Wadham v. Marlow, 4 Dougl. 54; 1 H. Bl. 438, n.; 2 Chit. 600; 8 East, 314.

A lessee cannot plead to an action on a covenant for rent an assignment and tender by the assignee. Orgill v. Kemshood, 4 Taunt. 642.

The assignee of a lease for years, who has assigned over, is discharged from the covenant to pay rent before the entry of his assignee. Walker v. Reeve, 3 Dougl. 19; 2 Dougl. 461, n.

An assignee is not liable for rent accruing after an assignment, even though such assignment is wrongful. Paul v. Nurse, 2 M. & R. 525; 8 B. & C. 486.

In an action on a covenant for rent against an assignee, an assignment to a feme covert before the rent accrued is a good plea in bar. Barnfather v. Jordan, 2 Dougl. 452.

A. being assignee of a lease, put it up by auction: B. became the purchaser, paid a deposit, and ordered an assignment to him to be prepared by A.'s solicitor, which was accordingly prepared and executed by A.; but, instead of its being delivered to B., it remained in the possession of the solicitor, who claimed a lien for the expense of preparing it:—Held, that to an action against A. as assignee of the term, for rent accruing due after he had executed the assignment, these facts were sufficient to support a plea, that before the rent became due he had assigned to B. Odell v. Wake, 8 Camp. 394—Ellenborough.

The lessee of coal-mines, for a term of years, by indenture assigned the same for the residue unexpired of the term to the defendant, who thereby covenanted with the lessee to pay the rents, &c., by the original indenture reserved, so long as the defendant should be in possession, or receipt of the rents, produce and profits of the premises, and at all times effectually to keep harmless and indemnified the lessee from and against all the rents, covenants, &c., of the original lease, and against all actions in respect of the same. To a declaration assigning as a breach non-payment by the defendant of rents due while he was in possession or receipt of the rents, produce and profits, per quod the lessee was forced to and did pay the rents, and was put to great charges, together with a breach of the covenant to indemnify the lessee against the consequences of such non-payment by the defendant; plea, that the defendant was not in possession when the rents became due:—Held, that the restrictive words "so long as the defendant should be in possession or receipt of the rents, produce and profits," contained in the first covenant, did not extend to the covenant to indemnify, and that such a plea was no answer to the breach to that covenant. Crossfield v. Morrison, 7 C. B. 286; 18 Jur. 565; 18 L. J., C. P. 185.

When a lessee grants an underlease, reserving a rent which is incident to the reversion on the underlease, the rent, the reversion, and the benefit of the covenants will not pass by a subsequent mere assignment of the term, nor unless expressly assigned. Franklin v. House, 19 W. R. 581; 24 L. T., N. S. 348—V. C. 8.

Upon an assignment of a lease to a purchaser, the absence of the counterpart of an underlease of a portion of the property comprised in the lease, is notice to the purchaser of the title of a person holding such counterpart by way of equitable mortgage, and if the purchaser does not inquire, or obtain possession of such counterpart, he will be guilty of gross negligence, and will, therefore, be postponed to the equitable mortgagee. Id.

A lessee of a messuage and premises for a term of years assigned the unexpired residue to one who was afterwards adjudicated bankrupt under the act of 1869. The trustee in bankruptcy disclaimed the lease:—Held, that the lessor could maintain an action on the covenants in the lease against the lessee for the rent which became due between the adjudication and the disclaimer. Smyth v. North, 41 L. J., Exch. 103; 7 L. R., Exch. 242: 20 W. R. 683.

In an action against the assignee of a lessee pour autre vie for rent which accrued due after the assignment, if the defendant is entitled to plead that he is in only as heir, and that the estate of the lessee was of less value than the rent reserved, he ought to aver that this was so down to the time of the commencement of the action. De la Poer v. Kirwan, 9 Ir. R., C. L. 519—C. P.

Operation of assignments by way of mortgage, or equitable assignments.]—An action of covenant for non-payment of rent lies against an assignee of a lease to whom an assignment has been made by way of mortgage security, although he has never entered nor taken actual possession. Williams v. Brannquet, 3 Moore, 500; 1 B. & B. 238.

A mortgagee of a leasehold estate by assignment is liable, so long as he has the legal estate, to perform the covenants of the lease, although he does not take possession. Stone v. Evans, Peake's Add. Cas. 94—Kenyon.

Although it was once held, that if a term was assigned by way of mortgage, with a clause of redemption, the lessor could not sue the mortgagee as assignee of all the estate, right, title, interest, &c., of the mortgagor, even after the mortgage had been forfeited, unless the mortgagee had taken actual possession. Eaton v. Jacques, 2 Dougl. 455.

If a leasehold interest is assigned by way of mortgage, the assignee, unless there is a special provision to the contrary, takes the interest subject to all the covenants and obligations of the original lessee. Uaig v. Homan, 4 Bligh, N. S. 380.

In an action for use and occupation, under the issue of non assumpsit, the defendant may give in evidence that the plaintiff had mortgaged the premises before the defendant came into occupation, and that the mortgagee had given notice to the defendant not to pay to the plaintiff any rent becoming due after such notice. Widdilove v. Barnett, 2 Bing. N. C. 538; 2 Scott, 763; 4 D. P. C. 347.

Obedience to the mortgagee's notice as to rent due before the notice, must be specially pleaded. Id.

W., a lessee of premises for a term of seventy five years, mortgaged the lease to T., and joined with him in an indenture, by which, after reciting the mortgage, the premises were demised to J. for twenty-one years. The mortgage was assigned to S., and by indenture, to which S. and W. were parties, after reciting the lease to J., that lease was assigned to M. This assignment contained a covenant by M. and W., that M. would not demise or assign the premises without the license and consent of W., with a proviso for re-entry if he did. M. paid rent to W., and afterwards assigned the premises to K. without the license or consent of W. In ejectment by S. and W.:—Held, first, that M. was not estopped from showing that W. was not the legal owner of the reversion, but mortgagor only, and that W., having a mere equitable interest, could not recover. Saunders v. Merryweather, 3 H. & C. 902; 13 W. R. 814.

Held, secondly, that S. could not recover, because no right of re-entry was reserved to him. Id.

The plaintiff, in consideration of 530*l.* to be paid by A., demised to him premises for the term of fifty-five years, at the yearly rent of 84*l.*, and subject to covenants to repair, &c. The consideration not having been paid, A. assigned to the plaintiff the residue of the term then unexpired, subject to the rent and covenants, and with a power of sale. In pursuance of that power the plaintiff, in consideration of 500*l.*, “bargained, sold, assigned, transferred and set over to the defendant the premises, to hold for the residue of the term of fifty-five years,” subject to the yearly rent of 84*l.*, and the covenants contained in the lease, to A.; and the defendant covenanted to pay the rent and perform the covenants. The defendant having entered on the premises:—Held, that, although the mortgage by A. operated as a merger of the term originally granted, yet the assignment by the plaintiff to the defendant created a new lease for the residue of the unexpired term, and consequently the defendant was liable on the covenants. Cottes v. Richardson, 7 Exch. 143; 21 L. J., Exch. 52.

A deposit of a lease by way of equitable mortgage does not render the depository liable for the rent and covenants. Moore v. Chout, 8 Sim. 508; 3 Jur. 220.

A lessee of a factory deposited the lease, by way of equitable mortgage, and upon the landlord distraining for rent in arrear, the deposit of the lease paid the rent in arrear to the landlord, entered into possession of the factory, sold some of the machinery, including some fixed to the freehold, and otherwise acted as the owner of the lease, and was accepted by the landlord as such owner:—Held, that the landlord had no equity to compel the deposit of the lease to take a legal assignment of the lease. Moore v. Greg, 3 De G. & S. 834.

An agreement to take an assignment of a lease, followed by possession on the part of the equitable assignee, is not sufficient to give the lessor any right to sue the equitable assignee in equity on the covenants in the lease. Cox

v. Bishop, 8 De G., M. & G. 815; 3 Jur., N. S. 490; 26 L. J., Chanc. 389.

The lessee of a public-house in London executed at the public-house, and at the time of entering into possession, a mortgage of his lease in favor of the brewer by whom the house was supplied with beer, to secure a sum already advanced, and future advances, not to exceed in the whole a given sum. At the same time and place he charged the lease, “subject to the security already given” to the brewer, with the repayment to the distiller who supplied the house with spirits of an advance made by him. The mortgage and charge were both executed in the presence of the solicitors of the brewer and distiller, and the latter there and then gave to the former a formal notice of the charge in favor of his client. Afterwards the publican became indebted to the brewer for the price of beer supplied to the house. The lease having been sold by the brewer under a power of sale in his mortgage:—Held, that, in the absence of any express agreement, the distiller was entitled to be repaid his advance out of the purchase-money in priority to the debt which had been incurred to the brewer subsequently to the time when notice was given to him of the distiller's charge; and that this priority was not affected by a custom of trade alleged to exist between publicans, brewers and distillers in London. Menzie v. Lightfoot, 11 L. R., Eq. 459; 40 L. J., Chanc. 561; 19 W. R. 578; 24 L. T., N. S. 695—R.

Remedies of lessee against his assignee or under-lessee.—An assignee who takes leasehold premises by an indenture indorsed on the lease, subject to the payment of the rent and the performance of the covenants and agreements reserved and contained in the lease, is not liable in covenant to the lessee, for rent which the lessee has been called on by the lessor to pay after the assignee has assigned over. Wolveridge v. Steward, 1 C. & M. 644; 3 Tyr. 637; 8 M. & Scott, 561—Exch. Cham.

If the original lessee is obliged to pay ground-rent, he may recover it from the assignee in possession. Stone v. Evans, Peake's Add. Cas. 94—Kenyon.

A messuage and premises were demised to the plaintiff, by a lease dated the 10th May, 1828, for the term of twenty-one years from the 25th March then last; which lease contained covenants to paint the outside of the premises once in every three years, and the inside once in every seven years, and to repair and keep in repair the premises, and also to do any repairs which on a view of the premises by the lessor should be found wanting, of which notice should be given. By a lease dated the 15th June, 1830, the plaintiff demised the premises to the defendant for the residue of the term, wanting ten days, containing covenants, with the exception of the stipulation as to painting the outside wood-work, in precisely the same terms as those contained in the original lease. The original lessors having brought an action against the plaintiff for breaches of the covenant to repair, he applied to the defendant to perform the repairs, and for instructions as to the course he should pursue with respect to the defense of the action. The defendant denied that any notice to repair had been given, and insisted that the premises did not require it; the plaintiff thereupon offered to suffer judgment by default, which the defendant refused to assent to. The plaintiff then gave the defendant notice, that, as he had denied that any notice to repair had been served, and insisted that the premises were not out of repair, he should traverse the breaches of covenant assigned, and try the question, holding the defendant responsible for the costs. This he accordingly did, and the result was, that the original lessors recovered 68*l.* damages, and 85*l.* 12*s.* for costs, and he himself incurred costs amounting to 53*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.*:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover from the defendant the costs of defending the action, as they were not necessarily occasioned by the defendant's breach of the covenant to repair. Walker v. Hatton, 10 M. & W. 249; 2 D., N. S. 263; overruling Neale v. Wyllie, 3 B. & C. 533; 5 D. & R. 442. And see Penley v. Watts, 7 M. & W. 601; Tindall v. Bell, 11 M. & W. 228.

Held, also, that although the covenants contained in the sub-lease were (with the exception of that relating to painting) the same in words as those contained in the original lease, they were, in effect, substantially different, the periods at which the leases were granted being different. Ib.

In an action by a lessee against an assignee for damages sustained by the former, in consequence of the neglect of the latter, while he continued assignee, to repair the premises, pursuant to a covenant in the lease, it appeared that in June, 1843, the plaintiff assigned the lease to the defendant; in October, 1851, the defendant assigned the lease to T.; and in June, 1852, T. assigned to H.; who in August, 1852, surrendered it to the ground landlord. It was proved that in July, 1852, the premises were dilapidated, but there was no evidence of their state at any prior time:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover substantial damages, and not nominal damages only. Smith v. Peat, 2 C. L. R. 424; 9 Exch. 161; 23 L. J., Exch. 84. S. P., Mapleton v. Rawlings, 3 C. L. R. 237—C. P.

The plaintiff being assignee of a lease which contained a covenant to repair, underlet the premises to the defendant, upon the terms that he should "maintain them in as good a state as they would be when repaired by him." Shortly after the defendant took possession, the premises, which were old and dilapidated, were destroyed by fire. The jury found that the cost of rebuilding them would be 1,635*l.*, but that they would be more valuable by 600*l.*:—Held, that the defendant was only bound to put the premises in the same state they would have been if he had repaired them before the fire, and consequently he was liable to pay, as damages, 1,035*l.* only. Yates v. Dunster, 11 Exch. 15; 24 L. J., Exch. 227.

The defendant, under-lessee, who had covenanted with the plaintiff, his lessor, to keep, and at the expiration or sooner determination of the term, to leave and deliver up the premises in repair, allowed them to become out of repair. While they remained in this condition, the plaintiff having committed a forfeiture by non-payment of rent, the superior landlord brought ejectment, and evicted the plaintiff and defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover against the defendant substantial damages for the non-repair of the premises. Davies v. Underwood, 2 H. & N. 570; 3 Jur., N. S., 1223; 27 L. J., Exch. 118.

A lessee of premises assigned his lease to A., who assigned to persons, who committed breaches of covenant and then assigned over. The lessee was subsequently sued by the lessor for the breaches of covenant committed by the assignees, and was compelled to pay:—Held, that the lessee was entitled to recover from the assignees the amount which he had been compelled to pay to his lessor. Moule v. Garrett, 41 L. J., Exch. 62; 7 L. R., Exch. 101; 20 W. R. 416; 26 L. T., N. S. 367. And see S. C. nom. Mule or Moule v. Garrett, 39 L. J., Exch. 69; 19 W. R. 697; 23 L. T., N. S. 343.

The lessees of premises underlet them by a lease, in which there was the usual general covenant by the lessees to repair. The under-lessee having neglected to repair according to his covenant, the lessees entered and did the repairs themselves in order to save a forfeiture of their own lease, with which they had been threatened by their landlord, and then and during the continuance of the lease to their under-tenant, the term of which had not expired, sued him for breach of such covenant to repair:—Held, that they could only recover nominal damages, since by having done the necessary repairs, they had at the time the action was brought sustained no injury to the reversion. Williams v. Williams, 43 L. J., C. P. 382; 9 L. R., C. P. 659; 30 L. T., N. S. 638; 23 W. R. 706.

In an action by the lessee against the assignee of a lease, for breach of a covenant in the deed of assignment to keep the demised premises in repair:—Held, that the lessee, in the absence of actual loss by him sustained, could recover no more than nominal damages, although the lessor had commenced an action against him for breach of the covenant contained in the lease. Beattie v. Quirey, 10 Ir. R., C. L. 516—Exch.

[Indemnities against payment of rent.]—A lessee of a farm for an unexpired term at a yearly rent payable quarterly, gave up possession to the defendant, under an invalid assignment of the unexpired residue of the lease. He entered, occupied and paid the reserved rent quarterly to the lessor for the lessee. The lessor never accepted or objected to the defendant as his tenant. The defendant quitted on a quarter-day without giving the lessee any notice to quit:—Held, that a promise by the defendant to indemnify the lessee against the rent for any period after the defendant had ceased to occupy, could not be inferred as a matter of law. Crouch v. Tregoning or Tregonning, 41 L. J., Exch. 97; 7 L. R., Exch. 88; 20 W. R. 636; 26 L. T., N. S. 286.

Right of assignee to assign.—There is no fraud in the assignee of a term assigning over his interest to whom he pleases, with a view to get rid of a lease, although such person neither takes actual possession nor receives the lease. Taylor v. Shum, 1 B. & P. 21.

An assignee of a lease, containing covenants running with the land, is liable, after he has assigned over, for a breach incurred after the assignment to him, and before his assignment over. Murley v. King, 2 C., M. & R. 18; 1 Gale, 100; 5 Tyr. 692.

4. Effect of Death of Tenant.

Rights and liabilities of personal representatives of deceased tenant.—Where a tenant is in possession under an agreement, which is a mere agreement for a lease, until his death, his interest is then determined; and the lessor may maintain ejectment against his executrix, who has possessed herself of the premises. Doe d. Bromfield v. Smith, 6 East, 530; 2 Smith, 570.

In an action, charging the defendant in his own character, who was an administrator of the original lessee, for rent due after the intestate's death:—Held, that although the defendant had taken possession, yet, having proved that the premises had been productive of no profit to him, and that, eight months after the death of the intestate, he had offered by parol to surrender them to the plaintiff, such proof constituted a good defense to the action. Remnant v. Bremridge, 2 Moore, 94; 8 Taunt. 191.

An executor, who has occupied premises held by his testator under a lease, which covenants for payment of rent and taxes, and to keep the premises in repair, sued as assignee, in respect of the privity of estate, is liable on the covenant for payment of rent and taxes, to the extent only of the profits; but, for a breach of the covenant to repair, he is liable to the same extent that any other assignee is liable. Tremeere v. Morrison, 4 M. & Scott, 603; 1 Bing. N. C. 89.

Seemle, that an offer by an executor to a lessor to surrender to him a lease granted to his testator, is an answer to an action against him as assignee for breaches of a covenant to repair, as to all breaches accruing after that offer. Reid v. Tentorden, 4 Tyr. 111.

To an action for rent against an assignee of a term, he pleaded that he was administrator; that the premises were of less value, and had yielded less profit than the arrears of rent; that he had paid over to the plaintiff all the profit received from them, and had offered to surrender before any rent became due, and had fully administered:—Held, that the averment in the plea as to the value of the premises, was not supported by showing that the intestate had underlet them, and that the defendant had been unable to get the rent from the under-tenant; or by proof that they were out of repair, as the lease to the intestate contained a covenant to repair, and it was therefore the defendant's duty to repair them. Hornidge v. Wilson, 8 P. & D. 641; 11 A. & E. 645.

Where a lease for years, by which the rent reserved is more than the value of the premises, vests in an executor, the executor is liable, as assignee, for the amount of rent for which the premises could have been let. Hopwood v. Whaley, 6 C. B. 744; 6 D. & L. 342; 12 Jur. 1088; 18 L. J., C. P. 48.

Where a lessee died intestate during the term, and his widow entered and paid rent, and afterwards her son-in-law took the premises with the assent of the landlord, and paid rent, and continued to occupy during the remainder of the term:—Held, first, that, there being no assignment in writing, he was not chargeable as assignee in fact. Paull v. Simpson, 9 Q. B. 365; 11 Jur. 13; 15 L. J., Q. B. 392.

Held, secondly, that he could not be considered an assignee in law, for, though the widow might have been chargeable as executrix de son tort, the defendant had not made himself executor de son tort by taking the premises after her. Id.

In an action by the plaintiff, as executor of an original lessee, against the executor of the assignee of the lease, upon a covenant by the assignee to indemnify the lessee against breaches of the covenants in the original lease, the defendant, under plene administravit, is protected by proof that he sold the lease in question, and had exhausted all the assets in his hands, by payment of simple contract debts, before the breaches of covenant declared on were committed. Collins v. Crouch, 13 Q. B. 542; 13 Jur. 861; 18 L. J., Q. B. 209.

The executor of an executor de son tort may become himself executor de son tort in respect of the estate of the original intestate; and where the father was executor de son tort with regard to a lease, and his son upon his death acted as agent to the mother till her death, and then continued in possession of the lease for the benefit of himself and the other children:—Held, that he became assignee of the lease, and liable upon the covenants therein. Williams v. Heales, 30 L. T., N. S. 20; 23 W. R. 817; 43 L. J., C. P. 80; 9 L. R., C. P. 177.

IX. ASSIGNMENT OF RENT OR OF REVERSION; ATTORNMENT; MERGER.

Assignment of reversionary interest, and its effect, in general.—A grantee of part of the grantor's reversionary interest in the whole of the property in which a particular estate, as a term of years, has been created, is an assignee of the reversion within 32 Hen. 8, c. 34; but the grantee of the whole reversionary interest in part of the property is not such an assignee. Wright v. Burroughes, 8 C. B. 685; 4 D. & L. 438; 12 Jur. 968; 16 L. J., C. P. 6.

The 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, applies only to demises by deed. Standen v. Christmas, 10 Q. B. 135; 11 Jur. 694; 16 L. J., Q. B. 265.

It is no defense to an action on an indenture of lease by the trustee of a party who has become bankrupt, that the lessees have performed their covenants with the assignees of the cestui que trust. Britten v. Britten or Perrott, 2 C. & M. 597; 4 Tyr. 478.

A lessor of a term of years created by a writing not under seal, containing a particular contract of tenancy, conveyed the freehold to the plaintiff. The defendant afterwards and during the term paid rent to the plaintiff, and otherwise admitted him to be his landlord on the terms of the original demise:—Held, though the term of years first created was still unexpired, that there was evidence for the jury in support of the demise stated; and that, on their verdict of such a demise, the plaintiff had a right of action for the non-observance of such particular contract of tenancy. Brydges v. Lewis, 3 Q. B. 603; 2 G. & D. 763.

In 1762 a lessor, having only an equitable estate in a field, demised a portion of the field to a lessee for 99 years. In 1773 the lessor, having acquired the legal estate in the field, demised the residue of the field to the lessee for the same term, by an indenture, which recited the former lease, stipulated for its continuing in force, but provided that no more rent should be paid for the entire field than was paid for the first portion, and that the rent to be paid for the entire field was meant to be the same as that reserved for the first portion:—Held, that the assignee of the reservation could not sue the assignee of the lease upon the covenants in the lease of 1762. Whitton v. Peacock, 2 Scott, 630; 2 Bing. N. C. 411.

C. granted and demised the exclusive right and license to take and kill game on land, with the use of a cottage, to the defendant for a term; and the defendant covenanted to leave the land at the end of the term as well stocked with game as at the time of the demise. C. assigned his reversion in the land and hereditaments to the plaintiffs; and they brought an action, at the end of the term, against the defendant for a breach of his covenant:—Held, that the demise was not a mere license, but the grant of an incorporeal hereditament; that the covenant touched the hereditament demised, and by virtue of 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, the assignees of the reversion could sue upon it. Hooper v. Clark, 2 L. R., Q. B. 200; 36 L. J., Q. B. 79; 15 W. R. 247; 16 L. T., N. S. 152; 8 B. & S. 150.

In 1852, M. having a crown lease of premises, let them to the plaintiff for three years from the 24th June, by an agreement wherein it was stipulated that he should do nothing contrary to the covenants and provisions in the lease from the crown. After the three years had passed, the plaintiff continued to occupy the premises as tenant from year to year, paying an annual rent from every 24th June. In September, 1869, M. assigned his interest in the crown lease to C., and subsequently gave notice to the plaintiff to pay his rent to C., from Michaelmas, 1869. This the plaintiff accordingly did, not receiving any notice to quit. In June, 1870, he was informed by the solicitors of C., that, as the interest of the latter under M.'s assignment expired in October, C. could not after that time treat the plaintiff as his tenant. The crown lease to M. expired on the 10th October, 1870, and in 1866, C. agreed with the crown for a new lease of the premises at the expiration of the old one. Both these facts were known to the plaintiff. A new lease was granted to C. by the crown when the former lease lapsed, and he having sublet the premises to the defendants, they evicted the plaintiff in 1870:—Held, that the plaintiff's tenancy terminated when the crown lease to M. ran out, and that the defendants were entitled to possession of the premises. Weller v. Spiers, 20 L. T., N. S. 866; 20 W. R. 772—Q. B.

The principle, that the assignee of a reversion is not bound by the terms in a lease not under seal, applies where the demise is of three windows in a factory, with the stipulation that the lessor shall provide steam power. Smith v. Egginton, 43 L. J., C. P. 140; 9 L. R., C. P. 145; 30 L. T., N. S. 521.

The question, whether the assignee of a reversion has adopted the terms of the demise entered into by his assignor, is one of fact, and is to be disposed of by the jury. Ib.

B. demised, by an instrument not under seal, three windows in a factory to the plaintiff, and stipulated to supply steam power. B. at the time of the demise was mortgagor in possession. His mortgagees sold to the defendant, who did not accept rent from the plaintiff, but continued to supply steam power. Subsequently a dispute arose as to the terms upon which the plaintiff should continue tenant of the defendant, who thereupon cut off the steam power. The plaintiff having sued the defendant for cutting off the steam power:—Held, that no action would lie against him. Ib.

As assignment by the lessor of the reversion in one of two farms, comprised in the same lease, to the lessee himself, does not destroy the lessor's right of re-entry over the other farm. Hyde v. Warden, 37 L. T., N. S. 567—C. A.

Repairs.—The 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, applies only to demises by deed, and an assignee of the reversion cannot maintain an action on a contract to repair made with the assignor. Standen v. Christmas, 10 Q. B. 135; 11 Jur. 694; 16 L. J., Q. B. 265.

But where the demise is not under seal, the lessor may, notwithstanding he has assigned the reversion, sue the lessee on his contract to repair for a breach committed during the tenancy, but subsequently to such assignment. Bickford v. Parson, 5 C. B. 921; 12 Jur. 377; 17 L. J., C. P. 193.

A declaration by an assignee of part of the reversion, for non-repair of leasehold premises, stated that G. held the premises under a lease for ninety-nine years, which expired on the 25th December, 1849; that during the time he so held the premises he granted an under-lease to V. and S. for twenty-five years and a quarter from the 25th December, 1823, by which under-lease V. and S. jointly and severally covenanted with G. that they would during the term repair, and at the end of the term deliver the premises up in repair, to G.; that during the continuance of the under-lease to V. and S., G. granted his reversion in the premises to S. and the plaintiffs; whereupon the term in the under-lease was, as to one undivided sixth part, merged in the reversion, and S. and the plaintiffs became, as joint tenants, possessed of the reversion of three undivided sixth parts of the premises, and the plaintiffs became, as joint tenants, possessed of the reversion of two other undivided sixth parts of the premises; that V. afterwards assigned to S. his interest in the under-lease granted to him and S.: whereupon the term as to one undivided sixth part merged in the reversion in the three sixth parts whereof S. and the plaintiffs were possessed, and the plaintiffs became, as joint tenants, possessed of the reversion of two of the last-mentioned three sixth parts; that S. died before the determination of the under-lease; and alleged as a breach the non-performance by V. of the covenant to repair after S.'s death, and to leave in repair:—Held, that the declaration was good, inasmuch as the whole of the reversion which remained was vested in the plaintiffs alone, in respect of which they were entitled to sue on the covenant to repair, as assignees, under 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, notwithstanding the partial merger of the term. Budeley v. Vigurs, 4 El. & Bl. 71; 3 C. L. R. 1627; 1 Jur., N. S. 159; 23 L. J., Q. B. 377.

Held, also, that under the conveyance by G. to S. and the plaintiffs one-third of the reversion was at once destroyed by coalescing with half the interest under the lease which was in S., and that consequently S. never took as reversioner; and there never was any suspension of the right of action by reason of S. being a party to sue and be sued. Id.

Held, also, that even if S. took and remained interested in one-sixth of the reversion, and that one-sixth was destroyed by the assignment to him by V., still the right of action for not leaving in repair, which arose only at the termination of the lease, never accrued to S., and therefore was never suspended. Id.

Held, also, that the plaintiffs might recover on the privity of contract transferred by 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, although there were an apportionment of the covenant to repair; but that in this case there was no such apportionment, as the plaintiffs had the whole existing reversion, and were injured if the whole of the premises were not kept in repair. Id.

Held, also, that the plaintiffs might recover on the privity of contract transferred by the 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, where the entire interest in the covenant had not passed to them. Id.

A lease was granted of a piece of land, with two messuages thereon, in course of erection, with a covenant by the lessee to complete the messuages within two months, and also to "keep the messuages or tenements or premises in repair during the term," with a proviso for forfeiture for breach of any of the covenants. The premises never were furnished, and were much dilapidated:—Held, that a forfeiture was incurred by the breach of the covenant to repair, in respect of which forfeiture the assignee of the reversion might sue. Bennett v. Herring, 3 C. B., N. S. 370.

A declaration stated, that F. and G. being seized of an estate in fee demised by indenture to the defendant and his assigns leave to dig for clay therein, and make such adits, and erect sheds and buildings as he should think necessary for working the clay, and to hold the same for twenty-one years; that the defendant covenanted with F. and G., their heirs and assigns, to pay compensation to them, their heirs and assigns, for all such lands within the limits thereof, as he might injure by such digging, the amount in case of difference to be settled by arbitration, and that the defendant would keep all houses and sheds in good repair; that the defendant entered and got the clay, when F. and G., by indenture, granted and conveyed the lands to the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns forever, who thereby became seized in fee, and that the interest of the defendant was determined by a notice to quit. First breach, that the defendant, by digging for clay after the plaintiff so became seized, did injure and destroy part of the land, for which the plaintiff was entitled to a compensation; and although he appointed an arbitrator to ascertain the amount, yet the defendant refused to appoint one. Second breach, that the defendant did not keep the works in repair:—Held, that the claim to damages, in respect of the injury to the land, being merely a chose in action, did not pass to the plaintiff by the conveyance of the land to him, and that the agreement as to ascertaining the amount of injury was merely incidental, collateral, and annexed to the substantial matter, and was to be exercised by the person who was the owner of the land at the time the injury was done, and to whom the compensation ought to be made. Martin v. Williams, 1 H. & N. 817; 26 L. J., Exch. 117.

Held, also, that the conveyance of the land to the plaintiff during the existence of the term in the incorporeal hereditaments, was an assignment of the reversion within 32 Hen. 8, c. 34; that the covenant to repair, as it directly touched and concerned the thing demised, was assignable with the reversion, and that the action might be brought in the name of the plaintiff, who was entitled to the benefit of the covenants. Ib.

The assignee of the reversion of a lease may maintain ejectment for breach of a covenant to repair, without giving the tenant notice of the assignment. Scutlock v. Horston, 1 L. R. C. P. Div. 106; 45 L. J., C. P. Div. 125; 24 W. R. 431; 34 L. T., N. S. 130.

Right to rent, in general.—A termor of mines granted a lease at a rent for a longer term than his term, reserving a royalty upon the ore and coal raised by him, or an annual sum in lieu thereof, if the royalties in any year should not amount to that sum; with power to distrain for the rents, reservations and royalties. During the continuance of the original term, he assigned by deed the rent and his estate in the premises:—Held, that his assignee could maintain an action for rent in arrear, after the assignment, and during the continuance of the original term. Williams v. Illyard, 5 Jur., N. S. 1417; 1 El. & Bl. 1040; 28 L. J., Q. B. 374; 7 W. R. 563.

The assignee of a lessor in a lease by deed, who has no estate in the land, has a reversion by estoppel as against the lessee, and may sue him on the covenants accordingly; and this applies to the case where a mortgagor makes a lease by deed, and assigns his equity of redemption with words that would pass a legal reversion in fee. Cuthbertson v. Irving, 4 H. & N. 742; 5 Jur., N. S. 740; 28 L. J., Exch. 306.

It makes no difference in this respect that the estates both of the mortgagor and mortgagee are equitable estates. Ib.

Tenants in common, assignees of the reversion of a lease, may join in suing, and be jointly sued, on covenants therein. Womersley v. Dilly, 26 L. J., Exch. 219.

After twenty years' use of premises, converted into a shop, without license, contrary to a covenant in a lease, an assignee of the reversion cannot take advantage of a condition of re-entry for such use, subsequently to the assignment. Gibson v. Doey or Doeg, 27 L. J., Exch. 37; 2 H. & N. 615.

Whether the benefit of such a condition runs with the land, and can be taken advantage of by the assignees of a reversioner, depends on the nature and character of the covenant, and whether it affects the use and enjoyment of the premises, and not whether it has, in fact, deteriorated the value. Ib.

Where rent has become due under a lease made by several joint tenants, an assignment of the reversion by one does not alter the nature of the by-gone rent, and therefore the right of distraining for it is gone. Staveley v. Alcock, 16 Q. B. 636; 15 Jur. 628; 20 L. J., Q. B. 320.

A. let a house to B. as tenant from year to year, and afterwards granted a lease by deed to C. of the house and other property, for twenty-one years:—Held, that this transaction transferred the reversion of the house to C., and that A. could not recover against B. for rent due after the lease. Harmer v. Bean, 3 C. & K. 307—Parke.

In an action for rent on an indenture brought by the assignees of the lessor (a bankrupt), the lessee cannot plead that the lessor nil habuit in tenementis. Parker v. Manning, 7 T. R. 537.

A. being tenant to B., under a lease containing covenants, by which the former was bound to fetch seventy five bushels of coal from Poole yearly, and deliver them at the mansion-house of the latter, and also to supply him with as much good wheat as he should want in his family at 5s. per bushel, it was agreed between them that the lease should be surrendered up, and a new one granted, omitting the above covenants. A new lease was accordingly executed, and at the same time an agreement was entered into, whereby A. agreed with B. that he would fetch and bring to the dwelling house of B., his heirs and assigns, seventy-five bushels of coals yearly, for twelve years (the term of the new lease) and yearly supply B., his heirs and assigns, with as much good wheat as he should want in his family, at 5s. per bushel. B. having parted with his reversion in the farm, and also quitted the mansion house in which he resided at the time when the agreement was made:—Held, that he was not entitled to maintain an action against A. for refusing to deliver the wheat at the stipulated price; that the agreement being entire must receive one uniform construction; and as it was clearly local in respect to the delivery of the coals, it could not be deemed personal with respect to the wheat. Coker v. Guy, 2 B. & P. 565.

Held, also, that no parol evidence could be admitted to explain the agreement, there being no latent ambiguity. Ib.

Where a termor makes a lease to A. for twenty one years, reserving rent "to herself, her executors, administrators and assigns," and the lessee covenanted to pay it "to her and her assigns," and she afterwards conveys the reversion expectant on the lease to trustees, in trust for the wife of A. during her life, the administratrix of the surviving trustee may sue the lessee for arrears of rent due as well before as after the decease of the intestate, for the purpose of defraying therewith expenses properly incurred on behalf of the property; and it is no answer for the lessee to allege, that with the consent of the intestate, and of the administratrix since the death, he had been allowed to pay over the rents to his wife, the money not being settled to her separate use. Dollen v. Butt, 4 Jur., N. S. 835; 27 L. J., C. P. 281; 4 C. B., N. S. 760.

In July, 1864, L. demised premises to the defendant for five years, at a rent of 55*l.* per annum, payable quarterly. Immediately after the grant of the lease the defendant advanced to L. 170*l.*, on account of rent; and in September, 1865, L. mortgaged the premises to the plaintiff. In May, 1866, B., who claimed under a prior mortgage from L., dated in September, 1858, through C., his attorney, commenced an ejectment against the defendant to recover possession of the premises, but did not proceed with it; and on the 1st of November, 1866, the plaintiff's attorney wrote to the defendant: "Mr. C. has written to say his clients are no longer entitled to receive your rent. I therefore request that you will have the kindness to pay the same here by Monday next:"—Held, that the prepayment of rent was no bar to his claim to the rent accruing after the defendant had notice that the plaintiff was grantee of the reversion; and that the letter, coupled with the circumstances known to the defendant, that he was raising money by mortgaging his reversion, and that the plaintiff's claim for rent could hardly be founded upon any other alleged right than one resulting from a grant of the reversion, would warrant a jury in inferring that the defendant had notice that the plaintiff was such grantee. Cook v. Guerra, 7 L. R., C. P. 132; 41 L. J., C. P. 89; 20 W. R. 367; 26 L. T., N. S. 97.

Apportionment of rent on assignment or severance of reversion.—[By 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 3, where the reversion upon a lease is severed, and the rent or other reservation is legally apportioned, the assignees of each part of the reversion shall, in respect of the apportioned rent or other reservation allotted or belonging to him, have and be entitled to the benefit of all conditions or powers of re entry for non payment of the original rent or other reservation, in like manner as if such conditions or powers had been reserved to him as incident to his part of the reversion in respect of the apportioned rent or other reservation allotted or belonging to him.]

Where land in the possession of a tenant for years is conveyed by deed, the right of the purchaser, as assignee of the reversion, to receive the whole rent for the current quarter, cannot be controlled by a contemporaneous parol agreement to apportion the quarter's rent between the assignor and assignee. Flinn v. Calow, 1 M. & G. 539.

Upon a joint demise by two tenants in common, in fee, with a general reddendum, not specifying to whom the rent is to be payable, the rent follows the reversion, and on the death of one of the tenants in common the reversion is split, and his share of it descends to his heir, who is entitled to the rent. Beer v. Beer, 13 C. B. 60; 16 Jur. 923; 21 L. J., C. P. 124.

As to apportionment of rent, generally,—see this title, VII., 8.

When attornment is necessary; what amounts to an attornment, and its effect.—[By 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 9, all grants or conveyances by fine or otherwise of any manors or rents, or of the reversion or remainder of any messuages or lands, shall be good and effectual, to all intents and purposes, without any attornment of the tenants of any such manors, or of the land, out of which such rent shall be issuing, or of the particular tenants upon whose particular estates any such reversions or remainders shall and may be expectant or depending, as if their attornment had been had and made.

By s. 10 it is provided, that no such tenant shall be prejudiced or damaged by payment of any rent to any such grantor or comisor, or by breach of any condition for non-payment of rent before notice shall be given to him of such grant by the comisor or grantee.

Whereas, the possession of estates in lands, tenements and hereditaments is rendered very precarious by the frequent and fraudulent practices of tenants, in attorning to strangers, who claim title to the estates of their respective landlord or landlords, lessor or lessors, who by that means are turned out of possession of their respective estates, and put to the difficulty and expense of recovering the possessions thereof by actions or suits at law: for remedy thereof, it is enacted, that all and every such attornment and attornments of any tenant or tenants of any messuages, lands, tenements or hereditaments within that part of Great Britain called England, dominion of Wales, or town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, shall be absolutely null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever; and the possession of their respective landlord or landlords, lessor or lessors, shall not be deemed or construed to be anywise changed, altered or affected by any such attornment or attornments:

Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to vacate or affect any attornment made pursuant to and in consequence of some judgment at law, or decree or order of a court of equity, or made with the privity and consent of the landlord or landlords, lessor or lessors, or to any mortgage after the mortgage is become forfeited. (11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 11.)

Where rent is paid by succeeding tenants, after an adverse possession of twenty-three years, it does not amount to an attornment, unless the consent, or at least the knowledge, of the landlord can be shown. Meredith v. Gilpin, 6 Price, 146.

Pending a demise by deed from A. to B., a sequestration issued out of Chancery against A.: B. signed an unstamped paper, purporting that he attorned, and became tenant to the sequestrators, to hold on such terms as might be afterwards agreed on:—Held, first, that the sequestrators could not maintain use and occupation against B., because an attornment infers a continuance of a subsisting tenancy, which here would be created anew by the deed; secondly, that the sequestrators could take no estate, and consequently they had no estate to which an attornment would apply; thirdly, that the instrument, if it had any operation, would operate as a new demise, and could not be read without a stamp. Cornish v. Searell, 1 M. & R. 703; 8 B. & C. 471.

An attornment where a tenant merely puts one person in the place of another as his landlord, but continues to hold under the same terms and conditions as before, is a mere acknowledgment that the person making it is tenant, and it requires no stamp. Doe d

Linsey v. Edwards, 5 A. & E. 95; 6 N. & M. 633; 2 H. & W. 139. S. P., Doe d. Wright v. Smith, 3 N. & P. 335; 8 A. & E. 255; 2 Jur. 854.

A tenant by elegit may distrain without attornment. Lloyd v. Davies, 2 Exch. 103.

A demise by way of grant for a term of years to commence immediately, made by a person entitled to an estate in tail in remainder, expectant upon the determination of a life estate during the lifetime of the tenant for life, operates as a conveyance of an estate for years carved out of the remainder, and vests the estate immediately in the grantee, without entry, by virtue of 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 9, which makes such a conveyance effectual without any actual attornment of the tenant of the particular estate upon which the remainder is expectant. Doe d. Agar v. Brown, 2 Ed. & Bl. 331; 23 L. J., Q. B. 432.

Avowry, in replevin, that Henry 8 was seized in fee of the shop in which, &c., and by letters patent enrolled, granted it to W., and the heirs male of his body, paying annually to the king a certain rent at Michaelmas. It then deduced title to the rent to Charles 2, and stated, that he, by letters patent enrolled, after referring therein to 22 Car. 2, c. 6, granted the rent to trustees mentioned in the statute, and their heirs, upon trust for Charles 2; that the trustees, by indenture, for considerations therein expressed, conveyed the rent to the dean and chapter of St. Paul's, whereupon and whereby the dean and chapter became and were seized as of fee in the rent, and they and their successors continued to be so seized until and at Michaelmas, 1845; an avowry was then made for six years' arrears of rent due to the defendants at the time when, &c.:—Held, that an express averment of attornment by the terre-tenant, upon the conveyance of the rent by the trustees, or some equivalent allegation, was necessary, because it could not be presumed that the conveyance was made after 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 9; and that the averment, that the rent was duly paid for a certain time, and that it was due and in arrear to the dean and chapter, was not an equivalent allegation, because, to make the payment of rent an attornment in law, it must be made to the grantee of the rent, and an attornment must be in the life of the grantee, and that an attornment could not be implied. Vigers v. St. Paul's (Dean and Chapter), 14 Q. B. 909; 14 Jur. 1017; 10 L. J., Q. B. 64—Exch. Cham.

A. granted to B. a leasehold interest in premises for a term of thirty years, to be computed from the 10th of March, 1839. On the 10th November, 1846, B. demised to the defendant the same premises for the term of twenty-three years, reserving a rent, and afterwards assigned his interest to the plaintiff:—Held, first, that by the deed a rent was created, and that it was assignable; secondly, that the plaintiff, who was the assignee of the party to whom the rent was reserved, could maintain an action for the recovery of it; and thirdly, that a privity was created between the plaintiff and the defendant, the same as if the defendant had actually attorned to the plaintiff, for, by the 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 9, attornment is unnecessary. Williams v. Hayward, 28 L. J., Q. B. 374; 1 El. & El. 1040.

An avowry stated a demise for two years, ending on the 29th of September, 1842. On the trial an attornment in writing, dated the 14th of October, 1842, was given in evidence, by which the plaintiff and others attorned tenants to the defendant for such parts of the premises as were in their occupation, and agreed to pay the rent set opposite to their names. Opposite to the defendant's name was written, "rent 55*l.*, from Michaelmas, 1840:"—Held, that the avowry was supported by the evidence. Gladman v. Plumer, 10 Jur. 109; 15 L. J., Q. B. 79.

A lessee, desiring to secure his premises for himself at the end of his lease, and being a bankrupt without a certificate, procured a friend to take the conveyance as trustee for him. This conveyance showed the legal estate to be outstanding in a person who could not be found. The lessee continued to occupy. The creditors' assignees, becoming aware of the circumstances, induced the trustee to convey his interest to them, and forced the lessee to attorn to them, and brought ejectment:—Held, that the assignees had a sufficient title. Cooper v. Lands, 14 W. R. 610; 14 L. T., N. S. 287—C. P.

A., in 1861, granted an under-lease to B. for twenty-one years from Michaelmas, 1861, at the yearly rent of 50*l.* In 1864, he granted an under-lease of the same premises to C. for twenty-one years from Michaelmas, 1863, at the same rent. B. never attorned to C.:—Held, inasmuch as there was no attornment, that the demise to C. did not pass the reversion to him, but only an interesse termini, and that, in order to establish C.'s under-lease, a surrender by B. to A., and not to C., was the effectual and proper course. Edwards v. Wickwar, 1 L. R., Eq. 403.

What constitutes a merger; and effect of merger of estates upon rights and liabilities of the parties.—[By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 10, when the reversion expectant on a lease, made either before or after the 4th day of August, 1845, of any tenements or hereditaments of any tenure, shall after the 1st day of October, 1845, be surrendered or merge, the estate which shall for the time being confer as against the tenant under the same lease the next vested right to the same tenements or hereditaments, shall, to the extent and for the purpose of preserving such incidents to, and obligations on, the same reversion, as, but for the surrender or merger thereof, would have subsisted, be deemed the reversion expectant on the same lease.]

A. was lessee of premises for a term of twenty-one years, which would expire at Michaelmas, 1809; in December, 1799, A. took a further lease of the same premises for sixty years, to commence from Michaelmas, 1809; the lessor died in December, 1800, and devised the premises to A., the lessee, for his life; by lease and release, A., in 1806, conveyed his life estate to B.:—Held, that A.'s interest in the lease of 1799, which was to commence in 1809, was not merged in his estate for life Dos d. Rawlings v. Walker, 5 B. & C. 111; 7 D. & R. 487.

L., being seized in fee, demised to B. for twenty-one years from June, 1814. B. demised to M. for twenty-one years from June, 1814, wanting twenty-one days; and then by deed-poll granted to L. the indenture of lease to M., the premises thereby granted, and the rent reserved, to hold to L., his executors, &c., for the term mentioned in the demise to M.; L. conveyed the premises, the reversion and reversions, rents, issues, and profits, and all his interest, in fee to the plaintiff, by way of mortgage; M. assigned his term to the defendant by way of mortgage, but the defendant never entered:—Held, that the deed poll from B. to L. did not merge the chattel interest in the fee, or suspend the right to sue on the lease to M. Burton v. Barclay, 7 Bing. 745; 5 M. & P. 785.

A lease was granted in 1759 for 99 years, if certain parties should so long live. The lessees in 1818 demised the premises to P. for 63 years, from the 25th March, 1821, if their interest should so long continue, subject to a rent of 42l. and various covenants, with a proviso for re-entry in case of default. P. had already the reversion in fee, subject to a mortgage granted by him before the last-mentioned demise. By lease and release executed in 1820, to which the mortgagee was a party, P. in consideration of a sum of money (part of which went to discharge the mortgage) conveyed the premises in fee to a purchaser, to whom the mortgagee also assigned his term; and it was stipulated that the purchaser should retain 300l. of the purchase-money upon trust, that, if P. should pay the 42l. rent, and perform the covenants contained in the lease of 1818, the purchaser should pay over to him the 300l. at the expiration of the term, or extinguishment of the lease of 1759, and interest in the meantime:—Held, that the deed of 1818 was an assignment of all the interest of the then lease to P., and that, by the conveyance of 1820, that interest, as well as the reversion in fee, passed to the purchaser, and (the mortgage being at the same time put an end to) the term became merged in the inheritance; and consequently, that, as soon as the term became vested in the purchaser, P. was discharged from the rent and covenants, and entitled to the 300l. Thorn v. Woolcombe, 3 B. & Ad. 586.

By an indenture in 1742, the Broderers' Company demised a farm for 100 years, with a covenant for perpetual renewal. On the 25th of August, 1827, the party in whom the term vested assigned the residue to H. On the 28th of August, 1827, he assigned the residue of the term to mortgagees, with a proviso for redemption on payment of 5,000l. within twelve months. In May, 1828, a lease of the premises was executed by H. and the plaintiff, for twenty-one years, under which the plaintiff entered into possession, and paid rent to H. up to 1835; and afterwards to the defendant. On the 12th of January, 1836, by an indenture between the mortgagees, H., the defendant, and the Broderers' Company, the mortgagees and H. surrendered to the company the premises, for the residue of the term, together with all covenants, to the intent that the residue of the term might be merged in the reversion, and the covenant for renewal be extinguished. On the 18th of January, 1836, the Broderers' Company demised the premises to H. for 100 years, and by an indenture of the 4th of February, 1836, the unexpired residue of the term became vested in the defendant. An action having been brought against him as assignee of H. for a breach of covenant:—Held, first, that H. did demise to the plaintiff, as the lease by him was good by way of estoppel. Sturgeon v. Wingfield, 15 M. & W. 224; 15 L. J., Exch. 212.

Held, secondly, that the reversion became vested in the defendant, as it was good by way of estoppel. Id.

Declaration in an action by the plaintiffs and P. on an indenture, by which, after reciting that they were owners of the premises subject to a mortgage for 3,500l., the interest of which was payable half-yearly at the office of an attorney named, the plaintiffs and P. demised the premises to the defendant for seven years, yielding and paying the clear yearly sum of 153l. 11s. in part of interest on the mortgage. Breach, non-payment of rent; and an averment, that the plaintiffs had not, nor had either of them, at or since the making of the indenture, any reversion of or in the premises, purported to be demised. Plea, the reversion in the premises expectant on the determination of the lease was in the plaintiffs and P., and after P.'s death was in the plaintiffs, who survived her; and, before breach, the plaintiffs conveyed their reversion to S., who became the assignee. Replication, no reversion was at the making of the indenture or since in the plaintiffs and P., nor since the death of P. in the plaintiffs:—Held, first, that the replication was not a departure from the declaration. Pargeter v. Harris, 7 Q. B. 708; 10 Jur. 260; 15 L. J., Q. B. 118.

Held, secondly, that the declaration was good, inasmuch as the facts disclosed in the lease did not estop the plaintiffs from saying that they had no reversion; and that, therefore, the covenant for payment of rent was a covenant in gross. Id.

Held, thirdly, that the plea was bad, inasmuch as the defendant was not at liberty to assume that there was a reversion. Id.

A., being tenant for life, in 1769 made a lease of premises, to commence in 1784, for the term of forty-six years, and died in 1775. B., the assignee of that term, in 1795 demised the premises to C., D. and E., whose assignees the plaintiffs were, for thirty-four years and three-quarters; and the plaintiffs, in 1812, demised the premises to the defendant for eighteen years and a quarter. The declaration stated, that C., D. and E. were possessed of the premises for the residue of a term of thirty four years and three-quarters, and that the plaintiffs were possessed of the reversion of the premises. The judge ruled at the trial, that the interest of C., D. and E. was properly described in the declaration, and that the plaintiffs were possessed of the reversion. On motion for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection:—Held, that there was no ground for a new trial. Oxley v. James, 13 M. & W. 209; 13 L. J., Exch. 358.

B., after mortgaging premises in fee, demised them by deed to the defendant for thirty-one years. B. afterwards became bankrupt and died, and his assignees sold the premises to D.; and the mortgagee, being paid off, by the direction of the assignees, conveyed to D. in fee, the assignees also being parties and joining in the conveyance. D., after receiving rent for two years, gave the defendant notice to quit:—Held, that the lease being good against B., by estoppel only, D. was not estopped by it in consequence of the assignees of B. having joined in the conveyance to him, and might bring ejectment and an action for use and occupation. Doe d. Downs v. Thompson, 9 Q. B. 1037; 11 Jur. 1007.

A., in May, 1823, demised premises to B. for eighty years, with a proviso for re-entry in case the lessee, his executors, &c., should exercise or carry on, or permit to be exercised or carried on, the business of a victualer or publican. B., in November, 1823, mortgaged to C., and in 1829, the mortgage term was assigned to D., and ultimately became vested in E. After B. had assigned to C., and when he had no reversion but a mere equity of redemption, he by indenture granted an under-lease for seventy-six years to F., with a proviso for re-entry similar to that contained in the original lease from A. Some of the mesne assignments were made subject to this under-lease. In ejectment by the legal representatives of E., for a breach of the covenant in the original lease in using the premises as a public-house or beershop:—Held, first, that the under-lease granted by B. operated merely as a demise by estoppel, inasmuch as he had not, at the time of making it, or since, any legal interest. Doe d. Prior v. Ongley, 10 C. B. 25; 20 L. J., C. P. 26.

Held, secondly, that the lessors of the plaintiff, or the persons under whom they claimed, not being parties to the under-lease, or to any of the assignments which recognized and referred to it, were not bound by any covenants contained therein. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the payment to and acceptance by E. of rent, under the under-lease by B. to F., merely created a tenancy from year to year; and that such tenancy was well determined by a notice to quit, served upon the attorney of the administratrix of the person who had paid the rent to the lessors of the plaintiff, and under whom the defendant claimed. Ib.

A lease of premises for a term of years was granted to K., L. and C. Some time afterwards L. granted a lease of the residue of the term, wanting one day, to the defendants, by whom the lease was executed, and rent was paid to L. Both leases contained covenants to repair and insure, and a proviso for re-entry for breach of either of them, but a performance of the covenant to insure in the lease to the defendants would not necessarily have included a performance of the corresponding covenant in the original lease. The premises being out of repair, and uninsured, the original lessor entered for a forfeiture. In an action by L. as reversioner against the defendants, for a breach of their covenants to repair and insure, and for damages sustained by his loss of the term:—Held, first, that the execution of the lease and payment of rent to L. by the defendants were evidence that L. was solely entitled to the reversion, upon the determination of the lease granted to the defendants. Logan v. Hull, 4 C. B. 598; 11 Jur. 804; 16 L. J., C. P. 252.

Held, secondly, that L. (a sub-lessor) could not recover against the defendants (sub-lessees) the value of the term granted by the original lease, which he had lost by the defendants' breach of covenants. Ib.

A corporation being seized in fee of a close, by a deed of the 17th February, 1800, demised the same to H. for a term of lives and years. By deed of the 23d July, 1803, H. assigned to C. his interest in the premises, to secure payment of 1,200*l.* lent by C. to H. By deed of the 19th February, 1804, reciting the two former deeds, and that H. agreed to sell part of the land to M. and W. for a sum out of which the sum due from H. should be paid to C. C. bargained, sold, assigned and transferred, and H. granted, bargained, sold, assigned and transferred to M. and W. part of the premises. In 1813, H. died, having made his will, whereby, after bequeathing his estates to his wife for life, he devised the same after her death to J. and M. in manner following: "Upon trust to pay and apply the rents, issues and profits of the same to and for the life and benefit of my daughter Mary and her assigns, during her life, and independent of her present or any future husband; and, after her death, I give, devise, and bequeath my real and leasehold estates unto and equally among all and every the children of my daughter, share and share alike, as tenants in common." In 1816, the wife of H. died. By deed of the 11th December, 1817, the corporation assigned to the trustees the reversion in fee simple of the close:—Held, that, as the trustees took only an estate during the life of Mary, the lease for lives did not merge on the grant of the reversion. Cooks v. Blake, 1 Exch. 220; 17 L. J., Exch. 370.

X. ESTOPPEL OF TENANT TO DISPUTE TITLE OF LANDLORD.

1. How created.

General principles.—The doctrine of estoppel between landlord and tenant is founded upon the principle that a lessee, having accepted a lease, may not plead to the action of his lessor nil habuit in tenementis. Lungford v. Selmes, 3 Kay & J. 220; 2 Jur., N. S. 859.

A tenant may not deny his landlord's title, because, if that title is bad, the tenant's first duty is to give up the possession which he received from the landlord, and not to defend an action against him. Agar v. Young, Car. & M. 78—Erskine.

Where a lease purports to be made under a power contained in a will, the lessee is estopped, by his execution of the counterpart, from denying the execution of the will. Bringle v. Goodson, 8 Scott, 71; 5 Bing. N. C. 738; 1 Arn. 322.

If one party takes an interest in land under another, although that interest is wrongfully acquired, he cannot afterwards dispute the title of the person under whom he took that interest. Doe d. Johnson v. Bayly, 4 N. & M. 837; 3 A. & E. 188; 1 H. & W. 270.

So long as a lessee continues in possession under the lease, he cannot set up any defense founded upon the fact that the lessor nil habuit in tenementis; and upon the execution of the lease there is, in contemplation of law, created in the lessor a reversion in fee-simple by estoppel, which passes by descent to his heir, and by purchase to his assignee or devisee, who may sue on the covenants in the lease. Cutbertson v. Irving, 4 H. & N. 742; 5 Jur., N. S. 740; 23 L. J., Exch. 300; affirmed, 6 H. & N. 135; 6 Jur., N. S. 1211; 20 L. J., Exch. 485; 3 L. T., N. S. 335; 8 W. R. 704—Exch. Cham.

By payment of rent.—Payment of rent is prima facie evidence of the title of the landlord. Doe d. Chun v. Clarke, Peake's Add. Cas. 239—Bayley.

A tenant who has paid rent cannot set up the title of a third person, in bar of an ejectment by his lessor. Doe d. Bristol v. Pegge, 1 T. R. 760, n.; 4 Dougl. 309.

P. N. and the plaintiff, occupied successively premises under a lease that had been granted in 1809, by parties having no right to make a lease. The defendant, in 1827, became possessed of the fee. In 1829 and 1831 respectively, the defendant distrained on P. and on N. for arrears of rent, which they paid.—Held, that these payments amounted to such an acquiescence by P. and N. in the title of the defendant, that they, and those deriving possession from or under them, were estopped from disputing it; and this although the defendant himself produced the lease of 1809, and failed to show that it had been assigned to him. Cooper v. Blandy, 4 M. & Scott, 562.

Land was vested in trustees to apply the rents to the repair of a parish church. Those trustees in 1818 demised to S. for ten years, and again in 1828 for ten years more, which lease expired in 1833. During the lease S. assigned to the plaintiff, and after the expiration of it the plaintiff continued in possession under the trustees, paying rent to them. The trustees afterward, and after the 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, came into operation, viz., in 1842, assigned by deed to new trustees, two of whom were the churchwardens of the parish at the time that a distress for rent was made.—Held, that the payment of rent to the old trustees was evidence of a new taking under them as tenant from year to year, which precluded the plaintiff from contesting the title of the old trustees, and that the new trustees, who claimed under them by deed of assignment, had a good title by estoppel. Gouldsworth v. Knights, 11 M. & W. 337; 13 L. J., Exch. 283.

By award.—Where the lessor of the plaintiff and the defendant in ejectment have before referred their right to the land to an arbitrator, who has awarded in favor of the lessor, the award concludes the defendant from disputing the lessor's title in an ejectment. Doe d. Morris v. Rosser, 3 East, 15.

By acknowledgment of title.—Where a tenant occupied apartments in a house belonging to a wife, and paid rent to the husband, who subsequently granted a lease of the whole house to the plaintiff.—Held, that having occupied with notice of the lease, he could not impeach its validity, nor controvert the plaintiff's title. Rennie v. Robinson, 1 Bing. 147; 7 Moore, 539.

The plaintiff had been let into possession of premises, as tenant for a year, by N., six months' notice to be given on either side, and had paid rent to him. Before the end of the year the defendant went to the plaintiff and claimed title, and desired that the rent in future should be paid to himself. The plaintiff, in order to be satisfied of the truth, went with the defendant to N., who admitted the defendant's title, and that the plaintiff must consider him landlord.—Held, that the plaintiff, who assented and subsequently paid rent to the defendant, could not contest his title. Hall v. Butler, 2 P. & D. 374; 10 A. & E. 204. See Jew v. Wood, 1 Craig & Ph. 185; 5 Jur. 954.

The defendant, in March, 1832, took premises from F. and B., "agents for the trustees of the joint estates of T. and S. B." Upon the trial of an action for use and occupation by the plaintiffs, "as trustees of the joint estate of T. and S. B." against the defendant, it appeared by the plaintiffs' own evidence, that, in 1831, they were trustees for the estate of S. B. only.—Held, that the defendant was estopped from taking advantage of this discrepancy, having in 1832 taken the premises of the plaintiffs as trustees of the joint estate. Fleming v. Gooding, 4 M. & Scott, 455; 10 Bing. 549.

G. demised premises to D., who entered and paid him rent. During the term, a third party, T., disputed G.'s title, and they agreed to be bound by the opinion of a barrister, who decided in T.'s favor. G. thereupon delivered up the till-locks, and permitted T.'s attorney to tell D, the tenant, that he must, in future, pay the rent to T. as his lord. D. then paid rent accordingly, but G. afterwards distrained upon him for the same rent:—Held, that G.'s claim of title as landlord to D. had expired; that his conduct amounted to an admission of that fact, and that D. was not estopped from alleging it; and, per Lord Denman, C. J., that G. was estopped from setting up his relation of landlord against the defendant, having himself induced D. to pay rent to another person. Downs v. Cooper, 2 Q. B. 256; 1 G. & D. 573; 6 Jur. 622.

An attornment by a tenant to a receiver appointed by the Court of Chancery to collect the rents, and payment of rent to such receiver, create a tenancy by estoppel between the tenant and the receiver, but do not inure to enable the person who is found ultimately to have the legal title to treat the tenant as his tenant, and to distrain for rent. Evans v. Mathias, 3 Jur., N. S. 793; 24 L. J., Q. B. 809; 7 El. & Bl. 590.

D. granted to A. a lease of premises for twenty-one years from the 29th of September, 1854, "subject, nevertheless, to an indenture of lease, bearing date the 15th October, 1847, and made between D., of the first part, J. D. and B. D., of the second part, and K., of the third part, whereby the premises were demised to K. for a term of twenty-one years, determinable and subject to the covenants and agreements therein mentioned." A. having paid rent under his lease:—Held, in an ejectment for breaches of covenant, that A. was estopped from setting up the prior lease. Duke v. Ashby, 7 Il. & N. 609; 8 Jur., N. S. 236; 31 L. J., Exch. 168; 10 W. R. 273.

By a deed made in 1840, S., in contemplation of his marriage, conveyed real estates to trustees to his own use until the marriage; and after the marriage, to the trustees, their executors, administrators and assigns, for a term of 500 years, without impeachment of waste, upon certain trusts, and immediately after the expiration, or sooner determination thereof, and in the meantime subject thereto, to the use of S. for life, without impeachment of waste, with remainder to other uses. It was also provided by the deed, that it should be lawful for S. during his life, from time to time, by deed either referring to or not referring to the power, to demise the estates for any term not exceeding twenty-one years, so that there should be reserved the best or most improved yearly rent, to be incident to the immediate reversion of the hereditaments so demised, that could be obtained for the same, and so that the lessee was not by any clause therein to be contained made dispunishable for waste, or exempted from punishment for committing waste. The marriage took place, and S. afterwards, by deed, leased the premises to the defendant for twelve years. By the lease, which did not refer to the deed of settlement, the rent was reserved to S., his heirs and assigns; and it contained a covenant by the lessee to repair a blacksmith's shop, and all the glass and leadwork of the windows of the messuages, and all doors, the lessee being allowed sufficient bricks and timber for the repairs, and to yield up the premises so repaired at the end of the term to S., his heirs or assigns; there was also a covenant by S. that he would repair, except those repairs covenanted to be made by the defendant. S. died before the expiration of the term:—Held, that the lease was not in pursuance of the power, and void as between the trustees and the lessee; but that such a lease is good by way of estoppel between the parties to it, and, consequently, S. might have maintained an action upon it against the lessee for a breach of covenant by the lessee. Yellowly v. Gower, 11 Exch. 274; 24 L. J., Exch. 289.

Effect of mistake or misrepresentation.]—

Where a tenant, by mistake or misrepresentation, pays rent to a person not entitled to demand it, he is not precluded by such payment from giving evidence, on a plea of non tenuit, in replevin against the supposed landlord, to show that the latter is not entitled to the rent. Rogers v. Pitcher, 1 Marsh. 541; 6 Taunt. 202.

An acknowledgment of title by a tenant, in one who claims as heir-at-law of the person under whom the tenant had previously held, will not preclude the latter from calling in question the title of the claimant, under a plea of non tenuit, if it appears that the acknowledgment proceeded from a misrepresentation or misapprehension of the nature of the title set up. Gregory v. Doidge, 11 Moore, 394; 3 Bing. 474.

Payment of rent to, or even an express agreement with, one who claims to be landlord, does not preclude the tenant from afterwards showing that the party claiming had no title, and that the payment or other acknowledgement was induced by misrepresentation or made under mistake, the tenant not having been originally let into possession by the claimant. Claridge v. M'Kenzie, 4 Scott, N. R. 796; 4 M. & G. 143.

A. demised a house and lands to B., and afterwards, being embarrassed, assigned the premises and all his personal estate to C. A. told B. that he had assigned the premises, and requested him to give C. an acknowledgment, whereupon B. gave C. a shilling, and subsequently agreed with C. to give up possession to him of the house and lands respectively, at the usual times, reserving an allowance for his improvements. Afterwards, and while the premises were still in B.'s occupation, A. became bankrupt, and C. brought ejectment. The assignees under A.'s commission defended as landlords, and contended that the assignment to C. was invalid, A. having become bankrupt when he made it:—Held, that the acknowledgments above mentioned did not estop B., or the assignees, as representing him, from contesting C.'s title on the above ground, such acknowledgments having been made in consequence of A.'s representations, in which he suppressed the facts rendering the assignment invalid. Doe d. Phelin v. Brown, 2 N. & P. 592; 7 A. & E. 447; W., W. & D. 677.

2. Who Estopped; and to what Extent.

What parties are estopped; and in whose favor estoppel operates.]—In ejectment, a person defending as landlord, is bound by the same estoppel as the tenant in possession. Doe d. Manvers v. Mizen, 2 M. & Rob. 56—Patteson.

Previously to 1812, a person built a house on a piece of waste ground, and before he acquired a title to it, gave up possession to the tenant of the adjoining land, who held it under a lease granted in 1812. The latter let the premises to the defendant:—Held, in ejectment by the landlord of the adjoining land against the defendant, that the latter was estopped from denying the title of the tenant, and the tenant from disputing that of the landlord. Doe d. Whelbs v. Fuller, 1 Tyr. & G. 17.

An assignee of a lease by indenture is estopped by the deed which estops his assignor. Taylor v. Needham, 2 Taunt. 278.

Ejectment for two stamping mills on the demise of H. The mills had been let to a mining company by H. from year to year, and notice to quit had been given by him to the company. On the day of the demise in the declaration H. was a partner in the company, and the defendant, who was another partner, defended on behalf of the company. At the trial, it was ruled that the defendant was estopped from disputing the title of H., although H. had admitted, in an answer in Chancery which was in evidence, that he had no legal title:—Held, that the defendant was estopped from disputing H.'s title, notwithstanding H. was a partner with him in the company. Francis v. Doe d. Harvey, 4 M. & W. 331; 1 H. & H. 362.

A lessee, after executing a lease, cannot dispute the title of either of his lessors. Wood v. Day, 1 Moore, 389; 7 Taunt. 646.

But he may show that his landlord's title has expired. Neave v. Moss, 1 Bing. 360; 8 Moore, 389.

A tenant who attorns to a party from whom he did not receive the possession, is not estopped from showing want of title in such party. Cornish v. Searell, 1 M. & R. 793; 8 B. & C. 471.

Where the avowants proved an attornment made by the plaintiff after ejectment brought against him seven years before the commencement of the replevin suit, during which period it did not appear that the rent had been demanded; and the plaintiff offered to prove a feoffment to himself by the person under whom the avowants claimed; and certain letters written by such persons, containing expressions adverse to the avowant's claim, were rejected, on the ground that the plaintiff could not be permitted to dispute his tenancy after an attornment;—a new trial was granted. Gravenor v. Woodhouse, 7 Moore, 289; 1 Bing. 38.

Where A. claimed to hold lands under B. as a security for a debt:—Held, that he could not defend an ejectment by the assignees of B., after his bankruptcy, on the ground that the grant under which B. derived his title from the crown was void. Doe d. Biddle v. Abrahams, 1 Stark. 305—Ellenborough.

If B., claiming under A., lets lands for a year to C., and dies, and A. afterwards brings an ejectment against C., C. cannot dispute the title of A. Barwick d. Richmond Corp. v. Thompson, 7 T. R. 488. And see Bryan d. Child v. Winwood, 1 Taunt. 208.

A. having, without title, entered upon land, and built a cottage, afterwards accepted a lease (by indenture) from B.: C., claiming the land as his own, paid to A. 20l. to give up the possession to him:—Held (in ejectment by B. against C.), that A. estopped himself from controverting the title of B., and that C. was bound by the estoppel, as having come in under and received the possession from B. Doe d. Bullen v. Mills, 1 N. & M. 25; 2 A. & E. 17; 1 M. & Rob. 385. See Doe d. Rutzen v. Lewis, 6 N. & M. 764; 5 A. & E. 277; 2 H. & W. 162.

An assignee of the reversion may establish his title against the lessee by way of estoppel. Cuthbertson v. Irving, 4 H. & N. 742; 5 Jur., N. S. 740; 23 L. J., Exch. 306; affirmed, 6 H. & N. 135; 6 Jur., N. S. 1121; 29 L. J., Exch. 485; 3 L. T., N. S. 385; 8 W. R. 704—Exch. Cham.

Extent of estoppel where title of landlord is limited or defective.]—A lessee for years, who covenants to deliver up possession of the premises, at the expiration of the term, to his lessor, his heirs and assigns, is not estopped by such covenant from showing, after the death of the lessor or the determination of the lease, that the lessor was only tenant for life of the premises demised. Doe d. Strobe v. Seaton, 2 C., M. & R. 728; 1 Tyr. & G. 19; 1 Gale, 303.

The interest of a tenant for life and a reversioner are the same, and therefore a lessee who has paid rent to the first cannot set up title in another person as an answer to an action by the latter after the death of the former. Doe d. Colmore v. Whitroe, D. & R. N. P. C. 1—Abbott.

If a lessor who has only an equitable title grants a lease, he has, as against his lessee, a good title by estoppel. Doe d. Marriott v. Edwards, 6 C. & P. 208; 3 N. & M. 193; 5 B. & Ad. 1065.

A., having mortgaged to B., demised to C., reserving a power of re-entry, and afterwards mortgaged to D. all his interest. C. may set up the title of D. as an answer to an ejectment brought by A. under the clause for re-entry. Id.

A lease granted under a power contained in a settlement, recited the title of the lessor, and showed that he had only an equitable interest;

a right of re-entry for a breach of covenants in the lease was reserved to the lessor and his assigns:—Held, that the lessee was not estopped from disputing the title of the lessor so disclosed in the lease. Greenaway v. Hart, 14 C. B. 940; 18 Jur. 449; 23 L. J., C. P. 115.

By a will, a power was given to a tenant for life to demise for twenty one years, and to executors, to mortgage in fee or for years. In 1812, after the testator's death, the tenant for life made a grant for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live; in 1814, he demised, under his power, for twenty one years; in 1828, the executors mortgaged for 1,000 years, under their power. To an action by the mortgagee for rent arising under the lease for twenty one years:—Held, that the lessee could not set up as a defense the interest of the grantee for ninety-nine years. Bringloe v. Goodson, 4 Bing. N. C. 720; 6 Scott, 502; 1 Arn. 322.

If A. is put into possession of a cottage by parish officers, and the lord of the manor prevails on A. to give up the possession of the cottage to him, and the lord of the manor puts B. into possession, and the parish officers bring an ejectment against B., B. cannot set up a title in the lord of the manor, as, under these circumstances, neither the lord of the manor nor B. can set up any title which A. could not set up; and if the cottage really belonged to the lord of the manor, he must bring an ejectment for it. Doe d. Huden v. Burton, 9 C. & P. 254—Gurney.

Where an occupier of a house paid rent to churchwardens, and the latter afterwards demised the house by lease for a term to A., with notice to the tenant that he must consider A. as his landlord:—Held, that the tenant might impeach the lease, and show that the lessee had no title derived from the churchwardens. Phillips v. Pearce, 8 D. & R. 43; 5 B. & C. 433.

In defense to an ejectment, it may be shown that the parties under whom the plaintiffs claim had no title when they conveyed to him, although the defendant himself claims by a conveyance from the same parties, if the latter conveyance was subsequent to that which the defendant seeks to impeach. Doe d. Oliver v. Powell, 1 A. & E. 531; 3 N. & M. 616.

A lessee may plead to an action by his lessor that the lessor had an interest at the date of the lease, but that such interest had determined before the alleged cause of action arose. Langford v. Selmes, 3 Kay & J. 220; 2 Jur., N. S. 859.

Therefore, if a termor affects to grant a lease for a term exceeding his own term in duration, and to reserve an annual rent, that would operate as an assignment of his term, and there would be no estoppel between him and the person to whom he made such assignment; and, accordingly, it would be doubtful whether the assignor would have any remedies for recovering the rent. Id.

If any estate or interest passes from a lessor, or his real title is shown upon the face of the lease, there can be no estoppel. Cuthbertson v. Irving, 4 H. & N. 742; 5 Jur., N. S. 740; 28 L. J., Exch. 306; affirmed, 6 H. & N. 135; 6 Jur., N. S. 1211; 29 L. J., Exch. 485; 8 W. R. 704; 3 L. T., N. S. 335—Exch. Cham.

If a lessor has no title, and the lessee is evicted by title paramount, he may plead that as a defense to an action by the lessor. Id.

Effect of expiration or surrender of tenancy or term.—In ejectment by landlord against tenant, whose lease is expired, the latter is not barred from showing that his landlord's title has expired. England d. Syburn v. Slade, 4 T. R. 682. S. P., Doe d. Jackson v. Ramsbottom, 3 M. & S. 516.

Payment of rent by a tenant to his landlord, after the title of the latter has expired, and after the tenant has received notice of an adverse claim, does not amount to an acknowledgment of title in the landlord, or to a virtual attornment; unless, at the time of such payment, the tenant heard the precise nature of the adverse claim, or how the landlord's title had expired. Fenner v. Duplock, 9 Moore, 82; 2 Bing. 10.

T. held premises under a lease from B., and paid rent to B., and to his personal representative after his death. On the expiration of the lease, T. surrendered the premises to the defendant:—Held, that the defendant could not dispute the title under which T. came in. Doe d. Manton v. Austin, 2 M. & Scott, 107.

A tenant may show that his landlord's title is at an end, in an ejectment against him by the latter; but where such action was brought by the reversioner, whose interest was the same as that of the tenant for life, and the tenant had paid rent to the reversioner:—Held, that he could not show that the reversionary interest was at an end; but that he might show some prior title in the person under whom he claimed to hold. Doe d. Colemere v. Whitroe, D. & R., N. P. C. 1—Abbott.

A defendant in ejectment, who has paid rent to the lessor of the plaintiff, may show that his landlord, pending the term, sold his interest in the premises. Doe d. Lowden v. Watson, 2 Stark. 230—Ellenborough.

The defendant, after being let into possession of premises by P., and paying rent to him, paid one quarter's rent to the plaintiff, to whom P. had agreed to demise the premises for a long term. In an action by the plaintiff for the succeeding quarter's rent:—Held, that the defendant might show that the agreement between P. and the plaintiff was put an end to, and that the rent had been paid to P. Brook v. Briggs, 2 Bing. N. C. 572; 2 Scott, 803.

In an action for rent, the tenant may show that the title of his landlord has expired during the tenancy, though he continues to occupy the premises, and has not been evicted. Mountney v. Collier, 1 El. & Bl. 630; 17 Jur. 503; 22 L. J., Q. B. 124.

Where, in an action by a landlord against his tenant for use and occupation, the tenant offers in evidence a document showing that the landlord's title has ceased, the document is admissible, because the property has passed to another who has a right to sue him for the same use and occupation; but when it appears that, under the document in question, the property would have passed from the plaintiff before the time of the use and occupation for which he sued, the document is not admissible, on the usual legal maxim, that a tenant cannot deny his landlord's title. Agar v. Young, Car. & M. 78—Erskine.

A landlord of premises dying, the tenant, whose term had not expired, paid rent to the devisee, and signed an agreement for a further period of occupation, on being told that the premises were devised to him:—Held, that, in ejectment against the tenant by the devisee, he could not offer evidence that the devise was void by reason of incapacity in the testator, no ground being shown for imputing fraud to the devisee in the communication made by him to the tenant. Doe d. Marlow v. Wiggins, 4 Q. B. 367; 3 G. & D. 504; 7 Jur. 529; 12 L. J., Q. B. 177.

Where a person, having possession of land under a good title, became tenant, and paid rent to a stranger:—Held, that he was not estopped after his tenancy had determined, and before he had given up possession, from setting up his own prior title in an ejectment by his lessor. Accidental Death Insurance Company v. Mackenzie, 9 W. R. 713; 5 L. T., N. S. 20—C. P.

A. let land to B. on a tenancy from year to year, which he continued to hold for several years after A.'s title had determined, paying rent to A., and he at length gave up possession on a notice to quit from A. Subsequently to the determination of A.'s title, but before B. had given up possession, B. underlet to C. C. paid rent to B. as long as B. continued to hold, but paid no rent to any one subsequently. In ejectment by A. against C., after B. had given up possession:—Held, that it might be presumed, as a matter of fact, that a new tenancy from year to year had been commenced by B. after A.'s title had ceased, and that C. therefore could not dispute A.'s title. London and North Western Railway Company v. West, 2 L. R., C. P. 553; 36 L. J., C. P. 245.

In what actions estoppel is available; and how pleaded.]—In replevin, the landlord's title, under which the tenant has gained possession of the premises, cannot be disputed, although the tenant is prepared with evidence to show that the premises have been fraudulently conveyed to the landlord, and that the actual title is vested in another person. Parry v. House, Holt, 489—Dallas.

The rule by which a tenant is estopped from denying the title of the landlord, who let him into possession, is applicable in an action of trespass as well as in ejectment. Delaney v. Fox, 26 L. J., C. P. 248; 2 C. B., N. S. 708.

Payment by a tenant of rent to a person other than the person who let him into possession, under a threat of expulsion, does not amount to a constructive eviction so as to affect the estoppel. Ib.

A declaration by the devisee of the reversion against the lessee, alleged that the reversion of and in the demised premises belonged to the lessor and his heirs:—Held, that a plea, that the reversion of and in the premises did not belong to the lessor and his heirs, was a good plea, as traversing a material allegation in the declaration. Weld v. Baxter, 11 Exch. 816; 25 L. J., Exch. 214; affirmed in error, 3 Jur., N. S. 91; 1 H. & N. 508; 26 L. J., Exch. 112—Exch. Cham.

A replication by way of estoppel, that the lease was an indenture executed by the lessee, and that he entered and enjoyed the premises by virtue of the indenture; that it did not appear by the indenture that the lessor was not seized in fee, or that he had any estate or interest other than a fee-simple, nor did the indenture contain anything to show that the reversion did not belong to the lessor and his heirs, is bad, since the lessor might have had a term of years, or an estate for life, or pur autre vie. Ib.

As to when disclaimer by tenant works a forfeiture,—see this title, XIII., 1.

XI. RENEWAL.

Covenants for renewal; what constitutes.]—

A. demised to B., for the life of B., and also for the lives of C. and D., and covenanted that if B., his heirs, &c., should be minded at the decease of B., C. and D., or any of them, to surrender the demise, and take a new lease, and thereby add a new life to the then two in being in lieu of the life so dying, that then A., his heirs, &c., upon payment for every life so to be added, in lieu of the life of every of them so dying, would grant a lease for the lives of the two persons named in the former lease, and of such other person as B., his heirs, &c., should appoint in lieu of the person named in the preceding lease, as the same should respectively die, under the same rent and covenants, there had been successive renewals from the time of a former lease, granted by the ancestor of A., and in each a like covenant for renewal:—Held, that A. and his ancestors had, by their own acts, construed this to be a covenant for a perpetual renewal. Cook v. Booth, Cowp. 819.

A. granted a lease, and covenanted that he would always, at any time when requested by the lessee, demise the premises for a further term of thirty-one years, in which new leases were to be contained the same rents, covenants, articles, clauses, provisos and agreements:—

Held, that this amounted to a covenant for perpetual renewal. Copper Mining Company v. Beach, 13 Beav. 478.

The governors of a charity, in consideration of a covenant to lay out 2,000*l.* in building, demised land for the term of forty-one and a-half years, and the concurrent term of ninety-nine years, if three lives named in the lease should so long live; and they covenanted that during the first-mentioned term, when one of the lives should die, they would put in another life for the fine of 5*l.* The lease being void by 13 Eliz. c. 10, as to the excess beyond twenty-one years or three lives:—Held, that the covenant for renewal was not binding on the governors of the charity. Moore v. Clench, 45 L. J., Chanc. Div. 80; 1 L. R., Ch. Div. 447; 24 W. R. 169; 34 L. T., N. S. 13.

— their interpretation and effect.]—If a lease for ninety-nine years, determinable on three lives, is conveyed in trust for A. for life, and A. covenants to use his utmost endeavors as often as any of the persons on whose lives the premises are held shall die, to renew the same, by purchasing of the lord of the fee a new life in the room of such as shall fail, it is no breach of the covenant if, upon one of the lives failing, he procures a renewal upon his own life. Scudamore v. Stratton, 1 B. & P. 455.

A. and B. covenanted in a lease for sixty-one years, "that at any time within one year after the expiration of twenty years of the term of sixty-one years, upon the request of the lessee, and his paying 6*l.* to the lessors, they would execute another lease of the premises unto the lessee for and during the further term of twenty years, to commence from and after the expiration of the term of sixty-one years; and so in like manner, at the end and expiration of every twenty years, during the term of sixty-one years, for the like consideration, and upon the like request, would execute another lease for the further term of twenty years, to commence at and from the expiration of the term then last before granted;" under this covenant the lessee cannot claim a further term of twenty years at the expiration of the last term of twenty years in the lease, if he has omitted to claim a further term at the end of the first and second twenty years in the lease. Rubery v. Terroise, 1 T. R. 229.

A., being possessed of premises held under B. by lease, renewable from time to time on payment of certain fines and fees, demised them for a term to C., who covenanted "that he would from time to time, and at all times during the term, pay to A. or B. such part of the fines and fees, which on every renewal by A. of the lease under which he held the premises demised, should be paid by him in respect of the premises demised to C." A. afterwards renewed his lease under B. for a term of five years, exceeding the term demised to C.:—Held, that C. was not liable on this covenant to pay the whole of the fines and fees incurred by A. on the renewal of his lease to the above extent, but only a part thereof, commensurate with the interest which C. had acquired in the premises. Charlton v. Driver, 5 Moore, 59; 2 B. & B. 245.

A lease to two tenants contained a proviso for re-entry in case the tenants, or either of them, should become bankrupt, or assign the premises without the landlord's consent, or should not observe and perform all the covenants and agreements on their part to be observed and performed; also, joint and several covenants by the lessees to keep the interior of the premises in repair, and a covenant by the lessor that he would, at the expiration of the term, in case the covenants and agreements on the tenants' part should have been duly observed and performed, upon notice, grant to the tenants, their executors or administrators, a new lease for a further term. One of the tenants assigned his interest to the other without the consent of the landlord, and afterwards became bankrupt, and the landlord from that time accepted the rent from the other tenant alone. At the expiration of the lease the remaining tenant—the premises being slightly out of repair—gave notice to the landlord that he required a new lease to be granted to himself alone:—Held, first, that the keeping the premises in repair was a condition precedent which must be strictly performed before the renewal could be called for. Finch v. Underwood, 45 L. J., Chanc. Div. 522; 2 L. R., Ch. Div. 310; 24 W. R. 657; 34 L. T., N. S. 779; reversing the decision of Malins, V. C., 33 L. T., N. S. 634.

Held, secondly, that although the landlord had waived the forfeiture by acceptance of rent after the assignment, he could not be compelled to grant a renewal to one only of the lessees so long as the other was living. Id.

Trustees of a messuage and premises, partly freehold and partly leasehold, for a term, of which fourteen years were unexpired, but which lease was renewable by custom on paying a fine, granted a lease to W. of the whole for fourteen years, and covenanted to use their best endeavors to obtain a renewal of the lease, and thereupon to grant him a lease for a further term of seven years from the expiration of his tenancy, at a like rent. The trustees' power was to lease at a rack-rent for any term not exceeding twenty-one years. Before the expiration of W.'s lease new trustees had been appointed, and the reversion in fee had become vested in other persons, who would not renew the lease on the old fine, the property having much increased in value:—Held, that the trustees had no power to enter into a covenant to grant a further term at a like rent on the renewal of the lease, and that the covenant did not bind the new trustees. Salamon v. Smyth, 35 L. T., N. S. 826—C. A.; reversing the decision of Malins, V. C., 35 L. T., N. S. 463.

— when specific performance may be compelled.]—A contract for perpetual renewal will be specifically executed if clearly appearing, but is not to be inferred from a general provision for similar covenants. The construction of such a covenant is the same in equity as at law, and is not to be affected by the acts of the parties. Iggulden v. May, 9 Ves. 325; 7 East, 287; 8 Smith, 269; 2 N. R. 449.

A promise, by letter, to renew a lease in consideration of money already laid out by the tenant, is nudum pactum, and no specific performance will be decreed; nor is it varied by money having been laid out afterwards. Robertson v. St. John, 2 Bro. C. C. 140.

A lessee of a house granted a sub-lease to L., in which he covenanted that if he should at any time obtain an extension of the term or a renewal of the lease he would grant to L. an extension or a renewal of his sub-lease for the same period. A renewal of the lease was taken in the name of a trustee for the wife of the lessee for her separate use:—Held, that L. was under no obligation to endeavor to procure the renewal to himself. That the question was whether the trustee was in reality trustee for the lessee or for his wife; that in the former case the parties to the record would be bound by the lessee's covenant, and L. would have been entitled to have the covenant performed against them, but that as the trustee was in point of fact trustee for the wife L.'s case failed. Lumley v. Timms, 21 W. R. 494; 28 L. T., N. S. 606—L. J.

How lease may be renewed; and effect of renewal.—[By 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 6, chief leases may be renewed without surrendering all the under-leases.]

A sum falling short of three years' annual value of the premises, is not an unreasonable fine for the renewal of a lease by the duchy of Cornwall; and the rack-rent paid by actual occupiers is a fair criterion of the annual value. Simpson v. Clifton, 4 Bing. N. C. 758; 6 Scott, 469; 1 Arn. 299; 2 Jur. 802.

In order to prove a renewal of a lease for lives the defendant called a witness, who stated that a conversation took place about fifteen years before, between himself and the former owner of the property, through whom the plaintiff made title, in which such former owner had said, that the premises had been new-leased or new-lived, but without mentioning either terms, or lives, or rent, or any of the stipulations of the supposed lease:—Held, too loose to be available as evidence for the purpose for which it was offered. Doe d. Lord v. Crago, 6 Q. B. 90; 17 L. J., C. P. 693.

A. was beneficially entitled to renewable leaseholds for three lives held on trust to renew, and subject to certain charges. All the cestuis que vie had died. It being disputed whether the right to renew was lost, the reversioners granted a lease to A. for three new lives, without prejudice to the disputed question. A. subsequently bought the reversion:—Held, that the fee became subject to the charges. Trumper v. Trumper, 41 L. J., Chanc. 673; 14 L. R., Eq. 295—V. C. B.

XII. SURRENDER.

1. What constitutes.

To whom surrender may be made.—Where a tenant had taken a house from two joint tenants, who had both signed the lease, but one of them only had afterwards interfered in the management of the house:—Held, that a surrender to one was a surrender to both. Dodd v. Acklom, 6 M. & G. 673; 7 Scott, N. R. 415; 13 L. J., C. P. 11.

A surrender of a lease cannot be made to sequestrators from the Court of Chancery: it must be to the lessor, or to a party legally entitled under him. Cornish v. Searell, 1 M. & R. 703; 8 B. & C. 471.

Surrender by instrument in writing or deed.—[By 29 Car. 2, c. 3, The Statute of Frauds, s. 8, no leases, estates, or interests, either of freehold, or terms of years, or any uncertain interest, not being copyhold or customary interest, of, in, to, or out of any messuages, manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, shall at any time be assigned, granted or surrendered, unless it be by deed or note in writing signed by the party so assigning, granting or surrendering the same, or their agent, thereunto lawfully authorized by writing, or by act or operation of law.]

By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3, a surrender in writing of an interest in any tenements or hereditaments not being a copyhold interest, and not being an interest which might by law have been created without writing, made after the 1st day of October, 1845, shall be void at law, unless made by deed.]

It is not necessary that a surrender should be in writing, but the jury may presume a surrender from the delivery up of the key to the landlord, coupled with other facts, showing reasons for the landlord accepting a surrender, and the tenant giving up the tenancy. Dodd v. Acklom, 6 M. & G. 673; 7 Scott, N. R. 415; 13 L. J., C. P. 11.

A surrender might be by writing, without a deed, or sealing, before 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3. Farmer d. Earl v. Rogers, 2 Wils. 26.

Executrixes of tenant from year to year signed the following instrument:—"We do hereby renounce and disclaim, and also surrender and yield up to the lessor, all right, title, interest, uses, trust, and terms of years whatsoever; and possession of that messuage called B."—Held, a surrender, and not a disclaimer. Doe d. Wyatt v. Stagg, 5 Bing. N. C. 564; 7 Scott, 690.

— by cancellation of lease.—The mere cancelling in fact of a lease is not, under the statute, a sufficient surrender of the term thereby granted. Doe d. Berkeley v. York, 6 East, 86; 2 Smith, 166. S. P., Doe d. Courtail v. Thomas, 4 M. & R. 218; 9 B. & C. 288; and see Ward v. Lumley, 5 H. & N. 87; 29 L. J., Exch. 322; S. C., 5 H. & N. 656; 8 W. R. 184.

— by operation of law, in general.]—A surrender by deed is unnecessary where the former lessee is the party who takes the new lease, as the fact of his so doing is evidence that the new lease has been accepted by him, and such an acceptance operates as a surrender in law; but it is not enough that the lessee agrees to an act done by the reversioner. Lyon v. Reel, 13 M. & W. 285; 8 Jur. 762; 13 L. J., Exch. 377.

The term "surrender by operation of law" is properly applied to cases where the owner of a particular estate has been a party to some act, the validity of which he is by law afterwards estopped from disputing, and which would not be valid if his particular estate continued to exist. Ib.

Thus, when a lessee for years accepts a new lease from his lessor, he is estopped from saying that his lessor had not the power to make a new lease; and as the lessor could not grant the new lease until the prior one had been surrendered, the acceptance of such new lease is of itself a surrender of the former one. Ib.

Such surrender is the act of the law, and takes place independently of, and even in spite of, the intention of the parties. Ib.

A new letting to an old tenant, commencing immediately, operates as a surrender of the original term, because the lessor could have no power to create the new term if the original term had subsisted; and, for a like reason, a new letting to a third party, with the assent of the original tenant, has the same operation. McDonnell v. Pope, 9 Harc, 705; 10 Jur. 771.

When surrender may be implied from grant and acceptance of a new lease.]—Acceptance of a new good lease implies the surrender of a former. Davison d. Bromley v. Stanley, 4 Burr. 2210.

A recital in a second lease, that it was granted in part consideration of the surrender of a prior lease of the same premises, is not a surrender by deed or note in writing of such prior lease; it not purporting in the terms of it to be of itself a surrender or yielding up of the interest; though, in some instances, the acceptance of a second lease for part of the same term before demised, may be a surrender of such prior term by operation of law; and this even though the second lease is voidable, if it is not merely void. Roe d. Berkeley v. York, 6 East, 86; 2 Smith, 166.

A demised premises to B., which B. demised to C., reserving rent; the interest of B. was afterwards sold to D., upon which D. obtained from A. a new lease, the lease to B. having been canceled: B. and D. afterwards distrained for rent in the name of D., upon which occasion D. declared that the premises belonged to him:—Held, in an action against B., D. and their servants, that the cancellation and new lease did not operate as a surrender of the interest of B., and that rent being due to B. by effluxion of time, B., D. and their servants were justified in making the distress, though in the name of D. Woolley v. Gregory, 2 Y. & J. 536.

Where a landlord grants a new lease to a stranger with the assent of the tenant under an existing lease, and the latter gives up his own possession, that is a surrender by operation of law. Davison v. Gent, 1 H. & N. 744; 3 Jur., N. S. 842; 26 L. J., Exch. 122.

A lease of lands was granted conformably to a power to lease. A later lease was expressed to be granted "for the consideration of the surrender of the present lease, and which is hereby surrendered accordingly," and of a sum of money. The earlier lease was actually given up on the execution of the second. The second lease was not valid as an execution of the power; but rent was received according to its terms, by successive tenants for life and in remainder under the settlement:—Held, that the surrender of the first lease was good. Doe d. Egremont v. Forinwood, 8 Q. B. 627.

The defendant, who had occupied under a lease which expired at Lady-day, 1829, paid a quarter's rent on Midsummer-day, 1829, deducting something for repairs; he was not afterwards seen on the premises, but the rent was paid at irregular intervals by L., who was in occupation for the ensuing two years;—Held, that it was correctly left to a jury to find whether the lessor had accepted L. as a tenant, and the jury having found for the defendant, the court refused to set aside the verdict. Woodcock v. Nuth, 8 Bing. 170; 1 M. & Scott, 817.

W. & H., by agreement in March, 1827, became tenants to the plaintiff, for three years, of premises occupied by them as partners, with the power to them to extend the term for seven years, by giving the plaintiff a notice to that effect. In January, 1829, W. and H. gave notice accordingly. At Midsummer, 1828, W. retired from the partnership, and in January, 1829, H. entered into partnership with S., and H. and S. carried on the business under the firm of H. and S., until 1831. The plaintiff gave receipts for the rent as received from H. after W. retired, and as received from H. and S. after S. became partner with H. In February, 1829, the plaintiff gave to H. a letter from the plaintiff's attorney, signifying that a lease might be made to H. and S., but this letter was kept by H., and not acted upon, and no lease was prepared:—Held, that the original tenancy of H. and W. was not surrendered by act or operation of law, and consequently that W. remained liable for rent. Graham v. Wichelo, 3 Tyr. 201; 1 C. & M. 188.

In 1742, a farm was demised by the Broderers' Company to F. for 100 years, with a covenant for perpetual renewal. In 1837, the residue of this term had become vested in B., who in that year assigned it, by way of mortgage, with a proviso for redemption. On the 22d May, 1828, H. demised the farm for twenty-one years to the plaintiff. On the 12th January, 1836, the mortgagees and H. surrendered the premises to the Broderers' Company. On the 13th January, 1836, the company demised them to H. for 100 years, and shortly afterwards the unexpired residue of that term, and all the estate and interest of H. in the premises, were assigned to the defendant. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant, on a covenant in the lease from H. to the plaintiff, to keep down the rabbits on the farm, the defendant pleaded that H. did not demise to the plaintiff; that the reversion on that lease did not vest in the defendant:—Held, that both these issues ought to be entered for the plaintiff, for that the lease being by deed was a demise by way of estoppel, and a reversion in H. by estoppel was thereby created, which prima facie was a reversion in fee, and therefore was not surrendered to the Broderers' Company, but passed from H. to the defendant. Sturgeon v. Wingfield, 15 M. & W. 324; 15 L. J., Exch. 212.

Lands which were devised for life, remainder over, with a power of leasing to the tenant for life, were held under two leases, of 1760 and 1784, for ninety-nine years, determinable on lives. In 1788, S., the lessee, agreed to sell a parcel to A.; and G., tenant for life under the will, in consideration of the surrendering into his hands of the two indentures, of 1760 and 1784, and in order to effectuate the agreement between S. and A. with respect to that parcel which was intended to be demised by an indenture bearing even date therewith, demised the residue of the lands to S., with an apportionment of the rents and heriots, the parcel being severed. The lease of 1788 was not a due execution of the power. In ejectment by the remainderman after the death of the tenant for life:—Held, that the acceptance by S. of the lease of 1788 did not, as to the lands thereby demised, operate as an absolute surrender in law of the lease of 1784, which was then subsisting, but as a conditional surrender only during the life of the tenant for life. Doe d. Biddulph v. Poole, 11 Q. B. 718; 12 Jur. 450; 17 L. J., Q. B. 143.

Lands were devised for life, remainder over, with a power of leasing to the tenant for life. In 1755 the testator made a lease for ninety-nine years, if certain lives should so long live. In 1812 the tenant for life under the will made a lease, "in consideration of the surrendering up into the hands of the lessor by the lessee" the lease of 1775, "which surrender was thereby made and accepted accordingly;" this lease was invalid, being not made conformably to the power:—Held, that, as the new lease did not pass an interest according to the contract, the acceptance of it did not operate as a surrender of the former lease. Doe d. Egremont v. Courtenay, 9 Q. B. 932; 12 Jur. 454; 17 L. J., Q. B. 151.

—from delivery and taking possession of premises.]—A tenant remains liable for rent unless he delivers up complete possession of the premises, or the landlord accepts of another in his room. Harding v. Crethorn, 1 Esp. 57—Kenyon.

If a landlord in the middle of a quarter accepts from his tenant the key of the house demised, under a parol agreement, that, upon her then giving up the possession, the rent shall cease, and she never afterwards occupies the premises, he cannot recover in an action for the use and occupation of the house for the time subsequent to his accepting the key. Whitehead v. Clifford, 5 Taunt. 518.

A., the tenant of a house, three cottages, and a stable and yard, let at an entire rent, for a term of seven years, before the expiration of the term assigned all the premises to B. for the remainder of the term, the house and cottages being in the possession of under-tenants, and the stable and yard in that of A. The landlord accepted a sum of money as rent up to the day of the assignment, which was in the middle of the quarter. B. took possession of the yard and stable only. The occupiers of the cottages having left them after the assignment, and before the expiration of the term, the landlord re-let them. A. paid no rent after the assignment, but the landlord received rent from the under-tenants. Before the expiration of the term the landlord advertised the whole of the premises to be let or sold:—Held, that this was a surrender by operation of law of all the premises. Reeve v. Bird, 1 C., M. & R. 31; 4 Tyr. 612.

A lessee, who had paid his rent occasionally to a trustee, and occasionally to a cestui que trust, gave up possession on the last day of his term, but before his term was over, to the person who had been trustee, and not to the party then having legal title:—Held, that, as the act was equivocal, it did not amount either to a surrender or a forfeiture of the term. Akland v. Lutley, 1 P. & D. 636; 9 A. & E. 809.

A. and B. demised a house, by lease in writing to C., at a rent payable quarterly. The key was delivered to C.'s wife. C. entered into possession; but before the first quarter's rent became due (there having been some dispute as to arrears of rent and taxes), C.'s wife delivered the key back to A., who accepted it. B., after signing the lease, had never interfered:—Held, that the delivering back of the key by the tenant, animo sursum reddendi, and the acceptance thereof by the landlord, amounted to a surrender of the term by act and operation of law. Dodd v. Acklom, 6 M. & G. 673; 7 Scott, N. R. 415; 18 L. J., C. P. 11.

Held, also, that the jury was, upon the facts, warranted in finding that C.'s wife acted as his agent in surrendering the term, and that A. acted as agent for B. in accepting such surrender, and that B. was bound by such surrender and acceptance. Id.

A. was tenant to B. of rooms for a term of years. Upon the bankruptcy of B., A. sent the key of the rooms to the office of the official assignee, where it was left with a clerk, who was told that it was the key of the rooms which A. had occupied. A. immediately quitted possession, and no further communication took place:—Held, not to amount to a surrender by act or operation of law. Cannan v. Hartley, 9 C. B. 634; 14 Jur. 577; 19 L. J., C. P. 823.

But when a tenant left the key at the counting-house of the landlord, and the latter, though he at first refused to accept it, afterwards put up a board to let the premises, and used the key to show them, and painted out the tenant's name from the front:—Held, sufficient evidence of a surrender by operation of law. Phen v. Popplewell, 12 C. B., N. S. 834; 8 Jur., N. S. 1104; 31 L. J., C. P. 235; 10 W. R. 523; 6 L. T., N. S. 247.

To an action by a landlord against his tenant for breach of promise to use the premises in a tenant-like manner, he pleaded, that during the tenancy, and before any breach, the premises, and his estate and interest therein, were duly surrendered to the landlord by act and operation of law, that is to say, by the tenant's quitting the premises, and every part thereof, with the license and consent of the landlord, and relinquishing the possession thereof to him with the intention of putting an end to the tenancy, and by his accepting such possession, with the intention of putting an end to the tenancy:—Held, that if the tenancy continued up to the time of the arrangement stated, such arrangement would not inure as a surrender by act and operation of law. Morrison v. Chadwick, 7 C. B. 266; 6 D. & L. 567; 13 L. J., C. P. 189.

In an action upon a parol demise, a plea that, during the term, it was agreed that the defendant should relinquish the possession to the plaintiff for a month, after which the possession should be resumed by the defendant; and that the defendant did relinquish the possession, but the plaintiff would not restore the possession, is bad, as not showing a surrender or an eviction. Dunn v. Di Nuoro, 3 M. & G. 105; 8 Scott, N. R. 487.

When a tenant on lease has quitted the demised premises before the expiration of the term, and has sent the key to the landlord, with the intention of giving up possession, the mere fact that the landlord has received the key, and attempted unsuccessfully to re-let the premises, does not estop him from alleging that the tenancy still subsists. And if afterwards, before the expiration of the term, the landlord re-lets the premises, the surrender by operation of law takes effect from such re-letting, and does not relate back to the original receipt of the key by him. Oastler v. Henderson, 46 L. J., Q. B. Div. 607; 2 L. R., Q. B. Div. 575; 37 L. T., N. S. 22—C. A.

—from particular agreements and transactions between landlord and tenant.]—An agreement between a landlord and tenant for the latter to give up possession, and the former to take the stock at a valuation, and to make compensation for fallows, to pay all taxes, and permit the tenant to keep possession of part of the messuage and some of the out-houses up to a certain day, without paying rent or taxes, was held to operate as a surrender of the term, and not being on a deed stamp was void. Williams v. Sawyer, 6 Moore, 226; 3 B. & B. 70.

Where a lease came into the hands of the original lessor, by an agreement entered into between him and the assignee of the original lessee, "that the lessor should have the premises as mentioned in the lease, and should pay a particular sum over and above the rent, annually, towards the good-will, already paid by such assignee;" such agreement operates as a surrender of the whole term. Smith v. Mapleback, 1 T. R. 441.

A. demised a farm to B. under an agreement to hold from Michaelmas, 1799, to Michaelmas, 1816, at a yearly rent. A. died, and devised the premises to C., who in 1813 put them up to sale by auction; D. became the purchaser, and also agreed to buy B.'s outstanding term, without C.'s knowledge or assent. D., having let E. into possession, became bankrupt. In 1814, C., by letter to B., admitted that E. occupied the premises, and afterwards demanded rent from him. C. and D.'s assignees afterwards executed mutual deeds of release, and D.'s assignees released E.:—Held, that C. was entitled to recover the rent from 1813 to 1816 from B., as there had been no surrender in writing of his interest to D., and as C. had not assented to E.'s being let into possession. Matthews v. Savell, 2 Moore, 262.

By an agreement dated in May, to which A., B., and C. were parties, A. and B. agreed to sell by auction an estate to which they were entitled as tenants in common, or in default of such sale, that such parts of it as should not be sold after the 1st August and before the 1st September following should be divided into two equal lots between A. and B.; and that 100l. should be paid by A. to C., the principal tenant, as a remuneration for his giving up possession of his farm at Michaelmas following; and C. agreed to give up possession of his farm accordingly. No part of the estate was sold by the 1st September, but some portions were sold subsequently, and the remainder was divided between A. and B., but such division was not completed till the following March. C. continued in possession, by the desire of A. and B., until that time, and then quitted:—Held, that the agreement was not a surrender of A.'s term. Weddall or Weddle v. Capes, 1 M. & W. 50; 1 Gale, 432.

A., being seized in fee of premises, by indenture of the 5th July, 1814, demised them for twenty-one years to B., who entered and was possessed accordingly. B., by indenture of the 8d November, demised the premises to C. for the residue of his term therein, excepting the last twenty-one days; and, on the 12th February, 1816, B., by deed poll, indorsed on the counterpart of the lease to C., granted all his (B.'s) estate and interest in the premises to A., to hold to him for all such time or term in the counterpart of the lease mentioned, namely, the next immediate reversion, expectant on the determination of B.'s lease. A., by deeds of lease and release, of the 15th and 16th July, 1822, granted, sold, and assigned all his estate and interest in the premises to the plaintiff by way of mortgage. On the 10th October, 1816, C. assigned all his interest in the premises to the defendant, who never entered, and C. remained in possession. In an action against the defendant for non-payment of rent:—Held, that the deed-poll did not operate as a surrender of B.'s reversion of twenty-one days to A., but only of his interest for the term co-extensive with C.'s lease; and that the plaintiff might sue the defendant on the covenants contained in such lease. Burton v. Barclay, 5 M. & P. 785; 7 Bing. 745.

As to surrender of tenancies for year to year,—see this title, XVI., 2.

2. Effect, and how pleaded and proved.

Operation and effect, in general.—A quasi tenant in tail of a freehold lease for lives may, by surrendering the old lease, without the trustees joining, and taking a new lease to himself, bar the remainders over; notwithstanding there were prior existing trusts at the time of making such surrender. Blake v. Luxton, Cooper C. C. 178; 3 P. Wms. 10; 6 T. R. 290, n.

A tenant who has become bankrupt, and delivers to his landlord the possession of the premises during a current half year, is not liable for a proportionate part of the rent to the time when he so delivered them up to his landlord. Slack v. Sharp, 3 N. & P. 390; 8 A. & E. 366; 1 W., W. & H. 496; 2 Jur. 830.

Where a lease by a bishop, which had been granted in consideration of the surrender of a prior lease by deed-poll, had been avoided by the successor, the first lease was not revived by such avoidance. Doe d. Rochester (Bishop) v. Bridges, 1 B. & Ad. 847.

Although a surrender of a life estate to the owner of the fee is as between the parties an extinguishment of the estate surrendered, yet it may have continuance to uphold a prior interest derived under it. Doe d. Beadon v. Pyke, 5 M. & S. 146.

Where there is an under-tenant.—[By 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 6, if any lease shall be duly surrendered in order to be renewed, and a new lease made and executed by the chief landlord or landlords, the same new lease shall, without a surrender of all or any of the underleases, be as good and valid to all intents and purposes as if all the underleases derived thereout had been likewise surrendered at or before the taking of such new lease;

And all and every person and persons in whom any estate for life or lives, or for years shall from time to time be vested by virtue of such new lease, and his, her and their executors and administrators shall be entitled to the rents, covenants, and duties, and have like remedy for recovery thereof, and the under-lessees shall hold and enjoy the messuages, lands, and tenements in the respective under-leases comprised, as if the original leases out of which the respective under-leases are derived, had been still kept on foot and continued, and the chief landlord and landlords shall have and be entitled to such and the same remedy by distress or entry in or upon the messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments comprised in any such under-lease, for the rents and duties reserved by such new lease, so far as the same exceed not the rents and duties reserved in the lease out of which such under-lease was derived, as they would have had in case such former lease had still been continued, or as they would have had in case such former leases had been renewed under such new principal lease, any law, custom or usage to the contrary hereof notwithstanding.]

Premises being demised and underlet, the first tenant surrendered his lease, and took a new one with similar covenants. The under-tenant continued in possession, and never surrendered. Quære, whether special covenants in the new lease co-extensive with those in the old (as not to erect new buildings without leave), could be enforced by the head landlord against such under-tenant, as "duties reserved" by the second lease, within the above provision? Doe d. Palk v. Marchetti, 1 B. & Ad. 715.

The effect of the above statute, while it gives a lessee the right to surrender notwithstanding his contracts with his under-lessee, leaves untouched the sub-interest, though it is merely an agreement for an under-lease; and the effect of a new demise after the surrender for the residue of the original term is to make the new lessee the assignee of the reversion of the terms created by the surrenderor. Cousins v. Phillips, 3 H. & C. 892; 35 L. J., Exch. 84.

If a landlord attests a notice given by a lessee to his under-tenant to pay rent to the landlord, and has a knowledge of its contents, it is a termination of the tenancy of the lessee, and a discharge to him to that time. Harding v. Crethorn, 1 Esp. 57—Kenyon.

Otherwise, if the landlord has no knowledge of the contents of the notice. Id.

A voluntary surrender by a tenant to his landlord does not affect the rights of a person holding on a sub-tenancy created by the tenant, nor is the sub-tenant's knowledge of the surrender equivalent to notice to him to quit. Mellor v. Watkins, 23 W. R. 55; 9 L. R., Q. B. 400.

Pleading.—To an action for rent due under a demise, the defendant pleaded, that, before the rent became due, it was agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant, that, in consideration of his giving up possession, he should be discharged from any further rent, and that he had given up possession accordingly, concluding with an allegation, that the tenancy was thereby surrendered:—Held, that the plea was not to be taken as setting up a surrender so as to require a memorandum in writing; but that it afforded a valid excuse for the non-payment of the rent, by showing the agreement and the giving up of possession. Gore v. Wright, 3 N. & P. 248; 8 A. & E. 118; 2 Jur. 840; 1 W., W. & H. 266.

To an action upon an indenture of lease for non-payment of rent and for non-repair, the defendant proposed to plead, that it was agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant that the latter should surrender the tenancy to the plaintiff, by yielding up possession of such portion of the premises as was in his occupation, and by permitting the plaintiff to receive all future rents of such part as was occupied by the defendant's tenants, and by permitting the tenants to attorn to the plaintiff, the defendant to pay a certain sum of money, and give up certain machinery, all of which was to be done by the defendant, and accepted by the plaintiff, in satisfaction of the covenants of the lease, and that the lease and counterpart should be given up to be canceled. The plea alleged that the defendant paid to the plaintiff the money, and gave up the machinery, and delivered the lease to him, and that the plaintiff excused himself from delivering up the counterpart; that the defendant accordingly withdrew from the possession of the premises which he occupied, and had never since been in the occupation or in the receipt of the rents, and that he had always permitted the plaintiff to receive the same, and the tenants to attorn. Upon an application to plead several matters, the court refused to allow the plea to be pleaded, as not disclosing an equitable defense, on the ground that a court of equity would require the execution by the defendant of a valid surrender of the term as a condition precedent to staying the action, and that a court of common law has no power to enforce such condition. Mines Royal Societies v. Magnay, 10 Exch. 489; 2 C. L. R. 171; 18 Jur. 1028; 24 L. J., Exch. 7.

Presumption of surrender, generally.]—Where an alleged outstanding term appears to have done the duty for which it was created, the jury is at liberty to presume a surrender of it. Burtlett v. Downes, 5 D. & R. 526; 3 B. & C. 616; 1 C. & P. 522.

A. having granted a lease to B. for twenty-one years, before the expiration of the term, granted another lease of the same premises to C. No surrender in writing of B.'s interest was shown, but the lease granted to him was produced from A.'s custody, with the seals torn off; and it was proved to be the custom to send in the old leases to A.'s office, before a renewal was made, and which old leases were thereupon canceled by A.'s officer:—Held, that this was evidence from which the jury might presume that B. had assented to the grant of the lease to C., so as to determine his interest by act and operation of law within the 29 Car. 2. c. 3, s. 3. Walker v. Richardson, 2 M. & W. 882; M. & H. 251.

Under certain circumstances the jury may presume a satisfied term to have been surrendered to the cestui que use; but if no such presumption is made, and it appears in a special verdict in ejectment that such a term is still outstanding in a trustee who is not joined in bringing the ejectment, the cestui que use cannot recover. Goodtitle d. Jones v. Jones, 7 T. R. 47. S. P., Godfrey v. Hudson, 2 Esp. 499, n.

A satisfied term may be presumed to be surrendered; but an unsatisfied term, raised for the purpose of securing an annuity, during the life of the annuitant, cannot; and may be set up as a bar to the heir at law, even though he claims only subject to the charge. Doe d. Hulseley v. Staple, 2 T. R. 684.

In the case of a plain trust, where the trustees were directed to convey to a devisee on his attaining twenty-one, the jury may be directed to presume a conveyance at any time afterwards, though considerably less than twenty years. England d. Sybourn v. Slade, 4 T. R. 682.

The jury may presume an old satisfied term surrendered to the cestui que use in order to substantiate a lease executed by him. Doe d. Bowerman v. Sybourn, 7 T. R. 2; 2 Esp. 496.

An acceptance of a surrender of a lease is not to be presumed from the circumstances of the rent having been paid by a third person, and not by the original tenant. Copeland v. Watts, 1 Stark. 96—Gibbs.

— of surrender of mortgage terms.]—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 28, a mortgagor is to be barred at the end of twenty years from the time when the mortgagee took possession, or from the last written acknowledgment.]

Where an old mortgage term of 1,000 years, created in 1727, was recognized in a marriage settlement of the owner of the inheritance in 1751, by which a sum was appropriated to its discharge; and no further notice was had of it till 1802, when a deed, to which the then owner of the inheritance and the representatives of the termors were parties, reciting that the term was still subsisting, conveyed it to others to secure a mortgage:—Held, that it could not be presumed to have been surrendered against the owner of the inheritance, who was interested in upholding it. Doe d. Graham v. Scott, 11 East, 478.

A testator, in a codicil to his will, stated that certain premises mentioned in the will were charged with a mortgage for 500*l.*, which he directed his executors to pay off:—Held, that after the lapse of nearly forty years, during all which time the testator's representatives had been in the perception of the rent, the mortgagee might be presumed to have been satisfied, and the term surrendered. Doe d. Martin v. Austin, 2 M. & Scott, 107.

In 1772, a term of 1,000 years was created by deed, for the purpose of securing 5,000*l.*; and, in 1787, the principal and interest having been paid, the residue of the term was assigned in trust for the devisees of the person who created the term. In 1789, the premises were conveyed to a purchaser by deed, and the residue of the term was assigned in trust for the purchaser, her heirs and assigns, or as she should appoint, and in the meantime to attend the inheritance. The purchaser entered into possession of the premises, and continued so possessed till her death. In 1808, she executed a marriage settlement, reserving to herself a power of appointment by deed or will; and, after the marriage, she, in December, 1818, devised all her real estate. Neither in the marriage settlement nor in the will was any mention made of the term of 1,000 years. She and her husband having both died:—Held, on ejectment brought by her heir-at-law, that there were no premises from which a surrender of the term could be presumed. Doe d. Blacknell v. Plowman, 2 B. & Ad. 573.

Presumption and proof in other cases.]—

A. devised an estate to trustees for years with remainder to B., which B., eighteen years after the death of A., treated as his freehold, and leased for lives. In an action by the lessee of B., as reversioner, the jury was told that they could not presume a surrender of the term by the trustees to B.; and, upon motion for a new trial, the direction was held right. Day v. Williams, 2 C. & J. 460.

A tenant in tail conveyed by feoffment in 1779; but the feoffee never entered, and the tenant in tail and those claiming under him remained in possession until 1829; they were also in possession of the deed of feoffment and suffered a recovery:—Held, that a reconveyance from the feoffee might be presumed. Jenny v. Jones, 10 Bing. 75.

An estate was settled on A. for life, with power to charge it with an annuity for her husband, and portions for their younger children, and to grant leases. A. granted the estate to trustees for 500 years, on trust, if she should so direct, to raise portions by mortgages or sale:—Held, that the term, till called into operation, was subservient to the leasing power, and was no answer to an ejectment by a lessee holding under a lease granted subsequently to the settlement. Doe d. Courtail v. Thomas, 4 M. & R. 218; 9 B. & C. 288.

By a marriage settlement, the settlor limited his estate to A. and B., as trustees, "to the only proper use and behoof of them, their heirs and assigns forever," in trust for the settlor until his marriage, in trust for husband and wife for life and the longest liver; then in trust for a term to other trustees to raise portions for younger children; then in trust for the first son and heirs male of the body; then to the second son in like manner, and then to the daughters; and, for default of such issue, then over to the right heirs of the settlor:—Held, that the first set of trustees took the legal estate by common law, and not by the Statute of Uses; and the second use could not be executed by the statute. The purposes of the settlement, however, being at an end, in ejectment by the devisee of the person last seized, after the lapse of forty years:—Held, that it might be left to the jury to presume a reconveyance of the legal estate from the trustees. Doe d. Lloyd v. Painsingham, 9 D. & R. 416; 6 B. & C. 805.

Where the defendant's ancestor came into possession of certain lands seventy years ago, as a creditor under a judgment obtained against the then owner, and the defendant's family had continued in possession ever since:—Held, that the original possession not having been taken under any conveyance, the length of possession was only prima facie evidence from which a jury might infer a subsequent conveyance by the original owner, or some of his descendants; but that it might be rebutted by other evidence; and that the jury was not to presume such conveyance from length of possession, unless satisfied that such conveyance had actually been executed. Doe d. Fenwick v. Reed, 5 B. & A. 232.

A term of years was created in 1702, and assigned over to a trustee in 1770, to attend the inheritance. In 1814, the owner of the inheritance executed a marriage settlement; and, in 1816, he conveyed his life interest in the estate to a purchaser, as a security for a debt; but no assignment of the term or delivery of the deeds relating to it took place on either occasion. In 1819, an actual assignment of the term was made by the administrator of the trustee in 1770, to a new trustee for the purchaser in 1816:—Held, that, under these circumstances, on an ejectment brought by a prior incumbrancer against the purchaser, the jury was warranted in presuming that the term had, previously to 1819, been surrendered. Doe d. Putland v. Hilder, 2 B. & A. 782.

The plaintiff was tenant to A., of one close; K. was tenant to B. of another close; the plaintiff and K. verbally agreed to exchange their holdings; "the plaintiff to have B.'s land and pay K.'s rent, K. to have A.'s land and pay the plaintiff's rent." On the same day each took possession of the other's land. K. undertook to communicate their bargain to C., who was the agent of both A. and B.; he did accordingly, some days afterwards, communicate it to him, and C. expressed his concurrence:—Held, that this was evidence to go to the jury of a surrender by K. to B. of his interest in B.'s close. Bees v. Williams, 2 C., M. & R. 581; 1 Tyr. & G. 28; 1 Gale, 332.

A. demised to B., who underlet to C. In the middle of both terms it was agreed between A. and B., that B.'s tenancy should cease, and between A. and C., that C. should hold under A. for a longer term:—Held, that this arrangement inured as a surrender from B. to A., and a new demise from A. to C. Rees v. Babury, 3 N. & M. 292; 1 A. & E. 136.

A term of 1,000 years was created by deed in 1717, and, in 1735, was assigned for the purpose of securing an annuity to A., and after that to attend the inheritance. A. having died in 1741, and the estate having remained undisturbed in the hands of the owner of the inheritance and her devisee from 1735 to 1813, without any notice having been in the meantime taken of the term, except that, in 1801, the devisee, in whose possession the deeds creating and assigning it were found, covenanted to produce those deeds when called for:—Held, that under these circumstances the jury was warranted, in an ejectment brought for the premises by the heir-at-law, to presume a surrender of the term. Doe d. Burdett v. Wrights, 2 B. & A. 710.

Receipts for rent received by a landlord from a third party, are evidence of a surrender by operation of law, putting an end to the liability of a former tenant. Lawrence v. Fausz, 2 F. & F. 435—Blackburn.

XIII. FORFEITURE.

1. Construction and Effect of Provisos; Disclaimer by tenant.

Provisos for re-entry by landlord, on breach of covenant by tenant; their construction and operation generally.—Provisos for re-entry in leases are to be construed like other contracts; not with the strictness of conditions at common law. Doe d. Davis v. Elsom, M. & M. 189—Tenterden.

Where a lease contained two clauses for re-entry; the one, in case the yearly rent was in arrear thirty days after it became payable, and the other in case the yearly rent was in arrear, which was stated to be payable half-yearly, at Lady-day and Michaelmas:—Held, that the landlord had a right to re-enter on non-payment of each half-year's rent; as the former clause contained the description of the amount to be annually paid, and the latter the times for payment. Doe d. Rudd v. Golding, 6 Moore, 231.

Where a lessee covenanted to pay the rent, and not to assign without the leave of the lessor, and there was a proviso for re-entry if the rent was in arrear, or if all or any of the covenants thereafter contained on the part of the lessee should be broken, and there were no covenants on the part of the lessee after the proviso, but only a covenant by the lessor, that upon the lessee paying the rent, and performing all and every the covenants thereinbefore contained on his part to be performed, he should quietly enjoy:—Held, that the lessor could not re-enter for breach of the covenant not to assign, for that the proviso was restrained by the word "hereinafter" to subsequent covenants, and though there were none such, yet the court could not reject the word. Doe d. Spencer v. Godwin, 4 M. & S. 205.

A lease contained a covenant that the tenant should not carry any hay, &c. off the premises, under a penalty of 5*l.* per ton, and a clause followed which enumerated all the covenants except the above, and provided, that upon breach of any of the covenants, the lessor might re-enter:—Held, that the penalty of 5*l.* did not prevent the clause of re-entry from applying to the above covenant, the words of the proviso being large enough to comprehend it. Doe d. Antrobus v. Jepson, 3 B. & Ad. 402.

A proviso for re-entry was contained in a lease granted in pursuance of and referring to a private act of parliament. The proviso for re-entry in the act was subsequently altered by another act:—Held, that the lessor could not afterwards enter by virtue of the proviso in the lease, on account of the subsequent act. Doe d. Bywater v. Brandling, 7 B. & C. 648; 1 M. & R. 600.

A proviso in a lease, giving power of re-entry if the lessee "shall do or cause to be done any act, matter, or thing contrary to and in breach of any of the covenants," does not apply to a breach of the covenant to repair, the omission to repair not being an act done within the meaning of the proviso. Doe d. Abdy v. Stevens, 8 B. & Ad. 290.

A proviso in a lease, giving power of re-entry if the tenant makes default in performance of any of the clauses by the space of thirty days after notice, does not apply to the breach of a covenant not to allow alterations in the premises, or permit new buildings to be made upon them without permission; and an under-tenant having erected a portico contrary to the covenant, and notice having been given to him to replace the premises in their former state, which he neglected to do for thirty days:—Held, that no forfeiture was incurred. Doe d. Palk v. Marchetti, 1 B. & Ad. 715.

A proviso in a lease for re-entry on a condition broken can only operate during the term, and vanishes when that ends. Johns v. Whitley, 3 Wils. 127.

Where a lease contained a proviso for re-entry, if the lessee committed waste to the value of 10*s.*, and the lessor re-entered, and brought ejectment in consequence of the tenant's having pulled down some old buildings of more than 10*s.* value, and substituted others of a different description:—Held, that the waste contemplated in the proviso was waste producing an injury to the reversion, and that it was a question for the jury whether, under all the circumstances, such waste to the value of 10*s.* had been committed. Doe d. Darlington v. Bond, 5 B. & C. 855; 8 D. & R. 738.

A lease, for a term of years, if R. should so long live, contained a covenant that the lessee should, within three months after notice from the lessor, produce R., or otherwise make it appear to the lessor, within the time aforesaid, or within a reasonable time if R. should be in foreign parts, by a good and sufficient certificate, that he was living. Proviso for re-entry on default. R. went to Brazil. The lessee, being called on under the covenant, produced an affidavit, sworn in October, 1834, stating that the deponent had seen R. in Brazil in 1832, and had often heard of him from that time till January, 1834, as residing at a place in Brazil thirty miles from that in which the deponent lived during the same period, and that the deponent was convinced that R. was alive and well in January, 1834, when deponent left Brazil:—Held, that the fact subsequent to 1831 could not be properly certified by hearsay evidence; and that the statement of occurrences in 1831, from which R. might be presumed alive in 1834, was not equivalent to such certificate as the covenant required, that R. was then alive; and, therefore, that the affidavit was not a sufficient certificate, and a forfeiture was incurred. Randle v. Lory, 6 A. & E. 218.

Land was demised for 1,000 years by indenture, in 1793, to A. and B., the latter described as visitor and guardian of the poor of the parish of C., their successors and assigns, under 22 Geo. 3, c. 83 (Gilbert's Act), for the purpose of erecting a poor house thereon, and occupying and cultivating the same for the use and benefit of such poor-house and of the poor of C., and such other parishes as should be united therewith for the purposes of the act. Proviso for re-entry, if C. and all the other parishes which should or might at any time be so united, should of themselves discontinue to adopt the provisions of the statute. Further proviso, that if, during this demise, the legislature should repeal Gilbert's Act, so that the poor of the several parishes should no longer be permitted to remain under the care of the visitor and guardians of such parishes, it should be lawful for the visitor and guardians, their successors and assigns, yielding up the land, to pull down the poor-house, and carry away the materials. The house was built, and C. and other parishes adopted the provisions of the act, and C. continued to follow them till the making of the after mentioned order; but the other parishes seceded from the union. In 1830 the poor-law commissioners incorporated parish C. in a union, and ordered all the paupers to be removed to the union workhouse, after which no paupers were received into the poor-house of C. but persons requiring only out-door relief, and the parish officers issued a notice proposing to let part of the house and the land:—Held, no forfeiture, under the first proviso. Doe d. Grantley v. Butcher, 6 Q. B. 115.

A lessee was to incur a forfeiture if he did not do certain repairs "to the satisfaction of the surveyor" of the lessor; he did the repairs, but the lessor's surveyor was not satisfied:—Held, that if the jury thought the surveyor ought to have been satisfied, that would be sufficient, and there would be no forfeiture incurred. Doe d. Baker v. Jones, 2 C. & K. 743—Pollock.

E., a tenant of leasehold premises, underlet a portion of them to B. for a term of years, reserving a few months' reversion. B. covenanted to complete some cottages on the premises by the 25th of June. By an indenture made on the 30th of July following, which recited that E. had entered into agreements and under-leases affecting the premises, the particulars of which were known to I., it was witnessed that "E. did bargain, sell, assign, transfer, and set over the premises, with their appurtenances, and all estate, right, title, and interest of E. into or out of the premises, and every part thereof, to I., to have and to hold the premises and every part thereof for the residue of the term of years granted by the indenture of lease under which E. held, and all other the estate and interest of E. therein or thereout, subject nevertheless to the agreements and under-leases hereinbefore referred to." B. did not build the cottages by the 25th of June. It did not appear whether E. knew of the fact or elected to treat the default as a breach of covenant and a forfeiture of the lease:—Held, that assuming the non-completion of the cottages was a breach of covenant, and gave E. a right of re-entry before the assignment to I., and that the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 5, enabled E. to assign the right of entry for condition broken, yet that the language of the indenture was not sufficient to transfer that right to I., so as to enable him to take advantage of the forfeiture. Hunt v. Remnant (in error), 9 Exch. 635; 18 Jur. 335; 23 L. J., Exch. 135—Exch. Cham.

Premises consisting of a wharf and dock, dwelling-house, wash-house, and court-yard, were demised under a lease, containing a covenant that the lessee, his executors, administrators or assigns, should not erect or build any edifice or structure whatsoever on the wharf and dock, or place goods thereon above a certain height, "nor do any other matter or thing of any nature or kind which might obstruct the view of the river, from the White Hart public-house, or that should grow or be a nuisance or annoyance to the occupier; nor carry on a certain trade thereon, nor make any external alteration whatsoever in the premises, nor any internal alterations in the dwelling-house that may lessen the value thereof, without the consent in writing of the lessor for that purpose," with a proviso for re-entry for a breach:—Held, that this covenant absolutely prohibited all external alterations in any part of the demised premises, and that the qualification as to lessening "the value thereof," applied only to internal alterations in the dwelling-house. Perry v. Davis, 3 C. B., N. S. 769.

A lease contained a covenant by the lessee not to build on the demised premises, without the consent of the lessor, any dwelling-house, edifice, cabin, farm or other building, which should in the whole or in part be occupied as a dwelling-house, with a clause of re-entry on breach. At the date of the lease, there was a dwelling-house on the premises, to which the lessee, during the continuance of the demise, and without the lessor's consent, added a building containing several apartments, communicating with the original dwelling-house, and used together with it by the occupier as one entire dwelling-house:—Held, that the erection of the additional structure, without consent, was a breach of the covenant, and occasioned a forfeiture of the lease. Domsile v. Colville, 7 Ir. R., C. L. 68—Exch.

A proviso for re-entry, "or if the lessee shall make default in the performance of any other covenants, which on his part are or ought to be observed, performed or kept," would apply to and forbid the breach of a negative as well as a positive covenant. Croft v. Lumley, 4 Jur., N. S. 903; 27 L. J., Q. B. 321; 6 H. L. Cas. 672

As to construction of covenants, generally, and what amounts to a breach,—see COVENANT; and as to construction of stipulations in leases and agreements for letting,—see this title, I.-IX.

Provisos making right of re-entry optional or elective.]—A proviso in a lease, which, after stating that in certain events the term should cease, determine, and be utterly void, continues, “and it shall be lawful to and for (the landlord) to re-enter,” gives the landlord a right to enter or not, at his election. Arnaby v. Woodward, 6 B. & C. 519; 9 D. & R. 536.

A proviso in an agreement of demise that the tenant should within a certain time erect a shop-front, and that, if he did not do so, it should be lawful for the landlord or his agents to retake possession of the premises, and the agreement should be null and void, makes it a lease voidable only at the election of the lessor. Doe d. Nash v. Birch, 1 M. & W. 402.

Where there is a proviso in a lease, that, on non-payment of rent, the term shall cease, the lessor, and not the lessee, has the option of determining the lease upon a breach made. Reid v. Parsons, 2 Chit. 247. And see Doe d. Green v. Baker, 2 Moore, 189; 8 Taunt. 241.

When in a lease it was provided, that, in case of non-performance of the covenants, the lessor may re-enter and have the premises again, “as if the lease had never been made:”—Held, the effect of the proviso was not to render the lease void ab initio upon re-entry, but only to avoid it from the period of re-entry. Hartshorne v. Watson, 4 Bing. N. C. 178; 5 Scott, 506; 6 D. P. C. 404; 1 Arn. 15; 2 Jur. 155.

Where a lease of coal mines reserved a royalty rent for every ton of coal raised, and contained a proviso that the lease should be void altogether if the tenant should cease working at any time within two years, but after the working had ceased more than two years the lessor received rent:—Held, that a tenancy from year to year was not thereby created, as the lease was not absolutely void by the lessee's ceasing to work, but voidable only at the option of the lessor, and that he might avoid the lease upon any cessation to work, commencing two years before the day of the demise in the ejectment. Doe d. Bryan v. Banks, 4 B. & A. 401; Gow, 220. And see Doe d. Boncawen v. Bliss, 4 Taunt. 735.

A proviso in a lease for years (whereby the rent is payable on a day certain at the mansion-house of the lessor), that if the rent shall be unpaid for 40 days after the day whereon it is reserved (although not demanded) the lease shall be void, does not make the lease voidable by the lessee, by reason of his having over-stayed the 40 days allowed for payment. Rede v. Farr, 6 M. & S. 121.

Provisos for re-entry in the event of execution, bankruptcy or insolvency.]—A proviso for re-entry in case the tenant shall commit an act of bankruptcy whereon a commission shall issue, is good in law. Roe d. Hunter v. Galliera, 2 T. R. 133. S. P., Church v. Browne, 15 Ves. 268.

A lease contained a clause of re-entry in case the term of years thereby granted should be extended or taken in execution; and before the end of the term the sheriff entered the premises under a writ of extent against the lessee at the suit of the crown, held an inquisition, and seized the lessee's interests into the king's hands:—Held, that this proceeding was a taking in execution within the latter clause of the condition, and that the term was determined and forfeited to the lessor. Rea v. Tipping, M'Clel. & Y. 514. And see Davis v. Eglton, 4 M. & P. 820; 7 Bing. 154.

Lease for twenty-one years to A., his executors, administrators, and assigns. Proviso, that if A., his executors, administrators, and assigns, should become bankrupt or insolvent, or suffer any judgment to be entered against him by confession or otherwise, or suffer any extent, process, or proceedings to be had or taken against him, whereby any reasonable probability might arise of the estate being extended, &c., the estate should determine, and the lessor have power to re-enter. A. died during the term, and by his will devised the premises to his executors on certain trusts. The surviving executor having become bankrupt:—Held, that the lessor's right of re-entering thereupon accrued. Doe d. Brigman v. David, 1 C. M. & R. 405; 5 Tyr. 125; S. C., nom. Doe d. Williams v. Davis, 6 C. & P. 614.

The following proviso for re-entry, “that if the lessee, his executors, administrators or assigns shall, either by their or his own act or acts, or by bankruptcy, insolvency, writ of extent or of execution, by fieri facias or other act of law or by any other means, whereby, either voluntarily or without his or their consent, whereunder the premises demised, or any part thereof, would, in case that proviso did not exist, be liable to be seized by the sheriff or any other person, or in case the lessee, his executors, administrators or assigns shall at any time make breach or default in performance of the covenants or any of them, on his or their parts contained,” then the lease was to be void, and the lessor to re-enter, is insensible and void. Doe d. Wyndham v. Carew, 2 Q. B. 317; 1 G. & D. 640; 6 Jur. 457.

A lease for years contained a proviso for re-entry in case the lessee should, at any time during the term, commit any act of bankruptcy, whereupon a commission or fiat in bankruptcy should issue against him, and under which he should be duly found and declared a bankrupt. The lessee being a trader, committed an act of bankruptcy, on which a fiat issued against him, and he was found and declared a bankrupt; but the petitioning creditor's debt, on which the fiat was founded, was due to A. and B. as partners, whereas it was due to A., B. and C. as partners:—Held, that the lessee was not duly found and declared a bankrupt within the meaning of the proviso. Doe d. Lloyd v. Ingleby, 15 M. & W. 465.

A lessee, who covenanted not to assign the demised premises without the consent in writing of the lessor, executed a deed, under section 193 of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, whereby he assigned all his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors:—Held, that the assignment was a forfeiture of the lease. Holland v. Cole, 1 H. & C. 67; 8 Jur., N. S. 1066; 31 L. J., Exch. 481; 10 W. R. 563; 6 L. T., N. S. 503.

As to what constitutes a breach of covenants in lease,—see COVENANT; other contracts and stipulations between landlord and tenant,—see this title, III.—VII.

When disclaimer by tenant works forfeiture.—A denial by parol of a landlord's title does not incur a forfeiture of a lease for years. Doe d. Graves v. Wells, 2 P. & D. 396; 10 A. & E. 427; 3 Jur. 820.

A termor after deserting the demised premises, delivered up the possession of them, with the lease, to a party who claimed by a title adverse to that of the landlord, with intent to assist him in setting up that title, and not that he should hold bona fide under the lease:—Held, that the term was forfeited by the act of betraying possession. Doe d. Ellerbrock v. Flynn, 1 C., M. & R. 137; 4 Tyr. 619.

A lessee who had paid his rent occasionally to a trustee and occasionally to a cestui que trust, gave up possession on the last day of his term, but before his term was over, to the person who had been trustee, and not to the party then having the legal title:—Held, that, as the act was equivocal, it did not amount to a forfeiture of the term. Ackland v. Lutley, 9 A. & E. 87; 1 P. & D. 636.

The mere payment by the tenant to a third person of the rent reserved by his lease does not amount to a disclaimer of the title of the landlord, so as to operate as a forfeiture of the lease. Doe d. Dillon v. Parker, Gow, 180—Richardson.

Lands were held by G. as tenant from year to year to D., who died in 1837, having devised the same to trustees for a term of 140 years, to permit his wife E. to take the rents and profits during her life. G. paid the rent to E., the widow, after D.'s death, from 1837 to 1840, and, on receiving a notice to quit from her in 1840, stated that he did not think she would turn him out of possession, as she had promised he should continue on as tenant from year to year:—Held, in ejectment by the trustees for the recovery of the premises, that this was sufficient evidence of a disclaimer by G. of the title of the trustees to warrant the jury in finding a verdict for the trustees. Doe d. Davies v. Evans, 9 M. & W. 48.

Parish lands had been let to the laboring inhabitants at a forehand rent of 4s. per acre; the lands having been afterwards inclosed, the churchwardens and overseers, for the time being, increased the rent to 12s. per acre, for the purpose of raising a fund to pay the expenses of the inclosure. The tenants having paid this increased rent for many years, conceiving that the inclosure expenses had been paid off, insisted that they were entitled to hold the land at the original rent of 4s. an acre, and refused to pay the 12s.:—Held, that this did not amount to a disclaimer of the landlords' title, so as to enable them to eject the tenants without notice. Hunt v. Algood, 10 C. B., N. S. 253; 30 L. J., C. P. 313.

As to necessity of notice to quit, after disclaimer by tenant,—see this title, XIV., 1.

2. Licenses; Waiver.

Operation and effect of licenses.—[By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 35, s. 1, where any license to do any act which without such license would create a forfeiture, or give a right to re-enter, under a condition or power reserved in any lease heretofore granted or to be hereafter granted, shall at any time after the passing of this act (18th August, 1859) be given to any lessee or his assigns, every such license shall, unless otherwise expressed, extend only to the permission actually given, or to any specific breach of any proviso or covenant made or to be made, or to the actual assignment, under-lease, or other matter thereby specifically authorized to be done, but not so as to prevent any proceeding for any subsequent breach (unless otherwise specified in such license);

And all rights under covenants and powers of forfeiture and re-entry in the lease contained shall remain in full force and virtue, and shall be available as against any subsequent breach of covenant or condition, assignment, under-lease, or other matter not specifically authorized or made dispensable by such license, in the same manner as if no such license had been given; and the condition or right of re-entry shall be and remain in all respects as if such license had not been given, except in respect of the particular matter authorized to be done. (See Dumpro's Case, 4 Coke's Rep. 119; 1 Sm. L. Cas. 28.)

By s. 2, where, in any lease heretofore granted or to be hereafter granted, there is or shall be a power or condition of re-entry on assigning or underletting, or doing any other specified act without license, and a license at any time after the passing of this act (18th August, 1859) shall be given to one of several lessees or co-owners to assign or underlet his share or interest, or to do any other act prohibited to be done without license, or shall be given to any lessee or owner, or any one of several lessees or owners, to assign or underlet part only of the property, or to do any other such act as aforesaid in respect of part only of such property, such license shall not operate to destroy or extinguish the right of re-entry in case of any breach of the covenant or condition by the co-lessee or co-lessees, or owner or owners, of the other shares or interests in the property, or by the lessee or owner of the rest of the property (as the case may be), over or in respect of such shares or interests or remaining property, but such right of re-entry shall remain in full force over or in respect of the shares or interests or property not the subject of such license. (See Knight's Case, 5 Coke's Rep. 55.)]

After twenty years' user of demised premises, converted into a shop without license, contrary to the covenants contained in the lease, an assignee of the reversion cannot take advantage of a condition of re-entry for such user subsequently to the assignment. Gilman v. Doey or Doeg, 27 L. J., Exch. 37; 2 H. & N. 615.

A lease contained a covenant on the part of the lessee, that he would not, without the consent of the lessor, use, exercise or carry on in the demised premises any trade or business whatsoever, nor convert the dwelling-houses into a shop, nor suffer the same to be used for any other purpose than dwelling-houses. One of the dwelling-houses was converted into a public-house and a grocery shop, and the lessor, with full knowledge of it, for more than twenty years received the rent. The plaintiff, having purchased the reversion of the lessor, brought an action of ejectment for the breach of the covenant:—Held, that the user of the premises in their altered state for more than twenty years, with the knowledge of the lessor, was evidence from which a jury might presume a license. Ib.

The plaintiff demised premises for a term to lessees, by a lease containing a covenant not to assign without license, and a clause for re-entry on breach of the covenant. The plaintiff agreed to an assignment to W., and received rent from him, but no formal assignment was ever executed. W. also, with the consent of the plaintiff, assigned to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, and the trustees, without license, sold the term to the defendant. In an action of ejectment against the defendant for a forfeiture by the assignment without license:—Held, that there never was an assignment of the whole term, and therefore there could be no forfeiture, except for breach of covenant by the original lessees. West v. Dobb, 17 W. R. 879; 20 L. T., N. S. 787; 38 L. J., Q. B. 289; 9 B. & S. 755; 4 L. R., Q. B. 634.

Held, also, that the parting with the possession by the original lessees without executing a transfer of the lease was no ground of forfeiture, there being nothing in the license to assign to forbid the lessees from parting with the possession until a complete transfer of the legal interest had been executed. Ib.

The predecessor in title of the plaintiff let about thirty-three acres of land to B., who covenanted that he, his executors, administrators, or assigns, or any of them, should not during the term demise, let, assign, make over, or part with the possession of the lands (except to the extent of three acres, therein described), without the license and consent in writing of the lessor, his heir or assigns. There was a proviso in the lease for re-entry upon breach of a covenant. After the passing of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, the lessor gave B. a license in writing to assign, transfer, and set over the premises, to the defendant, his executors, administrators, and assigns, upon condition that he would not at any time assign or transfer the premises without the consent of the lessor, his heirs or assigns. B. assigned the three excepted acres to Edge, for the remainder of the term, and let the rest of the premises by the year to another defendant, Jones; and Jones let the thirty acres to Edge by the year. There was no other license by the lessor but that mentioned:—Held, that the words of the license did not justify the letting of the thirty acres without a further license; and that this breach of covenant created a forfeiture of the whole of the premises let under the original lease. Eyton v. Jones, 21 L. T., N. S. 789—C. P.

Waiver of forfeiture by acceptance of rent.]

—Where in a lease a power of re-entry for a breach of covenant is reserved to the lessor, a forfeiture may be waived, as the lease is thereby rendered voidable only. Doe d. Bryan v. Bancks, 4 B. & A. 401; Gow, 220.

But it is otherwise where the lease is declared absolutely void. Ib.

Acceptance of rent after a forfeiture is a waiver of the forfeiture. Arnsby v. Woodward, 6 B. & C. 519; 9 D. & R. 536.

If the fact of forfeiture was known to the lessor at the time. Road v. Gregson v. Harrison, 2 T. R. 425. S. P., Goodright d. Walter v. Davids, Cowp. 803; Doe d. Cheney v. Batten, Cowp. 243; 9 East, 314, n.

If ejectment is brought on a forfeiture of a lease and after the bringing of such ejectment the landlord accepts rent, it is no waiver of the forfeiture. Doe d. Morecraft v. Meux, 1 C. & P. 346; 7 D. & R. 98; 4 B. & C. 606.

And upon a clause of re-entry on breach of covenant, ejectment may be supported in respect of a continuing breach, as by user of rooms in a manner prohibited by the lease, though rent has been accepted with knowledge of the original breach. Doe d. Woodbridge, 4 M. & R. 308; S. C., nom. Doe d. Ambler v. Woodbridge, 9 B. & C. 376.

A forfeiture of a lease accruing on the lessee's insolvency, is waived by acceptance of rent from him after his discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Act; and the non-payment of a debt specified in the schedule to be due to the lessor, is not a continuing insolvency, to constitute a new forfeiture after such acceptance of rent. Doe d. Gatehouse v. Rees, 4 Bing. N. C. 384; 6 Scott, 161; 1 Arn. 159.

The receipt of rent is no waiver of a continuing breach of covenant. Doe d. Baker v. Jones, 5 Exch. 498; 19 L. J., Exch. 405.

And the receipt of rent is not a waiver of a forfeiture, unless it is rent due on a day after the forfeiture is incurred. Price v. Worwood, 4 H. & N. 512; 5 Jur., N. S. 472; 28 L. J., Exch. 329.

Ejectment upon a forfeiture of a lease for not insuring, and continuing to insure, a house in the name of the lessor and lessee, according to the covenant. On the 24th of January, 1836, a policy of insurance had been effected in the sole name of the lessee, which had been shown to A., the then lessor, and approved of by him, and the premiums had been paid upon it up to Christmas, 1842. On the 14th of January, 1843, A. conveyed his interest in the reversion to the plaintiff, and on the same day received from the defendant the rent due up to the 25th December, 1842:—Held, that, though A. by his conduct might have waived the forfeiture up to the 25th December, 1842, yet that, there being a continuing covenant, a subsequent breach would entitle the plaintiff to enter. Doe d. Muston v. Gladwin, 6 Q. B. 953; 9 Jur. 508; 14 L. J., Q. B. 189.

The plaintiff leased premises to A. for a term of years, and A. died intestate pending the term, and the plaintiff, considering that no one would administer to A.'s estate, agreed with A.'s son that he should occupy the premises as yearly tenant, at the same rent as that reserved under the lease to his father, and the son did so, and paid rent. The plaintiff repaired the premises at or about Michaelmas, 1861, and having afterwards discovered that the defendant, a daughter of A., had taken out letters of administration to his estate, and as such claimed to hold the premises for the remainder of the term, the plaintiff sued her on the covenant to repair, and in ejectment, as for a forfeiture for non-repair. In the action of covenant, however, the defendant paid money into court, which the plaintiff took out in satisfaction. There was no want of repair in the premises after the plaintiff had repaired them, and the rent due up to Michaelmas, 1861, was paid by A.'s son, and received by the plaintiff, before either action was commenced:—Held, that either the rent so paid was to be taken as a satisfaction of the rent due under the lease, and so the acceptance of it to operate as a waiver of the forfeiture, or that there had been an eviction of the defendant by the plaintiff, which prevented his taking advantage of a forfeiture for non-repair during the eviction. Pellatt v. Boosey, 8 Jur., N. S. 1107; 31 L. J., C. P. 281.

In a crown lease, a lessee covenanted not to convert the premises into a shop or a place of sale of any kind, without consent of the commissioners of woods and forests. The trade of an engraver had been carried on in it, without consent or objection, but rent had afterwards been received:—Held, that the forfeiture had been waived. Bridges v. Longman, 24 Beav. 27.

After forfeiture of a lease had been incurred, the time having come when the rent would become due, the lessee tendered the rent to the lessor. He refused to take it, except on the terms that it should be taken not as rent, but as compensation for use and occupation subsequent to the forfeiture. The lessee refused to agree to any such condition. The lessor then took the money, declaring he would not take it as rent, or as waiving the forfeiture:—Held, that in legal effect money must be taken according to the intent of the party paying it, in this case as rent; and that the receipt of rent, as a matter of law, operated to waive all forfeitures then known to the lessor, and that no protest on his part could prevent this legal effect. Croft v. Lumley, 5 El. & Bl. 648; 2 Jur., N. S. 275; 25 L. J., Q. B. 223.

At the time of the receipt of the money, the lessor knew of most of the judgments by virtue of which a forfeiture had been incurred, but did not know of every instance:—Held, that he must be taken to waive all forfeitures by that breach of which he had notice, though it was more extensive than he was aware of. Id.

Where a lessee tendered rent which had accrued subsequently to breaches of covenant, as rent, but the lessor took it as compensation for occupation, expressly reserving the right of re-entry, it is, by force of the rule, "solutio accipitur in modum solventis," a waiver of the forfeiture in respect of such breaches as were known to the lessor.—By a majority of the judges. S. C., 4 Jur., N. S. 903; 27 L. J., Q. B. 321; 6 H. L. Cas. 672. See Toleman v. Portbury, 6 L. R., Q. B. 245, 248; 40 L. J., Q. B. 125; 24 L. T., N. S. 24; 19 W. R. 623.

When a lease contains a proviso for re-entry for non performance of covenants, and a covenant is broken for want of the previous consent of the lessors to alterations, the receipt of rent is a waiver of the forfeiture. Miles v. Tobin, 17 L. T., N. S. 432; 16 W. R. 465—Chelmsford, C.

The acceptance of rent with knowledge of a written underletting for a time certain is a waiver pro tanto of the breach of covenant not to underlet. Waldron v. Hawkins, 32 L. T., N. S. 119; 44 L. J., C. P. 116; 23 W. R. 300; 10 L. R., C. P. 342.

A lessor let houses and lands upon a lease for twenty-one years, containing a covenant that the lessee would not assign, underlet, or permit any person to occupy any part of the premises without the consent of the lessor. The lessee underlet part of the premises by written agreement to T., for a year, and the lessor having accepted, and also distrained for rent accrued due after the making of the agreement, and with notice thereof, brought ejectment as for a forfeiture upon breach of the covenant not to underlet or permit to occupy:—Held, that the breach was not a continuing breach. Id.

— by proceeding for rent.]—A distress and continuance in possession may be a waiver of an existing forfeiture, but not so as to any right which accrues subsequently. Doe d. Taylor v. Johnson, 1 Stark. 411—Ellenborough. And see Zouch d. Ward v. Willingale, 1 H. Bl. 311.

Taking an insufficient distress after the forfeiture, for rent accruing before, is not a waiver of the right to re-enter. Brewer d. Onslow v. Eaton, 3 Doug. 230.

Where circumstances occur which entitle a party to take advantage of a clause of forfeiture, and he does acts which show that he waives that forfeiture (though the acts were such as he was not entitled to do), he cannot afterwards take advantage of the forfeiture. Ward v. Day, 83 L. J., Q. B. 254; 5 B. & S. 359; 12 W. R. 829; 10 L. T., N. S. 578—Exch. Cham.

By a deed for twenty-one years from the 24th June, at a rent payable half-yearly, the lessor granted the lessee leave and license to pick all the copperas stone over certain land, with a proviso that if any part of the rent should be in arrear for twenty-one days, it should be lawful for the lessor, without any demand, to determine the grant by notice in writing. In March, 1858, he distrained the goods of the lessee for five and a half years' rent, due the preceding Christmas, whereupon an action was commenced for an illegal distress. In May and June of the same year, negotiations took place between the parties for a settlement of the action, and for granting a new lease, commencing on the 24th of June, 1864, when the former grant would expire; but the terms arranged were not carried out by the lessee, who on the 3d of July, 1858, gave the lessor a written notice that he determined the grant, on the ground that half a year's rent, due at Christmas, 1857, was in arrear:—Held, that the conduct of the lessor in making the distress (though it was an illegal act), together with the negotiations, was satisfactory evidence that he treated the license as still subsisting, and was therefore a waiver of the forfeiture. Ib.

A lessee covenanted that his executors or assigns would insure the demised premises, and keep them insured during the term, and deposit the policy with the lessor. The lease contained a proviso for re-entry on breach of any of the covenants. The lessee assigned, and the premises were never insured either by him or his assignee. The lessor distrained on the 30th September for rent then due, and afterwards brought an ejectment on a demise laid on the 24th October:—Held, that though the distress was an acknowledgment of a tenancy to the 30th September, and a waiver of any forfeiture to that time, yet the lessor was entitled to recover in ejectment for the forfeiture incurred by the breach of covenant between the 30th September and the 24th October. Dee d. Flower v. Peck, 1 B. & Ad. 428.

A right of re-entry for breach of a covenant in a lease is waived by the lessor's bringing an action for rent accruing subsequently to the breach, with knowledge of its existence. Dundy v. Nicholl, 4 C. B., N. S. 376; 27 L. J., C. P. 230.

—by bringing ejectment for different breach.]—The service by a lessor upon the lessee of a declaration in ejectment for the demised premises for a forfeiture, operates as a final election by the lessor to determine the term; and he cannot afterwards (although there has not been any judgment in the ejectment) sue for rent due or for covenants broken after the service of the declaration (or by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 168, after the service of the writ). Jones v. Carter, 15 M. & W. 718.

A lease of a farm contained a condition of re-entry for breaches of covenants. Breaches of covenants took place before the 24th June, 1871. The lessors brought ejectment against the tenant on the 21st of July, 1871; but the writ did not claim possession as from any antecedent date. After the commencement of the action, but before the trial, the lessors distrained for rent due up to the 24th of June, 1871:—Held, that by such distress they had not precluded themselves from relying at the trial on any breach of covenant before the 24th of June, 1871, on the ground that by bringing the ejectment they had unequivocally declared their election to determine the lease on any ground of forfeiture which had not been waived before the commencement of the action; and that the subsequent distress, if not justifiable under the 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 7, which enables the landlord, under certain circumstances to distrain after the determination of the tenancy, was a trespass. Grimwood v. Moss, 7 L. R., C. P. 360; 41 L. J., C. P. 239; 20 W. R. 972; 27 L. T., N. S. 268.

The plaintiff demised a house to C., who covenanted not to permit or suffer any sale by auction to take place on the premises. C. subsequently granted a bill of sale under seal, assigning his goods in the house as security for a loan, and empowering the grantees to sell them by auction on the premises in default of repayment. He next mortgaged the house by an under lease to the defendant, and finally executed a deed of assignment conveying all his estate to trustees for his creditors; he nevertheless remained in possession. The grantees of the bill of sale sold the goods by auction on the premises. The plaintiff brought an ejectment, and, in compliance with a judge's order, delivered particulars of the following breaches of covenant, upon which she relied as causing a forfeiture of the lease, namely: first, non-payment of rent accrued since the day of the sale; and, secondly, the permitting and suffering a sale by auction to take place on the premises. The arrears of rent were tendered to the plaintiff, and being refused, were paid into court, whereupon the proceedings on the first breach were stayed, but the action went to trial on the second. The jury found that C. permitted the sale:—Held, that he had power to do so, notwithstanding the conveyance of his estate, and having done so, had committed an act of forfeiture which was not waived by the plaintiff stating in the particulars of breaches the non-payment of subsequent rent. Toleman v. Portbury, 41 L. J., Q. B. 98; 7 L. R., Q. B. 344; 26 L. T., N. S. 292; 20 W. R. 441—Exch. Cham.; affirming S. C., 6 L. R., Q. B. 245; 40 L. J., Q. B. 125; 24 L. T., N. S. 24; 19 W. R. 623. And see Toleman v. Portbury, 39 L. J., Q. B.

—by giving notice to repair.]—A forfeiture incurred by the breach of a general covenant to keep the premises in repair, is not waived by a notice given under a covenant to repair within three months. Roe d. Gwatly v. Paine, 2 Camp. 520—Ellenborough.

A lease of lands and houses by A. to B. contained a general covenant by B. to repair, and a further covenant that A. might give notice to B. of all defects and want of repairs, and if B. did not repair the said defects within two months, A. might enter and do the repairs himself, the expense of which B. was to repay at the time of paying his next rent; and if he did not so, A. might distrain on him for the expense, as in case of rent in arrear. There was also a power to A. to re-enter, upon breach of any covenant. The premises being out of repair, A. gave B. notice to repair within six months, and that, if B. did not repair within that time, he would perform the repairs, and charge B. with the expense. The premises were not repaired within the six months; during that time a negotiation was entered into by A. and B., and, after the expiration of the six months, A. gave notice to B., that if he did not agree to certain terms in three days, A. would hold him to the covenants in his lease. B. did not agree:—Held, that A. could not recover in ejectment for a forfeiture, he having elected to perform the repairs, and distrain on B. for the expense, and the general power to re-enter not being revived by the three days' notice. Doe d. De Rutzen v. Lewis, 5 A. & E. 277; 6 N. & M. 764; 2 H. & W. 162.

Where a landlord, finding the premises out of repair, gave the tenant three months' notice to repair, pursuant to his covenant:—Held, first, that he could not maintain ejectment for a forfeiture until the three months had elapsed; and secondly, that the notice was a waiver of the breach of the general covenant to repair. Doe d. Morecraft v. Meuz, 7 D. & R. 98; 4 B. & C. 606; 1 C. & P. 346.

A right of re-entry, acquired by an omission to repair three months after notice, is suspended, but not waived, by an agreement to allow the tenant further time to repair. Doe d. Rankin v. Brindley, 1 N. & M. 1; 4 B. & Ad. 84.

Where a lease contains a covenant by the lessee to repair and keep in repair, and also to repair within three months after notice, with a clause of re-entry for non-performance of covenants, the landlord may re-enter, as for a forfeiture, on finding the premises out of repair. Baylis v. Le Gros, 4 Jur., N. S. 518; 4 C. B., N. S. 537.

A lessee under a covenant to repair on three months' notice, with a penalty of re-entry, received notice on the 16th September to repair according to a specification, and out of the twenty-two items specified only two were not commenced, and eight not completely finished, on the 18th December, the latter having been delayed by the state of the weather. There was no entry by the lessors to inspect, and no notice from them to expedite the works during the interval, and the whole of the works was completely finished in the second week in January:—Held, that the lessee was entitled to be relieved against an ejectment for the breach of covenant. Bargent v. Thomson, 9 Jur., N. S. 1192; 9 L. T., N. S. 865; 4 Giff. 473.

When a notice to repair has been given, and the lessee makes an offer to sell his interest in the premises, and a negotiation takes place on that offer, the effect of that offer and the negotiation is to suspend the notice till the negotiation has been terminated, from which event alone the date of the notice can properly be calculated. Equity will relieve against an ejectment founded on the original notice. Hughes v. Metropolitan Railway Company, 2 L. R., App. Cas. 439; 40 L. J., C. P. Div. 583; 23 W. R. 680; 36 L. T., N. S. 932—H. L.; affirming the judgment of the Court of Appeal, which reversed the judgment of the Common Pleas Division, 45 L. J., C. P. Div. 578; 35 L. T., N. S. 87; 1 L. R., C. P. Div. 120; 24 W. R. 652.

A notice to repair, within six months, houses held on lease by the Metropolitan Railway Company, was given on the 22d of October, 1874, to expire on the 22d of April, 1875. It was answered by a letter of the 28th of November, suggesting that the lessors might like to purchase the premises. The lessors' solicitors, by letter of the 1st of December, asked the price demanded, and were told, by letter, on the 30th of December, that it was 3,000*l*. The lessors' solicitors, on the 31st of December, 1874, wrote to say that, considering the condition of the premises, "the price is out of all reason. We must therefore request you to reconsider the question of price, having regard to the previous observations, and to the fact that the company has already been served with notice to put the premises in repair, and we shall be glad to receive in due course a modified proposal from you." No farther communication on this subject took place till the 19th of April, 1875, when the agent for the company wrote to say that as "the negotiations had not resulted in a sale" the company would take in hand the repairs. On the 30th of April the solicitors for the lessors wrote, declaring that "the negotiations" had been broken off in December last, and that there had been ample time since then to complete the repairs. On the 22d of April the notice expired, and on the 28th the ejectment was served:—Held, that the company was entitled in equity to be relieved against the forfeiture, for that the letters at the end of November and at the beginning of December had the effect of suspending the notice, and that the suspension did not come to an end till the 31st of December, till which time the operation of the notice was waived, so that no part of that time could be counted against the tenant in a six months' notice to repair. Id.

— by giving notice to quit.]—A tenant is not absolved from the performance of the covenants of his lease by a notice to quit; such notice ought rather to be regarded as a notice to be more vigilant in the performance of the covenants. Gregory v. Wilson, 9 Hare, 688; 16 Jur. 804.

— by permitting or recognizing breach.]—If a lessee exercises a trade on the demised premises, by which his lease is forfeited, the landlord does not, by merely lying by, and witnessing the act for six years, waive the forfeiture. Doe d. Sheppard v. Allen, 8 Taunt. 78.

Some positive act of waiver, as the receipt of rent, is necessary. Id.

If, on the trial of an ejectment against the assignee of a tenant on a forfeiture of a lease by breach of covenant, it appears that the landlord so acted as to induce the tenant's assignee to believe that the latter was doing all that he ought, the landlord cannot recover, although the covenants are actually broken, and there is neither a release nor a dispensation on the part of the landlord. Doe d. Knight v. Rowe, 2 C. & P. 246; R. & M. 843.—Abbott. See West v. Blakeway, 3 Scott, N. R. 199; 9 D. P. C. 846; 5 Jur. 680; 2 M. & G. 720.

On an action of ejectment for the breach of a condition that the lessee should not underlet, in an agreement amounting to a lease, it appeared that the lessor of the plaintiff asked the defendant what he would take for his land; and on the defendant naming a price, said, "Then let it, and I shall know what I will produce next year."—Held, that this was a waiver of the forfeiture on a breach of such condition. Doe d. Henniker v. Watt, 1 M. & R. 694; 8 B. & C. 808.

If a lessor, after a forfeiture, advises a person to purchase the term of his lessee, he cannot maintain an ejectment for such forfeiture against such purchaser; but he may do so if the party has an interest, viz., an annuity secured on the premises, and the advice is merely "to take to them." Doe d. Sore v. Eykins, 1 C. & P. 154; R. & M. 29.—Abbott.

Land was demised to the lessee, who covenanted in the lease to build and complete certain houses thereon within a year, and that if he did not the lease should be void; the houses not being completed within the specified period:—Held, that the forfeiture was not waived by the steward of the lessor having permitted the lessee to employ workmen in completing the houses for a short period after such forfeiture. Doe d. Kensington v. Brindley, 12 Moore, 37.

An owner of an estate covered it with houses, and sold some of them, subject to a covenant not to carry on any trade, business or calling therein, or to otherwise use or suffer the same to be used, to the annoyance, nuisance or injury of any of the houses on the estate:—Held, that the carrying on of a girl's school in one of the houses was a breach of the covenant, and that the covenantee had not waived the benefit of the covenant, though he had permitted other houses, held under the like covenant, to be used as schools. Kemp v. Sober, 1 Sim., N. S. 517; 15 Jur. 458; 20 L. J., Chanc. 602.

Mere standing by and seeing the lessee making alterations which are in breach of his covenant, does not operate as a waiver on the part of the lessor. Perry v. Davis, 3 C. B., N. S. 769.

Where, during the existence of a lease containing a proviso for re-entry in case of assignment or underletting without license in writing, the lessor, who had purchased the remainder of the interest in it, engaged to grant a new lease to the defendant, to take effect on the expiration of the old lease:—Held, that the lessor could not maintain ejectment against the defendant on the fact of his possession, though no license in writing had been granted, as there was a waiver of the forfeiture if any had taken place, or else there was no forfeiture at all, for the defendant came in with the lessor's consent. Doe d. Weatherhead v. Curwood, 1 H. & W. 140.

By a lease empowering the lessee to build, he covenanted to cultivate part of the land, on which no buildings should be erected, in a husbandlike manner, and there was a clause of forfeiture for breach of covenant. The lessee built a vitriol factory on the land, with the knowledge of the lessor, but being obliged to discontinue the manufacture by an indictment he pulled down the manufactory, and paid part of the proceeds of the building materials to the lessor in pursuance of an agreement between them:—Held, that the lessor had not in equity precluded himself from entering for the non-cultivation of the land after the manufactory was pulled down. Hills v. Rowland, 4 De G., M. & G. 430.

Restriction of operation of waiver to a particular breach.]—By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 33, s. 6, where any actual waiver of the benefit of any covenant or condition in any lease on the part of any lessor, or his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, shall be proved to have taken place after the passing of the act (23d July, 1860) in any one particular instance, such actual waiver shall not be assumed or deemed to extend to any instance, or any breach of covenant or condition other than that to which such waiver shall specially relate, nor to be a general waiver of the benefit of any such covenant or condition, unless an intention to that effect shall appear.]

A lessor, who has a right of re-entry reserved on breach of a covenant not to underlet, does not, by waiving his re-entry on one underletting, lose his right to re-enter on a subsequent underletting. Nor, by waiving his right to re-enter on a breach of covenant to repair, does he waive his re-entry on a subsequent want of repairs. Doe d. Boscarven v. Bliss, 4 Taunt. 735.

XIV. NOTICE TO QUIT.

1. Under Leases and Agreements, generally.

(a) When Necessary or Proper.

In general.—Where the term of a lease is to end on a precise day, there is no occasion for a notice to quit previously to bringing an action. Cobb v. Stokes, 8 East, 358. S. P., Messenger v. Armstrong, 1 T. R. 54; and Right d. Flower v. Darby, 1 T. R. 162.

A tenant holding under an agreement for a lease for seven years, which was never executed, is not entitled to a notice to quit at the end of the seven years. Doe d. Tilt v. Stratton, 4 Bing. 446; 1 M. & P. 183; 8 C. & P. 164.

Where a party occupies under an agreement for a lease during the whole term for which the lease was to be granted, a notice to quit is not necessary at the end of such term, as the agreement is evidence of the expiration of the tenancy, as well as of the other terms of the holding. Id.

Under an agreement to let for a longer term than three years, though void as a lease for three years, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 8, the tenant holds from year to year, subject to the terms of the agreement, and is bound to leave at the expiration of the three years, without any notice to quit. Tress v. Savage, 4 El. & Bl. 36; 18 Jur. 680; 23 L. J., Q. B. 330.

A., being owner of a farm, let it for seven years to B., and by a written agreement of the same date it was agreed, that A. should manage the farm for B., B. allowing A. 12s. per week; "and allowing him and his family to reside and have the use of the dwelling-house and furniture therein, free of rent;" and this agreement was to be put an end to by three months' notice, or three months' wages:—Held, that no notice to quit was necessary, if the service was put an end to. Doe d. Hughes v. Derry, 9 C. & P. 494—Parke.

So, if, by the terms of a deed of copartnership, a house is to be used and occupied by the copartner during the copartnership, it is not necessary, after a dissolution of partnership, to give a notice to quit previously to bringing an ejectment against the copartner. Doe d. Waithman v. Miles, 1 Stark. 181; 4 Camp. 378—Ellenborough.

Where a tenant came into possession of premises in 1816:—Held, that the lessor of the plaintiff in ejectment, who claimed under an elegit and inquisition issued in 1818, but founded on a judgment recovered prior to 1816, need not give a notice previous to bringing the ejectment. Doe d. Putland v. Hilder, 2 B. & A. 782.

If A. lets part of a house to a firm consisting of himself and B., for the carrying on of the business of the firm, and the partnership of A. and B. is dissolved, A. may bring an ejectment against B., and recover possession of the part of the house thus let, without giving B. a notice to quit. Doe d. Colnaghi v. Bluck, 8 C. & P. 464—Tindal.

A person who held glebe lands as tenant to one incumbent, and continues in possession under his successor without disturbance, must be presumed to hold as tenant to the latter, and cannot be dispossessed without a notice to quit. Doe d. Coates v. Somerville, 9 D. & R. 100; 6 B. & C. 126.

If a tenant holds under an agreement for a lease at a yearly rent, whereby it is stipulated that the agreement shall continue for the life of the lessor, and that a clause shall be inserted in the lease, giving the lessor's son power to take the house for himself when he comes of age, the son must make his election in a reasonable time after he comes of age. The delay of a year is unreasonable, and the tenant cannot be ejected upon a half-year's notice to quit, served after such a delay. Doe d. Bromfield v. Smith, 2 T. R. 436. And see S. C., 6 East, 530; 2 Smith, 570.

Premises were demised under a written agreement, dated 4th August, 1845, "the tenancy to be from year to year from Michaelmas next," at the rent of 55*l.*, payable half-yearly, "except the last half-year, which portion of rent shall be paid on or before the 1st August in that year, and to be deemed then due for all legal remedies for recovering rent in arrear." The tenant "to allow the landlord or incoming tenant, in the last year, to enter on 1st May to make fallows and carry out the manure," for which compensation was to be paid. The tenant to have "the use of the barns for stacking and threshing the crops of the last year till the first day of May after the tenancy:"—Held, that these stipulations did not necessarily import that the tenancy was to be extended beyond the first year; consequently, that the tenancy was determined by a notice, dated 24th March, 1846, to quit at Michaelmas that year. Doe d. Plumer v. Nainby, 10 Q. B. 473; 11 Jur. 308; 16 L. J., Q. B. 303.

On disclaimer of title.—A notice is not necessary, where the tenant does an act which amounts to a disavowal of the title of the lessor. Doe d. Grubb v. Grubb, 10 B. & C. 816; Doe d. Williams v. Pasquill, Peake, 106; Doe d. Jefferies v. Whittick, Gow, 105; Doe d. Clun v. Clark, Peake's Add. Cas. 239. But refusal to pay rent to the devisee under a will, which is contested, is not such a disavowal. Id.

Nor where the possession of the tenant is adverse. Doe d. Foster v. Williams, Cowp. 622. S. P.; Doe d. Chesser v. Creed, 2 M. & P. 648; S. C., nom. Doe d. Davis v. Creed, 5 Bing. 327.

"I have no rent for you, because A. has ordered me to pay none," is evidence of a disclaimer of tenancy. Doe d. Whitehead v. Pittman, 2 N. & M. 672.

The defendant held premises under a tenant for life, on whose death possession was claimed, and rent demanded by the heir at law of the deviser; whereupon the defendant wrote to the attorney of the heir at law, stating that he held as tenant to S. (the husband of the tenant for life), in right of his wife; that he had never considered the claimant as the landlord of the house; that he should be ready to pay the arrears to any person who should be proved to be heir at law; but that he must decline taking upon himself to decide upon the claim made on him, without more satisfactory proof in a legal manner:—Held, that this letter amounted to a disclaimer of the title of the heir at law, and that he might maintain ejectment against the tenant without giving him a previous notice to quit. Doe d. Calvert v. Froud, 1 M. & P. 480; 4 Bing. 557.

So, where the tenant has attorned to some other person, or answered an application for rent, by saying that his connection as tenant with the party applying has ceased. Doe d. Grubb v. Grubb, 10 B. & C. 816.

Executrixes of a tenant from year to year signed the following instrument:—"We do hereby renounce and disclaim, and also surrender and yield up to the lessor, all right, title, interest, use, trust, term and terms of years whatsoever, and possession of that messuage called B.:—Held, a surrender, and not a disclaimer. Doe d. Wyatt v. Stagg, 5 Bing. N. C. 584; 7 Scott, 690.

In an ejectment by a landlord against his tenant, the landlord relied on a disclaimer. It was proved that the tenant disclaimed, in March, 1833; in November, 1833, the landlord put in a distress for rent:—Held, a waiver of the disclaimer. Doe d. David v. Williams, 7 C. & P. 822—Patteson.

B. had concurred, with other members of his family, in letting land to C., as tenant from year to year, and it was agreed that the rent should be paid to D., as agent for the family. B., to whom alone the land really belonged, demanded rent of C., who said, "You are not my landlord." B. then demanded possession, which C. refused to give up:—Held, that if the jury was satisfied that the fair meaning of this was, that C. asserted that B. and himself were not in the relation of landlord and tenant, this was a disclaimer, and that C. was not entitled to notice to quit. Doe d. Burnett v. Long, 9 C. & P. 773—Coide-ridge.

The defendant held premises as tenant to H., with an agreement for a lease for seven years, or for the lease for lives under which H. held the property. The attorney for the lessors of the plaintiff, who was assignee of H.'s interest in the premises, under an impression that the seven years had expired, went to demand possession; when the defendant said, "I hold on a lease for lives, and as long as they live, I will not give up possession; you know I have an agreement." The attorney then demanded a quarter's rent, which was due, but which the defendant refused to pay, saying, "I hold under H., and I was directed by him to pay to K. (the superior landlord), and I'll do so; how do I know he may not come and make a demand on me?"—Held, that this did not amount to a disclaimer of the title of the lessors of the plaintiff. Doe d. Williams v. Cooper, 1 Scott, N. R. 36; 1 M. & G. 135. See Doe d. Lewis v. Cawdor, 1 C., M. & R. 398; 4 Tyr. 852.

Where upon a question as to the right of possession on a particular day, one party entitles himself to such possession by a tenancy for years under the other, an acknowledgment made after action brought, of an attornment to a stranger, taking place before such day, is sufficient evidence of a disclaimer to rebut his title as tenant. Doe d. Mes v. Litherland, 6 N. & M. 313; 4 A. & E. 784.

A lease for a term of years by deed is not forfeited by a parol disclaimer of the lessor's title by the lessee. Doe d. Graves v. Wells, 10 A. & E. 427; 2 P. & D. 896; 3 Jur. 820.

A notice to quit is unnecessary when, on demand of possession, the party refuses to give up possession, claiming the property as his own. Landsell v. Giner, 17 Q. B. 589; 16 Jur. 100; 21 L. J., Q. B. 57.

As to when disclaimer by tenant works a forfeiture,—see this title, XIII., 1.

By infants.—Notice to quit must be given by an infant, who becomes entitled to the reversion of an estate leased from year to year, before he can eject the tenant. Maddon d. Baker v. White, 2 T. R. 150.

Where an ejectment has been brought on the demise of an infant, which has been compromised, and the tenant in possession has attorned to the infant; though the lessor of the plaintiff, on his coming of age, does not accept rent, or do any act to confirm the tenancy, yet, as the former ejectment was brought at his suit and for his benefit, he will not be allowed to consider the tenant as a trespasser, and bring a new ejectment without giving notice to quit. Doe d. Miller v. Noden, 2 Esp. 530—Kenyon.

By mortgagees.—It is not necessary for a mortgagee to give a notice, previously to bringing an ejectment, to a tenant who claims under a lease from the mortgagor, granted after the mortgage without the privity of the mortgagee. Keech d. Warrs v. Hall, 1 Dougl. 21.

Nor where the tenant was let into possession after the original mortgage was made, but before an assignment of it for the purpose of bringing ejectment. Thunder d. Weaver v. Belcher, 3 East, 449. But see Birch v. Wright, 1 T. R. 378.

A mortgage deed contained a covenant, that if the principal remained unpaid on a given day, the mortgagee might enter; and that if not paid within a certain number of days from the day fixed for payment he might sell without the concurrence of the mortgagor:—Held, that the mortgagee might maintain ejectment against the mortgagor, although he remained in possession, without giving him notice to quit or demanding possession. Doe d. Fisher v. Gibbs, 2 M. & P. 749; 5 Bing. 421.

A notice to quit was signed by the mortgagee after the mortgage of the reversion. A clause in the mortgage deed provided that if the interest was duly paid by the mortgagor, the principal was not to be called in by the mortgagee until a period after the date of the notice. There was also a covenant for quiet enjoyment:—Held, that notwithstanding this clause the signature of the mortgagee to the notice was sufficient. Burton v. Dickenson, 17 L. T., N. S. 246—Blackburn.

As to when notice to quit is necessary, in cases of tenancies from year to year,—see this title, XVI., 2; weekly tenancies,—see this title, XVII.; tenancies at will and by sufferance,—see this title, XVIII.

(b) Requisites, Sufficiency and Effect.

Length of notice required.]—Where rent is reserved quarterly, it does not dispense with the necessity of six months' notice to quit. Shirley v. Newman, 1 Esp. 266—Kenyon.

But if a quarter's notice is given to the lessor, and the rent paid up to the time when the tenant should quit, and the lessor neither assents nor dissents, it will be taken as a waiver of the regular notice, and an acquiescence on his part. Id.

A month's notice is not sufficient. Gulliver d. Tasker v. Burr, 1 W. Bl. 596. But see Doe d. Parry v. Hayell, 1 Esp. 94.

A tenant held under a demise from the 26th day of March, for one year then next ensuing, and fully to be completed and ended, and so from year to year, for so long as the landlord and tenant should respectively please. The tenant, after having held more than one year, gave a parol notice to the landlord less than six months before the 25th day of March, that he would quit on that day, and the landlord accepted and assented to the notice:—Held, that the tenancy was not thereby determined, there not having been either a sufficient notice to quit, or a surrender in writing or by operation of law, within the Statute of Frauds. Johnstone v. Huddleston, 7 D. & R. 411; 4 B. & C. 922.

A lease for one year, and so on from year to year until the tenancy thereby created shall be determined as hereinafter mentioned, with a provision that it shall be lawful for either of the parties to determine the tenancy by three months' notice, creates a tenancy for two years certain, and cannot be terminated by a three months' notice to quit at the end of the first year. Doe d. Chaborn v. Green, 1 P. & D. 454; 9 A. & E. 658; 2 W., W. & H. 122.

A notice on the 28th of September, to quit on the ensuing 25th of March, is a sufficient half-year's notice. Roe d. Durant v. Doe, 6 Bing. 574; 4 M. & P. 391. S. P., Doe d. Harrop v. Green, 4 Esp. 198.

A notice given on the 26th of September to quit at the end of six calendar months is good to determine a holding commencing on the 25th of March. Howard v. Wemsley, 6 Esp. 58—Ellenborough.

So, though the word "calendar" had been omitted, or the notice had expressed half a year. Id.

If notice to quit at midsummer is given to a tenant holding from Michaelmas, he may insist on the insufficiency of the notice at the trial, though he did not make any objection at the time when it was served. Oakapple d. Green v. Copous, 4 T. R. 361.

A tenancy from year to year, so long as both parties please, is determinable at the end of the first year, unless, in the creation of the tenancy, the parties introduce provisions showing that they contemplated a tenancy for two years at least. Doe d. Clarke v. Smarridge, 7 Q. B. 957; 9 Jur. 781; 14 L. J., Q. B. 327.

A tenancy commenced on the 12th of May, 1840, by a lease for one year only, at a certain rent; the tenant remained in possession till 1842, without any fresh agreement. An increased rent was to commence on the 12th of May, 1842:—Held, that the tenancy was determined in 1843 by a notice to quit, given after the payment of the increased rent existing on the 12th of May, 1843. Doe d. Monck v. Geekie, 5 Q. B. 841; 1 C. & K. 307; 8 Jur. 360; 13 L. J., Q. B. 239.

B. being possessed of a term, made an under-lease for fourteen years and a half from the 25th December, 1831, which was assigned to the defendant, and expired on the 24th June, 1846. The defendant continued in possession, and paid rent to the plaintiff, who had become assignee of the original term:—Held, that a notice given on the 24th December, 1846, to quit on the 24th June next was valid. Doe d. Buddle v. Lines, 11 Q. B. 402; 12 Jur. 80; 17 L. J., Q. B. 108.

A demise for "a term of three years, determinable on a six months' previous notice to quit, otherwise to continue from year to year until the term shall cease by notice to quit at the usual times," is a demise for three years certain, determinable only at the end of that period by six months' previous notice, and if not determined, a subsisting tenancy from year to year. Jones v. Nixon, 1 H. & C. 48; 8 Jur., N. S. 648; 31 L. J., Exch. 505.

A written agreement for the letting of premises expressed the tenancy to be "for a year certain, and so on from year to year until a half-year's notice should be given by or to either party, at a yearly rent of 50*l.*, payable quarterly, the first payment to be on the 25th of March next." The agreement was dated the 20th of December, 1872, and specified no date for the commencement of the term:—Held, that a notice to quit given by the landlord on the 24th of June, 1874, was a good notice. Sandill v. Franklin, 10 L. R., C. P. 877; 44 L. J., C. P. 216; 23 W. R. 478; 32 L. T., N. S. 309.

Expiration of notice; in ordinary cases.]—If premises are taken "for twelve months certain, and six months' notice to quit afterwards," the tenancy may be determined by a six months' notice to quit, expiring at the end of the first year. Thompson v. Maberly, 2 Camp. 573—Ellenborough.

Where premises are let from year to year, upon an agreement that either party may determine the tenancy by a quarter's notice, the notice must expire at the period of the year when the tenancy commenced. Doe d. Pitcher v. Donovan, 1 Taunt. 555; 2 Camp. 78.

So, where premises are taken under an agreement, by which the tenant is always to quit at three months' notice, the notice must expire either at the same time of the year the tenancy commenced, or at any other corresponding quarter-day. Kemp v. Derrett, 8 Camp. 510—Ellenborough.

If a landlord leases for seven years by parol, and agrees that the tenant shall enter at Lady-day and quit at Candlemas, though the lease is void by the Statute of Frauds as to the duration of the term, the tenant holds under the terms of the lease in other respects; and therefore the landlord can only put an end to the tenancy at Candlemas. Doe d. Rigge v. Bell, 5 T. R. 471.

Where a remainderman creates a new tenancy with a tenant in possession, under a void lease granted by a tenant for life, and receives rent on the days of payment mentioned in the lease, a notice to quit must expire on the day of entry under the original demise. Roe d. Jordan v. Ward, 1 H. Bl. 97. S. P., Doe d. Collins v. Walker, 7 T. R. 478.

A party took possession of premises on the 1st August, and at the Michaelmas following paid the half-quarter's rent, and continued afterward to pay quarterly on the usual feast days:—Held, that a notice to quit at Michaelmas was sufficient, and that, although the landlord had at first given a notice, expiring within the half-quarter, it was not necessarily presumable thence that the tenancy was from year to year, commencing with the half-quarter. Savage v. Stapleton, 8 C. & P. 275—Park.

A notice to quit at Old Michaelmas, though given half a year before New Michaelmas, at which time the tenancy expired, is bad. Doe d. Spicer v. Lea, 11 East, 312.

A tenant held premises under a void agreement for a term of five years and a half from Michaelmas, 1823; before the expiration of the five years and a half, the parties entered into a negotiation for a future lease for seven, fourteen or twenty-one years, at an increased rent, in consideration of the landlord laying out money in improvements: no lease was ever executed, but the tenant continued in the occupation of the premises, paying the increased rent from Michaelmas, 1828, down to 1835:—Held, that a notice given at Lady-day to quit at Michaelmas, the period at which the tenancy originally commenced, was valid. Berry v. Lindsey, 4 Scott, N. R. 61; 3 M. & G. 498; 5 Jur. 1061.

By a written agreement the tenancy was to be "from year to year to Michaelmas next, at the yearly sum of 85*l.*, payable half-yearly, at Lady-day and Michaelmas, except the last half-year, which portion of the rent shall be paid on or before the 1st of August in that year, the tenant to dress the lands in the due course of husbandry, and to allow the landlord or incoming tenant in the last year to enter on the 1st of May to make fallows, the tenant to be allowed the use of barns for stacking and threshing the crops of the last year, until the 1st of May after the tenancy:—"Held, that the agreement did not create a tenancy for more than a year, and that notice to quit might be given, expiring at the end of the first year. Doe d. Plumber v. Nainby, 10 Q. B. 478; 11 Jur. 308; 16 L. J., Q. B. 303.

Demise for one year and six months certain from August 18th, at a rent payable at the usual quarter days; three calendar months' notice to be given on either side before determination of the tenancy. The tenant continued to occupy beyond the year and six months:—Held, that a three months' notice to quit, expiring on 18th August, was proper; and not a notice expiring at the end of a year from the termination of the year and six months. Doe d. Robinson v. Dobell, 1 Q. B. 806.

Premises were let from 19th April, 1841, at the yearly rent of 42*l.*, payable quarterly, the first payment of 7*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, to be made on 24th June, 1841, being the proportion down to that date; the tenant to hold and enjoy at that rent, until one of the parties should give the other six calendar months' notice to quit; the tenant to leave the premises in as good condition as at the date of the agreement:—Held, that notice might be given to quit at the expiration of any six months after 24th June, and that a notice on 24th June for 25th December, 1841, was good. Doe d. King v. Grafton, 18 Q. B. 496; 16 Jur. 833; 21 L. J., Q. B. 276.

A person entered as tenant under a written agreement, on the 7th of May, 1850, but paid no rent:—Held, that a six months' notice to quit, expiring on the 7th of May, 1851, was a good notice. Doe d. Cornwall v. Matthews, 11 C. B. 675.

An agreement to give six months' notice to quit means, prima facie, six lunar months, and cannot be explained to mean calendar months, by evidence of the usage of a particular estate. Rogers v. Hull Dock Company, 12 W. R. 1101; 11 L. T., N. S. 43; 34 L. J., Chanc. 165—V. C. W.

An agreement for a mining lease contained the following clause: The lessees to be at liberty at any time hereafter to determine this agreement, or the lease agreed to be granted, and to abandon the ironworks on giving to the lessor six months' notice in writing of their intention so to do. The lessees entered and paid rent under the agreement, but no lease was executed:—Held, that this being a mining lease, and looking at the whole contract and the surrounding circumstances, the lessees were entitled to determine the tenancy at any time by six months' notice, expiring six months after the delivery of the notice, without regard to the time of the commencement of the tenancy. Bridges v. Potts, 17 C. B., N. S. 314; 10 Jur.,

N. S. 1049; 33 L. J., C. P. 338; 11 L. T., N. S. 373.

A. held premises of B. as tenant for a year, and so on from year to year so long as C. should live, the tenancy commencing at Christmas, after the death of A. (C. being also dead). A.'s widow, by agreement with the landlord, continued to occupy the premises at the same rent, nothing being said about the commencement of her tenancy:—Held, that there was evidence enough to warrant the jury in assuming that the widow's tenancy was a mere continuation of the original tenancy of A., and therefore properly determined by a notice to expire at Christmas. Humphreys v. Franks, 18 C. B. 323.

Where a house and land are let together to be entered upon at different times, and it does not appear, from the terms of the demise, from what time the whole is to be taken as let together; it is a question of fact for the jury, which is the principal and which the accessorial subject of demise, in order for the judge to decide whether the notice to quit the whole was given in time. Doe d. Haapy v. Howard, 11 East, 498.

Under an agreement of demise, dated in January, of a dwelling-house, and other buildings, for the purpose of carrying on a manufacture, together with certain meadow, pasture, and bleaching grounds, water-courses, &c., for a term of twenty-five years, to commence as to the meadow ground from the 25th of December last; as to the pasture, from the 25th of March next; and as to the housing mills, and all the rest of the premises, from the 1st of May; reserving the first year's rent on the day of Pentecost, and the other half-year's rent at Martinmas:—Held, that the substantial subject of demise being the house and buildings for the purpose of the manufacture, which were to be entered on the 1st of May, that was the substantial time of entry to which a notice to quit ought to refer, and not to the 25th of December, when the incoming tenant had liberty of entering on the meadow, which was merely accessory to the other and principal subject of the demise; and consequently that a notice to quit served on the 28th of September (which would have been sufficient with reference even to the 25th of March, the day of entry on the pasture ground; the 29th of September being the correspondent half-yearly day of holding to the 25th of March), to quit at the expiration of the current year of holding, was sufficient. Doe d. Bradford v. Watkins, 7 East, 551; 3 Smith, 517.

Land and buildings were held by a yearly tenant, the land from 2d February to 2d February, the buildings from 1st May to 1st May. The landlord, on the 22d October, 1833, served the tenant with a notice to quit the land and buildings, "at the expiration of half a year from the delivery of this notice, or at such other time or times as your present year's holding of or in the said premises, or any part or parts thereof respectively, shall expire, after the expiration of half a year from the delivery of this notice."—Held, that, as to the lands, the notice was to be considered a notice to quit on 2d February, 1835, and that the landlord might recover both land and buildings after that day in ejectment. Doe d. Williams v. Smith, 5 A. & E. 350; 6 N. & M. 829; 2 H. & W. 176.

A tenant held a house and land from year to year, the land from 2d of February, the house, &c., from the 1st of May. On the 16th of February, 1838, a notice to quit was served on him, requiring him to quit and deliver up the farm at the end of his present year's holding:—Held, that this was a good notice to determine the tenancy of 1839; it not being shown on the part of the tenant, that the land was not the principal subject of the holding. Doe d. Kindersley v. Hughes, 7 M. & W. 139.

Where a tenant held a farm, as to the arable lands, from Candlemas, and as to the buildings and pastures, from May-day, and the rent was payable at Michaelmas and Lady-day, a notice to quit given six months from Lady-day, but not six months before Candlemas, was insufficient. Doe d. Grey De Wilton v. —, 2 East, 384.

But where, under an agreement by a tenant of a farm "to enter on the tillage land at Candlemas, and on the house and all other the premises at Lady-day following, and that when he left the farm he should quit the farm according to the times of entry as aforesaid," the rent was reserved half-yearly at Michaelmas and Lady-day:—Held, that a notice to quit, delivered half a year before Lady-day, but less than half a year before Candlemas, was good; the taking being in substance from Lady-day, with a privilege for the incoming tenant to enter on the arable land at Candlemas for the sake of plowing, &c. Doe d. Strickland v. Spence, 6 East, 120; 2 Smith, 255.

So, an agreement to take a farm, the arable land from Old Candlemas, the pasture from Old Lady-day, and the meadow from Old May-day, paying rent half yearly at Old Michaelmas and Lady-day, is substantially a taking of the whole from Old Lady-day, and a notice to quit delivered before Old Michaelmas is sufficient to determine the tenancy. Doe d. Daggett v. Snowden, 2 W. Bl. 1224.

Form of notice, writing or parol.]—A parol notice to quit by a tenant under a parol lease is sufficient. Timmins v. Rawlinson, 3 Burr. 1003; 1 W. Bl. 533. S. P., Doe d. Macartney v. Crick, 5 Esp. 106.

Though given by a person acting as steward of a corporation. Roe d. Rochester v. Pierce, 2 Camp. 96. See Smith v. Birmingham Gas Company, 1 A. & E. 520; 8 N. & M. 771.

What certainty is requisite; and construction of contents of notice, generally.] A notice dated 27th and served on the 28th September, requiring a tenant to quit "at Lady-day next, or at the end of his current year," must be understood to mean a six months' and not a two days' notice to quit. Doe d. Huntingtower v. Culliford, 4 D. & R. 249.

For the court will look to the intention of the parties, and where general language is used, which is open to doubt, they will intend if possible that the notice has a sensible meaning, and construe it accordingly; and in this case a two days' notice could not have been intended, because that would be no notice whatever. Id.

Notice to quit at the end and expiration of "the current year of your tenancy, which shall expire next after the end of one half-year from the date hereof," was held sufficient. Doe d. Phillips v. Butler, 2 Esp. 589—Kenyon.

A notice to quit on one of two days, as on Old or New Lady-day, is good, if served six months before the day on which the tenancy commenced. Doe d. Matthewson v. Wrightman, 4 Esp. 5—Kenyon.

A notice delivered to a tenant at Michaelmas, 1795, to quit "at Lady-day, which will be in the year 1795," was a good notice to quit on Lady-day, 1796. Doe d. Bedford v. Knightley, 7 T. R. 63; 1 Chit. 11.

A notice to quit on Lady-day is a good termination of a holding either from Lady-day old or Lady-day new style. Denn d. Willan v. Walker, Peake's Add. Cas. 104—Heath.

If a tenant from year to year holds from Old Michaelmas, a notice to quit at Michaelmas generally is good. Doe d. Hinde v. Vince, 2 Camp. 256—Macdonald. S. P., Doe v. Brookes, 2 Camp. 257, n.—Ellenborough. But see Doe d. Spicer v. Lea, 11 East, 312.

A notice to quit on St. Michaelmas-day is, primâ facie, a notice to quit at New Michaelmas; but, if the holding is from Michaelmas, it will be a sufficient notice to quit at that time. Doe d. Willis v. Perrin, 9 C. & P. 467—Parke.

But a notice to quit at Michaelmas generally will be held to mean Old Michaelmas, if the custom of the country is to hold from that time. Furley d. Canterbury v. Wood, 1 Esp. 198—Kenyon.

An indenture of lease contained a clause, that if the lessee should be desirous to put an end to the term at the end of the first fourteen years, and should leave, or give six calendar months' notice in writing, immediately preceding the end of the first fourteen years, then the demise should cease and determine. The lease commenced at Michaelmas, and in November of the fourteenth year of the term the lessee gave notice, in writing, that he should deliver up the premises on the 24th June next, agreeably to the covenants of the lease. The jury found that the lessor understood the notice to be to give up at the end of the fourteen years:—Held, that it was bad, as it varied from the proviso in the lease. Cadby v. Martinez, 3 P. & D. 386; 11 A. & E. 720.

Where, on a written agreement to demise from the following "Lady-day," a notice to quit "on the 6th April" is good, parol evidence being adduced to show that by "Lady-day" the parties meant "Old Lady-day." Denn d. Peters v. Hopkinson, 3 D. & R. 507.

A notice to quit, "or I shall insist upon double rent," is sufficiently certain to support an ejectment. Doe d. Matthews v. Jackson, 1 Dougl. 175.

A notice to quit at the end of the current year of tenancy, "on failure whereof, I shall require you to pay me double former rent or value for so long as you detain possession," is an unqualified notice, and does not give the tenant an option. Doe d. Lyster v. Goldwin, 1 G. & D. 463; 2 Q. B. 143.

Notice was given to a tenant from year to year, holding from Martinmas to Martinmas, to quit "on the 13th day of May next, or upon such other day or time as the current year for which you now hold will expire." The notice was dated and served on 21st October:—Held, bad. Doe d. Richmond (Mayor, &c.) v. Morphet, 7 Q. B. 577; 9 Jur. 776; 14 L. J., Q. B. 345.

Where a tenant is entitled to six months' notice, a notice to quit "at the expiration of the present year's tenancy" is sufficient, although it does not appear on the face of it that it was given six months before the period therein specified for quitting. Doe d. Gorst v. Timothy, 2 C. & K. 351—Rolfe.

Where a tenancy began on the 11th October, a notice served in June, 1840, requiring the tenant to quit "on the 11th of October now next ensuing, or such other day or time as your tenancy may expire," is a three months' notice to quit in October, 1840, and not a six months' notice to quit in October, 1841. Mills v. Goff, 14 M. & W. 72; 14 L. J., Exch. 240.

A notice to quit, served on the 26th of October, 1870, to determine a tenancy from year to year, which commenced on the 1st of May, 1868, required the tenant to give up possession on the 1st of May, 1871, "provided the tenancy originally commenced on the 1st of May, or, otherwise, at the end of the year of the tenancy which should expire next after the end of half a year from the date of the notice;" and, in January, 1872, the plaintiff brought an ejectment for the lands, claiming title from the 2d of May, 1871:—Held, that the notice was effectual to determine the tenancy on the 1st of November, 1871. Ash-town v. Larke, 6 Ir. R., C. L. 270—C. P.

Description of premises.]—A misdescription of the premises is not fatal, if they are otherwise sufficiently designated, so that the party to whom the notice has been given has not been misled. Doe d. Cox, 4 Esp. 185—Ellenborough.

But a notice to quit a part only of premises leased together is bad. Doe d. Rodd v. Archer, 14 East, 245.

Where a farm was leased for twenty-one years at a rent of 180*l.* per annum, consisting, as described in the lease, of the Town Barton, and its several parcels described by name, at the rent of 83*l.*; other closes named, at other rents of 5*l.*, 5*l.*, and 1*l.*; the Shippen Barton, and its several parcels, described by name, at 86*l.*; with a power reserved to either party to determine the lease at the end of fourteen years, on giving two years' previous notice:—Held, that a notice by the landlord to his tenant to quit "Town Barton, &c., agreeably to the terms of the covenant between us, on the expiration of the fourteenth year of your term," given in due time, was sufficient. Ib.

Where a house, lands, and tithes, are held under a parol demise at a joint rent, a notice to quit "the houses, lands, and premises, with the appurtenances," includes the tithes, and is sufficient to put an end to the tenancy. Doe d. Morgan v. Church, 8 Camp. 71—Lo Blanc.

In ejectment to recover a farm at II., the notice to quit described the premises to be at D., which was a distinct parish; but as it did not appear that the tenant was misled by the notice:—Held, that it was sufficient. Doe d. Armstrong v. Wilkinson, 4 P. & D. 823; 12 A. & E. 748; 1 A. & H. 39.

By whom notice should be given and signed; joint landlords and tenants.]—Where joint lessors are partners in trade, a notice to quit in the names of all, signed by one only, is valid. Doe d. Elliott v. Hulme, 2 M. & R. 483.

A notice to quit signed by one of several joint tenants on behalf of the others, is sufficient to determine a tenancy from year to year as to all. Doe d. Aslin v. Summersett, 1 B. & Ad. 135.

So a notice to quit, given by a person authorized by one of several lessors, joint tenants, determines the tenancy as to all. Doe d. Kindersley v. Hughes, 7 M. & W. 139.

A notice to quit by joint tenants to a tenant from year to year must be signed by all the joint tenants at the time it is served, if it is given by one of them; but if such notice is given by an agent on behalf of the joint tenants, it is sufficient, if his authority is subsequently recognized by all of them. Goodtitle d. King v. Woodward, 3 B. & A. 680. S. P., Doe d. Jolliffe v. Sybourn, 2 Esp. 877.

So, where there are three joint trustees of an estate, a notice to quit or discontinue the possession given by two is bad, even though given in the names of the three, and the third trustee afterwards adopts it, and joins in the ejectment. Right d. Fisher v. Cuthell, 5 East, 491; 2 Marsh. 83; 5 Esp. 149.

But if four joint tenants jointly demise from year to year, such of them as give notice to quit may recover their several shares in ejectment. Doe d. Wayman v. Chaplin, 3 Taunt. 120.

A., a brewer, demised a public-house to B., under an agreement that he should hold for one year certain, and that, after the expiration of that time, either party might put an end to the tenancy, by giving three months' notice to quit, the rent to be payable quarterly; the agreement contained no clause of re-entry. B. took possession, and paid rent to A., who at first gave him a receipt in his own name, and afterwards in the joint names of himself and two partners, who were interested with him in the brewery. After B. had been in possession for three years, A. gave him a notice to quit in his own name alone:—Held, in ejectment, that A. might recover on his own demise, although the latter receipts for rent were given in the names of himself and partners, and that no clause of re-entry was necessary in the agreement. Doe d. Green v. Baker, 2 Moore, 189; 8 Taunt. 241.

Four trustees were joint landlords of a house under a deed of trust; and notice to quit was served upon the tenant, but signed by three of them only:—Held, that the notice was sufficient to put an end to the connection between all the parties as landlord and tenant. Alford v. Vickery, Car. & M. 280—Coleridge. See Doe d. Kindersley v. Hughes, 7 M. & W. 139.

Notice to quit to a tenant of lands originally devised to the rector and churchwardens of a parish, and their successors in trust, signed by the rector and churchwardens, requiring him to deliver up the premises to the rector and churchwardens for the time being, is not sufficient. Doe d. Brooks v. Fairclough, 6 M. & S. 40.

—mortgagors and mortgagees.]—A notice to a tenant to quit was signed by the mortgagee after the mortgage of the reversion. A clause in the mortgage deed provided that if the interest was duly paid by the mortgagor the principal was not to be called in by the mortgagee until a period after the date of the notice. There was also a covenant for quiet enjoyment:—Held, that notwithstanding this clause the signature of the mortgagee to the notice was sufficient. Burton v. Dickenson, 17 L. T., N. S. 246—Blackburn.

A notice to quit signed by the mortgagor is sufficient to determine a tenancy created before the mortgage, when the tenant knew, previously to the service of the notice, that the mortgagor had a general authority from the mortgagee to determine tenancies. Stackpools v. Parkinson, 8 Ir. R., C. L. 561—Exch.

A notice to quit, signed by the mortgagor, who had a general authority from the mortgagee to determine tenancies, is sufficient to determine a tenancy created before the mortgage, although the notice does not purport on the face of it to be on behalf of the mortgagee. Ib.

—agents, receivers, and collectors of rent, &c.]—A notice to quit must be such that the tenant may safely act on it at the time of receiving it; therefore a notice by an unauthorized agent cannot be made good by an adoption of it by the principal after the proper time for giving it. Doe d. Lyster v. Goldwin, 1 G. & D. 463; 2 Q. B. 143. S. P., Doe d. Mann v. Warblers, 10 B. & C. 626; 5 M. & R. 357.

A notice to quit, given by an agent in the names of A. and B., and also several other parties, is valid as a notice from A. and B. only. Doe d. Bailey v. Foster, 3 C. B. 215; 15 L. J., C. P. 203.

A notice to quit, given by an agent of the landlord to receive rents, is not sufficient, without a recognition by the landlord; the bringing of an action founded on the notice is not of itself a recognition. Doe d. Rhodes v. Robinson, 3 Bing. N. C. 677; 4 Scott, 396; 8 Hodges, 84; 1 Jur. 356.

In ejectment by a corporation against a tenant from year to year, a notice to quit given by the steward of the corporation is sufficient, without evidence that he had an authority under seal from the corporation for the purpose. Doe d. Rochester v. Pierce, 2 Camp. 96—Macdonald. And see Doe d. Plymouth (Mayor, &c.) v. Fillis, 2 Chit. 170.

A notice to quit given to a mere collector of rents is not good. Pearse v. Boulter, 2 F. & F. 133—Martin.

A receiver appointed by the Court of Chancery, with a general authority to let the lands to tenants from year to year, has also authority to determine such tenancies by a regular notice to quit. Doe d. Marsack v. Read, 12 East, 57.

A lease, dated October, 1825, to which the king was a party, was granted by the commissioners of his Majesty's woods and forests, containing a clause, that, if the commissioners for the time being should, at any time during the term, be minded or desirous to determine the demise, and of such their mind and desire should cause "one calendar month's notice in writing under their hands" to be given to the lessee, the lease, at the expiration of such notice, should cease, determine, and be absolutely void:—Held, that the lease was determined by a notice signed by two only out of three commissioners, by virtue of 10 Geo. 4, c. 50, s. 92. Coombes v. Dutton, 5 M. & W. 409.

In October, 1863, the trustees of G.'s marriage settlement purchased a farm, G. furnishing a portion of the purchase-money. From the time of the purchase G. assumed the entire control over the farm, and had for twenty-six years been allowed by the trustees to have the entire management of all the other settled estates. At the time of the purchase the defendant was yearly tenant of the farm to the vendor. G. negotiated with him as to the terms and continuance of the holding, and he treated with and considered G. as the legal owner:—Held, that G. had authority from the trustees to give the defendant notice to quit, and that a notice given in his own name, not purporting to be given as agent of the trustees, was valid. Jones v. Phipps, 9 B. & S. 761; 3 L. R., Q. B. 303; 37 L. J., Q. B. 173; 16 W. R. 1018; 18 L. T. N. S. 655.

An agent, being authorized in writing to manage lands in the name and on behalf of their owner, to perform, in his name, certain specified duties relating to them, which would require the agent's personal attendance, and also, in his name, to sign, serve and give notices and other documents necessary to be served upon or given to the tenants for the purpose of carrying into effect such management, served a notice to quit signed by him in his own name, but purporting to be served by him as such agent, and on behalf of the landlord:—Held, a sufficient notice to determine a yearly tenancy. Erne v. Armstrong, 6 Ir. R., C. L. 279; 20 W. R. 370—Exch.

To whom to be given.]—Where two tenants hold premises in common, notice to quit to one of them is sufficient to determine the tenancy. Doe d. Macartney v. Crick, 5 Esp. 196—Ellenborough.

At least it is evidence that the notice reached the other tenant who lived elsewhere. Doe d. Bradford v. Watkins, 7 East, 551; 3 Smith, 517.

But if, upon notice to quit given to a tenant, he gives notice to his under-tenants to quit at the same time, and upon the expiration of the notice he quits so much as is occupied by himself, but his under-tenants refuse to quit, an ejectment may still be maintained against him for so much as his under-tenants have not given up. Roe v. Wiggs, 2 N. R. 330.

A tenant from year to year underlet part of the premises, and then gave up to his landlord the part remaining in his own possession, without either receiving a regular notice to quit the whole, or giving notice to quit to his sub-lessee, or even surrendering that part in the name of the whole (supposing that anything short of a regular notice to quit from the landlord to his immediate tenant would, after such sub-letting, have determined the tenancy in the whole):—Held, that the landlord could not entitle himself to recover against the sub-lessee (there being no privity of contract between them), upon giving half a year's notice to quit in his own name, and not in the name of his first lessee: for, as to the part so underlet, the original tenancy still continued undetermined. Pleasant d. Hutton v. Benson, 14 East, 234.

Where A. has been tenant of certain premises, and upon his leaving them B. took possession:—Held, that, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, it might be presumed that he came in as assignee of A., although he never paid rent, and that notice to quit was rightly given to B. Doe d. Morris v. Williams, 6 B. & C. 41; 9 D. & R. 30.

Direction and address.]—It is not necessary that a notice to quit should be directed to the tenant in possession, if proved to have been delivered to him at the proper time. Doe d. Matthewson v. Wrightman, 4 Esp. 5—Kenyon.

And if a notice to quit is directed to the tenant by a wrong Christian name, and he keeps it and does not send it back, it is a waiver of the misdirection, and the lessor may recover on it if there was no other tenant of the name. Doe v. Spiller, 6 Esp. 70—Ellenborough.

Service.]—A notice to quit is sufficiently served upon a tenant if it can be shown that it came to his hands before the six months previously to the expiration of his year of holding, though the notice had been served only by having been put under the door of the tenant's house. Alford v. Vickery, Car. & M. 280—Coleridge.

The regular service of a notice to quit held to have been properly inferred from the circumstance of the tenant's speaking about "the notice to quit which he had received," and engaging a valuer to value his rights as an outgoing tenant. Doe d. Simpson v. Hall, 5 M. & G. 795.

If a notice to quit is served on the tenant's wife at the house, accompanied by a statement, that the paper delivered is "a notice of discharge," it is sufficient. Smith v. Clark, 9 D. P. C. 202; 1 W. P. C. 44. S. P., Pultney v. Shelton, 5 Ves. 261. n.

The mere leaving of a notice to quit at the tenant's house with a servant, without further proof of its having been explained to the servant, or that it came to the tenant's hands, is not sufficient. Doe d. Buroos v. Lucas, 5 Esp. 153—Ellenborough.

But where the tenant of an estate holden by the year has a dwelling-house at another place, the delivery of a notice to quit to his servant at the dwelling-house is strong presumptive evidence that the master received the notice. Jones d. Griffiths v. Marsh, 4 T. R. 404.

An ejectment against the bailiffs pro tempore of a corporation, cannot be maintained by proving payment of rent for the premises, by the annual predecessors of the defendants, in the same office for several years before, and service of the notice to quit on the defendants, the existing bailiffs; for the payment of such rent by the bailiffs in succession is merely evidence of a tenancy in the corporation. But, at any rate, such tenancy may be determined by a notice to the corporation to quit, served on its officers. Doe d. Carlisle v. Woodman, 8 East, 237.

Delivery of a notice to quit to the servant is sufficient, though the tenant might not have been informed of it till within the half-year after its expiration, especially as the servant might have been called, but was not. Doe d. Neville v. Dunbar, M. & M. 10—Abbott.

A notice to quit, served upon Thomas Mitchell, the servant of John Mitchell, instead of upon John Mitchell, although the latter afterwards acknowledged having seen the notice, and referred to the mistake, is not sufficient. Doe v. Mitchell, 1 Jur. 705.

A notice to quit is good, though given on a Sunday. Sangster v. Noy, 16 L. T., N. S. 157—Sir Eardley Wilmot, C. C. J.

The service of a notice to quit, made at the house of the tenant upon a person whose duty it would be to deliver the notice to the tenant, is sufficient to sustain ejectment, although in fact the notice was never delivered to the tenant. Tanham v. Nicholson, 5 L. R., H. L.

Cas. 561; 6 Ir. R., C. L. 188; reversing Nicholson v. Tanham, 18 W. R. 523; 4 Ir. R., C. L. 185—Q. B.

The presumption in such a case is that it did reach the tenant himself. Id.

In such a case the question is not whether the servant performed his duty in delivering it to his master, but whether the servant was to be considered as the agent of the master to receive the notice. If he was, the service of the notice will effectually bind the master. Id.

The fact that the agent who received the notice destroyed it would liberate entirely the person who delivered the notice, but would not liberate the person whose agent had received and destroyed it. Id.

When there has been service of notice to quit left at the tenant's house with a servant of the tenant, such a fact is more than presumptive evidence of a service on the tenant. The landlord's right would otherwise be controlled by something to which the landlord was an utter stranger. Id.

But even if only presumptive evidence of the service, the evidence to rebut it must be proof of the fact that the notice did not come to the knowledge of the tenant at all. Id.

T. lived in a house where his two sons and his daughter also resided. T. was imbecile. The house was managed by his daughter, the farming business by his two sons. A notice to quit, addressed to the father, was served at the house by delivery to the daughter. She put it on the dresser in the kitchen, and afterwards burnt it. One of the sons knew of its existence, but was not shown to have known its exact terms, though he was aware of its nature:—Held, that this was a service sufficient to entitle the landlord to maintain ejectment against the father. Id.

A tenant from year to year died intestate, and, no administration being taken out, his widow continued in possession and paid the rent; the landlord served a notice to quit on her, and, on its expiration, he, with her assent, entered into an agreement with a new tenant for letting the premises, in pursuance of which the new tenant entered and paid rent; subsequently a son of the deceased tenant took out administration to him, and brought an ejectment as administrator to recover possession:—Held, that the service of the notice to quit on the widow, the person in possession, was sufficient, in the absence of a legal personal representative of the deceased tenant, to determine the tenancy which had been in him, and was effectual for such determination even as against the legal personal representative subsequently raised, and that therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to recover possession. Sweeney v. Sweeney, 10 Ir. R., C. L. 375—Exch.

Proof of notice.]—A notice to quit, in writing, signed by the party giving it, and attested by a witness, before 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 20, which renders it unnecessary to call the attesting witness in such a case, must have been proved by calling that witness, or his absence must have been accounted for; proof that it was served on the tenant, that he read it, and did not object to it, was not sufficient. Doe d. Sykes v. Durnford, 2 M. & S. 63.

Where it was the usual course of practice in an attorney's office for the clerks to serve notices to quit on tenants, and to indorse on duplicates of such notice the fact and time of such service; and, on one occasion, the attorney himself prepared a notice to quit to serve on the tenant, took it out with him, together with two others prepared at the same time, and returned to his office in the evening, having indorsed on the duplicate of each notice a memorandum of his having delivered it to the tenant; and two of them were proved to have been delivered by him on that occasion:—Held, on the trial of an ejectment, after the attorney's death, that the indorsement so made by him was admissible to prove the service of the third notice. Doe d. Pattenhall v. Turford, 3 B. & Ad. 890.

In an ejectment against a weekly tenant, the notice proved was, to quit on Wednesday, the 4th August. The witness, who was called to prove that Wednesday was the expiration of the current week of the tenancy, said "that he guessed" the defendant came in "about Tuesday or Wednesday, but had no recollection which."—Held, insufficient. Doe d. Finlayson v. Bayley, 5 C. & P. 67—Tindal.

Notice to quit may be proved by a duplicate or an examined copy, without any notice having been given to produce the original. Doe d. Fleming v. Somerton, 7 Q. B. 58; 9 Jur. 775; 14 L. J., Q. B. 210.

A person who was employed to serve notices to quit, and whose duty it was to inform his employer of their service, was sent with a notice to serve on R. C., and on his return he signed a memorandum, "29th September, served R. C." It turned out, in fact, that he had served, not R. C., but W. C., his father. It was proposed to show that he stated this fact to his employer on his return, but the memorandum having been prepared beforehand, was not altered:—Held, that this evidence was not admissible after his death, as it was not made in the course of business or in discharge of a duty. Stapylton v. Clough, 2 El. & Bl. 933; 2 C. L. R. 266; 18 Jur. 60; 23 L. J., Q. B. 5.

The custom of the country is not admissible to prove that a notice to quit, served on the 5th of April, is a good notice to quit by reason of the tenancy being a Michaelmas tenancy, but it must be proved by direct evidence that such is the case. Hogg v. Norris, 2 F. & F. 246—Erle.

Between nine and ten o'clock on the 25th March, a tenant put into a post-office in London a letter, containing a notice to quit on the following Michaelmas, and addressed to the place of business of his landlord's agent. The agent was at his place until between six and seven o'clock in the evening, and did not receive the letter, but found it on the following morning:—Held, a sufficient notice to determine the tenancy, the jury having found that the letter was delivered on the 25th of March, after the agent had left his place of business. Papillon v. Brunton, 5 H. & N. 518; 29 L. J., Exch. 265.

Effect of notice in evidence, and upon rights of parties.—A notice by the owner of premises, requiring a tenant in possession "to leave the premises he then rented of the owner at Lady-day next," is not conclusive evidence of a demise from a testator to the party in possession. Doe d. Wilcockson v. Lynch, 2 Chit. 683. And see Bishop v. Howard, 3 D. & R. 298; 2 B. & C. 100.

A notice to quit is not prima facie evidence of the period of the year when the tenancy commenced. Doe d. Ash v. Calvert, 2 Camp. 387—Ellenborough.

A notice was given on the 23d March, by a landlord to his tenant, to quit at the expiration of the current year; a declaration in ejectment, laying the demise on the 1st November, was on the 16th January following served upon the tenant, who at the time made no objection to the notice to quit, but said he should go out as soon as he could fit himself:—Held, to be prima facie evidence that the tenancy commenced at Michaelmas, and was determined before the day of the demise. Doe d. Baker v. Wombell, 2 Camp. 559—Ellenborough.

So, if the notice to quit is served personally on the tenant in possession, and he makes no objection to it, it is prima facie evidence to be left to the jury, that the tenancy commenced at the season of the year when the notice to quit expires. Doe d. Clarges v. Forster, 13 East, 405. S. P., Thomas d. Jones v. Thomas, 2 Camp. 647.

A notice desiring the tenant to "quit the premises which you hold under me, your term therein having long since expired," does not recognize a subsisting tenancy from year to year subsequent to the term, but is a mere demand of possession. Doe d. Godsell v. Inglis, 8 Taunt. 54.

If a tenant disputes the time when his tenancy commences, and that his notice to quit does not correspond with it, it is incumbent on him, and not on the lessor, to show the true time of the commencement of the tenancy. Doe d. Matthewson v. Wrightman, 4 Esp. 5—Kenyon.

Where a tenant, on being applied to respecting the commencement of his holding, informs the party that it begins on a certain day, and notice to quit on that day is given at a subsequent time, he will be bound by the information he so gave, and not be permitted to show, that in fact it began at a different time. Doe d. Eyre v. Lambly, 2 Esp. 635—Kenyon.

A remainder-man received rent from the lessee of a void lease, and having given notice to quit, conveyed the property by virtue of a power to A.:—Held, that in ejectment the purchaser might take advantage of the notice given by the remainder-man. Doe d. Egremont v. Hellings, 6 Jur. 821—Q. B.

Notice to quit was given, and it expired at Lady-day, 1840; the tenant held on till Lady-day, 1841; but since the former period there had been no payment of rent, nor any other overt act to show that a new tenancy was created. The landlord distrained for rent due at Lady-day, 1841:—Held, that the distress was not justifiable. The landlord ought to have sued for use and occupation. Alford v. Vickery, Car. & M. 280—Coleridge.

Lands were settled with a power to lease. A., the tenant for life under the settlement, made, in May, 1807, a lease which was not a good execution of the power, and received rent in conformity with the terms of the lease, by which the rent was payable on Lady-day, Midsummer, Michaelmas, and Christmas days. B., a succeeding tenant for life, also received rent in conformity with the terms, and afterwards, in conjunction with C., remainderman in tail expectant upon B.'s estate for life, settled the land to such uses as C. should appoint, and, in default of appointment, to C. for life, remainder to a trustee for C. for C.'s life, remainder to the right heirs of C. C. received rent before B.'s death, according to the terms of the lease; and, after B.'s death, gave notice to the lessee, on 21st March, 1838, to quit "on 20th of September-next, or at the expiration of the current year of your tenancy." On 19th of February, 1839, C. appointed to N. in fee:—Held, that, as between C. and the lessee, the notice was good, and determined the tenancy; and that N., at the expiration of the notice, might evict the lessee; for that, if N. held under the creator of the power of B., no notice to quit was necessary as against N., and if N. held under the appointer, C., he might take advantage of the notice at the expiration. Doe d. Egremont v. Forwood, 3 Q. B. 627.

A notice to quit was served during the pendency of an ejectment for non-payment of rent, in which judgment was subsequently entered and an habere executed; an order for restitution having been afterwards obtained by the tenant, an ejectment on the title was then brought, founded upon the notice to quit:—Held, that the notice to quit was not effectual to determine the tenancy. Hall v. Flanagan, 11 Ir. R., C. L. 470—Exch.

What amounts to waiver of benefit of notice; and effect of waiver.—If a landlord receives rent accrued due after the expiration of a notice to quit, it is a waiver of that notice. Goodright d. Charter v. Cordwent, 5 T. R. 219.

So, if he distrains for such rent. Souch d. Ward v. Willingale, 1 H. Bl. 811. See Jenner v. Clegg, 1 M. & Rob. 213.

But the mere acceptance of rent by a landlord, for occupation subsequently to the time when the tenant ought to have quitted according to the notice given him for that purpose, is not of itself a waiver on the part of the landlord of such notice, but matter of evidence only, to be left to the jury under the circumstances of the case. Doe d. Cheney v. Batten, Cowp. 428; 9 East, 314, n.

The receipt by an authorized agent of rent due at Michaelmas, is prima facie a waiver of a notice to quit at Midsummer. Doe d. Ash v. Calvert, 2 Camp. 387—Ellenborough.

But where rent is usually paid to a banker, if the banker, without any special authority, receives rent accruing after the expiration of a notice to quit, the notice is not thereby waived. Id.

A landlord gave a notice to quit different parts of a farm at different times, which the tenant neglected to do in part, in consequence of which the landlord commenced an ejectment; and before the last period mentioned in the notice had expired, the landlord, fearing that the witness, by whom he was to prove the notice, would die, gave another notice to quit at the respective times in the following year, but continued to proceed with his ejectment:—Held, the second notice was no waiver of the first. Doe d. Williams v. Humphreys, 2 East, 237.

And a second notice, delivered to a tenant after the expiration of a former notice, to quit on a subsequent day, or to pay double rent, is no waiver of such first notice, or of the double rent which has accrued under it. Messenger v. Armstrong, 1 T. R. 53.

If, after the expiration of a notice to quit, the landlord gives the tenant a fresh notice, that, unless he quits in fourteen days, he will be required to pay double value, the second notice is no waiver of the first. Doe d. Digby v. Steel, 3 Camp. 117—Ellenborough.

A landlord of premises, about to sell them, gave his tenant notice to quit on the 11th of October, 1806, but promised him not to turn him out unless they were sold; and not being sold till February, 1807, the tenant refused on demand to deliver up possession; and on ejectment brought:—Held, that the promise (which was performed) was no waiver of the notice, nor operated as a license to be on the premises otherwise than subject to the landlord's right of acting on such notice, if necessary; and therefore, that the tenant not having delivered up possession on demand after a sale, was a trespasser from the expiration of the notice to quit. Whiteacre d. Boulton v. Symonds, 10 East, 13.

In an action for rent of coal, the issue being whether or not the defendants, having given notice to quit, had afterwards waived the notice, and continued the tenancy, it was proved that, after the time fixed by the notice had expired, they continued for two months, working out certain portions of the coal, which, however, as they contended, it was usual for a tenant to take away on abandoning such a work:—Held, that it was for the jury to decide, on this issue, whether or not the defendants, in remaining for the two months, intended to waive the notice, and continue the tenancy. Jones v. Shears, 4 A. & E. 832; 6 N. & M. 428; 2 H. & W. 43.

No continuance of the tenancy is necessarily implied, from the mere fact of a tenant's continuing in possession after the expiration of a notice to quit given by such tenant. Id.

Where a tenant gave his landlord notice to quit at Michaelmas, 1835, and subsequently made an offer to remain another year, to which the agent of his landlord replied, that "H. (the landlord) has directed me to inform you that he could only consent to accept your offer of 420*l.* for the farm from Michaelmas next to Michaelmas, 1836, subject to the existing covenants, provided I could not find a tenant at the rent it appeared to be worth by the 1st of August;" the tenant then assented to these terms:—Held, that if the above amounted to a substantive agreement at all, it was an implied condition on the part of the tenant to allow any one wishing to take the farm to go over the land, and the tenant having refused to do so, the agreement fell to the ground, and the notice to quit at Michaelmas, 1835, remained good. Doe d. Hertford v. Hunt, 2 Gale, 102; 1 M. & W. 690.

Though payment and acceptance of rent accruing after the expiration of a notice to quit amount to a waiver of the notice, a demand of such rent does not necessarily operate as a waiver; and it is a question for the jury, and not for the court, whether, under the circumstances of the case, the notice has been waived. Blyth v. Bennett, 13 C. B. 178; 22 L. J., C. P. 79.

XV. RECOVERY OF POSSESSION.

1. Contracts and Provisos for giving up or re-taking Possession.

Implied terms.—There is an implied contract, in a parol demise for a term, on the part of the tenant to give up possession to the landlord at the expiration of the term, and the tenant is liable for a breach of such contract, where his sub-tenant holds on and so prevents the landlord obtaining possession. Henderson v. Squire, 10 B. & S. 183; 4 L. R., Q. B. 170; 38 L. J., Q. B. 73; 19 L. T., N. S. 601; 17 W. R. 519.

A parol demise was terminated, but the sub-tenant refusing to quit, the landlord brought an ejectment and recovered possession of the premises:—Held, that he could recover from his tenant the amount of rent lost by such holding on, and the costs of the ejectment. Id.

Covenants and provisos in leases, &c.]—

Lease of land for term of years, with a covenant by the lessee that if the lessor should be desirous during the term to take all or any part of the land for building thereon, it should be lawful for her to come into and enter upon all or any part, to make such buildings as she should think proper, and to do all necessary acts without interruption by the lessee, provided the lessor gave six months' notice of such intention, with a proviso also that the lease should be void for non-performance of covenants:—Held, that the lessor having agreed with a third person to the terms of a building contract, might give six months' notice of her intention to take the whole of the land for building, and at the expiration of that time, and after refusal by the tenant to deliver up possession, might bring ejectment. Doe d. Wilson v. Abel, 2 M. & S. 541.

A clause in an agreement to let land, that the lessor might take any part for building, on making a proportionate abatement in the rent and making good the fences, operates as a covenant, and not a defeasance of the estate, if there are no words giving him a right of re-entry. Doe d. Wilson v. Philips, 2 Bing. 13; 9 Moore, 46.

A lease of land by deed contained this clause. "Covenants to repair, payment, &c. Provided, nevertheless, that in case M." (the lessor) "shall at any time be desirous of having any part of the piece of land delivered up to him, and of such his desire shall give three calendar months' notice to C." (the lessee); "then, at the expiration of the notice, C. covenants peaceably to surrender up, and that M. shall and may take peaceable possession of such part or parts of the land as shall be mentioned in the notice, M. paying to C. a reasonable compensation in respect of the moneys which may have been laid out by C. in improving the condition of so much of the land as shall be so given up, and then and from thenceforth the rent reserved shall be reduced," &c. (in proportion to the land given up.) "and the remainder of the land shall be held by C. at such reduced rent, and M. shall have the same powers and remedies in all respects as if this lease had originally been granted at such reduced rent, and all the covenants, clauses, &c., shall be as valid for so much of the demised land as shall not be included in such notice, as if the reduced rent had been the original rent, and the land originally demised had been the land not included in such notice:"—Held, that under this proviso the lessor, giving notice, might resume all the demised land. Doe d. Gardner v. Kennard, 12 Q. B. 244; 12 Jur. 821.

The lessor served a notice requiring the lessee to give possession of the whole land at the end of three months, and adding, "I hereby offer and agree to allow you a reasonable compensation for any repairs which may have been done by you:"—Held, a sufficient offer of compensation under the proviso. Id.

Where a plaintiff had entered into possession of premises under an agreement, one clause of which was, that, if the rent should be in arrear for ten days, it should be lawful for A. and her agents immediately to enter upon and take possession of the premises and expel the plaintiff, as effectually as a sheriff might do under a writ of habere facias possessionem; and in case of such entry, and of any action being brought for the same by any person whomsoever, the defendants might plead leave and license in bar, and the agreement used as conclusive evidence of the leave and license of the plaintiff for the entry, trespasses, or other matters to be complained of in such action; and arrears of rent having become due, the defendants, as agents of A., entered and expelled the plaintiff from the premises:—Held, that this agreement was a conclusive answer under a plea of leave and license to an action for such entry and expulsion. Kavanagh v. Gudge, 7 M. & G. 316; 7 Scott, N. R. 1025; 1 D. & L. 928; 8 Jur. 362; 13 L. J., C. P. 99.

A. became tenant to B. of a colliery, and also of some farm land, at distinct rents. The lease contained numerous covenants as to the payment of the rents, and as to the management of each property. The term created was forty-two years, but the tenant was to have liberty to put an end to the term on giving eighteen months' notice before the expiration of the first eight years, or any subsequent three years. The proviso which gave the tenant this liberty, after describing the giving of the notice, contained these words: "Then and in such case (all arrears of rent being paid, and all and singular the covenants and agreements on the part of the lessees having been duly observed and performed), this lease and every clause and thing therein contained shall, at the expiration of the first eighth year, and thereafter at the expiration of any such third year, cease, determine and be utterly void. . . . But nevertheless, without prejudice to any claim or remedy which any of the parties may then be entitled to for breach of any of the covenants or agreements." The Exchequer held, that this proviso did not make the performance of all the covenants a condition precedent to the tenant's power to put an end to the lease. But the Exchequer Chamber held, that the proviso did make the performance of the covenants a condition precedent. The lords were equally divided, and so the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber was affirmed. Gray v. Friar, 4 H. L. Cas. 565; 18 Jur. 1036; S. C., in Exch. Cham., 5 Exch. 584; 15 Jur. 814.

A proviso in a lease, empowering the lessor to resume any portion of the demised land which might be required for the purpose of building, planting, accommodation or otherwise, will not enable the lessor to resume a portion of the land for the purpose of conveying it to a railway company discharged from the lease. Johnson v. Edgware, Highgate and London Railway Company, 35 L. J., Chanc. 822.

A lease contained a proviso empowering the lessor "upon giving three months' notice of his intention to resume any portion of the premises . . . to enter into such possession." The lessor subsequently conveyed by deed his reversion to the use of himself and another as tenants in common. Shortly afterwards the tenants in common served upon the lessees a notice of resumption of the whole of the lands:—Held, that the fact that a sum per acre, which was by the lease covenanted to be allowed as rebate upon resumption, would in the case of resumption of the whole of the lands exceed the rent per acre originally reserved, would not constitute evidence of an intention to resume part only of the entirety of the demised premises. Liddy v. Kennedy, 5 L. R., H. L. Cas. 134; 20 W. R. 150.

Held also, that actual re-entry was not necessary under such notice; that the severance of the reversion did not determine the right to resumption in pursuance of the proviso; and that service of the notice upon a servant living at the house of one of the lessees, the servant "promising to give it to him on his return home in a few days," was good service upon that lessee. Ib.

As to effect of provisos for forfeiture,—see this title, XIII., 1.

2. Holding-over; Damages, Double Rent or Double Value.

Rights and liabilities of tenant holding over; and actions for damages.—Where a lease expires, the tenant continues liable to the rent, unless he delivers up complete possession of the premises, or the landlord accepts another in his room. Harding v. Crethorn, 1 Esp. 57—Kenyon.

If a person has held under the terms of a lease, and holds over after the lease is at an end, he is bound by the terms of it, although no new bargain to that effect is entered into between the parties; but if he comes in as an under-tenant, before any lease was granted to the person of whom he took the premises, and that person afterwards takes a lease, if there is no evidence that he knew of the lease, it will be for the jury to say whether he is not an under-tenant, and not an assignee of the lease. Torriano v. Young, 6 C. & P. 8—Taunton.

If, after the expiration of a lease, containing a covenant by the tenant to keep the premises in repair, he verbally agrees to hold over, paying an additional rent, nothing more being expressed between the parties respecting the terms of the new tenancy, he is presumed to hold under the covenants of the former lease, as far as they are applicable to his new situation; and if the premises are afterwards burnt down by accidental fire, he is bound to rebuild them. Digby v. Atkinson, 4 Camp. 275—Ellenborough.

A tenant holding over after the expiration of a lease for years may be taken to hold upon any of the terms of such former lease which are consistent with a yearly tenancy; whether he does hold on any such terms or not, is a question for the jury on the facts proved. Lytt v. Griffiths, 17 Q. B. 505.

Where several persons, directors of a trades' union bank, took certain premises for a year, with a proviso, that the landlord, on one month's notice before the expiration thereof, would grant a lease of the premises; and the directors, before the expiration of eleven months, abandoned the directorship and their possession; before the year had expired, negotiations were entered into for a lease for another year between the landlord and the new directors, but which terminated without any decisive arrangement being entered into, the new directors having continued to occupy after the expiration of the year:—Held, that the original directors remained liable for the rent. Christie v. Tancred, 7 M. & W. 127; 1 H. & W. 50; 4 Jur. 1064.

A. was tenant to the plaintiff of premises which the plaintiff gave him notice to quit on the 11th of October, 1843. After the notice was given, the defendant agreed to take a lease of the premises from that day. Before that day, the defendant was, with the consent of the plaintiff, substituted for A. as tenant during the remainder of A.'s term. The plaintiff and the defendant could not agree as to the terms of the lease to be granted to the defendant; but the defendant continued to occupy the premises for half a year after the 11th of October:—Held, that after the 11th October, the defendant did not impliedly occupy, subject to the rent of the determined tenancy. Thetford (Mayer, &c.) v. Tyler, 8 Q. B. 95; 10 Jur. 68; 15 L. J., Q. B. 33.

A. and B. were tenants to C. for a term of three years. B. never occupied the premises, but A., on the expiration of the term, held over. No assent of B. to the holding over was proved. An action for use and occupation having been brought by C. against A. and B., in which A. suffered judgment by default, C. tendered in evidence a letter written by his agent to B. after the expiration of the term, in which he demanded rent alleged to be due subsequently to the term. No answer was returned to the letter:—Held, that, as one tenant cannot bind his co-tenant by holding over without his assent, and, as there was no evidence of B.'s assent, B. was not liable for the rent, and therefore the letter to him, although admissible, was not entitled to much weight. Draper v. Crofts, 15 M. & W. 106; 15 L. J., Exch. 92.

A lessee of a term underlet, and his under-tenant held over for a portion of a year after the expiration of the term against the will of the lessee, so that he could not give up possession to his lessor. During such holding over, the lessee distrained upon the under-tenant for rent previously due:—Held, that the lessee was liable for the period of the under-tenant's holding over, but not for the whole year's rent. Ibb v. Richardson, 1 P. & D. 618; 9 A. & E. 840.

The defendant was tenant to the plaintiff, who was owner of the equity of redemption, under a lease, whereby the defendant cove-nanted to deliver up to the plaintiff, at the expiration of the term, the premises and all fixtures therein. The term expired on the 1st of April, 1855, and on the 10th the plaintiff demanded possession, which was not given. On the 13th, the mortgagee gave notice to the defendant to pay the rent and deliver up the premises to him. The plaintiff sued the defendant for a breach of his covenant in not delivering up the fixtures:—Held, that the defendant was not estopped from setting up the title of the mortgagee, and that the plaintiff could not recover the value of the fixtures, but only the actual damages sustained by him in consequence of their detention from the 10th to the 13th of April. Watson v. Lane, 11 Exch. 769; 25 L. J., Exch. 101.

If a landlord, after giving a yearly tenant notice to quit at the end of his year, afterward agrees to let the premises to A. from the end of the year, and informs the tenant that he has done so, but the tenant nevertheless holds the premises over for another quarter, and, after being ejected, pays the landlord a quarter's rent for the extra quarter, the landlord is not prevented by the receipt of the rent from bringing an action against the tenant for the damages occasioned by his holding over, and in that action the landlord may recover as damages the amount of the ordinary damages which he has had to pay in an action brought against him by A., for not giving him possession at the time agreed on, and also the costs of such action. Bramley v. Chesterton, 2 C. B., N. S. 592; 3 Jur., N. S. 1104; 27 L. J., C. P. 23.

In an action for breach of an agreement between a tenant of S. and the plaintiff, that the tenant should deliver to the plaintiff the farm occupied by the former, "upon the terms and conditions of the agreement under which the said tenant held of S." it is not necessary to produce at the trial the lease by S. Wallis v. Littleh, 11 C. B., N. S. 369; 3 Jur., N. S. 745; 31 L. J., C. P. 100; 10 W. R. 192.

Where a lessee, after the expiration of his lease, remains in possession and pays rent, it is a question for the jury upon what terms his tenancy continues. Oakley v. Monck, 4 H. & C. 251; 1 L. R., Exch. 159; 35 L. J., Exch. 87; 14 W. R. 406; 14 L. T., N. S. 20—Exch. Cham.

A tenant for life granted a lease containing a covenant that he would, at the expiration of the term, pay and allow the lessee, a nurseryman, for all fruit trees and shrubs then on the premises which had been planted by him. At the expiration of the lease the lessee continued in possession, and paid rent, and upon the death of the tenant for life he paid the same rent to the remainder-man, who was not aware of the covenant in the lease:—Held, that there was no evidence for the jury that the tenancy continued upon the terms of the lease, so as to bind the remainder-man by the covenant. Id.

A tenant under a parol agreement, without any stipulation that he shall deliver up possession of the premises at the end of the term.

is nevertheless bound at law to deliver up complete possession. Where, therefore, a tenant, under such an agreement, has underlet a part of the premises, and at the determination of both tenancies the under-tenant holds over against the will of the tenant, the landlord can recover against the tenant as damages the value of the whole premises for the time he is kept out of possession, and the costs of ejecting the under-tenant. Henderson v. Squire, 4 L. R., Q. B. 170; 88 L. J., Q. B. 73; 17 W. R. 519; 19 L. T., N. S. 601.

By an agreement in writing, but not under seal, A. agreed to let and B. to hire on lease for twenty-one years a house on the following terms: the rent to be 55*l.* per annum; the lease to commence from the 25th of March next, and to contain an extract of the covenants in the original lease which A. is bound under; that the proposed lease shall not be sold, parted with, or any portion of the property under-let without the consent in writing of A. In the original lease were six covenants by the lessee, with a proviso for re-entry on the breach of any of them; but there was no covenant not to under-let without the consent of the landlord. B. entered and paid rent, and under-let the premises without the consent of A., who thereupon brought ejectment, and was nonsuited:—Held, that the nonsuit was right. B. held as tenant from year to year on such of the terms of the agreement as were applicable to that tenancy. The agreement incorporated the six covenants in the original lease, and the proviso for re-entry on the breach of any one of those covenants; but the agreement could not be read as applying the proviso for re-entry to the new clause as to not under-letting; and on mere words of agreement a condition could not be created. Crawley v. Price, 10 L. R., Q. B. 302; 23 W. R. 874; 83 L. T., N. S. 203.

A tenant for life of an estate for 1,000 years demised from year to year, with six months' notice to quit, lessee covenanting to repair. After the death of the tenant for life the co-executor assigned the reversion of the estate for 1,000 years. The lessee continued to pay rent to the assignees of the reversion, and gave six months' notice to quit:—Held, that this furnished evidence that the lessee held over upon the terms of the original agreement, and was bound by the covenant to repair. Wyatt v. Cole, 36 L. T., N. S. 613—C. P. Div.

Held, also that the executor of the tenant for life was properly joined as a plaintiff. Id.

The assignee of a lease for lives continued in possession for several months after its expiration, and paid a half-yearly gale of the reserved rent which subsequently accrued due; but there being a controversy as to the terms upon which he was permitted to remain in possession:—Held, that it ought to have been left to the jury to find what was the precise character of the assignee's possession after the expiration of the lease—whether as tenant from year to year upon the terms of the expired lease, or, subject to negotiations for the creation of a new tenancy at an increased rent. Caulfield v. Farr, 7 Ir. R., C. L. 460—C. P.

As to when a tenancy from year to year arises upon holding over by tenant,—see this title, XVI.

Double rent.—[By 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 18, in case any tenant or tenants shall give notice of his, her or their intention to quit the premises by him, her or them holden, at a time mentioned in such notice, and shall not accordingly deliver up the possession thereof at the time in such notice contained, then the said tenant or tenants, his, her or their executors or administrators, shall thenceforward pay to the landlord or landlords or lessor or lessors double the rent or sum which he, she or they should otherwise have paid, to be levied, sued for, and recovered at the same time and in the same manner as the single rent or sum before the giving such notice could be levied, sued for, or recovered; and such double rent or sum shall continue to be paid during all the time such tenant or tenants shall continue in possession as aforesaid.]

In an action for double rent, for holding over after notice, the jury may find for so much as the tenant appears to have over-held, without reference to the sum demanded, so that it is not more than that sum. Anon., Loft, 275.

Though a demise is for a certain time, a demand of possession and notice in writing are necessary to entitle the landlord to double rent or value; but such demand may be made above six weeks afterwards, if the landlord has done no act in the meantime to acknowledge the continuance of the tenancy; and if the tenant holds over, he will be entitled to double value from the time of such demand; but if the rent is reserved quarterly, and the demand is made in the middle of a quarter, the landlord cannot recover single rent for the antecedent fraction of such quarter. Colb v. Stokes, 8 East, 358. And see Lake v. Smith, 1 N. R. 174; and Wilkinson v. Colley, 5 Burr. 2694.

If a tenant from year to year gives his landlord notice that he will quit upon a contingency, and does not quit when the contingency happens, he is not liable for double rent. Farrance v. Elkington, 2 Camp. 591—Ellenborough.

The statute only applies to those cases where the tenant has the power of determining his tenancy by a notice, and where he has actually given a valid notice sufficient to determine such tenancy. Johnstone v. Huddleston, 7 D. & R. 411; 4 B. & C. 922.

A tenant who, after having given notice to quit, holds over for a year, paying double rent, may quit at the end of such year without fresh notice. Booth v. Macfarlane, 1 B. & Ad. 904.

If a landlord give notices to his tenant to quit at the expiration of the lease, and the tenant holds over, he is liable to double rent. Messenger v. Armstrong, 1 T. R. 53.

When a tenant holds over after the expiration of a notice to quit, the landlord is entitled to recover against him the reasonable damages and costs sustained by him in an action at the suit of a party to whom he had contracted to let the premises, but to whom the tenant's wrongful act had prevented him from delivering possession. Bramley v. Chesterton, 2 C. B., N. S. 592; 3 Jur., N. S. 1144; 27 L. J., C. P. 23.

Double value.—[By 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 1, in case any tenant or tenants for any term of life, lives or years, or other person or persons who are or shall come into possession of any lands, tenements or hereditaments, by, from, or under, or by collusion with such tenant or tenants, shall willfully hold over any lands, tenements or hereditaments, after the determination of such term or terms, and after demand made, and notice in writing given, for delivering the possession thereof by his or their landlords or lessors, or person or persons to whom the remainder or reversion of such lands, tenements or hereditaments shall belong, his or their agent or agents thereunto lawfully authorized, then and in such case such person or persons so holding over shall, for and during the time he, she and they shall so hold over, or keep the person or persons entitled out of possession of the said lands, tenements and hereditaments, pay to the person or persons so kept out of possession, their executors, administrators or assigns, at the rate of double the yearly value of the lands, tenements and hereditaments so detained, for so long a time as the same are detained, to be recovered in any court of record by action of debt, whereunto the defendant or defendants shall be obliged to give special bail, and against the recovery of which said penalty there shall be no relief in equity.]

The remedy for double value, conferred by this statute, against a tenant willfully holding over after the determination of the term, and after demand and notice in writing, is given only to the lessor or landlord, or to the person entitled to the reversion, and not to one to whom the landlord has granted a fresh lease, to commence from the expiration of the former term; such new lessee having no estate, but a mere interesse termini. Blatchford v. Cole, 5 C. B., N. S. 514; 5 Jur., N. S. 412; 28 L. J., C. P. 140.

One tenant in common may bring an action for the double value of his moiety. Cutting v. Derby, 2 W. Bl. 1077.

But tenants in common cannot sue jointly for double value for holding over, where there has been no joint demise. Wilkinson v. Hall, 1 Scott, 675; 1 Bing. N. C. 713; 1 Hodges, 170.

The administratrix of an executor cannot sue for the double value of lands held over, after notice to quit under a demise from the testator, without taking out administration de bonis non; even though the tenant has attorned to her. Tingrey v. Brown, 1 B. & P. 810.

In an action for double value the declaration stated, that the plaintiffs were seized in their demesne as of freehold in right of the plaintiff, Caroline, during her life, of a messuage held by the defendant as tenant to the plaintiffs for a year, terminable on the 11th of October, 1844, the reversion thereof belonging to the plaintiffs, in right of Caroline. That the plaintiffs, on the first of September, gave notice in writing and demanded of the defendant to deliver up possession of the premises to the plaintiffs on the 11th of October, which he refused to do. The defendant became tenant to Mr. H., one of the plaintiffs, for one year, from the 11th of October, 1843, to the 11th of October, 1844, of a house, farm, &c., at a certain rent, and occupied the same as tenant to him for that year. The contract for this tenancy was by parol, and was made by the defendant expressly with Mr. H. alone in his own right, and Mrs. H. was no party thereto. A demand and notice in writing for delivering up of the possession by the defendant were made and given by the agent of the plaintiffs. The defendant retained possession of the premises:—Held, that the two plaintiffs were not entitled to recover in this joint form of action, the defendant not being the tenant of the two plaintiffs, and the reversion not being in the two plaintiffs, but in the husband alone, and that neither the averment of the tenancy nor the words, "to the plaintiffs," in the allegation of the tenancy, could be rejected. Harcourt v. Wyman, 3 Exch. 817; 18 L. J., Exch. 453.

Where there was a demise to a wife, and notice to quit given to her, after which, but before the time it expired, she married:—Held, that it was not necessary to give a notice to the husband subsequent to the marriage, in order to support an action for double value. Lake v. Smith, 1 N. R. 174. And see Wilkinson v. Colley, 5 Burr. 2694.

An action for double value does not lie against a weekly tenant. The statute being penal, is to be construed strictly. Lloyd v. Rossee, 2 Camp. 453—Ellenborough.

Quære, whether a quarterly tenant, who willfully holds over after his tenancy is expired, is liable to pay double value to his landlord? Wilkinson v. Hall, 4 Scott, 301; 3 Bing. N. C. 508; 3 Hodges, 56.

A tenant, holding over the premises after his term has expired, is not within the penalty imposed by the statute, unless he holds over willfully and contumaciously, and with a consciousness that he has no right to do so. Swinfen v. Bacon, 6 H. & N. 184; 30 L. J., Exch. 33; 6 Jur., N. S. 1257; 9 W. R. 105; 3 L. T., N. S. 440; affirmed on appeal, 6 H. & N. 846; 7 Jur., N. S. 897; 30 L. J., Exch. 368; 9 W. R. 740; 5 L. T., N. S. 83—Exch. Cham.

Where, on the receipt of a notice to quit to two joint-tenants, one of whom only actually occupied the land, the other said "that he had nothing to do with the land:"—Held, that this statement was not admissible to show that a holding over after the expiration of the notice was not willful on the part of the latter. Hirst v. Horn, 6 M. & W. 303.

A notice to quit lands on a given day, "or at such time as your holding shall expire next after the expiration of half a year from the receipt of this notice," is a sufficient demand of possession, to render the tenant liable for holding over after the determination of the notice. Id.

In an action by a landlord against his tenant for double value, under 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 1, he must show a willful holding over by the tenant; and it is not enough to show that the premises were held over by a sub-tenant, without his assent or authority. Rands v. Clark, 19 W. R. 48—C. P.

After a landlord has recovered in ejectment against his tenant, he may maintain an action for double the yearly value of the premises, during the time the tenant held over after the expiration of the landlord's notice to quit. Soulaby v. Neeing, 9 East, 810.

Notice to quit under the statute may be previously to the expiration of the lease. Cutting v. Derby, 2 W. Bl. 1075.

A joint authority by mortgagor and mortgagee of premises to a person, to be the receiver, agent, and attorney of the mortgagors, to receive the rents until satisfaction of the mortgage, to bring actions in case of non-payment of rent, to give notices to quit, to bring ejectment in case of non-compliance, &c., as fully as the mortgagor might have done, is a sufficient authority to him to demand possession of the tenants, so as to make them liable in double value for holding over. Pools v. Warren, 8 N. & P. 693; 8 A. & E. 582; 3 Jur. 23.

An action for double value is not supported by a notice that the landlord requires the tenant to give up possession at twelve at noon, on, &c. (the day when the tenancy was determinable), at which time the landlord will attend to receive the keys and rent; and that in the event of the tenant not so surrendering, the landlord will demand 7s. daily rent (a rate more than double the original rate of rent), till he can obtain legal possession. For the requisition to deliver up the premises at noon is premature and insufficient, as a notice to determine the tenancy. Page v. More, 15 Q. B. 684.

Acceptance of single rent is a waiver of the double value. Doe d. Cheney v. Batten, Cowp. 243; 9 East, 314, n.

A landlord declared, first, for the double value, and secondly, for use and occupation. The tenant pleaded nil debet to the first, and a tender of the single rent before action to the second count, and paid the money into court, which the plaintiff took out before trial, and still proceeded: the court held, that this was no case for a nonsuit, upon the ground of such acceptance of the single rent being a waiver of the plaintiff's right to proceed for the double value; but that the case ought to have gone to the jury; and that the plaintiff's going on with the action, after taking the single rent out of court, was evidence to show that he did not mean to waive his claim for the double value, but to make it pro tanto. Ityal v. Rich, 10 East, 48.

It is not necessary, in order that the tenant may avail himself of a waiver of the double value on the part of the landlord, that such waiver should be specially pleaded. Raulinson v. Marriott, 16 L. T., N. S. 207—Mellor.

An action for double value may be brought in a county court. Wickham v. Lee, 12 Q. B. 521; 12 Jur. 628; 18 L. J., Q. B. 21.

An owner of a woolen mill and steam-engine let a room in the mill, together with a supply of power from the steam-engine, by means of a revolving shaft in the room:—Held, in an action against the tenant, for holding over after the expiration of a notice to quit, that, in estimating the double value, the value of the power supplied could not be included. Robinson v. Learoyd, 7 M. & W. 48.

8. Re-entry by Landlord.

When landlord may re-enter, without action.—If a tenant quits without any intention of returning, the landlord may enter without bringing ejectment. Lacey v. Lear, Peake's Add. Cas. 210—Alvanley. And see Willbore v. Rainsforth, 8 B. & C. 6; 2 M. & R. 185.

Where a tenant of a house, after a regular notice to quit had been given him, abandoned the premises, locked up the door, and left only a few articles of furniture therein; and the landlord afterwards, in his absence, and when no person was in the house, broke open the door and took possession:—Held, that he was justified in so doing, as he had a legal right of entry. Turner v. Meymott, 7 Moore, 574; 1 Bing. 158. And see Taunton v. Castor, 7 T. R. 431.

If a tenancy of a house is determined, and the tenant has promised to leave on a particular day, but afterwards refused to do so, the landlord is not justified in putting the tenant's wife by force out of the house, and putting the tenant's furniture into the street; but if the tenancy is determined, and the tenant and his family are gone away, and the house locked up, no one being in possession, the landlord will be justified in breaking into the house and obtaining possession. Hillary v. Gay, 6 C. & P. 284—Lyndhurst.

If a landlord is lawfully on his tenant's premises for the purpose of making a distress, he may put up a bill in the window for the purpose of letting them, without thereby making himself liable as a trespasser. Skidmore v. Booth, 6 C. & P. 777—Tindal.

Where a tenant remains in apartments after the expiration of his term, the landlord is not justified in forcibly asserting his right to the possession by expelling him. Newton v. Harland, 1 Scott, N. R. 473; 1 M. & G. 644; 2 Jur. 350.

Who may re-enter.—[By 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 3, when the reversion upon a lease is covered, and the rent or other reservation is legally apportioned, the assignee of each part of the reversion shall, in respect of the apportioned rent or other reservation allotted or belonging to him, have and be entitled to the benefit of all conditions or powers of re-entry for non-payment of the original rent or other reservation, in like manner as if such conditions or powers had been reserved to him as incident to his part of the reservation in respect of the apportioned rent or other reservation allotted or belonging to him.]

A lessor who has demised his whole interest, subject to a right of re-entry on breach of a condition, may enter on the condition being broken, though he has no reversion. Doe d. Freeman v. Bateman, 2 B. & A. 168.

B. bequeathed leasehold premises to trustees, on trust to permit and suffer his wife to receive the rents during her life. Afterwards, the surviving trustee and the widow granted a lease of the premises, the rent to be paid to the widow, and the lessor to have a power of re-entry upon non-payment of rent; the lease disclosed the title of the widow, who, after the death of the trustee, entered on the premises:—Held, that being a stranger to the legal estate, the power of re-entry could not be reserved to her, and that the lease operated as a lease by the trustee, and a confirmation by the widow. Doe d. Barker v. Goldsmith, 2 C. & J. 674; 2 Tyr. 710.

A house was demised, habendum, for twenty-one years from March 25th, 1809, paying rent on certain days, of which March 25th was one. The estate, of which the house formed part, had been devised by the landlord to trustees, to receive the rents and apply them to certain purposes. After the landlord's death, and before the trusts were completely executed, and during the tenancy, the reversion was sold. For a year after this sale the purchasers received the rents, but, during the subsequent years, from Christmas, 1817, to Lady-day, 1830, they were received by the trustees. The trusts were completely executed in 1821. On March 25th, 1830, the lessee came to the house (no one being therein), gave the keys to the trustees, and departed. The trustees entered, and the purchasers, who had been present at the above proceedings, and had come to take possession, entered also, but were put back by the trustees, and the latter remained on the premises:—Held, that if the lessee's term had expired, the reversioners' entry would have been good, notwithstanding the entry of the trustees; but that the term, under the lease, did not expire till the end of March 25th, 1830. Ackland v. Lutley, 9 A. & E. 879; 1 P. & D. 636.

By a lease by a mortgagee and the executrix of the mortgagor, the mortgagee demised, and the executrix of the mortgagor demised and confirmed:—Held, that a re-entry under a power reserved for that purpose "to them or either of them," inured to vest the former estate, and to give the legal estate to the mortgagee. Doe d. Barney v. Adams, 2 Tyr. 289; 2 C. & J. 232.

In an agreement between A. and B., not under seal, expressed to be made "in consideration of the rents and covenants to be reserved and contained in the lease agreed to be granted," it was provided that as soon as B. should have executed certain specified repairs, A. would lease certain premises to him for thirty-five years from a day passed, at a yearly rent, such lease to contain certain covenants on the part of B. as to rent and other matters, and also all other usual and proper covenants, and especially a proviso for re-entry for non-payment of rent or non-performance of covenants; and until the lease should be granted, A. should have the same powers and remedies for recovering and enforcing payment of the rent and performance of the covenants, as fully as if the lease had been actually granted, the repairs to be completed by a given day. Then followed this proviso: "Provided always, that if the rent should be in arrear, or if B. should make default in the observance and performance of the covenants and conditions, then, and in either of the cases, it shall be lawful for B. to enter the premises, and the same to have again and enjoy as in his former estate, and B. and all other occupiers thereof to remove, and thenceforth these presents and everything herein contained, shall cease and be void." B. was let into the premises, and paid rent. The repairs not having been done by the time agreed on:—Held, that A. was entitled to re-enter. Hayne v. Cummings, 16 C. B., N. S. 421; 10 Jur., N. S. 773; 10 L. T., N. S. 341.

Necessity of demand of rent before re-entry for non-payment; and what demand is sufficient.—Where a landlord has a right to re-enter for non-payment of rent, he cannot recover in ejectment at common law, unless he demands the rent on the day when it becomes due; nor under 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 2, if there is a sufficient distress on the premises. Doe d. Forster v. Wandlass, 7 T. R. 117.

A demand of rent due from the lessee to the lessor, though made of a stranger, if made upon the land, is a sufficient demand, and need not be general to sustain ejectment for a forfeiture for non-payment of rent, being lawfully demanded. Doe d. Brook v. Brydges, 2 D. & R. 29.

Where a lease contained a proviso that if the rent was in arrear for twenty-one days, the lessor might re-enter, although no legal or formal demand should be made:—Held, that the rent having been in arrear for twenty-one days, the lessor might maintain ejectment without actual re-entry or demanding the rent. Doe d. Harris v. Masters, 4 D. & R. 45; 2 B. & C. 490. And see Rede v. Farr, 6 M. & S. 121.

In ejectment to recover premises for non-payment of rent, under the usual proviso for re-entry on non-payment for twenty-one days, it appeared that the rent was payable quarterly, and that a demand of more than one quarter's rent was made on the twenty-first day at one o'clock:—Held, that only one quarter's rent should have been demanded, and that at sunset. Doe d. Wheeldon v. Paul, 3 C. & P. 613—Tenterden.

Upon a lease reserving rent payable quarterly, with a proviso, that, if the rent is in arrear twenty-one days next after the day of payment, being lawfully demanded, the lessor may re-enter:—Held, that five quarters being in arrear, and no sufficient distress on the premises, the lessor might re-enter without a demand. Doe d. Scholefield v. Alexander, 2 M. & S. 525; 8 Camp. 516.

A lease for years contained a covenant to pay rent, and a proviso for re-entry on non-payment of rent, the rent "being first lawfully demanded." The property being vacant, the landlord asked for payment of rent from the person liable to pay it, and not receiving it, re-entered:—Held, that there had been a sufficient demand, and that the lease was effectually determined. Manier v. Dix, 8 De G., M. & G. 703; 3 Jur., N. S. 252.

By a lease, rent was payable on the usual quarter days, provided that if the rent should be in arrear for twenty-eight days after any of the days appointed for payment after the same had been lawfully demanded, it should be lawful for the lessor to re-enter and take possession if necessary without bringing an ejectment. The rent being unpaid:—Held, that a demand made on the premises at half-past ten o'clock on the morning of the last day was not sufficient to entitle the lessor to re-enter without action. Acocks v. Phillips, 5 H. & N. 183.

A tenant for a definite term of years does not forfeit his term by orally refusing, upon demand of the rent made by his landlord, to pay the rent, and claiming the fee as his own. Doe d. Graves v. Wells, 10 A. & E. 427; 2 P. & D. 396; 8 Jur. 820.

A lease contained the following clause: "And it shall be lawful for the lessor, her executors, &c., to call on tenant for quarterly payment of rent, or, if otherwise, as now accepted, at Michaelmas and Lady-day, as a matter of favor, with a quarter remaining in hand, and, if not paid in twenty days after, rent as stated, and 10% of increased rent for breaking up land by acre, then the tenant shall be liable to have the rent due recovered by sale and distress, or to enter on the premises for the same till it be fully satisfied."—Held, first, that the clause might be understood as reserving a right of entry, upon non-payment of rent, to hold the premises till the arrears were paid. Doe d. Drake v. Bowditch, 8 Q. B. 973; 10 Jur. 637; 15 L. J., Q. B. 266.

Held, secondly, that under the clause the lessor could not enter without the common-law formalities, the 4 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 2, applying only where there is a right of re-entry by which the lease is avoided. Ib.

An agreement of tenancy contained the following clause: this agreement is entered into upon the express condition that, if the tenant shall make default in payment of the rent, or any part thereof, within twenty-one days after the same shall become due, being demanded, it shall be lawful for the landlord, without giving any notice to quit, and without any other warrant, authority, or proceedings, to re-enter:—Held, that, to entitle the landlord to avail himself of the right of re-entry, the rent must be in arrear twenty-one days, and a demand (but without the formalities of a common-law demand of payment) be then made. Phillips v. Bridge, 9 L. R., C. P. 48; 43 L. J., C. P. 13.

Operation and effect of re-entry; and how pleaded.—C. rented a farm under the plaintiff, his term in which expired on the 1st February, 1838. On the 2d February, the plaintiff's agent demanded possession of the land; but C. refused to quit unless paid for certain improvements. The plaintiff thereupon brought an ejectment, and obtained actual possession on the 16th July:—Held, that the demand of possession on the 2d February gave the plaintiff such a constructive possession as to enable him to maintain trespass against a third person for coming on the land and carrying off the crops. Hey v. Moorhouse, 8 Scott, 156; 6 Bing. N. C. 52.

Where a right of entry accrues by forfeiture, and several forfeitures of the same kind have happened, though the landlord has not availed himself of them, if he pleads his right of entry in trespass brought against him by his tenant, he must set out the specific forfeiture on which he grounds such right. Kavanagh v. Gudge, 6 Scott, N. R. 508; 5 M. & G. 726; 7 Jur. 352; 12 L. J., C. P. 258.

To an action for rent, the defendant pleaded a plea to the further maintenance of the action, setting out an indenture, by which premises were demised by S. to the plaintiff, with a power of re-entry in favor of S., in case of non-performance by the plaintiff of the covenants contained therein; that, before the rent accrued due, the plaintiff broke one of such covenants; and that, by means of the premises, the estate and interest of the plaintiff in the premises became forfeited, and that, by reason and in consequence of the forfeiture, S. brought an ejectment. The plea set out the proceedings and judgment in ejectment given after the commencement of the action, and that the defendant afterwards, on being required to do so, attorned tenant to S., and paid him the rent:—Held, a good answer to the further maintenance. Franklin v. Carter, 3 D. & L. 213; 1 C. B. 750; 9 Jur. 874; 14 L. J., C. P. 241.

When a lessor re-enters on a forfeiture the rights of under-lessees are gone, but where a lessor accepts a surrender from a lessee the rights of the under-lessees remain, although the lessee was at the time liable to forfeiture. Great Western Railway Company v. Smith, 3 L. R., Ch. Div. 235—C. A.

As to ejectment by landlord against tenant, —see EJECTMENT.

4. Summary Proceedings.

To recover possession when premises vacant.]—[By 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 16, after reciting that landlords are often great sufferers by tenants running away in arrear, and not only suffering the demised premises to lie uncultivated, without any distress thereon, whereby their landlords or lessors might be satisfied for the rent-arrear, but also refusing to deliver up the possession of the demised premises, whereby the landlords are put to the expense and delay of recovering in ejectment, it is enacted, that if any tenant holding any lands, tenements or hereditaments, at a rack-rent, or where the rent reserved shall be full three-fourths of the yearly value of the demised premises, who shall be in arrear for one year's rent, shall desert the premises, and leave the same uncultivated or unoccupied, so as no sufficient distress can be had to countervail the arrears of rent, it shall and may be lawful to and for two or more justices of the peace, of the county, riding, division, or place (having no interest in the demised premises), at the request of the lessor or landlord, lessors or landlords, or his, her or their bailiff or receiver, to go upon and view the same, and to affix or cause to be affixed, on the most notorious part of the premises, notice in writing, what day (at the distance of fourteen days at least) they will return to take a second view thereof;

And if, upon such second view, the tenant, or some person on his or her behalf, shall not appear and pay the rent in arrear, or there shall not be sufficient distress upon the premises, then the said justices may put the landlord or landlords, lessor or lessors, into the possession of the said demised premises; and the lease thereof to such tenants, as to any demise therein contained only, shall from thenceforth become void.

By s. 17, it is provided, that such proceedings of the said justices shall be examinable in a summary way, by the next justices or justices of assize of the respective counties in which such lands or premises lie; and if they lie in the city of London or county of Middlesex, by the judges of the Court of King's Bench or Common Pleas; and if in the counties palatine of Chester, Lancaster, or Durham, then before the judges thereof, who are hereby respectively empowered to order restitution to be made to such tenant, together with his or her expenses and costs, to be paid by the lessor or landlord, lessors or landlords, if they shall see cause for the same: and in case they shall affirm the act of the said justices, to award costs not exceeding 5*l.* for the frivolous appeal.

The 57 Geo. 3, c. 52, reciting the expediency of extending this remedy, enacts, that the provision is to apply to those who shall hold lands and tenements or hereditaments, under any demise in agreement, either written or verbal, and although no right or power of re-entry be reserved or given to the landlord in case of non-payment of rent, who shall be in arrear for one half-year's rent instead of one year.

By 3 & 4 Vict. c. 84, s. 13, none of the police magistrates within the metropolitan police district shall be required to go upon any deserted lands, tenements or hereditaments, for the purpose of viewing the same or affixing any notices thereon, or of putting the landlord or landlords, lessor or lessors, into the possession thereof, under the provisions of 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, or 57 Geo. 3, c. 52, but in every case within the metropolitan police district, in which by the said acts or either of them two justices are authorized to put the landlord or lessor into the possession of such deserted premises, it shall be lawful for one of the police magistrates, upon the request of the lessor or landlord, or his or her bailiff or receiver, made in open court, and upon proof given to the satisfaction of such magistrate of the arrear of rent and desertion of the premises by the tenant as aforesaid, to issue his warrant, directed to one of the constables of the metropolitan police force, requiring him to go upon and view the premises, and to affix thereon the like notices as under the said acts or either of them are required to be affixed by two justices of the peace; and upon the return of the warrant, and upon proof being given to the satisfaction of the magistrate before whom the warrant shall be returned that it has been duly executed, and that neither the tenant nor any person on his or her behalf has appeared and paid the rent in arrear, and that there is not sufficient distress upon the premises, it shall be lawful for such magistrate to issue his warrant to a constable of the metropolitan police force, requiring him to put the landlord or lessor into possession of the premises; and every constable to whom any such warrant shall be directed shall duly execute and return the same, subject to the provisions of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, as to the execution of warrants directed to constables of the metropolitan police force; and upon the execution of such second warrant the lease of the premises to such tenant, as to any demise therein contained only, shall thenceforth be void.]

The 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 16, does not require the request or complaint to be made upon oath. Basten v. Carew, 5 D. & R. 558; 3 B. & C. 649.

When a tenant ceased to reside on the premises for several months, and left them without any furniture, or sufficient other property to answer the year's rent:—Held, that the landlord might properly proceed under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 16, to recover the possession, although he knew where the tenant then was, and although the justices found a servant of the tenant on the premises when they first went to view the same. Pilton, Ex parte, 1 B. & A. 869.

It is not necessary to state, in the record of the magistrates' proceedings, that the landlord has a right of re-entry; although such a right must exist in order to entitle the party to proceed under this statute. Id.

Where magistrates had given possession of a dwelling-house, as deserted and unoccupied, and the judges of assize had, on appeal, made an order for restitution with costs, and the tenant brought an action for the eviction against the magistrates, the constable, and the landlord:—Held, that the record of the proceedings before the magistrates was an answer to the action on behalf of all the defendants. Askroft v. Dourne, 3 B. & Ad. 684.

The judges of assize, on appeal, under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 17, against an order of two magistrates giving possession to a landlord, made an order for restitution of the premises to the tenant. The order of the judges was not directed to any person:—Held, that a mandamus could not issue commanding the two justices to make restitution. Ileg. v. Trail, 13 A. & E. 761; 4 P. & D. 325; 1 Arn. & H. 78.

Proceedings of magistrates for restitution of premises under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, are, by s. 17, to be reviewed (in England) by the judges on the circuits, acting as individual justices. An allegation in an indictment, that an order was made by A. and B., the justices of assize for Surrey, is not supported by a certificate of such an order, being signed by the deputy clerk of assize in the same way as an order of court. Ileg. v. Sewell, 8 Q. B. 161; 10 Jur., 48; 15 L. J., Q. B. 49.

An order for restitution, though not directed to any person, will justify the sheriff in acting under it. Id.

Where magistrates, from a doubt of their jurisdiction, decline giving possession of premises to a landlord, the court will not compel them, by mandamus, to do so. Fulder, Ex parte, 3 D. P. C. 535; 4 Jur. 507—B. C.—Williams.

On an appeal to the judges of assize against the decision of justices giving possession of premises under the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, ss. 16 and 17, requiring that the notice, after the first view by justices, should state what day, at the distance of fourteen clear days at the least, they should return to take a second view:—Held, that fourteen clear days must elapse between the first and second views, and as that period had not elapsed, the proceedings were set aside as irregular, and restitution ordered. Creak v. Brighton (Justices), 1 F. & F. 110—Erle and Williams.

The power to view and give possession to a landlord of deserted premises, created by 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 16, extended by 57 Geo. 3, c. 52, and varied as to its mode of execution by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 84, s. 13, is not, by any of the provisions of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 84, or by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 34, vested in the lord mayor or one alderman sitting in the justice-room at the Mansion-house or Guildhall, so as to enable them to exercise the power in the same manner as a police magistrate sitting in one of the metropolitan police courts may, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 84, s. 13, exercise it. Edwards v. Hodges, 15 C. B. 477; 1 Jur., N. S. 91; 3 C. L. R. 472; 24 L. J., M. C. 81.

To recover possession of small tenements.]—[The 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, reciting the expediency of providing for the more speedy and effectual recovery of the possession of premises unjustly held over after the determination of the tenancy, enacts, that when and so soon as the term or interest of the tenant of any house, land, or other corporeal hereditaments held by him at will or for any term not exceeding seven years, either without being liable to the payment of any rent or at a rent not exceeding the rate of 20l. a year, and upon which no fine shall have been reserved or made payable, shall have ended or shall have been duly determined by a legal notice to quit or otherwise, and such tenant, or (if such tenant do not actually occupy the premises, or only occupy a part thereof) any person by whom the same or any part thereof shall be then actually occupied, shall neglect or refuse to quit and deliver up possession of the premises or of such part thereof respectively, it shall be lawful for the landlord of the said premises or his agent to cause the person so neglecting or refusing to quit and deliver up possession to be served as directed by s. 2, with a written notice, in the form set forth in the schedule to the act, signed by the landlord or his agent, of his intention to proceed to recover possession under the authority and according to the mode prescribed in the act;

And if the tenant or occupier shall not thereupon appear at the time and place appointed, and show to the satisfaction of the justices hereinafter mentioned reasonable cause why possession should not be given under the provisions of the act, and shall still neglect or refuse to deliver up possession of the premises, or of such part thereof of which he is then in possession, to the said landlord or his agent, it shall be lawful for such landlord or agent to give to such justices proof of the holding and of the end or other determination of the tenancy, with the time or manner thereof, and where the title of the landlord has accrued since the letting of the premises, the right by which he claims the possession;

And upon proof of service of the notice, and of the neglect or refusal of the tenant or occupier, as the case may be, it shall be lawful for the justices acting for the district, division, or place within which the said premises or any part thereof shall be situate, in petty sessions assembled, or any two of them, to issue a warrant under their hands and seals to the constables and peace officers of the district, division, or place within which the said premises or any part thereof shall be situate, commanding them, within a period to be therein named, not less than twenty-one nor more than thirty clear days from the date of such warrant, to enter (by force if needful) into the premises, and give possession of the same to such landlord or agent:

Provided always, that entry upon any such warrant shall not be made on a Sunday, Good Friday, or Christmas-day, or at any time except between the hours of nine in the morning and four in the afternoon:

Provided also, that nothing in this act contained shall be deemed to protect any person on whose application and to whom any such warrant shall be granted from any action which may be brought against him by any such tenant or occupier, for or in respect of such entry and taking possession, where such person had not at the time of granting the same lawful right to the possession of the same premises:

Provided also, that nothing herein contained shall affect any rights to which any person may be entitled as outgoing tenant by the custom of the country or otherwise.]

In an action for breaking and entering the plaintiff's dwelling house, F. and M. justified the trespasses; the former, as owner in fee, the latter, as his servant. Plea, also, by the latter, not guilty. Replication, nolle prosequi as to F., but alleging an estoppel as to M., for that M. demised the premises to the plaintiff, as a yearly tenant, at 16*l.* a year, which demise was in force and undetermined. Rejoinder by M., denying that the tenancy of the plaintiff was in full force and undetermined. At the trial, the demise from M. to the plaintiff was proved, and it was shown that a notice to quit, signed in the names of both F. and M., was given to the plaintiff; and that subsequently a complaint was made to the magistrates under the above statute, which was signed by F., "as for himself and M., either or both of them." Upon that complaint, a warrant was issued, which contained the name of only one complainant, under which the trespass was committed, and the plaintiff ejected; the key of the house was taken to M. by the officer; the jury having found for the plaintiff:—Held, that the authority of M., as servant of F., was sufficiently denied by the replication of estoppel, and that trespass was the proper remedy. Darlington v. Pritchard, 2 D., N. S. 604; 5 Scott, N. R. 10; 4 M. & G. 783; 7 Jur. 677; 12 L. J. 34. See also Edmunds v. Pinniger, 7 Q. B. 558; 14 L. J., Q. B. 273.

In an action against a landlord for irregularity in the mode of proceeding to obtain possession of premises under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, where the landlord, at the time of applying for the justices' warrant, was entitled to the possession of the premises, there must be special damage arising from the irregularity complained of. Delaney v. Fox, 2 Jur., N. S. 1253; 26 L. J., C. P. 5; 1 C. B., N. S. 166.

A declaration, setting out an informal notice of the landlord's intention to apply to the justices for a warrant to obtain possession under the act, and alleging the issuing and execution of such warrant, and that under the authority of such proceedings the plaintiff was forcibly expelled from the dwelling-house of which he was tenant, does not sufficiently show special damage arising from the informality of the notice. Ib.

A landlord is not liable in trespass for ejecting a tenant where the tenancy has expired, although he may have taken proceedings against him under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74. Ib.

Upon an application under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, by a landlord, to justices of petty sessions, to recover possession of premises held over by his tenant after the expiration of the term, the tenancy having been proved to the satisfaction of the justices, and its legal determination, and the tenant's refusal to quit, the jurisdiction of the justices to give the landlord possession is not ousted by the tenant's setting up the title of a third person. Rees v. Davies, 4 C. B., N. S. 56.

XVI. TENANCIES FROM YEAR TO YEAR.

1. How created.

Intent of parties.]—In order to create a tenancy from year to year, there must be some circumstances to show an intention to do so, such as payment of rent quarterly, or some other aliquot part of a year. Doe d. Hall v. Wood, 14 M. & W. 682; 9 Jur. 1060, 15 L. J., Exch. 41.

When created by agreement for letting, payment and receipt of rent, &c.]—Payment and receipt of rent are evidence against a corporation of a demise by them from year to year. Doe d. Pennington v. Tanriere, 12 Q. B. 998; 13 Jur. 119; 18 L. J., Q. B. 49.

A renting of a tenement for an indefinite period, and an occupation for a year, constitute a tenancy for a year. Reg. v. St. Giles, 33 L. J., M. C. 3; 12 W. R. 125; 9 L. T., N. S. 411; 4 B. & S. 509.

A. agreed to let, and B. agreed to hire, a piece of land, containing about fifteen acres, at an annual surface rent; B. to use the land for the purpose of making bricks, and to pay A. 8*s.* per 1,000 on the quantity made; the quantity made to be not less than 4,000,000 annually; the ground not to be excavated beyond the depth of eight feet without the permission of A. in writing. A portion of the land being required by a railway company, B.'s claim for compensation in respect of his estate and interest in the land so required, and for deterioration to the residue was referred to arbitration. The umpire found that the interest of B. under this agreement was that of merely a tenant from year to year; and he assessed the compensation upon that basis:—Held, that the construction put by the umpire upon the agreement was correct; and that evidence tending to show that by the custom of the brick-making trade brick land is never hired from year to year was properly rejected. Stroud, In re, 8 C. B. 502; 16 L. J., C. P. 117.

An agreement dated the 19th April, 1841, by which part of a dwelling-house was let, stipulated for "the yearly rent of 42*l.*, payable quarterly, the first payment of 7*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.*, to be made on the 24th June next, being the proportion of rent from the 19th April, 1841, to that date." And, further, that the tenant should hold and enjoy the possession "until one of the parties should give to the other six calendar months' notice in writing to quit at the expiration of any such notice:"—Held, that a yearly tenancy was not created, and that a six months' notice to quit expiring on the 5th December, was a sufficient notice to put an end to the tenancy. Doe d. King v. Grafton, 10 Jur. 833; 21 L. J., Q. B. 276.

H. and R., by indenture of February, 1805, granted and leased premises unto and to the use of J. H., his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, forever, yielding and paying therefor a yearly rent. Proviso for re-entry on non-payment of rent. Covenant by J. H. for payment of the rent, for repairs and for insurance:—Held, that in the absence of proof that the premises were, at the date of the instrument, in the occupation of tenants, and the expressed intention of the parties precluding the presumption of livery of seisin, the instrument could not operate as a conveyance of the fee subject to a rent-charge, but only to create a tenancy from year to year; Doe d. Robertson v. Gardiner, 12 C. B. 319; 21 L. J., C. P. 222.

A., under a mortgage deed, agreed to become tenant to B. of the premises demised, "henceforth, at the will and pleasure of B., at the yearly rent of 25*l.* 4*s.* payable quarterly:—Held, that this was a tenancy at will; and that occupation for two years, and payment of rent under the agreement, did not make B. tenant from year to year. Doe d. Bastow v. Coz, 11 Q. B. 122; 17 L. J., Q. B. 3.

The plaintiff was in possession of land under a lease granted to him by B., who had previously mortgaged the premises. The transferees of the mortgage (being cognizant of the lease) gave the plaintiff notice of the mortgage, and required him to pay them all rent due, and to become due, in respect of the mortgaged premises:—Held, that this was evidence whence the jury might infer a contract of tenancy for a year, as between the mortgagees and the plaintiff. Brown v. Storey, 1 M. & G. 117; 1 Scott, N. R. 9; 4 Jur. 319.

A. agreed to let, and B. to take, a cottage for three months from 29th December, at a yearly rent of 18*l.* the first monthly payment to be made 2*th* January, free from all taxes, which were to be paid by the tenant, and allowed out of the rent, three months' notice to quit from either party to be sufficient. B. occupied for eighteen months:—Held, a tenancy from year to year, so as to give the tenant a settlement under 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, s. 2. Reg. v. Willenden, 9 Jur., N. S. 874; 32 L. J. M. C. 109; 11 W. R. 425; 7 L. T., N. S. 784; 3 B. & S. 593.

A party hired apartments upon the terms contained in the following memorandum:—"I hereby agree (according to our conversation of last evening) to pay you for the occupation of your first floor, furnished, from Monday, March 4, 1839, to September the 4th, 1839, the sum of 52*l.* 10*s.* I also agree either to occupy the said rooms from the 4th September to the 4th December, furnished, on the same terms, viz., 26*l.* 5*s.*, for the three months, or take them unfurnished at the rate of 84*l.* per annum:—Held, that this did not create a tenancy from year to year, but was properly declared on as an agreement to take the apartments furnished for six months; and for a further period of three months, furnished or unfurnished, at the option of the tenant. Atherstone v. Bostock, 2 Scott, N. R. 637; 2 M. & G. 511; 1 Drink. 90.

Payment of rent is prima facie evidence of a tenancy from year to year. Doe d. Pritchard v. Dodd, 2 N. & M. 838; 5 B. & Ad. 689.

Secus, semble, where the existence of such a tenancy would imply that devisees in trust had conveyed away their estate, while a duty still remained to be performed by them. Id.

The presumption is completely rebutted by showing that the rent paid and reserved is of the same amount as the rent reserved in an unexpired lease, the premises being at the time of such payment of rent of much greater value than the rent so reserved and so paid. Id.

A tenant at will, at a yearly rent, is a tenant from year to year. Pope v. Garland, 4 Y. & C. 394.

The defendant hired of the plaintiff apartments in his dwelling-house at a fixed rent, payable half-yearly, and entered into possession at Michaelmas, 1822. At Lady-day, 1823, he paid one half-year's rent, and at the Midsummer following gave up possession without having given any notice to quit; but at Michaelmas, in the same year, he paid another half year's rent. At Lady-day, 1824, the plaintiff demanded a third half-year's rent, which the defendant refused to pay:—Held, that a tenancy from year to year could not be inferred from these facts. Wilson v. Abbott, 4 D. & R. 693; 3 B. & C. 88.

A. agreed by parol to sell an estate to B. on certain terms, provided B. would continue C. his tenant, not for one year only, but from year to year (C. having just before been let into possession, under a contract for the purchase of the estate, which he had failed to pay for in time, and had therefore forfeited his deposit); and A. thereupon agreed to take C.'s forfeited deposit as part of the purchase-money. A. and B. afterwards reduced their agreement respecting the purchase into writing, in which no notice was taken of the stipulation concerning C.'s tenancy:—yet held, that this stipulation being collateral to the written agreement, was binding upon B.; and that the agreement operated as a tenancy for two years certain at least, though no rent was then mentioned, but was to be settled afterwards; and that the tenancy could not be put an end to at the end of the first year, by six months' previous notice to quit. Dunn d. Juckling v. Cartwright, 4 East, 29.

By articles of agreement under seal, the plaintiff covenanted with E. that he would from time to time, when and so soon as he should have erected and covered in one or more of the messuages agreed to be built by him upon land therein described, and agreed to be demised by indenture, demise, and lease unto E., his executors, administrators or assigns, the whole or such part or parts whereon one or more of the messuages or tenements should have been built for ninety-eight years from the 29th of September then last (1852), at a certain yearly rent payable quarterly, the rents to be so apportioned that the yearly rent to be reserved on any such lease should not exceed one-sixth of the yearly value of the land and buildings demised, with a proviso, that if the yearly rent or rents to be reserved upon the lease or leases to be granted of any part or parts only of the land should amount to or make up the full yearly rent reserved, the remainder of the land, when built upon, should be demised at the yearly rent of a peppercorn only. The articles contained a covenant by E. with the plaintiff, to pay the rent agreed to be reserved, and to pay rates, to erect the messuages, and also a covenant that until the land and the buildings erected should be leased in execution of the covenant in that behalf, E., his executors, administrators or assigns would pay for the same the several yearly rents stipulated or agreed to be reserved in the leases to be granted to such persons, and in such manner and proportions and at such times as the same would be payable in case such leases were actually granted. There was also a proviso for re-entry by the plaintiff, in case the whole or any part of the yearly rent or rents thereby or by the leases to be granted should be behind or unpaid for twenty-one days. In 1854, E. assigned all his interest in the agreement to the defendant, who thereupon entered and occupied the land, erected certain buildings thereon, and paid the stipulated yearly sums, and then assigned to B.:—Held, that neither E. nor the defendant acquired any estate in the premises under the building agreement, nor was any tenancy from year to year created thereby, or by the occupation of the land, and payment of the stipulated rents. Camden v. Batterbury, 5 C. B., N. S. 808; 5 Jur., N. S. 627; 28 L. J., C. P. 187; affirmed on appeal, 7 C. B., N. S. 804; 5 Jur., N. S. 1405; 28 L. J., C. P. 335—Exch. Cham.

In ejectment the plaintiff proved that S. was the tenant of the premises when he became the owner, and had paid rent to him for many years; that she quitted, and was succeeded by H.; that N. succeeded H. and paid rent. On the beginning of September, 1858, the defendant and N. severally called on the plaintiff and asked if he would accept the defendant as tenant. On each occasion the plaintiff said he would. On the 7th of September the defendant took possession, and in October of the same year paid the rent to Michaelmas, 1858, for which the plaintiff gave a receipt as for rent due from N. The plaintiff received the rent at Christmas, 1858, and gave a receipt for it to the defendant as for rent due from him. In March, 1859, the plaintiff gave to the defendant notice to quit at Michaelmas, or otherwise at the end of the year of the tenancy, which should expire after the end of one half-year from the time of his being served with that notice. On the 17th of December, 1859, the plaintiff's agent served a notice on the defendant to quit at Midsummer. The defendant said the plaintiff might have the house if he paid the valuation of the fixtures and good-will:—Held, that it was a question for the jury and not for the judge, to be determined by a consideration of all the facts, at which time the tenancy commenced; that there was evidence of a tenancy ending at Michaelmas, and that it was a misdirection to withdraw from the jury all the facts, except the conduct of the defendant when the notice to quit at Midsummer was served on him. Walker v. Godd, 6 H. & N. 594.

In December, 1819, the testator's father was tenant of a farm belonging to the plaintiff until the following Lady-day. The plaintiff's steward, in the month of December, proposed to let the farm, and read from a printed paper the terms of letting. The testator was present, and assented to those terms, agreeing to succeed his father at Lady-day, but no writing was signed. He did then enter, and continued tenant till his death, since which his executors occupied and paid rent. At the foot of the printed paper of terms was written a memorandum, not signed by either party, but by the attorney of the plaintiff, who was present at the time of the letting. This memorandum commenced in the following terms:—"A. B., as agent of the plaintiff, agreed to let, and C. D. agreed to take," and went on to state the farm, rent, and when payable; that the term was for one year certain from Lady-day next, and so from year to year, until a due notice to quit was given:—Held, that this agreement, followed by entry and payment of rent, created a tenancy, upon the terms contained in the printed paper and memorandum, and that they might be referred to by the attorney, as showing what the terms of the demise were. Bolton v. Tomlin, N. & P. 247; 5 A. & E. 856; 2 H. & W. 368.

The defendant being in possession, under a lease for fourteen years, assigned it, by way of mortgage, to the plaintiff, and then committed a forfeiture, for which the lessor brought ejectment. It was then agreed, at a meeting of all the parties, that judgment should be signed in the ejectment, that the lessor should grant a new lease to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff should grant an underlease to the defendant. The new lease was accordingly granted to the plaintiff, who then delivered the defendant the key, saying, "Go on as usual, pay the money" (due on mortgage), "and when you have done so you shall have an underlease;" no rent was ever paid:—Held, that this did not constitute the defendant a tenant from year to year. Doe d. Rogers v. Pullen, 3 Scott, 271; 2 Bing. N. C. 749; 2 Hodges, 89.

A. let land to B., on a tenancy from year to year, which B. continued to hold for several years after A's title had determined, paying rent to A., and he at length gave up possession on a notice to quit from A. Subsequently to the determination of A's title, but before B. had given up possession, B. underlet to C. C. paid rent to B. as long as B. continued to hold, but paid no rent to any one subsequently. In an ejectment by A. against C., after B. had given up possession:—Held, that it might be presumed, as a matter of fact, that a new tenancy, from year to year, had been commenced by B. after A's title had ceased, and that C., therefore, could not dispute A's title. London and North Western

W. being entitled to a leasehold interest, the term of which expired on 25th December, 1881, agreed in writing to let the same to K. at the yearly rent of 36*l.*, and agreed not to give K. notice to quit so long as he continued to pay the rent. A railway company agreed to purchase at the price of 470*l.* this interest. Described as the interest which K. held of W., for any term at tenant's option, but not beyond the term and interest of W. in the premises, which term will expire on the 25th December, 1881. The railway company subsequently objected that this was only a tenancy from year to year:—Held, that it was a tenancy for the remainder of the term, but that even if it was not, the company was bound by their agreement. King, In re, East London Railway Company, Ex parte, 21 W. R. 881; 20 L. T., N. S. 28*c*, 16 L. R., Eq. 521—V. C. M.

By an agreement under seal the premises in dispute were let for the term of one year, at a yearly rent, payable quarterly; and it was agreed that the lessee might determine the tenancy at the expiration of the term of one year by giving to the lessor three months' previous notice in writing, and that the lessee might continue tenant after the expiration of the term on punctual payment of the rent, free from disturbance or eviction by the lessor as long as the rent was punctually paid:—Held, that the estate created by the instrument and the payment of the rent was a tenancy from year to year, and that a clause declaring that such a tenancy was not to be determinable by a notice to quit was inconsistent with and repugnant to the nature of such estate; and that the lessor, who had served a notice to quit, was entitled to recover. Holmes v. Day, 8 Ir. R., C. L. 235—C. P.

An agreement in writing "to let from year to year, and for so long as the lessor has power to let," creates only a tenancy from year to year, which is terminable by a legal six months' notice to quit, though the power of the lessor to let the premises has not come to an end. Wood v. Beard, 46 L. J., Q. B. Div. 100; 2 L. R., Q. B. Div. 30; 35 L. T., N. S. 866—D. C. A.

As to what agreements create merely a tenancy at will,—see this title, XVII.

— by holding over after expiration of term.]

—If a tenant, whose lease is expired, is permitted to continue in possession pending a treaty for a further lease, he is not a tenant from year to year, but so strictly a tenant at will, that he may be turned out of possession without notice; but it is otherwise if he has continued in possession for a year, or rent has been received. Doe d. Hollingsworth v. Stennett, 2 Esp. 717—Kenyon.

Where a tenant holds over after the determination of a lease for years, and pays rent, he is tenant from year to year; but such tenancy is determinable at the end of the first year by a six months' notice to quit, expiring at the end of the first year; and the same is true of every other mere tenancy from year to year. Doe d. Clark v. Smarridge, 7 Q. B. 957; 9 Jur. 781; 14 L. J., Q. B. 327.

B. holding land of A. for a term of years, underlets part to C. from year to year. At the expiration of the term, B. agrees with A. to hold on from month to month. In the absence of any new agreement between B. and C., the tenancy from year to year continues. Peirse v. Shaw, 2 M. & R. 418.

When a lease for a term of years expired at Midsummer, 1821, and the tenant refused to relinquish possession, and insisted that he was entitled to a notice to quit, and continued in possession until Christmas following, and paid rent to that time, when he tendered the keys of the premises to his landlord, which the latter refused to accept:—Held, that such continuing in possession by the tenant did not amount to a holding over by him, but was conclusive evidence on presumption of law of a tenancy from year to year, which entitled the landlord to maintain an action for the use and occupation of the premises to recover the amount of a quarter's rent, which became due from Christmas, 1821, to Lady-day in the following year. Bishop v. Howard, 3 D. & R. 238; 2 B. & C. 100.

Where A. agreed to let B. premises for three years from Michaelmas, 1845, with a power for B., six months previous to the end of the term of three years, by a notice to that effect, to renew the tenancy for a further term of three years, and B. entered and paid rent, and gave notice of his desire to renew, but no further lease was granted:—Held, that a tenancy from year to year was granted, determinable during the three years by a notice to quit, but expiring at the end of that period by effluxion of time, when A. might recover in ejectment without giving any notice to quit. Doe d. Devenish v. Moffat, 15 Q. B. 257; 14 Jur. 935; 19 L. J., Q. B. 438.

Wherever a tenancy for years comes to an end either by efflux of time, or by the death or end of the title of the lessor, so that either he or his representative, or any independent owner of the demised hereditament, can without notice eject the tenant, and the person entitled to eject leaves the tenant in possession, and receives rent from him without explanation or stipulation, the person receiving the rent is to be assumed to have created a tenancy upon the terms on which the tenant held in the demise originally made to him; and the holding to be presumed is as of a tenancy from year to year according to the former holding of the tenant, and therefore commencing at a time corresponding to that from which he originally held. Kelly v. Patterson, 43 L. J., C. P. 320; 9 L. R., C. P. 681; 30 L. T., N. S. 842.

Premises had been let by a tenant in fee on a lease expiring at Midsummer, 1806: at that date the defendant was in occupation as tenant from year to year to the intermediate lessee, on a demise commencing at Michaelmas; the tenant in fee let the premises on a fresh lease to the plaintiff, commencing at Midsummer, 1866: the defendant continued in occupation and paid rent to the plaintiff. Notice to quit at Midsummer was given by the plaintiff to the defendant, who refused to leave the premises. The plaintiff having sued in ejectment:—Held, that the plaintiff having allowed the defendant to hold over, and having received rent as from year to year without explanation or stipulation, the inference was that there had been a tacit agreement that the defendant should hold from year to year according to the terms of his former tenancy, that is to say, from Michaelmas to Michaelmas; that the notice to quit at Midsummer was wrong; and that the plaintiff must be nonsuited. Ib.

An assignee of a lease for lives continued in possession for several months after its expiration, and paid a half-yearly gale of the reserved rent which subsequently accrued due; but there being a controversy as to the terms upon which he was permitted to remain in possession:—Held, that it ought to have been left to the jury to find what was the precise character of the assignee's possession after the expiration of the lease, whether as tenant from year to year upon the terms of the expired lease, or subject to negotiations for the creation of a new tenancy at an increased rent. Caulfield v. Farr, 7 Ir. R., C. L. 469—C. P.

As to effect of holding over by tenant, in general,—see this title, XV., 2.

—by occupying under change in terms of tenancy.]—A. granted an annuity to B. out of lands, with the usual powers of distress and entry, if the annuity should fall in arrear. A. afterwards granted a lease for years to the defendant. The annuity having fallen into arrear, B. distrained on the defendant, and informed him that he had a charge upon the premises under lease to him. The defendant thereupon signed an agreement “to attorn and become tenant to B.” and paid him rent:—Held, that this created a new tenancy from year to year between B. and the defendant, determinable on the payment of the arrears of the annuity, upon which the defendant's lease for years would revive. Doe d. Chaumer v. Boulter, 1 N. & P. 650; 6 A. & E. 675; W., W. & J. 333.

A tenant occupied land at the expiration of a lease, with the assent of the lessor, a parson; on the determination of this title, he continued to be tenant to his successor:—Held, that he was tenant under the terms of the original lease. Hutton v. Warren, 2 Gale, 71; 1 M. & W. 466.

If there is a written agreement between landlord and tenant, that for certain premises the tenant shall pay 170*l.* a year, and afterwards an arrangement is made by parol that 30*l.* a year shall be allowed out of it, because the landlord is to occupy a certain part for a time, such parol arrangement does not vary the agreement so as to reduce the rent payable under it, and therefore an allegation is correct which states it to be 170*l.* Hilton v. Goodhind, 2 C. & P. 591—Best.

Where there is a demise from year to year, so long as the parties shall please, and a new tenant takes possession, whose occupation as tenant the then reversioner omits to determine by a notice to quit, the pleadings may allege a new relation of landlord and tenant, on the original terms between the reversioner and the occupier. Buckworth v. Simpson, 1 C., M. & R. 834; 5 Tyr. 344; 1 Gale, 38.

A. demised to B. certain lands and premises for one year certain, and then from year to year so long as the parties should think proper, with power to determine it on giving notice to quit; and the lease contained various terms and conditions as to the management of the lands and repairing the buildings. The lessee died, and his executors entered into the occupation of the premises, and continued to occupy, and paid rent:—Held, that they were chargeable in their personal character upon the terms contained in the original demise; their continuing to occupy, and the landlord abstaining from giving notice to quit, raising an implied promise on their part to abide by the terms of the original contract. Ib.

A declaration stated that the defendant held lands under a lease from E. on certain terms, which were set forth; that the reversion came to the plaintiff; and that the defendant, in consideration of an alteration of the rent, promised to hold of the plaintiff on the same terms in all other respects; but that the defendant broke the terms. The plaintiff not having proved an express contract to hold of the defendant on the old terms:—Held, that he could not rely upon an implied contract arising from the old lease without putting it in evidence, and that the old lease could not be used as such evidence unless properly stamped. Wallis v. Broadbent, 4 A. & E. 877; 2 H. & W. 41.

Where there was a letting by two tenants in common at an entire rent, and one of them afterwards gave notice to the tenant to pay a moiety of the rent to him:—Held, that it was a question for the jury, whether there was a new contract, or only an alteration in the mode of receiving the rent. Powis v. Smith, 1 D. & R. 490; 5 B. & A. 850. And see Harrison v. Barnaby, 5 T. R. 246.

A., B. and C. (C. being an unmarried woman), entered into an agreement, dated 25th December, 1834, to take a house of the plaintiff for seven years at an annual rent, payable quarterly, under which they entered. In September, 1835, C. married; in December, A. became a bankrupt. In an action by the plaintiff against A., B., C. and C.'s husband, for two years' rent, claimed to be due under the demise contained in the agreement, the defendants proved payment, by A.'s assignees, of the quarter's rent due at Michaelmas, 1835, and an admission by the plaintiff of the receipt of the two previous quarters' rent, but it was not shown when, or by whom, these latter payments were made:—Held, that this was not evidence from which a new yearly tenancy, on the terms of the agreement, could be inferred, so as to charge all the defendants, inasmuch as it was not shown that the payments were made before C.'s marriage, or with her assent after her marriage. Doidge v. Bowers, 2 M. & W. 365; M. & H. 170.

By increasing the amount of rent payable by a tenant from year to year, a new tenancy is not necessarily created. Doe d. Monck v. Geekie, 5 Q. B. 841; 1 C. & K. 307; 8 Jur. 360; 13 L. J., Q. B. 239.

During a tenancy from year to year, at a given rent, the rent was raised at the termination of one of the years, by consent of the landlord and tenant:—Held, that, if this created a new contract, it must be a contract to hold on the old terms; and that a contract for a tenancy for two years certain from the time of raising the rent could not be inferred in default of additional evidence, even on the assumption that an original contract for a tenancy from year to year creates a tenancy for two years certain. Ib.

—by occupying under an agreement for a lease.]—Where A., having entered into an agreement for a lease, has been let into possession, and has paid the stipulated rent, a tenancy from year to year is created. Doe d. Westminster v. Smith, 1 M. & R. 137.

An occupation of premises, pending the execution of a lease, constitutes the relation of landlord and tenant, and will entitle the latter to sue the former upon a quantum valebat, although no distress for rent can be made. Humerton v. Steuk, 5 D. & R. 206; 2 B. & C. 478. And see Doe d. Hollingsworth v. Stennett, 2 Esp. 717.

So, an occupation for eighteen years, under an unstamped agreement for a lease for twenty-one years, was held to constitute a tenancy, though no lease had ever been tendered by the lessor, or demanded by the lessee. Weekly d. Yen v. Bucknell, Cowp. 473.

No tenancy is created where one has got into possession of a house without the privity of the landlord, although they afterwards enter into a negotiation for a lease, but differ as to the terms. Doe d. Knight v. Quigley, 2 Camp. 505—Ellenborough.

Where the occupier, under an agreement for a lease at a certain rent, pays the rent, he becomes tenant from year to year, on the terms of the agreement, and the landlord may distrain. Mann v. Loejoy, R. & M. 355—Abbott.

A party took possession of premises under an agreement for a lease, to be granted to him for a term of ten years, at a yearly rent, payable half-yearly; no lease was executed, nor was the quantum of the rent to be paid ascertained; but he occupied under the agreement for three years, paying rent for two:—Held, that this created a tenancy from year to year. Knight v. Bennett, 11 Moore, 222; 3 Bing. 801.

A party entered into possession of premises under an agreement for a lease at a certain rent, and occupied them more than a year, but paid no rent. An account was afterwards delivered to him by the landlord, charging him with half a year's rent, the amount of which he at first disputed, but admitted that a half a year's rent was due, and named the amount, and the account was altered accordingly:—Held, that a yearly tenancy might thereby be implied; and that the landlord had a right to distrain. Cox v. Bent, 2 M. & P. 281; 5 Bing. 185.

Where a person held premises under an agreement in writing, from quarter to quarter, and the agreement provided that the tenant should quit possession upon receiving six months' notice in writing, and, in the event of his losing his license to sell ale, through misconduct at any time during the term, should then forthwith quit possession on being requested so to do by his landlord:—Held, that he had neither a tenancy from year to year, nor a term certain in the premises, within 1 Geo. 4, c. 87, s. 1, so as to entitle the landlord in ejectment to compel him to give security for costs under that act. Doe d. Carter v. Roe, 10 M. & W. 670; 2 D., N. S. 449; 6 Jur. 1044; 12 L. J., Exch. 27.

Where there has been an agreement for a lease and an occupation without payment of rent, the occupier is a mere tenant at will. Braythwaite v. Hitchcock, 10 M. & W. 494; 6 Jur. 976. See Riseley v. Ryle, 11 M. & W. 16; 12 L. J., Exch. 38.

If he subsequently pays rent under that agreement, he thereby becomes tenant from year to year. Ib.

But, in order to establish a tenancy from year to year in such case, the payment of rent means a payment of rent with reference to a yearly holding. Ib.

In an action for rent, stating a demise of a messuage, by the plaintiff to H., for one year, and so on from year to year, if they should respectively please, at the yearly rent of 140*l.*, payable quarterly, and an assignment by H. to the defendant, the plaintiff proved an agreement (signed by himself only) for a lease of the premises by him to H., for seven years, at 140*l.* a year; that no lease had been actually executed, but that H. had entered into possession shortly after the date of the agreement, and had paid two quarters' rent, at the rate of 140*l.* a year:—Held, that this was sufficient evidence of a tenancy from year to year, as stated in the declaration, and in which H. had an assignable interest. Ib.

The receipt of rent may be explained so as to rebut the implication arising out of payment of a yearly tenancy. Doe d. Lord v. Crago, 6 C. B. 90; 12 Jur. 705; 17 L. J., C. P. 263.

By a memorandum, dated 23d June, 1842, made between A. as agent for and on behalf of the churchwardens of the parish of St. M. (not naming them), of the one part, and B. of the other part, it was agreed that the churchwardens should grant a lease to B. for twenty-one years from Midsummer-day then next, under the clear yearly rent of 80*l.*, and B. agreed to accept such lease; and that, until such lease should be granted, the yearly rent should be payable and recoverable by distress or otherwise, in like manner as if such lease had been executed:—Held, that the tenancy thereby created was a tenancy from year to year. Doe d. Bailey v. Foster, 3 C. B. 215; 15 L. J., C. P. 208.

—by occupying under a void lease.]—In 1786 a dean and chapter and P. granted a lease of premises for ninety-nine years, reserving a rent to the dean and chapter and another rent to P. This lease purported to be made in pursuance of leasing powers given by a private statute, but was in fact not in accordance with them. The rents reserved by the lease had been from time to time regularly paid to and received by the successive deans and chapters, and to and by P. and his representatives. Quære, whether the lease was void or only voidable? but held, that if voidable, it had been set up by acceptance of rent by each successive dean and chapter; and if void, the payment and receipt of rent were evidence from which a demise from year to year by the dean and chapter would be presumed. Doe d. Pennington v. Taniere, 12 Q. B. 998; 13 Jur. 119; 18 L. J., Q. B. 49.

By an agreement in writing made on the 17th December, 1850, the plaintiff agreed to let to the defendant premises for a term of three years from the 25th December inst. The defendant occupied under this agreement during the three years, and paid the rent reserved. The plaintiff, without giving notice to quit, brought ejectment:—Held, that though the lease, not being by deed, was void by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3, the defendant became tenant from year to year, subject to the terms of the agreement, and that his interest expired at the end of the three years without a notice to quit. Tress v. Savage, 4 El. & Bl. 30; 23 L. J., Q. B. 339; 18 Jur. 680.

Where a party became tenant for a period exceeding three years, under a lease void at law, as not being made by deed under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3, and the receipts given to him for rent which he had paid for two years, stated the rent to be payable in advance:—Held, that he became a yearly tenant, on the terms of paying the rent in advance. Lee v. Smith, 9 Exch. 602; 23 L. J., Exch. 198.

By an agreement, expressed to be made by a corporation by their agents on their behalf and the defendant, the corporation agreed to let to the defendant and the defendant to take certain premises for three years; and the defendant also agreed to put and maintain the premises in tenantable repair, and to deliver them up at the end of the term. The agreement was executed by agents of the corporation and by the defendant, but the corporation seal was not affixed. The defendant occupied for the term, and held over afterwards, paying the rent received:—Held, that, although the agreement was not under seal, the occupation and payment of rent admitted a tenancy from year to year under the corporation, and that on such tenancy being determined by regular notice to quit, the defendant was liable on an implied promise to deliver up the premises in tenantable repair. Ecclesiastical Commissioners of England v. Merrill, 38 L. J., Exch. 93; 4 L. R., Exch. 102; 17 W. R. 676; 20 L. T., N. S. 573.

A. sold to B. an estate in fee simple, expressly subject to a lease, which purported to have been granted by A.'s predecessor in title. The lease was in fact invalid:—Held, that the receipt by A., from the persons in possession under the invalid lease, of a rent of inadequate amount, purporting to be paid under the invalid lease, did not create a tenancy from year to year. Smith v. Widdlake, 25 W. R. 59 —C. A.

As to what occupation of premises gives rise to a mere tenancy at will,—see this title, XVII.

2. Nature and Incidents of the Relation; and Rights and Liabilities of the Parties.

Nature of tenancy from year to year.]—A tenant from year to year has a lease for a year certain, with a growing interest during every year thereafter, springing out of the original contract and parcel of it. Cattley v. Arno'd, 1 Johns. & H. 651.

A tenancy from year to year is considered as recommencing every year. Tompkins v. Lawrence, 8 C. & P. 729—Patteson.

A tenancy from year to year is not to be considered as a continuous tenancy, but as recommencing every year. Gandy v. Jubber, 10 Jur., N. S. 652; 33 L. J., Q. B. 151; 5 B. & S. 78. But see, to the contrary, Cattley v. Arnold, 1 Johns. & H. 651, cited supra; Pike v. Eyre, 9 B. & C. 909; 4 M. & R. 661; and Hayes v. Fitzgibbon, 4 Ir. R., C. L. 500, 506, 507.

If a tenant enters in the middle of a quarter, and afterwards pays up to the beginning of a succeeding regular quarter, from which time he pays half-yearly, his tenancy commences from that regular quarter-day to which he paid up. Doe d. Holcombe v. Johnson, 6 Esp. 10—Ellenborough.

A demise by a tenant from year to year to another, also to hold from year to year, is in legal operation a demise from year to year during the continuance of the original demise to the intermediate landlord, and is properly so described in pleading, although at the time of making the contract no such qualification is mentioned. Pike v. Eyre, 9 B. & C. 909; 4 M. & R. 661.

A tenancy for "a year certain" is "less than a tenancy from year to year," because:—

Per Dowse, B.—A tenancy from year to year is a tenancy for a year certain, and every year afterwards it is a springing interest arising upon the first contract, and parcel of it, so that if the lessee occupies for a number of years, these years, by computation from the time past, make an entire tenancy for so many years, and after the commencement of each new year it becomes one entire lease certain for the year past and also for the year entered upon, so that it is not a reletting after the commencement of the second and subsequent years. Wright v. Tracey, 8 Ir. R., C. L. 478—Exch. Cham.

If a tenant from year to year demises for a term of years, and the original tenancy from year to year lasts beyond that term, such a demise is not an assignment, but there is a reversion.—Deasy, B.

A tenancy for "a year certain" is not "less than a tenancy from year to year," because:—

Per Fitzgerald, J.—A tenancy from year to year is legally and technically a tenancy for one year certain and no more, but to which is super-added, by construction of law, that if neither party expresses his will to determine or give up at the end of the year, then it shall continue for another year. Ib.

Per Fitzgerald, B. (and adopted by Whiteside, C. J.)—A tenancy from year to year, in the uncertainty of its duration, still retains its character of a tenancy at will; but, by reason of judicial decisions, the will cannot be determined before the end of the first year at least, and thus the tenancy becomes certain for a year. Ib.

Per Palles, C. B.—The necessary duration of a tenancy from year to year in the abstract is a term fixed and certain, that is, the term of one year. Ib.

The non-payment of rent for the space of sixteen years, and no demand being proved to have been made, is of itself sufficient evidence to presume the determination of a tenancy from year to year. Stagg v. Wyatt, 1 Arn. 327; 2 Jur. 892.

A tenancy from year to year, so long as both parties please, is determinable at the end of the first as well as of any subsequent year, unless in creating such tenancy the parties use words showing that they contemplate a tenancy for two years at least. Doe d. Clarke v. Smarridge, 7 Q. B. 957; 9 Jur. 781; 14 L. J., Q. B. 327.

Use and enjoyment of the premises.]—When a party enters into possession of a farm, and pays rent under an agreement for a lease, containing divers covenants to cultivate, pay rent, &c., he is bound by all the covenants in the agreement applicable to a tenancy from year to year; and therefore, where the agreement stipulated for the lease to contain a condition for re-entry if the tenant should grow two successive crops of white corn without fallow, he might be ejected without notice if he committed a breach of this covenant. Doe d. Thompson v. Amey, 4 P. & D. 177; 12 A. & E. 476.

A covenant in a lease for years, ending at Michaelmas, that the tenant shall and may retain and sow forty acres of wheat on the arable land demised (consisting of 213 acres) at the seed-time next after the end of the term, and leave the standing thereof till the harvest then next following rent-free, with the use of the premises for thrashing, &c. till a day named, is a term which may be made incident to a tenancy from year to year. Hyatt v. Griffiths, 17 Q. B. 505.

An agreement that an outgoing tenant shall be paid for tillages on the expiration of his tenancy is not inconsistent with the terms of a tenancy from year to year. Brocklington v. Saunders, 18 W. R. 46—Q. B.

A tenant who had been let into possession under an instrument, which did not amount to a present lease, and had paid rent under the agreement, was held liable for the mismanagement of the farm, under a count stating the premises to have been demised to him. Tempest v. Rawling, 18 East, 18.

A term contained in a demise for a period exceeding three years to keep open a shop, and use the best endeavors to promote the trade of it, is a term applicable to a tenancy from year to year. Sanders v. Karnell, 1 F. & F. 356—Channell.

A tenant from year to year, who has been evicted by the reversioner after the determination of the interest of the landlord, cannot maintain an action upon an implied covenant for quiet enjoyment against his landlord. Penfold v. Abbott, 11 W. R. 169; 7 L. T., N. S. 384; 32 L. J., Q. B. 67; 9 Jur., N. S. 517.

A tenant from year to year, equally with a tenant having a larger interest, is bound to make proper inquiries into his landlord's title, and he is affected with the consequences of not doing so. Wilson v. Hart, 12 Jur., N. S. 460; 14 L. T., N. S. 499; 1 L. R., Ch. 463; 35 L. J., Chanc. 569—L. J.

Repairs.]—A tenant from year to year is only bound to fair and tenantable repairs, so far as to prevent waste or decay of the premises, and not to substantial and lasting repairs, such as new roofing. Ferguson v. —, 2 Esp. 590—Kenyon.

And not being liable to general repairs, he is only bound to use the premises in a husbandlike manner, but no further. Horsefall v. Mather, Holt, 7—Gibbs.

A tenant from year to year of a house is only bound to keep it wind and water-tight. A tenant who covenants to repair is to sustain and uphold the premises; but that is not so with a tenant from year to year. Anworth v. Johnson, 5 C. & P. 239—Tenterden.

A tenant from year to year is not bound to do substantial repairs. Leach v. Thomas, 7 C. & P. 328—Paterson.

A tenant from year to year is not liable for permissive waste, and is not liable to make good mere wear and tear of the premises. Torriano v. Young, 6 C. & P. 8—Taunton. See Martin v. Gilham, 2 N. & P. 568.

A devised estates to B. for life; the devise contained a limited power of leasing. The devisee leased part of the demised premises for a term beyond the limit appointed. The lease contained the usual covenants to repair, and was afterwards assigned to the defendants, who, for several years, remained in possession, and paid the rent to the expiration of the term:—Held, that although the lease was void, the defendants held as tenants from year to year under the covenants of the lease, and were liable to repair up to the end of the term. Beale v. Sanders, 3 Bing. N. C. 850; 5 Scott, 58; 3 Hodges, 147; 1 Jur. 1088.

The jury having given damages (under 20*l.*) in an action by his landlord against a tenant for an injury to the former, arising from the tenant quitting premises occupied by him as tenant from year to year without having done repairs he was bound to do, the court refused to disturb the verdict, although it appeared that the larger portion of the repairs required ought to have been done by the landlord himself. Woods v. Pope, 1 Scott, 536; 1 Bing. N. C. 467; 6 C. & P. 783.

If a tenant, who is bound to repair, leaves, and at the end of the tenancy the premises are out of repair, the jury may give the landlord, in an action against the tenant, not only the amount of the actual expense of the repairs, but also a compensation for the loss of the use of the premises while they were undergoing repair. Id.

As between the landlord and tenant of premises let from year to year, there is no obligation upon the former to do substantial repairs in the absence of an express stipulation to that effect. Gott v. Gandy, 2 El. & Bl. 845; 2 C. L. R. 392; 18 Jur. 310; 23 L. J., Q. B. 1.

The defendants having for several years as assignees, under a void lease, paid the rent reserved, and not having re-assigned:—Held, liable to repair to the end of the term according to the covenant in the lease. Beale v. Sanders, 3 Bing. N. C. 850; 5 Scott, 58; 3 Hodges, 147; 1 Jur. 1088.

When a tenant enters a house under an unsealed agreement to let for a term of more than three years, and occupies and pays rent till the end of the term, he is during the whole term a tenant from year to year, subject to all those stipulations in the agreement which are applicable to such a tenancy, and may be sued for the breach of any of them, e. g., one binding him to paint in the last year of the term. Martin v. Smith, 48 L. J., Exch. 42; 9 L. R., Exch. 50; 22 W. R. 386; 30 L. T., N. S. 268.

By an agreement not under seal, the landlord agreed to let to the tenant, and the tenant to take of him, a house and premises for seven years, upon the terms that he would, in the last year of the term, paint, grain and varnish the interior, and also whitewash and color. The tenant entered under the agreement, and occupied and paid rent during the whole period of seven years. In an action for not painting, graining, and varnishing the interior, and whitewashing and coloring, in the seventh year:—Held, that he must be taken to have occupied on the terms that, if he should continue to occupy during the whole period of seven years, he would do those things which were by the agreement to be done in the seventh year; and that he was therefore liable. Id.

Rent.—The defendant agreed by parol to rent a house as tenant from year to year, for the residue of a term, which was three years and three quarters; he held for three years and one quarter, and quitted:—Ruled, that though perhaps he might have quitted without notice at the end of three years, yet the remaining longer implied a contract to pay rent for the residue of the term. Sauvage v. Dupuis, 3 Taunt. 410.

A party occupied premises under an agreement for three years, at 45*l.* a year, which expired at Midsummer, 1826. He did not then go out, nor did his landlord take any steps to compel him; but, at Michaelmas following, gave him notice to quit at Lady-day, 1827, or pay the rent of 50*l.* a year. He continued in, but refused to pay any more than 45*l.* rent:—Held, that, under the circumstances, he must be taken to have acquiesced in the new proposal, and was bound to pay the rent of 50*l.* Roberts v. Hayward, 3 C. & P. 432.

A party was the tenant from year to year of a house and premises, at a rent payable half yearly, on the 1st April and the 1st October. The premises being required for the purposes of a railway, the railway company, in pursuance of a power given by their act of parliament, gave the tenant six months' notice to quit, which expired in the middle of a half year, viz., on the 28th July. The tenant gave up possession to the company accordingly at the expiration of six months, without obtaining or requiring compensation for his interest in the premises, which he was entitled to under the act:—Held, that he was liable for the rent of the half year ending on the following 1st October. Wainwright v. Ramsden, 5 M. & W. 602; 1 Railw. Cas. 714.

The rule that a tenant holding over, after the expiration of his lease, without entering into a new contract, continues to hold, upon the terms of the lease, so far as they are applicable to a tenancy from year to year, applies to a proviso for re-entry for non-payment of the rent. Thomas v. Pickler, 1 H. & N. 669; 3 Jur., N. S. 143; 26 L. J., Exch. 207.

A landlord agreed to let, and a tenant to take, an office from the 20th of September, 1869, at the yearly rent of 20*l.*, payable quarterly in advance. The agreement alluded more than once to the term thereby created, and provided that in case the term should be determined otherwise than by effluxion of time or by legal notice, then the tenant should pay to the landlord 5*l.*, equivalent to one quarter's rent, as and by way of liquidated and ascertained damages, and to be recoverable as such by the landlord. The tenant, without any notice, gave up possession of the premises before the 20th September, 1870, having paid in advance all rent for the year ending on that day:—Held, that the terms of the agreement created a yearly tenancy, and that the landlord was entitled to recover 5*l.* from the tenant for the rent due on the 29th September in advance. Florence v. Robinson, 24 L. T., N. S. 705—C. P.

A tenant from year to year—evicted by a civil bill decree, but still in actual occupation—entered into an agreement with the landlord, by which it was agreed that he should thenceforth be tenant from year to year at a rent to be ascertained by three persons named; those persons having declined to determine the amount of the rent, and the tenant having refused to pay an increased rent demanded by the landlord, the latter took possession under the decree:—Held, that the tenant was entitled to maintain trespass against the landlord. McCreesh v. McGeough, 7 Ir. R., C. L. 236—Exch.

Assignment of reversion.—A reversion of a tenancy from year to year cannot pass without deed. Brauley v. Wade, M'Clel. 664.

Death of tenant.—In a case of tenancy from year to year, the personal representatives of the tenant have the same interest in the land which he had. Doe d. Shore v. Porter, 3 T. R. 13. S. P., James v. Dean, 15 Ves. 241; Parker d. Walker v. Constable, 8 Wils. 24. And see Mackay v. Mackreth, 3 T. R. 13, n.; Gulliver d. Tasker v. Burr, 1 W. Bl. 596.

— of landlord.—A tenancy from year to year of glebe land is determined by the death of the incumbent. Doe d. Kirby v. Carter, R. & M. 287—Littledale.

Where a tenancy from year to year has been originally created by the owner of the fee, it is not determined by the death of a tenant for life, claiming under the original lessor, and 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 15, does not therefore apply to such a case. Cattley v. Arnold, 1 Johns. & H. 651; 5 Jur., N. S. 361; 28 L. J., Chanc. 352.

A tenancy from year to year under a middleman, whose own interest in the premises is derived under a lease for lives, does not, where the middleman has obtained a new lease, terminate, without notice to quit, upon the death of the last surviving life in the original head lease, even though the new head lease contains a covenant against subletting. Hayes v. Fitzgibbon, 4 Ir. R., C. L. 500—Exch.

Surrender of tenancy.—A tenancy from year to year cannot be determined, so as to bar the interest of the tenant's creditors, unless there is either a legal notice to quit, or a surrender in writing. Doe d. Read v. Ridout, 5 Taunt. 519.

A parol agreement between a landlord and a tenant from year to year, that another tenant should be substituted in his place, who was accordingly substituted, is a sufficient surrender according to the Statute of Frauds to determine the former tenancy. Stone v. Whiting, 2 Stark. 285.

But it is not sufficient if the third person does not take possession. Taylor v. Chapman, Peake's Add. Cas. 19—Kenyon.

A verbal agreement to lease a ferry for a year may be put an end to by a verbal agreement before the expiration of the year. Peter v. Kendal, 6 B. & C. 703.

A., being tenant from year to year, underlet the premises to B., and the original landlord, with the assent of A., accepted B. as his tenant, but there was no surrender in writing of A.'s interest; rent being subsequently in arrear, the landlord distrained on B.'s goods:—Held, that these circumstances constituted a valid surrender of A.'s interest by act and operation of law within the Statute of Frauds. Thomas v. Cook, 2 B. & A. 119; 2 Stark. 408. But see Matthews v. Sawell, 2 Moore, 262.

Where premises had been let to B. for a term determinable by a notice to quit, and pending such term C. applied to A., the landlord, for leave to become the tenant instead of B., and, upon A. consenting, agreed to stand in B.'s place, and offered to pay rent:—Held, that (though B.'s term had not been determined either by a notice to quit, or a surrender in writing) A. might maintain an action for use and occupation against C., and that the latter could not set up B.'s title in defense to that action. Phipps v. Southrop, 1 B. & A. 50.

Where a sole tenant from year to year, before the termination of his tenancy, entered into an agreement with his landlord for a lease to be granted to him and another jointly, and both entered upon and occupied the premises jointly:—Held, that the first tenancy was determined, though the lease was never executed pursuant to the agreement. Hamer-ton v. Stead, 5 D. & R. 206; 3 B. & C. 478.

Where A., at the request of B., his yearly tenant, accepted C. as tenant in his stead, who proved to be insolvent, and it appeared that B., when he proposed C. to A., knew that C. had compounded with his creditors, but did not communicate the fact to A.:—Held, that the suppression of such a fact was a fraud in B., which rendered him still liable to A. for the rent. Bruce v. Ruler, 2 M. & R. 8.

Two persons being tenants from year to year of two closes under different lessors, agreed to exchange them; both the lessors had the same steward, to whom the arrangement was mentioned; he expressed his assent to it:—Held, that this amounted to evidence of new demises of the respective closes, and of a surrender by operation of law of the previous interests of the tenants. Bees v. Williams, 1 Gale, 332; 2 C., M. & R. 581; 1 Tyr. & G. 28.

The defendant held premises, as tenant to the plaintiff, under a memorandum of agreement for three years. He left the premises in the first year. On application being then made by the plaintiff for rent due, the defendant, by letter, authorized the plaintiff to let the premises to any one else. The plaintiff then let them to another tenant for three years, and gave him possession:—Held, in an action for rent on the original agreement, that these facts constituted a surrender by operation of law. Nickells v. Atherstone, 10 Q. B. 944; 11 Jur. 778; 16 L. J., Q. B. 371.

A., being tenant from year to year to B., died, leaving his widow in possession. C., some time after, took out letters of administration to the deceased, and the widow continued in possession, paying rent to B., with the knowledge of C., who never objected to such payment, or made any demand of rent:—Held, that there was no evidence of a surrender by operation of law, so as to create the relation of landlord and tenant between B. and the widow. Doe d. Hull v. Wood, 14 M. & W. 682; 9 Jur. 1060; 15 L. J., Exch. 41.

The plaintiffs declared that they were tenants of chambers to H., at a certain rent, and that in consideration that they would let the chambers to the defendant, he promised to pay the same rent to H., and that if he did not do so he would indemnify the plaintiffs. The declaration averred the letting to the defendant on such terms, and that the defendant did not pay to H. rent which afterwards became due, nor indemnify the plaintiffs, who paid it. The defendant pleaded, first, that before rent became due the tenancy of the defendant to the plaintiffs was ended by surrender and operation of law; and secondly, that before rent was due the defendant agreed with the plaintiff C., on behalf of himself and the other plaintiff, to deliver up possession of the chambers to the plaintiff C., and that the defendant did accordingly so deliver up possession:—Held, that the pleas were good. Coles or Smith v. Lovell, 1 L. M. & P. 794; 10 C. B. 6; 15 Jur. 250; 20 L. J., C. P. 57.

To an action for a quarter's rent from Lady-day to Midsummer, the defendant pleaded that by agreement between the plaintiffs, executors of A., and the defendant, the defendant agreed to take of the plaintiffs, executors, the premises; that it was afterwards agreed between them and B., that B. should become tenant to the plaintiffs from Lady-day, and that the defendant should be discharged from liability to subsequent rent; that the defendant accordingly gave up possession to B., and the plaintiffs accepted him as tenant:—Held, that the plea was not proved by evidence that one of the plaintiffs had so agreed to accept B. as tenant in lieu of the defendant. Turner v. Hardey, 9 M. & W. 770.

A plea to a declaration in trespass quare clausum fregit stated that B. was seized in fee of the locus in quo, and that the plaintiff held it of him as tenant from year to year, upon terms that B. or his in-coming tenant, at any time after a certain day, when the plaintiff should have received notice to quit, should have liberty to enter and plow the arable land held by the plaintiff. Averment of notice to quit:—Held, that the plaintiff agreed to let, and the defendant to take, the premises as tenant from year to year from and after the expiration of the plaintiff's tenancy; and that the defendant thereupon became the in-coming tenant, and entered after the certain day to plow the land:—Held, that the plea was good, inasmuch as enough appeared to warrant the allegation that the defendant was the in-coming tenant, which might have been traversed. Milner v. Myers or Gordon, 2 Q. B. 615; 10 Jur. 472; 15 L. J., Q. B. 158.

A tenancy from year to year, created by parol, is not determined by a parol license from the landlord to the tenant, to quit in the middle of a quarter, and the tenant's quitting the premises accordingly. Mollett v. Brayne, 2 Camp. 103—Ellenborough. S. P., Thompson v. Wilson, 2 Stark. 379.

One being in possession of premises as tenant from year to year, under an agreement for a lease for fourteen years, and the rent being in arrear, entered into an indenture with his landlords, whereby, reciting such tenancy and arrears of rent accrued, and that he had agreed to quit and to deliver up the premises to them, and that a valuation should be made of his effects on the premises by two indifferent persons, and that the same should in the meantime be assigned and delivered up to a trustee for the landlords, he assigned his effects on the premises to such trustee, to have the valuation made, and out of the amount to retain the arrears of rent, and pay the residue to the tenant:—Held, that the tenant not having in fact quitted the possession, nor any valuation having been made of his effects, such agreement to quit being conditional, and the condition not performed, nor the agreement in any manner acted upon, did not operate as a surrender of the tenant's legal term from year to year. Coupland v. Maynard, 12 East, 134.

Where, on a tenancy from year to year, determinable at a quarter's notice, the lessor licenses the tenant to quit in the middle of a quarter, and the tenant quits, and the lessor accepts possession, this is a surrender by operation of law, destroying the right to rent for the whole or any part of the current quarter. Grimman v. Legge, 8 B. & C. 324; 2 M. & R. 438.

A tenant from year to year, at a rent payable half-yearly, without giving any notice to the landlord, quitted the premises at the expiration of the current year. Before the next half-year expired, the landlord let the premises to another tenant, who occupied the same:—Held, that the landlord was not entitled to recover rent from the first tenant from the expiration of the current year, when he quitted the premises, to the time when the landlord re-let the same to the second tenant. Hall v. Burgess, 5 B. & C. 332; 8 D. & R. 67.

Where a tenant from year to year, by a Lady-day holding, agreed by parol with his landlord's agent to quit at the ensuing Lady-day, which was within half a year, and the premises were re-let by auction, at which the tenant attended and bid, but the new tenant was not let into possession:—Held, that the tenancy was not determined; there not having been either a sufficient notice to quit, or a surrender by operation of law, within the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 8, s. 8. Doe v. Huddleston v. Johnston, M'Clel. & Y. 141. And see Johnstone v. Huddleston, 4 B. & C. 922; 7 D. & R. 411; Doe d. Murrell v. Milward, 3 M. & W. 323; 1 H. & H. 79.

A party who occupied a house as tenant from year to year, entered into the following agreement with his landlord: "1831, September 2. S. S. (the tenant) purchased an estate in the parish of Corbeg, bought of R. G. (the landlord) at the sum of 100*l*. Received on account 10*s*. Mr. R. G. is willing to let the sum lie, by paying four per cent."—Held, that as there was an implied condition in the contract that the landlord should make out a good title, the agreement for the purchase did not operate as a surrender of the tenancy by operation of law. Doe d. Gray v. Stanion, 1 M. & W. 695; 2 Gale, 154.

As to surrender in general,—see this title, XII.

Notice to quit.—A notice to quit must be given previously to bringing ejectment, whenever there is an existing tenancy from year to year. Doe d. Hollingsworth v. Stennett, 2 Esp. 717; Doe d. Martin v. Watts, 7 T. R. 83; 2 Esp. 501; Doe d. Moore v. Lawder, 1 Stark. 308; Doe d. Warner v. Browne, 8 East, 166.

An agreement for a lease at a certain rent, containing a stipulation that the lessor should not turn out the tenant so long as he paid the rent, and did not sell, &c. any article injurious to the lessor's business, either purports to be a lease for life, and would then be void, as not being creatable by parol, or, if it operates as a tenancy from year to year, it must necessarily be determinable by either party giving the regular notice to quit. Doe d. Warner v. Browne, 8 East, 166.

A tenant in tail having received an ancient rent of 1*l*. 18*s*. 6*d*. from the lessees in possession, under a void lease granted by the tenant for life under a power, the rack-rent value of which was 30*l*. a year, cannot maintain an ejectment, at least after laying his demise on a prior day, without giving the lessee some notice to quit, so as to make him a trespasser after such recognition of a lawful possession either in the relation of tenant, or at least as continuing by sufferance till notice. Denn d. Brune v. Raulings, 10 East, 261. And see Doe d. Brune v. Prideaux, 10 East, 158; and Whiteacre d. Boulton v. Symonds, 10 East, 13.

An agreement for a lease contained a stipulation that the tenancy should continue until after two years' notice to quit had been given. The tenant occupied the farm, paid rent for some years, but no lease was executed:—Held, that it could not be implied that the stipulation as to the two years' notice to quit was one of the terms under which the tenant held. Tooker v. Smith, 1 H. & N. 739.

If, at the end of a year, when the tenancy is from year to year, the landlord accepts another person as tenant in the room of the former tenant, without any surrender in writing, such acceptance will be a dispensation of any notice to quit. Sparrow v. Hawkes, 2 Esp. 505—Kenyon.

When a tenant from year to year dies, his personal representatives have the same interest in the land which he had, and are therefore entitled to the same notice to quit. Doe d. Shore v. Porter, 3 T. R. 13. S. P., Parker d. Walker v. Con-table, 3 Wils. 24. And see Mackay v. Mackreth, 3 T. R. 13, n.; Gulliver d. Tasker v. Burr, 1 W. Bl. 596.

A tenant from year to year died, and a regular notice to quit was served on the widow, who remained in possession:—Held, that the landlord might recover in ejectment, unless it was shown that some other person, and not the widow, was the executor or administrator of the tenant; and that it was not incumbent on the landlord to show that the widow was either executrix or administratrix. Rees v. Perrot, 5 C. & P. 230—Littledale.

An under-tenant (who was tenant from year to year), after the expiration of the tenant's lease, being acquainted with the circumstance, held on under the new tenant for one quarter, and paid him the same rent he had been accustomed to do. He then gave up the premises, not having given any previous notice:—Held, that there was no evidence of a new continuing tenancy, and that, therefore, the under-tenant was not obliged to give a notice to quit. Freeman v. Jury, M. & M. 19.

In the case of a tenancy from year to year, there must be a half-year's notice to quit, ending at the expiration of the year. Right d. Flower v. Darby, 1 T. R. 159. And see Doe d. Puddicombe v. Harris, 1 T. R. 161, n.

In all cases the notice to quit must have reference to the terms of the letting; therefore, in ejectment for a house, where the defendant had taken the house by the month:—Held, that a month's notice to quit was sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover. Doe d. Parry v. Hazell, 1 Esp. 94—Kenyon.

A tenancy from year to year may be determined at the end of the first year by a six months' notice to quit. Doe d. Hogg v. Taylor, 1 Jur. 960.

If a tenant from year to year gives notice to quit, not expiring with the year, the landlord, if the notice is in writing and signed by the tenant, may, if he pleases, treat this irregular notice as a surrender of the tenancy. Aldenburgh v. Peaple, 6 C. & P. 212—Parke.

A verbal acquiescence by a landlord on receiving from a tenant from year to year a notice to quit, determining within the six months, is not sufficient. Bessell v. Landsberg, 7 Q. B. 638; 9 Jur. 576; 14 L. J., Q. B. 355.

To determine a tenancy from year to year, commencing on the 25th March, the landlord served, previously to the 25th of March, 1872, i. e., six months before the last gale day of the calendar year, a notice to quit and deliver up possession on the 29th of September, 1872, but by the notice informed the tenant that he did not require the possession on that day unless the tenancy then commenced:—Held, that the notice did not determine the tenancy until the 25th of March, 1873, and that an ejectment brought before that day could not be sustained. Ferguson v. Daly, 8 Ir. R., C. L. 216—Exch.

A defendant leased about twenty acres of land for five years, at a yearly rent, from the owner in fee simple, under a memorandum of agreement, and immediately afterwards sublet about six acres, part of the premises, to another person on a yearly tenancy. At the conclusion of the term the defendant continued possession of the whole, and during the first year after the term expired the lessor conveyed to the plaintiff the six acres which the defendant had sublet, and agreed with the plaintiff, but without the consent of the defendant, as to the amount of rent to be apportioned to this part of the premises out of the rent which the defendant paid. Although notice of the conveyance and agreed apportionment of rent was afterwards given to the defendant, he never recognized the plaintiff as his landlord, but continued to pay rent for the whole premises to his lessor, who handed over the agreed portion to the plaintiff. The plaintiff gave the defendant notice to quit the sublet premises six months before the expiration of a year's tenancy; and the defendant forwarded this notice, with a further notice to quit from himself, to his sub-tenant. At the end of the year the sub-tenant gave up possession of his premises to the plaintiff, but the defendant wrote to the latter claiming to hold the same as tenant to the original lessor, and requiring possession. The defendant then did certain acts upon the premises which had been in his sub-tenant's occupation, for which the plaintiff brought an action of trespass:—Held, that his notice to the defendant to quit part only of the premises demised to him was invalid; that his passing on the notice to his tenant did not preclude his disputing it; and that the action could not be maintained. Prince v. Evans, 20 L. T., N. S. 835—Q. B.

A tenant from year to year, believing that his tenancy determined at Midsummer, gave a written notice to quit at that period, which the landlord accepted, and made no objection to. The tenant having afterwards discovered that his tenancy expired at Christmas, gave his landlord another notice accordingly, and on possession being demanded at Midsummer, refused to quit the premises:—Held, that the tenancy was not determined by the notice, inasmuch as it was not good as a notice to quit, and could not operate as a surrender by note in writing within the Statute of Frauds, the first being to take effect in futuro. Doe d. Murrell v. Milward, 3 M. & W. 328; 1 H. & H. 79.

But a second notice to the defendant to quit at Michaelmas, 1811, was a waiver as to him of a former notice given to the original lessee, from whom he claimed by assignment, to quit at Michaelmas, 1810. Doe d. Brierly v. Palmer, 16 East, 53.

Where a tenancy from year to year has been determined by a regular notice to quit, the mere accidental detention of the key by the tenant (who has quitted the premises and removed his goods), for two days beyond the expiration of the term, does not amount to any evidence of use and occupation, so as to render him liable for another quarter. Gray v. Bompas, 11 C. B., N. S. 520; 5 L. T., N. S. 841.

When a person, who held as tenant from year to year, has been permitted to remain undisturbed in possession after the expiration of a notice to quit, the question, whether there is a subsisting tenancy from year to year, is one of fact for a jury. Vance v. Vance, 5 Ir. R., C. L. 303—C. P.

A tenant from year to year of a stone quarry in Yorkshire received from his landlord six months' notice to quit. The tenant claimed the right, under an alleged custom of the district, to be allowed to continue in possession a reasonable time after the expiration of the notice, to enable him to get the stone which he had "bared." At the expiration of the notice, the landlord brought ejectment against the tenant, who thereupon filed a bill to restrain the action, and setting up the custom as against the landlord:—Held, that the evidence failed to prove the existence of the custom as alleged; and that, even if it had existed, the proper remedy of the tenant would have been at law. Vint v. Constable, 25 L. T., N. S. 324—V. C. M.

By a notice to quit, given to a tenant from year to year, his tenancy is determined on the expiration of the current year, and a waiver of the notice creates a new tenancy, taking effect on the expiration of the old one. Taylor v. Wildin, 3 L. R., Exch. 303; 16 W. R. 1018; 18 L. T., N. S. 653; 37 L. J., Exch. 178.

As to notices to quit, in general,—see this title, XIV., 1.

XVII. WEEKLY TENANCIES.

How created.—Where the only evidence of the terms on which a furnished house was taken, was the following receipt put in by the landlord:—"Received from C. 1264. for rent of furnished house, from the 8th May to the 1st August, 1846:"—Held, that the jury might properly infer that the tenancy was weekly. Towns v. Campbell, 8 C. B. 921; 16 L. J., C. P. 104.

Amount of rent recoverable under execution.—[By 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 67, no landlord of any tenement let at a weekly rent shall have any claim or lien upon any goods taken in execution under the process of any court of law for more than four weeks' arrears of rent; and if such tenement shall be let for any other term less than a year, the landlord shall not have any claim or lien on such goods for more than the arrears of rent accruing during four such terms or times of payment.]

Notice to quit.—In the case of an ordinary weekly tenancy, a week's notice to quit is not implied as part of the contract, unless there is a usage to that effect; but, in the absence of such usage, a weekly tenant who enters on a fresh week may be bound to continue until the expiration of that week, or pay the week's rent. Huffell v. Armitstead, 7 C. & P. 56—Parke.

A tenancy from week to week can only be determined by a week's notice. Jones v. Mills, 10 C. B., N. S. 788; 8 Jur., N. S. 387; 31 L. J., C. P. 66.

A notice to a weekly tenant, whose tenancy commenced on a Wednesday, to quit on Friday, provided his tenancy commenced on a Friday, or otherwise, at the end of his tenancy, next after one week from the date of the notice, is sufficient. Doe d. Campbell v. Scott, 4 M. & P. 20; 6 Bing. 362.

Under an agreement for a demise for a year, the rent to be paid weekly, and to have a month's warning, if no default was made in payment of the rent, but which agreement the lessor afterwards refused to execute, and the tenant paid his rent weekly:—Held, that he was entitled to a month's notice to quit, although the agreement was not executed, and although, if he had been a weekly tenant, a week's notice would have been sufficient. Doe d. Peacock v. Raffan, 6 Esp. 4—Ellenborough.

The defendant had for several years occupied a cottage as tenant from week to week to M. After his death, the defendant continued to pay his rent weekly to certain persons to whom M. had devised the premises. The devise being discovered to be void by reason of the Mortmain Act, the heir at law of M., by his agent, demanded the rent, whereupon the defendant said he had received notice from the other party, and would not pay any more rent until he knew who was the right owner:—Held, that this did not amount to a disclaimer or a repudiation of the title of the heir at law, so as to entitle him to eject the defendant without any notice to quit. Jones v. Mills, 10 C. B., N. S. 788; 8 Jur., N. S. 387; 31 L. J., C. P. 66.

A stipulation on the occasion of a weekly letting, that, after the expiration of such tenancy by the usual week's notice, the tenant shall have a reasonable time for the removal of his goods, is a valid stipulation, and operates as an extension of the term, so as to give the tenant a right to enter and do what is necessary for such removal. Cornish v. Stubbs, 39 L. J., C. P. 202; 5 L. R., C. P. 334; 22 L. T., N. S. 21; 18 W. R. 547.

A weekly tenant continuing in possession several weeks after the expiration of a notice to quit, and a demand made, is not liable to an action for double value under 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 1. Lloyd v. Prosser, 2 Camp. 453—Ellenborough.

As to notices to quit in other cases,—see this title, XIV.. XVI.

As to letting of lodgings and furnished apartments by the week,—see this title, XIX.

XVIII. TENANCIES AT WILL AND BY SUFFERANCE.

How created.—A person who lives in a house rent-free by the sufferance of the owner, is a tenant at will. Rez v. Collett, R. & R. C. C. 498. S. P., Rez v. Jobling, R. & R. C. C. 525.

The words "I give you a close to enjoy as long as I please, and to take again when I please, and you shall pay nothing for it," create a tenancy at will. Rez v. Fillongley, 1 T. R. 458.

If an agreement is made to let premises so long as both parties like, and reserving a compensation, accruing de die in diem, and not referable to a year, or any aliquot part of a year, it does not create a holding from year to year, but a tenancy at will strictly so called. And though the tenant has expended money on the improvement of the premises, that does not give him a right to hold them until he is indemnified. Richardson v. Langridge, 4 Taunt. 128.

A party who enters into the possession of premises under a paper signed by the owner, undertaking to execute to him a lease of them, is a tenant at will until he pays rent for the premises for either a year or some portion of time having reference to a year; after which he becomes a tenant from year to year. Braythwaite v. Hichcock, 10 M. & W. 494; 6 Jur. 976.

But a mere payment of rent, without having reference to a year or some aliquot part of a year, is not sufficient. Id.

Where a party was let into possession of land under an agreement of purchase, he paying interest after the rate of 5l. per cent. per annum on the purchase-money, until the completion of the purchase, which was to be in three months; and the purchase not being then completed, he continued in possession on the same terms:—Held, that this was only a tenancy at will, which might be determined without notice to quit. Doe d. Thomas v. Chamberlaine, 5 M. & W. 14.

Proviso in a deed; A. agrees to become tenant to C. and D. of the premises, "at their will and pleasure, at and after the rate of 25l. 4s. per annum, payable quarterly." A. remained in possession under this agreement for two years, and paid a year's rent, after which C. and D. distrained for four quarters' rent:—Held, that A. was tenant at will, and not from year to year. Doe d. Bastow or Barston v. Cox, 11 Q. B. 122; 17 L. J., Q. B. 3.

A mere permission to occupy constitutes a tenancy at will. Doe d. Huil v. Wood, 14 M. & W. 682; 9 Jur. 1060; 15 L. J., Exch. 41.

The doctrine, that a cestui que trust who is in possession of the estate by the consent or acquiescence of the trustees must be regarded as his tenant at will, only applies where the cestui que trust is the actual occupant; where he is merely allowed to receive the rents, or otherwise deal with the estate in the hands of occupying tenants, he is merely the agent of the trustees. Melling v. Leak, 16 C. B. 652; 1 Jur., N. S. 759; 24 L. J., C. P. 187.

The management of an estate was intrusted by the trustees (in fee) to the cestui que trust (for life) as beneficial owner; and the latter, having never been in actual occupation, let C. into possession, who occupied during the life of the cestui que trust, for more than twenty years, without paying rent or acknowledging title.—Held, that a tenancy at will had not been created between the cestui que trust and the trustees, and that C. had therefore acquired a good title, by adverse possession under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Id.

By indenture of lease of the 26th of June, 1810, between A. of the one part, and B. of the other part, after reciting a former lease, dated 27th of July, 1801, made between W. S. of the one part, and A. of the other part, whereby one undivided moiety of certain lands, and two undivided moieties of other lands, containing eighty acres, were demised by W. and M. S. to A., for the term of forty years, the whole of the lands, containing eighty acres, and the moiety of the other lands, were demised by A. to B. for the remainder of the term of forty years, except the last ten days. A. died in 1813, leaving the plaintiff his real and personal representative, and B. died in 1818, leaving the defendant his personal representative, who continued to occupy the lands demised until the time of the trial. The rent was regularly paid by B. and the defendant to A. and the plaintiff up to Lady-day, 1841, when the lease expired, and in December, 1841, the defendant paid rent for the whole of the eighty acres to M. S. The defendant went into evidence to show that neither A. nor the plaintiff had, in fact, any title to the undivided third part of the eighty acres, but that the whole was in M. S.—Held, that, at all events, the lease of 1810 established a prima facie case of title in the plaintiff, which the defendant must rebut by his evidence; and that the plaintiff had a right to treat the defendant as a tenant at sufferance of the undivided third part of the eighty acres, and to sue him for the use and occupation thereof after the expiration of the lease. Bayley v. Bradley, 5 C. B. 396; 16 L. J., C. P. 206.

W. H. died intestate in 1798, seized of a house and land, leaving a widow and an only son (by her), J., fifteen years old. The widow continued to reside on the property, and, about a year after the death of W. H., married the defendant, and resided with him on the premises; J. also remaining with him till 1805, when he went away, but occasionally returned for about a fortnight at a time till 1842. About that time the defendant applied to the lessor of the plaintiff to advance 100*l.* on mortgage of the property, and on that occasion the title-deeds being produced, the solicitor stated that it was necessary that J., being the heir-at-law of W. H., should execute the conveyance. The defendant accordingly brought J., who executed the mortgage and signed the receipt for the 100*l.*, which was received by the defendant.—Held, that a jury might well presume on the state of facts, that the defendant was tenant at will to J., and that the defendant by his conduct had waived all right to set up the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, to defeat the right of entry of J. Doe d. Groves v. Groves, 10 Q. B. 486; 11 Jur. 558; 16 L. J., Q. B. 297.

Where one who had built a cottage on the waste had, on three occasions, paid sixpence as rent to the person who had bought the adjoining old inclosure.—Held, that it was a proper question for a jury whether there had been an acknowledgment of tenancy. Doe d. Jackson v. Wilkinson, 5 D. & R. 273; 3 B. & C. 413.

T., holding pictures of P.'s as a security for an alleged debt, hired rooms of the plaintiff in which to deposit them. P. having died, his administrators contested T.'s claim by a suit in Chancery. Pending the suit, in order to prevent the pictures from being distrained, they petitioned the court to satisfy the plaintiff's rent out of certain funds paid into court in the course of the cause. T.'s claim having been disallowed by the court, the pictures were ordered to be delivered to the administrators, who, in order to obtain them, paid rent to the time of delivery.—Held, that these circumstances did not constitute the defendants tenants to the plaintiff. Strahan v. Smith, 4 Bing. 91; 12 Moore, 289.

An under-tenant who is in possession at the determination of the original lease, and is permitted by the reversioner to hold over, is quasi a tenant at sufferance; and the mere fact of occupation, coupled with the payment of rent for such time of occupation, does not raise the presumption of a demise for years unless there is some evidence to show an agreement for a demise for the term. Simkin v. Ashurst, 1 C., M. & R. 261; 4 Tyr. 781.

A tenant in common of five houses, occupying one of them, joined his co-tenant in the sale of the five, and continued in the occupation of the one for two years afterwards.—Held, that these facts alone were not evidence of a tenancy, and that he could not be sued by the purchaser for use and occupation. Tew v. Jones, 13 M. & W. 12; 14 L. J., Exch. 94.

A person who contracts for the purchase of land, and is let into possession by the vendor, but is prevented from completing the purchase by the vendor failing to make a good title, is not liable, in an action for use and occupation in respect of the time of his holding, in the expectation that such good title would be made, and the purchase would be completed. Winterbottom v. Ingham, 7 Q. B. 611; 10 Jur. 4; 14 L. J., Q. B. 208.

A contract was made for the purchase of a public-house; 50*l.* were paid as a deposit, 70*l.*

more were to be paid on the landlord's consent being obtained to a change of the tenancy. The purchaser sent some furniture to the house in question, and resided in a part of it, the vendor also still remaining in it:—Held, that the contract was conditional on a valid consent of the landlord being given; and that a verbal consent, afterwards revoked before any change of tenancy in fact had occurred, was not binding; that there had been no partial enjoyment of the object of the contract, and that therefore, on the failure of the condition, the 56*l.* might be recovered as money had and received. Wrighton or Wright v. Newton, 2 C., M. & R. 124; 1 Gale, 67; 5 Tyr. 736.

A. having agreed to buy certain lands of B. had paid part of the purchase-money, and was let into possession. B. had not executed any conveyance:—Held, that this was a mere tenancy at will in A., and that if B. had made a demand of possession to determine the tenancy at will, he might recover the lands by ejectment. Doe d. Hlatt v. Miller, 5 C. P. 595—Parke.

An occupation under an agreement for the sale of premises, if a title can be made, creates a tenancy. Doe d. Newby v. Jackson, 2 D. & R. 514; 1 B. & C. 448.

If, in an agreement for the sale of leasehold premises, to be paid for by installments, it is stipulated that, in default of payment of the installments at specified times, the former installments shall be forfeited, and the vendor shall not be compellable to convey, upon which the purchaser is let into possession, and makes default, he is thenceforth a mere tenant upon sufferance. Doe d. Moore v. Lawder, 1 Stark. 308—Ellenborough.

If the vendor of a term, before the whole of the purchase-money is paid, agrees with the purchaser that the latter shall have possession of the premises till a given day, paying the reserved rent in the meantime, and that if he does not pay the residue of the purchase-money on that day, he shall forfeit the installments already paid, and shall not be entitled to an assignment of the lease; the purchaser being thus put into possession, if the residue of the purchase-money is not paid at the day appointed, no tenancy is created, and the vendor may maintain ejectment without any notice to quit, or demand of possession. Doe d. Leeson v. Sayer, 3 Camp. 8—Ellenborough.

A party who has been let into the possession of land under a contract of sale which has not been completed, is a tenant at will to the vendor. Ball v. Cullimore, 2 C., M. & R. 120; 1 Gale, 96; 5 Tyr. 753.

An occupation under an agreement for assigning a lease, where it was agreed that the assignee should pay the lessee, until the completion of the assignment, at the rate of 100*l.* per year, constitutes the relation of landlord and tenant between the lessee and assignee. Saunders v. Musgrave, 6 B. & C. 524; 9 D. & R. 529; 2 C. & P. 204.

So, where a party is let into possession of land under a contract of purchase, which afterwards goes off, he is liable for use and occupation, at the suit of the vendor, for the period during which he continues in possession after the contract went off. Howard v. Shaw, 8 M. & W. 110.

A. agreed with B. that he, A., would on payment of 900*l.*, as thereafter mentioned, grant, sell, and convey to B. the messuages, lands, and premises mentioned; and B. covenanted to pay the sum on or before the 1st January then next, or whenever a good title to the messuages, &c., should be tendered to him; but it was agreed that if B. should, on or before the 1st January, be desirous that that sum should remain a charge on the premises, then B. might require the same, so that upon completion by A. of the conveyances, B. should execute to A. proper conveyances for securing the 900*l.* on the premises, with interest. Covenant by B. to pay the interest so long as the principal should remain unpaid. Proviso, that, in case the interest should be in arrear thirty days next after the same should have become due, B. should be considered as a tenant to A. of the messuage, lands, &c., from the date thereof, at the yearly rent of 40*l.* 10*s.*, payable on the 16th April and the 16th October, in every year; and it should be lawful for A., his heirs and assigns, to enter and distrain, and to sell and dispose of the distress, or otherwise to deal with the same, in like manner as in distress for rent reserved by lease, to the end that A. might be fully paid and satisfied the interests and costs. B. gave due notice that he would require the purchase-money to remain a charge on the premises for five years; he was let into possession and received the rents, and in July, 1823, became bankrupt, and half-a-year's interest being in arrear for more than thirty days, A. distrained on the tenants then in possession of the premises. The assignees paid the amount of the distress:—Held, that the agreement was substantially an agreement for a purchase of the premises, and that it did not become a lease or an agreement for a lease, by reason of the interest having been in arrear more than thirty days, and of the proviso contained in the agreement; that the unpaid vendor was entitled to have the estate resold, and the produce and interest applied in payment of the purchase-money, and to prove against the estate for the residue; and consequently that the claim for interest was a debt provable under the commission, and therefore barred by the certificate. Hope v. Booth, 1 B. & Ad. 498.

If a man enters under a void lease, and pays rent, he is not a disseizor, but a tenant at will. Denn d. Warren v. Fearnside, 1 Wils. 170.

So, a parol agreement to lease lands for four years only creates a tenancy at will. Goodtitle d. Gallaway v. Herbert, 4 T. R. 680.

So, where one enters under a void lease by a tenant for life, and after his death the remainderman receives rent. Doe d. Martin v. Watts, 7 T. R. 88; 2 Esp. 501. And see Ludford v. Barber, 1 T. R. 86.

Yet, if the remainderman receives money as rent after the death of the tenant for life, it is an admission of a tenancy from year to year. Id.

And in such cases the tenant holds under the terms of the lease in all other respects except the duration of time. Doe d. Rigge v. Bell, 5 T. R. 471.

No tenancy can be implied under a party who has not the legal estate. Morgell v. Paul, 2 M. & R. 303.

As to creation of tenancies for years,—see this title, I., 2; of tenancies from year to year,—see this title, XVI., 1.

Nature of the possession; disclaimer.—The possession of a tenant at will is the possession of the lessor. Denn d. Warren v. Pearnside, 1 Wils. 176.

A tenant from year to year, who had agreed to buy his landlord's estate, having remained in possession for several years without paying either rent or interest on the purchase-money, the agent of the lessor applied to him to give up possession; to which he answered "that he had bought the property, and would keep it, and had a friend who was ready to give him the money for it:"—Held, that this was no disclaimer; because it was not a claim to hold the estate on a ground necessarily inconsistent with the continuance of the tenancy from year to year. Doe d. Gray v. Stanion, 1 M. & W. 695; 2 Gale, 154.

How tenancy is determined; necessity of notice to quit or demand of possession.—A., in 1817, let B. into possession of a farm as tenant at will, and in 1827, A. entered upon the land without B.'s consent, and cut and carried away stone therefrom:—Held, that this entry amounted to a determination of the estate at will. Turner v. Doe d. Bennett (in error), 9 M. & W. 643—Exch. Cham.

A feoffment, with livery of seisin made on the land, determines a tenancy at will, though the tenant is not present, nor assenting to the feoffment; but the feoffee may maintain trespass against the tenant at will who has been entered on his possession. Ball v. Cullimore, 2 C., M. & R. 120; 1 Gale, 96; 5 Tyr. 758.

A letter from the attorney of a lessor to the attorney of a tenant at will, stating that, unless the tenant paid the lessor what he owed him, he would, without delay, take measures for recovering possession of the property, is a sufficient indication of the lessor's will to put an end to the tenancy, and equivalent to a demand of possession previously to the commencement of the action. Doe d. Price v. Price, 2 M. & Scott, 404; 9 Bing. 356.

A tenant at will cannot put an end to his tenancy, even by an assignment, without giving notice to his landlord. Pinhorn v. Souster, 8 Exch. 768; 22 L. J., Exch. 206.

If A. is lessor at will, B., lessee at will, C., under-lessee at will; a demand of the possession made upon the premises from the wife of C. is sufficient to entitle A. to maintain ejectment. Doe d. Blair v. Street, 4 N. & M. 42.

A party, who defends in ejectment as landlord as to W., and as tenant as to B., cannot take advantage of a defect in the service of a demand of possession, made upon the tenant of B. for the purpose of determining an estate at will. Id.

A tenancy at will is determined by an agreement to purchase. Daniels v. Davison, 16 Ves. 252.

Where a party creates a tenancy at will, and afterwards becomes insolvent, the vesting order, with knowledge thereof by the tenant, is a determination of the tenancy; and if the tenant, after such information, continues in possession, he may be treated as a trespasser. Doe d. Davies v. Thomas, 6 Exch. 854; 20 L. J., Exch. 367.

Where a person, who has had the keys of a house given him in order that he may see over it, takes the opportunity to bring in his furniture and family, and the landlord afterwards sends for the keys, and, upon the refusal of them, enters himself, and turns out the party and his goods:—Held, that (the jury having found that a tenancy at will had been created) there was ample evidence in the facts to show a determination of the will. Pullen or Pollon v. Brewer, 7 C. B., N. S. 371; 6 Jur., N. S. 509.

The defendant occupied land, under parish officers, and had paid rent; they gave an invalid notice to quit at the end of the first year, and, by a lease signed only by two of them, demised to the plaintiff for a term of years, to commence from the end of the defendant's tenancy. Under this lease the plaintiff entered; but the defendant refused to give up certain plants he had himself planted, and subsequently entered and took them away:—Held, that he was liable in trespass; that though the lease was invalid, there was evidence that the plaintiff entered under the authority of all the parish officers, and that therefore the defendant's tenancy being either a tenancy at will or on sufferance, was lawfully determined, and his entry wrongful. Wallis v. Delmar, 29 L. J., Exch. 276.

A., having been in possession of a house and land adjoining, as tenant at will to the lord of a manor, was told by a subsequent lord that he must leave. On his refusal to do so, a writ of ejectment was served upon him: it was then verbally arranged that A. should give up part of the land, and retain the house and remaining land during the life of himself and wife:—Held, that these acts amounted to a determination of the tenancy at will, and as a new tenancy at will was thereby created, the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 7, 10 and 14, began to run from that time, and not from the date of the original tenancy. Locke v. Matthews, 13 C. B., N. S. 753; 9 Jur., N. S. 874; 11 W. R. 348; 7 L. T., N. S. 824.

One who is put in possession upon an agreement for the purchase of land, cannot be ousted by ejectment before his lawful possession is determined by demand of possession or otherwise. Right d. Lewis v. Beard, 13 East, 210.

An agreement between P. and W. for the sale of lands to W., was to be completed on the 25th March; but before the day W. agreed to let to the defendant from that day, and the defendant was let into possession before that day by the consent of P., upon notice to P. that W. had agreed to let to him; on the 29th May, a conveyance was executed as of the 25th March, subject to a term redeemable on payment by W. of purchase-money with interest, with power to P. to enter for default of payment by W.:—Held, that P. might bring ejectment for default of payment, without giving the defendant notice to quit. Doe d. Parker v. Boulton, 6 M. & S. 148.

Where J., who was tenant at will to W., died, and the defendant, who was heir at law to J., entered into possession, and claimed the land as his own:—Held, that the devisees of W. might bring an ejectment against the defendant, without giving him notice to quit or demanding possession. Doe d. Burgess v. Thompson, 1 N. & P. 215; 5 A. & E. 532.

A minister of a dissenting congregation placed in the possession of a chapel and a dwelling-house by certain persons, in whom the legal estate was vested, in trust to permit and suffer the chapel to be used for the purpose of religious worship, is a mere tenant at will to those trustees; and his tenancy is determined instantaneously by a demand of possession. He is not entitled de jure before the determination of his tenancy to have a reasonable time for the removal of his furniture. Doe d. Nicholl v. McKaig, 10 B. & C. 721. S. P., Doe d. Jones v. Jones, 10 B. & C. 718.

Half a year's notice must be given to a tenant at will, or his executor, to quit, or ejectment does not lie. Six months' notice is not sufficient. Parker d. Walker v. Constable, 3 Wils. 25.

Where a tenant under lease continues to hold after the expiration of it as a tenant at will, and assigns to another, the tenancy of the assignee will be held to commence at the day on which the original tenancy commenced under the lease, and notice to quit on that day only is good, notwithstanding the assignee came in on a different day. Doe d. Castleton v. Samuel, 5 Esp. 173—Ellenborough.

As to notice to quit in cases of tenancies for years,—see this title, XIV.; of tenancies from year to year,—see this title, XVI., 2; of weekly tenancies,—see this title, XVII.

XIX. LETTING FURNISHED HOUSES, APARTMENTS AND LODGINGS.

Agents to let.]—[By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 21, ss. 10, 11, 12, 13, an agent for letting furnished houses exceeding the rent or value of 25l. must take out an annual license.]

The plaintiff employed the defendant, as a house agent, to let a house for her on commission. In an action for introducing an insolvent tenant:—Held, that it was properly left to the jury upon the evidence to say whether it was part of the defendant's retainer to make reasonable inquiries as to the eligibility of the tenant. Ileys v. Tindall, 1 B. & S. 296; 9 W. R. 604; 4 L. T., N. S. 403; 30 L. J., Q. B. 362.

It is doubtful whether an agent to let a house has an implied general authority to let persons into possession, but slight evidence will be sufficient to show an express authority. Slack v. Crewe, 2 F. & F. 59—Pollock.

As to powers of agents to grant leases, generally,—see this title, I., 1.

Validity of contracts, in general; Statute of Frauds.]—An agreement to occupy lodgings at a yearly rent, payable in quarterly proportions (the occupation to commence on a future day), is an agreement relating to an interest in land within 20 Car. 2, c. 3, Statute of Frauds, s. 4. Inman v. Stamp, 1 Stark. 12—Ellenborough.

And a verbal agreement to take ready-furnished lodgings "for two or three years" is a contract for an interest in land, and valid as a lease for not exceeding three years. Edge v. Stafford, 1 Tyr. 293; 1 C. & J. 391.

A person who agrees to take furnished lodgings, but does not enter, is not liable to an action for use and occupation. Id.

By a parol agreement between the plaintiff, a boarding-house keeper, and the defendant, the defendant agreed to pay for the board and lodging of himself and man, and accommodation for his horse, at the boarding-house, 200l. a year from a fixed day; the agreement to be terminable by a quarter's notice on either side. The plaintiff having sued the defendant for a breach by him of this agreement, in refusing to become an inmate of the boarding-house:—Held, that though the agreement was unwritten, the action was maintainable; for that the contract was not one for any interest in or concerning land. Wright v. Stuart, 2 El. & El. 721; 6 Jur., N. S. 807; 29 L. J., Q. B. 104; 8 W. R. 413.

Letting lodgings is not a breach of a covenant not to under-let. Doe d. Pitt v. Laming, 4 Camp. 77—Ellenborough.

As to the operation and effect of the Statute of Frauds in respect of leases and agreements for letting, generally,—see this title, I., 3.

Implied terms as to fitness of premises.]—It is an implied condition in the letting of a furnished house that it shall be reasonably fit for habitation; if it is not (e. g., where it is greatly infested with bugs), the tenant may quit it without notice. Smith v. Marable, 11 M. & W. 5; 2 D., N. S. 810; 12 L. J., Exch. 223; Car. & M. 479.

Upon the letting of a furnished house for immediate occupation, with an express condition that it is fit for occupation, if it is not so, and is at once given up on that account, the landlord cannot recover either the rent or for use and occupation. On such a contract, whether express or implied, it is a breach of the condition if the house is so infested and overrun with bugs, as to render it unfit for occupation; and as the condition applies to the whole house, it is a breach if any of the rooms are in that state. But it must appear that the nuisance existed to a serious and substantial extent, and was such as the tenant could not reasonably be expected either to endure or to extirpate. Campbell v. Wenlock, 4 F. & F. 716—Cockburn.

A defendant agreed to hire of the plaintiff a house and household furniture, and, at the expiration of the tenancy, to leave the furniture cleaned:—Held, that this contract was supported by proof that the furniture was clean at the time the defendant took possession of it, and that he agreed to leave it as he found it. Stanley v. Agnew, 12 M. & W. 827; 13 L. J., Exch. 197.

In an agreement to let a furnished house there is an implied condition that the house shall be fit for occupation at the time at which the tenancy is to begin, and if the condition is not fulfilled the lessee is entitled thereupon to rescind the contract. Wilson v. Finch Hatton, 2 L. R., Exch. Div. 836; 46 L. J., Exch. Div. 489; 25 W. R. 537; 36 L. T., N. S. 473.

The defendant agreed to rent the plaintiff's furnished house for three months from the 7th of May, but having at the beginning of the intended tenancy discovered that the house was, owing to defective drainage, unfit for habitation, refused to occupy it. The plaintiff repaired the drains, and on the 26th of May tendered the house in a wholesome condition to the defendant, who refused to occupy or to pay any rent. The plaintiff having sued for the rent, and for use and occupation:—Held, that the state of the house at the beginning of the intended tenancy entitled the defendant to rescind the contract, and that he was not liable for the rent or for use and occupation. Ib.

Punishment of persons letting infected houses.—[By the Sanitary Law Amendment Act, 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 89, s. 56, if any owner or occupier or person employed to let for hire, or to show for the purposes of letting for hire, any house or part of a house, when questioned by any person negotiating for the hire of such house or part of a house, as to the fact of there being in such house, or having within six weeks previously been therein, any person suffering from an infectious, contagious, or epidemic disease, knowingly makes a false answer to such question, the person so answering falsely shall be guilty of an offense punishable on summary conviction, and, at the discretion of the justices having cognizance of the case, be liable to be imprisoned, with or without hard labor, for a period not exceeding one month, or to pay a penalty not exceeding 20l.]

Enjoyment and use of premises.—If a person takes lodgings on the first and second floors of a house, he has a right to the use of the door-bell, the knocker, and the sky-light of the staircase, and the water-closet, unless it is otherwise stipulated at the time of the taking of the lodgings; therefore, if the landlord deprives the lodger of the use of either, an action lies. Underwood v. Burrows, 7 C. & P. 26—Abinger.

As to condition and use of demised premises, in general,—see this title, III., 2.

Destruction of premises.—When furnished apartments have been let by a verbal contract at a sum payable quarterly, and the premises are destroyed by fire in the middle of a quarter, an action lies for the use and occupation during the current quarter, until the fire, at a rate proportioned to the time of actual occupation, if it appears that both parties have agreed that the occupier's liability does not continue after the occurrence of the fire; for such agreement negatives the supposition of a demise for a certain time, and shows a contract in respect of the occupation de die in diem. Parker v. Gibbins, 1 Q. B. 421; 1 G. & D. 10; 5 Jur. 1036.

As to effect of destruction of demised premises,—see also this title, V., 1; VII., 2.

Rent.—A. let to B. a furnished house, at a certain rent payable in advance from a certain future day, and agreed that it should be furnished suitably for a school:—Held, that the suitable furnishing of the house was a condition precedent to the right to demand the rent. Mechell v. Wallace, 6 N. & M. 310; 7 A. & E. 54, n.

An owner of a house, having mortgaged it in fee, and continuing in possession, let it as a ready-furnished house to the defendant. He afterwards became bankrupt, and then, with the assent of his assignees, let the house ready furnished to the defendant by the week, who, after three weeks' occupation, received notice of the mortgagee to pay rent to him:—Held, in an action brought by the assignees for use and occupation of the house and furniture, that they were entitled to recover for the use of the furniture; that the rent of the house and furniture might be apportioned, or if not, that, upon the entry of the mortgagee claiming the house, and having no interest in the furniture, a new agreement might be inferred, to take the house at a reasonable rent from the mortgagee, and to pay a reasonable amount as compensation for the use of the furniture to the assignees. Silmon v. Matthews, 8 M. & W. 827.

A declaration for rent stated a demise of a messuage, land, and premises, with the appurtenances. The proof was a demise of a messuage and land, together with the furniture, utensils, and implements:—Held, that as the rent issued out of the real property, and not out of the furniture, it was sufficient to allege and prove a demise of the real property, and therefore there was no variance. Farewell v. Dickenson, 6 B. & C. 251; 9 D. & R. 345.

Where a lessee quitted, in the middle of his term, apartments which he had taken for a year, and the lessor let them to another tenant:—Held, that she could not recover rent against the lessee for a subsequent portion of the year, during which the apartments had been unoccupied. Walls v. Atcheson, 8 Bing. 462; 11 Moore, 379; 2 C. & P. 268.

But if a tenant quits apartments without giving notice, the landlord may recover the rent, although he has put up a bill in the window for the purpose of letting the apartments. Redpath v. Roberts, 3 Esp. 225—Kenyon.

So, if the landlord lights fires in the rooms, or even uses the fires, it will not deprive him of his right to rent. Griffith v. Hodges, 1 C. & P. 419—Abbott.

If a landlord of furnished lodgings, by his misconduct, justifies a tenant in an abrupt departure, during a tenancy limited to a specific period, he cannot recover rent for the whole time agreed on, but is entitled to rent for the time during which there has been an actual occupation. Kirkman v. Jervis, 7 D. P. C. 678.

Goods of a tenant's lodger being distrained together with the tenant's, and sold first, after notice from the lodger, and the tenant's goods turning out to be sufficient to satisfy the rent and charges, the lodger is entitled to sue for an excessive distress. Wilkinson v. Ibbett, 2 F. & F. 300—Martin.

A tenant of apartments is not justified in quitting without notice, merely from a fear, however reasonable, that his goods may be seized for his landlord's rent. Rickett v. Trullick, 6 C. & P. 56—Vaughan.

I. SATISFACTION OF DEBTS.

When legacy to creditor is a satisfaction of the debt, in general.]—A legacy to a creditor equal to or exceeding the amount of the debt is, in the absence of any intimation of a contrary intention, a satisfaction of the debt; but slight circumstances will be taken advantage of to withdraw a case from this rule. Stroud v. Stroud, 8 Scott, N. R. 166; 7 M. & G. 417.

A legacy will never be deemed a satisfaction of a legal demand, when that demand was unliquidated at the time of the legacy.

given, nor where it was given before the time the demand accrued or the debt was contracted, unless the will expressly directs that it shall be a satisfaction. Le Sage v. Coussmaker, 1 Esp. 187—Kenyon.

A direction by a testator that all his just debts shall be paid will not by itself suffice to prevent the application of the general rule, that a legacy to a creditor is to be taken as a satisfaction pro tanto of a debt. Edmunds v. Love, 8 Kay & J. 318; 8 Jur., N. S. 508; 20 L. J., Chanc. 432.

A running account, to prevent the application of such general rule, must be an account in which there are payments in and out on both sides, not where all the payments are in one direction, viz., in diminution of the debt. Id.

Equity leans against satisfaction of a debt by a legacy, but in favor of a provision by will being in satisfaction of a portion by contract. Thynne v. Glengall, 2 H. L. Cas. 131; 12 Jur. 805.

Small differences between the debt and the legacy negative the presumption of satisfaction, but are disregarded in the case of portions. Id.

A gift of residue cannot be a satisfaction of a debt, because the amount being uncertain, it may be less than the debt; but as a portion may be satisfied by a smaller legacy pro tanto, so on principle a residue ought to be considered as satisfaction of a portion altogether, or pro tanto, according to the amount. Id.

A legatee, who is also a debtor to the testator's estate, cannot claim payment of the legacy without paying the debt; and the legacy given to a wife, but payable by law to the husband, is in the same position for this purpose as a legacy to the husband himself, subject to her right of survivorship where the interest is reversionary, and to her equity to a settlement when it becomes vested in possession. Batchelor, In re, Sloper v. Oliver, 21 W. R. 901; 43 L. J., Chanc. 101.

Where, however, the legacy to the wife is reversionary, and she, with her husband's concurrence, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57, assigns it to a purchaser for value, the deed acknowledged under the statute overreaches the jus mariti, and the purchaser takes the legacy discharged from all right of retainer which the executor might have asserted against the husband. Id.

— in particular instances.—A. bequeathed to B. 1,200*l.*, and appointed C. executor of her will. C. had sufficient assets, but did not pay the legacy to B. C. afterwards made his will, by which he bequeathed to B. an annuity of 700*l.*, and expressed it to be "in satisfaction of the debt or sum of 1,200*l.*," but which annuity B. did not accept:—Held, that the sum of 1,200*l.* was money had and received to the use of B. Gorton v. Dyson, Gow, 78—Dallas.

A surgeon forbore to send in his bill for medicines and attendances to a deceased patient in her life-time, under the expectation of a legacy. On her death, finding she had left him nothing, he made a claim on her executors:—Held, that he was entitled to recover, no proof having been given of any understanding between the parties that he was to be paid only by a legacy. Baxter v. Gray, 8 M. & G. 771; 4 Scott, N. R. 374.

A testator, who had advanced money to his son, and paid large sums on his account, bequeathed him a legacy without making mention of the debt:—Held, that the loan and unascertained balance must be set off against the legacy. Smith v. Smith, 3 Giff. 263.

A legacy by a debtor to her creditor is a pro tanto discharge of the debt, when it appears that the testatrix had made a proposal to that effect to her creditor, and that he had not objected to the arrangement. Hammond v. Smith, 33 Beav. 452; 10 Jur., N. S. 117; 12 W. R. 328; 9 L. T., N. S. 746.

After payment of his debts a testator gave certain legacies, one of 150*l.* to B., and he directed his executors to pay "my bequests only to the individuals herein named." The testator owed B. 150*l.*:—Held, that the legacy was not a satisfaction of the debt, but that B. was entitled to both. Jefferies v. Mitchell, 20 Beav. 15.

A debtor by deed assigned his effects for the benefit of his creditors, who thereby covenanted not to sue him. One of these creditors by will gave the residue of his estate among six persons, and directed that such of them as should be indebted to him at his decease, should accept the debt as part of his share. One of these persons was the debtor:—Held, that the debt was satisfied by the assignment of the testator's covenant not to sue, and that the executors were bound to pay to the debtor his full share of the residue. Gold v. Greenfield, 2 Sm. & G. 476; 23 L. J., Chanc. 630.

A debt due on a bond executed in contemplation of marriage:—Held, not to be satisfied by a legacy of a greater amount. Haynes v. Mico, Romilly's Notes of Cases, 41; 1 Brown C. C. 120.

A husband, on separating from his wife, covenanted by the deed of separation to pay to a trustee for her an annuity of 52*l.* per annum, payable on the 1st May, the 1st August, the 1st November, and the 1st February in every year, such annuity to be for her separate use, &c. He afterwards devised specific real estate to trustees, upon trust, out of the rents, to pay his wife 52*l.* per annum, by equal quarterly payments on the 1st February, the 1st May, the 1st August, and the 1st November in each year. The will contained no direction for payment of debts:—Held, that the annuity given by the will was a satisfaction of the debt created by the deed of separation. Atkinson v. Littlewood, 31 L. T., N. S. 225; 18 L. R., Eq. 595—V. C. M.

As to effect of bequests to executors,—see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

II. ASSENT OF EXECUTORS.

What amounts to assent.]—The doctrine that slight evidence is sufficient of the assent of executors to a bequest, or that it may be implied applies only, in ordinary cases, where the assent would be rightful, and not where it must be implied against their own acts. Tudor v. Guest, 27 L. J., Exch. 895.

Where a bequest to the defendant was by a husband, of leasehold property, devised to his deceased wife for her separate use, and which she had bequeathed to the plaintiff, and the husband's executors joined with the devisee of the wife in suing:—Held, that even supposing that the husband's assent was necessary to the validity of the wife's will, the assent of the executors to the bequest by him to the defendant must be proved by express evidence, and was not to be presumed or implied opposed to their own act in suing. Ib.

H. devised a term to his nephew for life, with remainder over, with a leasing power for twenty-one years, and made him and two others executors; the nephew entered, and was possessed, and alone demised the premises for forty-two years, reserving rent to himself, his executors, &c.:—Held, that neither his entry on the land, nor his sole lease reserving rent to himself and his executors, which was alike inconsistent with his interest as tenant for life and his duty as executor, should be deemed an assent to the legacy; and that the lease should therefore take effect for the whole forty-two years, out of the lessor's legal interest as executor. Doe d. Hayes v. Sturges, 7 Taunt. 217; 2 Marsh. 505.

A. devised the residue of a term determinable on lives, to B. After the decease of the testator the administrator with the will annexed paid the rent reserved for six years, and charged it to B.:—Held, that this was sufficient evidence of his assent to the bequest to enable B. to maintain ejectment. Doe d. Mabblerly v. Mabblerly, 6 C. & P. 126—Tindal.

Where an executrix has a life estate in a chattel under a bequest, her taking possession of the chattel is no assent to a further bequest thereof in remainder. Richards v. Browne, 3 Bing. N. C. 493; 4 Scott, 262; 3 Hodges, 27.

Where A., the legatee of a term, entered and occupied for a short time, and then quitted the possession, it is a question for the jury whether the executors have or have not assented to the bequest; and whether a contract with A. for an under-lease was made with A. in his own right, or as agent to the executors. Richardson v. Gifford, 3 N. & M. 825.

The assent of an executor to a bequest is not a matter of law, but a question of fact for the jury. Mason v. Farnell, 12 M. & W. 674; 1 D. & L. 576; 13 L. J., Exch. 142.

A. bequeathed to his two sons his two carriage manufactories, with all fixtures, implements, tools, stock, job-carriages, harness, and everything appertaining to his trade in the manufactories. At the time of his death, a carriage was in one of the manufactories, unfinished, which was being built to the order of a purchaser. A question arose between the executors and the sons, whether this carriage fell within the bequest; and the executors paid the legacy duty on the whole, but annexed the following memorandum to the legacy receipt:—"A disagreement arising between the sons and the executors, as to whether the whole of this item belongs to the sons, or part to the residue, the executors desire to pay the duty on the whole, leaving it for them to settle with the legatees the proportion of duty when the matter in dispute shall be determined." The sons retained possession of and finished the carriage, delivered it to the purchaser and received the price. In an action by the executors against them for money had and received, commenced two years afterwards:—Held, that there was no evidence to go to the jury of assent by the executors to the legacy of the carriage to the sons. Elliott v. Elliott, 9 M. & W. 23.

F., the elder, bequeathed leasehold premises to F., the younger, in trust to sell the same, and out of the proceeds to retain for his own use 150*l.* to reimburse himself funeral expenses, and to divide the surplus, if any, among the testator's children and grandchild. F. did not take out probate of his father's will, but entered into possession of the premises and retained them till his death, having by his will bequeathed them to his executors, who demised them to the defendant. The plaintiff having taken out administration with the will annexed of F., the elder, and brought ejectment to recover the premises:—Held, that he was not entitled to recover, as the act of bequeathing the premises by F., the younger, was evidence of the latter having elected to take the premises as legatee. Fenton v. Clegg, 9 Exch. 680; 2 C. L. R. 1014; 23 L. J., Exch. 197.

Leasehold property was bequeathed to three persons, who were also appointed executors of the will, upon certain trusts. One only of the executors proved the will. Six years afterwards he conveyed the whole property, professing to do so as executor:—Held, that lapse of time from the probate of the will was no evidence of an assent to the legacy, and that, therefore, the whole property passed. Hawkins v. Williams, 10 W. R. 692—Q. B.

Operation and effect of executor's assent.]—Whenever an executor assents to a bequest in his testator's will, there is an end of his interest in the thing bequeathed, and he cannot afterwards dissent. And it is equally true that the executor's assent to the first devise is an assent to the remainder over. Foley v. Burnell, 4 Bro. P. C. 84.

An assent to a legacy, given by an executor who dies without proving the will, becomes operative, on administration being afterwards taken out, with the will annexed. Johnson v. Warwick, 17 C. P. 516; 25 L. J., C. P. 102.

III. PAYMENT.

Validity and effect, in general.—Where a party entitled to a legacy under a will has a claim against the testator, which he conceals from the executor until after he has received the legacy, he cannot afterwards, in an action against the executor, object that the amount of the legacy was not paid in a due course of administration. Stroud v. Stroud, 7 M. & G. 417; 8 Scott, N. R. 160.

If on the footing of a supposed illegitimacy the title of the cestui que trust to a legacy is disputed and denied by the trustee, and the former is thereby induced to accept from the trustee a smaller sum than that to which he is entitled under the will, and by deed to release the trustee from the payment of the legacy, equity will not permit such a transaction to stand. Thompson v. East-Wood, 2 L. R., App. Cas. 215—II. L.

Even without any evidence of fraud, such a transaction is null and void. Ib.

Repayment by legatees.—An executor who compels a legatee to refund can recover only the capital which he has paid to the legatee, without any intermediate income. Jervis v. Wolferstan, 18 L. R., Eq. 18; 43 L. J., Chanc. 809; 30 L. T., N. S. 452—R.

There being a dispute on the construction of a will as to how a fund should be divided between two legatees, both parties took counsel's advice, and the executor divided the fund in accordance with such advice, the dissatisfied legatee assenting in order to avoid litigation. Two years afterwards the dissatisfied legatee filed a bill against the executor and the other legatee to have the will construed by the court, and the money received by the other legatee repaid:—Held, that as the fund had been divided by consent with a perfect knowledge of the facts on both sides, and as the mistake, if any, was a mistake of law, the suit could not be maintained. Rogers v. Ingham, 35 L. T., N. S. 677; 46 L. J., Chanc. Div. 822; 3 L. R., Ch. Div. 351; 25 W. R. 338—C. A.

Payment into court, under 80 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 32, of a legacy bequeathed to an infant, does not constitute such infant a ward of court. Hillary, In re, 2 Drew. & Sm. 461; 12 L. T., N. S. 840; 13 W. R. 959.

When executors paid residue into the bank to the credit of infants, under the Legacy Duty Act, 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, and subsequently incurred costs in the Probate Court, repayment was allowed to them on petition out of fund so paid in. Blight, In re, 21 W. R. 573—V. C. W.

When persons entitled to a legacy under a will were minors domiciled in Scotland, and the executor lodged the money so bequeathed in court:—Held, that the money so lodged might be paid out on the joint receipt of the minors and their curator appointed according to the law of Scotland. Ferguson, In re, 23 W. R. 762—Ir. R.

IV. INTEREST.

When allowed; and from what time.—It is a general rule for convenience, to consider the personal estate to have been reduced into possession in a year from the death of the testator, and therefore interest is given upon legacies from that period, unless some other is fixed by the will, though actual payment within that time may in many instances be impracticable. Wood v. Penoyre, 13 Ves. 333. S. P., Bourke v. Ricketts, 10 Ves. 333.

Interest on legacies is given for delay of payment, and, consequently, until the day of payment arrives, no interest is, in general, demandable. Donovan v. Needham, 9 Beav. 164; 10 Jur. 150; 15 L. J., Chanc. 193.

The rule that general legacies bear interest only from the end of a year from the death of the testator, applies to similar legacies under a feme covert's will made in exercise of a power of appointment. Tatham v. Drummond, 2 H. & M. 262.

A legacy to a child carries interest, on the ground of the presumed intention of the parent to fulfill his moral duty of providing for the maintenance of his child; but if he has discharged that duty by providing for the maintenance of the child out of another fund, the legacy does not necessarily carry interest. Rouse, In re, 9 Hare, 649.

The allowance of interest upon a legacy charged upon real estate, and due upwards of six years, is to be calculated from the filing of the bill in equity and not from the date of the decree, though the bill is not filed by the legatee. Chappell v. Rees, 1 De G., M. & G. 393; 16 Jur. 417.

A testator made a settlement on his daughter, who was adult, and gave her a legacy by his will:—Held, that the legacy did not bear interest from the death of the testator, but only from the end of the first year after that event. Wall v. Wall, 15 Sim. 513; 11 Jur. 403; 16 L. J., Chanc. 305.

A., who died in 1823, directed the trustees of his will to raise a legacy by sale of his real estates:—Held, that the legatee was not barred by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, from claiming interest on the legacy from the end of the first year after the testator's death. Gough v. Bult, 16 Sim. 823; 12 Jur. 859; 17 L. J., Chanc. 486.

A testator, after bequeathing an annuity, charged the same upon his real estates, and then devised his real estates, subject to, and charged with, the payment of the annuity, to his grandson in fee:—Held, that the grandson was not a trustee for the annuitant, within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 25, so as to entitle the latter to recover more than six years' arrears of the annuity. Francis v. Grover, 5 Hare, 39; 10 Jur. 280.

Interest on a legacy bequeathed in trust to apply the income or the principal for the benefit of an infant, is payable from the death of the testator. Chidgey v. Whitby, 41 L. J., Chanc. 693—V. C. W.

Devise of real estate upon trust for sale, and out of the proceeds of such sale to pay legacies:—Held, that interest on the legacies was payable from a year after the testator's death. Turner v. Buck, 18 L. R., Eq. 801; 43 L. J., Chanc. 583; 22 W. R. 748—R.

A testatrix gave legacies to J. and R., the legacies to be paid to each on attaining thirty, with a power to the executors to advance part of the income for maintenance, and directed that the surplus should be accumulated, and added to the principal, with limitation over in case of either, or both, not attaining thirty. The will then directed that, in every case in which any person should under the will be entitled to an estate for life in the income of any sum of money, such sum should bear three per centum interest, and no more, until the principal should become payable; and in case any of her personal property should produce a greater amount of interest than that rate, that the surplus should belong to, and form part of, her residuary property:—Held, that the legatees were entitled to have the whole income of the funds in which their legacies were invested, after providing for their maintenance and education, accumulated for their benefit, and that the interest on their legacies was not to be limited to three per cent. Bayley v. Birch, 4 Ir. R., Eq. 142—V. C. C.

As to right to and recovery of interest, generally,—see INTEREST OF MONEY

V. RECOVERY.

When action lies for legacy; and proceedings in general.]—No action lies for a pecuniary legacy. Deeks v. Strutt, 5 T. R. 690. S. P., Parish v. Wilson, Peake, 73. And see Southampton (Mayor, &c.) v. Graves, 8 T. R. 593.

But an action lies against an executor to recover a specific chattel bequeathed after his assent to the bequest. Dos d. Says and Sele v. Guy, 3 East, 120; 4 Esp. 154.

An action lies against an executrix for a legacy upon a promise in consideration of assets; but if the action is brought against her personally in her own right, the judgment can only be de bonis propriis. Hawkes v. Saunders, Cowp. 289. S. P., Atkins v. Hill, Cowp. 284.

The plaintiff and three others being residuary legatees, the defendants, as the executors named in the will, accounted with them; and having paid to the latter the respective sums due to them thereon, took from them and from the plaintiff a release, but did not pay the plaintiff his share, he having consented to allow it to remain in their hands:—Held, that the money not being retained by the defendants in their character of executors, the plaintiff was entitled to recover it. Gregory v. Harman, 1 M. & P. 209; 8 C. & P. 205.

Where an executor agrees with a legatee to allow him interest on his legacy, if he will permit it to remain in his hands, it becomes a loan to the executor, for which he is personally responsible at law, and cannot plead plene administravit in bar to an action by the legatee. Wusney v. Earnshaw, 4 Tyr. 806.

In an action against executors (upon an account stated) for a legacy, it is competent to the plaintiff to impeach any particular item or items on the credit side of the account. Rose v. Savory, 2 Scott, 199; 1 Hodges, 269; 2 Bing. N. C. 145.

E. bequeathed, subject to debts and legacies, the residue of his personal estate to his executors, to divide the same into two equal parts, and to divide one of such parts into six equal shares, and to pay one of such shares unto each of his cousins, T., W., and H., and the remaining as therein mentioned, and appointed M. his executor, who duly proved the will. M., having taken upon himself the execution of the will, called a meeting of the residuary legatees, at which H. was present, and exhibited an account charging himself with assets, and paid some of the legatees the greater portion of their share of the residue, and was about to pay H., but was prevented from so doing. Another meeting was afterwards called, at which H. was not present, when the executor exhibited another account, charging himself with assets, and crediting himself with payments and disbursements, and, among others, with having paid "cash for legacy duties." To this was appended a supplemental account, containing the following item:—"By cash retained for H., 179l. 10s." In an action for money had and received, and on an account stated, brought by H. against the executor, to recover the amount of the legacy:—Held, that the action was maintainable. Hart v. Minors, 2 C. & M. 700.

An action does not lie for the amount of the plaintiff's distributive share of the personal estate of an intestate, admitted by the administrator to be in his hands. A fortiori it will not lie against the executor of such administrator, upon an admission made by the former, although the latter has expressly promised payment. Jones v. Tanner, 1 M. & R. 420; 7 B. & C. 542.

An executor of a mortgagee cannot maintain an action of covenant for a specific bequest, although his executor has assented to the bequest, as the covenant with the mortgagee is collateral, and does not run with the land. Canham v. Rust, 2 Moore, 164.

A legatee cannot maintain a suit in the ecclesiastical court to recover his legacy when there are only equitable and not legal assets. Barker v. May, 9 B. & C. 489; 4 M. & R. 886.

The Wills Act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26) does not enable a testator to bequeath a chose in action, so as to pass the right of suing to the legatee. Bishop v. Curtis, 17 Jur. 23; 21 L. J., Q. B. 291; 18 Q. B. 878.

— in county court.]—Where real and personal property is left to executors upon trust to sell, and after paying legacies to divide the residue among certain persons, a county court has jurisdiction under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 65, to adjudicate on a claim made by one of such persons to a share of the residue against the executors. Pears v. Williams, 2 L. M. & P. 515; 6 Exch. 833; 15 Jur. 932; 20 L. J., Exch. 881.

A testator bequeathed to the defendant 100*l.*, in trust to pay that amount to the plaintiff on his attaining twenty-one, and in the meantime to invest it, and to pay the plaintiff the interest, with power to the defendant, whom he styled "trustee," to advance either a part or the whole for the education of the plaintiff, or otherwise for his benefit during his infancy. The plaintiff, on attaining his majority, sued the defendant in the county court for the residue of the 100*l.*, part having been applied pursuant to the terms of the will:—Held, that the county court had no jurisdiction, the 100*l.* not having been given as a legacy, but by way of trust. Phillips v. Hewston, 11 Exch. 699; 25 L. J., Exch. 133.

When action is barred by effluxion of time.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40, money charged upon land and legacies shall be deemed satisfied at the end of twenty years next after a present right to receive the same shall have accrued for or release of the same, unless in the meantime some part of the principal money, or some interest thereon, shall have been paid, or some acknowledgment of the right thereto shall have been given in writing, signed by the person to whom the same shall be payable, or his agent, to the person entitled thereto or his agent; and in such case no action or suit, or proceeding, shall be brought but within twenty years after such payment or acknowledgment, or the last, if more than one.]

This section applies to legacies payable out of personal estate, as well as to legacies charged on real estate. Sheppard v. Duke, 9 Sim. 567; 3 Jur. 168.

A devisee of lands, charged with payment of legacies, devised his estate to a trustee, in trust, to sell, and in the meantime to let the estate, and apply the rents and net proceeds towards payment of his debts, and the legacies charged thereon by his testator's will:—Held, an express trust for the payment of the legacies; and that the claim was not barred. Watson v. Saul, 1 Giff. 188; 5 Jur. N. S. 404.

A devise of real estate, subject to and charged with the payment of legacies, does not create a trust for securing their payment or prevent the above statute from running against the legatees. Proud v. Proud, 32 L. J., Chanc. 125; 32 Beav. 284; 7 L. T., N. S. 553.

By a will of a testator who died in 1827, of which W. was sole executor, a legacy was bequeathed to E., who died in 1830, having bequeathed her residuary personal estate to W. E.'s will was proved in 1835 by W., who was afterwards found to be a lunatic from the 3d December, 1840. On the 12th October, 1848, administration with the will annexed of the testator's estate during the lunacy was granted to M. W. died in 1857, and in December, 1858, a bill was filed for the administration of his estate. The legacy had never been paid. The Statute of Limitations, which applies to the recovery of legacies, passed in 1833:—Held, that a present right to receive the legacy, within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40, did not accrue to any one until the administration granted to M. in October, 1848; and hence, that the right to sue for the legacy was not barred. Binn v. Nichols, 3 L. R., Eq. 236; 35 L. J., Chanc. 635; 14 W. R. 727.

Where the person liable for the payment of a legacy, and the person entitled to receive it, are the same, no question of limitation under the statute can arise. Ib.

When a legacy, charged upon the residuary real estate, was bequeathed to trustees, for B. for life, and after his death for his children, and there was not, during his life, from 1806 to 1863, any payment made on account of the legacy, or any trustee capable of giving a discharge for it:—Held, that the Statute of Limitations did not begin to run against the children until the death of B. Carroll v. Hargrave, 5 Ir. R., Eq. 123—V. C.

A legatee, after the lapse of twenty-three years, sent in a claim for his legacy. The surviving executrix had, during part of the time, been a lunatic:—Held, that her lunacy was no bar to the statute running. Boldero v. Halpin, Haues, Ex parte, 10 W. R. 320—V. C. M.

A testatrix gave property, consisting partly of realty and partly of personalty, over which she had a power of appointment, and also all her own property, to three gentlemen, whom she also appointed her executors, upon trust to pay the income to her daughter for life, and after her daughter's death upon trust to pay several charitable legacies, and she constituted her executors residuary legatees. On a bill, filed nearly thirty years after her death, to obtain payment of one of the legacies:—Held, that the legacy was barred by the statute, and that there was no trust so as to take it out of the operation of the statute, as there had been no fund set apart for the payment of it. Cadbury v. Smith, 24 L. T., N. S. 52—R.

The executors paid the amount of one of the charitable legacies as a gift from themselves, but they obtained a receipt for the amount, releasing them from all liability in respect of the legacy:—Held, notwithstanding the release, that this was not an admission of assets to pay all the legacies. Ib.

After the death of one of the executors, his representatives paid the surviving executor 700*l.* as his share of the residuary estate:—Held, that this did not amount to an admission of assets for payment of the legacies in full, but only to an admission that there would have been so much money applicable towards payment of the legacies if they had not been barred by the statute. Ib.

As to limitations of actions for legacies charged on lands, annuities and arrears,—see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS AND SUITS.

Costs.—In an administration suit a legatee who has assigned his interest, and the assignee to whom he has assigned it, are only entitled to such an amount of costs as the legatee would have been entitled to had he made no assignment. And as between the assignor and assignee, even where the assignment includes only a part of the assignor's interest, and he therefore remains a necessary party to the suit, the assignee will be paid in full out of the amount allowed in priority to the assignor. Turner v. Goudon, 19 W. R. 403—V. C. M.

Who entitled to property in letters.—The receiver of a letter is the owner of it, and may use it for all lawful purposes; the only right which the writer of it has in reference to it is to restrain publication. Hopkinson v. Burghley, 86 L. J., Chanc. 504; 2 L. R., Chanc. 447—L. J.

The receiver of a letter has a sufficient property in the paper upon which it is written to entitle him to maintain detinue for it against the sender, into whose hands it has come as a bailee. *Oliver v. I. IN RESPECT OF LANDS.

Grant.—A beneficial license to be exercised upon land may be granted without deed, and without writing. Taylor v. Waters, 7 Taunt. 374.

A verbal license is not sufficient to confer an easement of having a drain in the land of another to convey water, and such license may be revoked, though it has been acted upon. Cocker v. Cooper, 1 C., M. & R. 418; 5 Tyr. 103.

A license under seal, if a mere license, is as revocable as a license by parol; and a license by parol, coupled with a grant of a nature capable of being made by parol, is as irrevocable as a license by deed. Wood v. Ledbitter, 13 M. & W. 838; 9 Jur. 187; 14 L. J., Exch. 161.

But a license by parol, coupled with a parol grant, or a pretended grant of something which can only be granted by deed, is a mere license; it is not an incident to a valid grant, and is, therefore, revocable. Id.

A., being possessed of a close of land, on which was erected a stand, which overlooked a race-course, authorized the issuing of tickets for admission to that stand during the continuance of the races, one of which tickets was purchased by B. for valuable consideration:—Held, that A. had a right, without assigning any reason, and without offering to return the value of the ticket, to order B. to quit the stand, and, on his refusal, to remove him by force. Id.

A., being on the eve of insolvency, made a bona fide verbal assignment of all his goods to B. in trust for the payment of his debts, and to hold the surplus for relations who had advanced money to him. An order was given by B., with A.'s consent, for sending the goods to an auctioneer for sale from time to time, and several portions were accordingly parted with and sold:—Held, that the successive deliveries were made under a mere license to sell the goods from time to time, and that the property in the whole did not pass to B. Normansell v. Creft, 17 L. J., Q. B. 297.

A license is not implied by law to a purchaser of goods (though sold under an execution or a distress), to enter upon the premises of the former owner and take them away, although they have remained there with his assent. Williams v. Morris, 8 M. & W. 458.

A parol demise of land reserved to the landlord "all the hedges, trees, thorn bushes, fences, with lop and top:—Held, that such reservation operated as a license to enter the land for the purpose of cutting and carrying away the trees. Hewitt v. Isham, 7 Exch. 77; 21 L. J., Exch. 35.

An auctioneer who is employed to sell goods on the premises of the proprietor has not such an interest in the goods as will make a license to enter on the premises irrevocable. Taplin v. Florence, 10 C. B. 744; 15 Jur. 402; 20 L. J., C. P. 137.

A parol agreement, by which a person is authorized to enter on premises, cannot make the license to enter irrevocable. Id.

A plaintiff, a tenant of a house for a term of years, being possessed of shelves, stoves, ranges, ovens, boilers, and other articles of household use, his own property, but annexed to the freehold, requested the landlord to purchase them at the expiration of the term, or let them remain for purchase by the incoming tenant, but to be taken away by the plaintiff if the tenant should refuse them. The landlord wrote an answer, declining to purchase, but adding, "I have no objection to your leaving them on the premises, and making the best terms you can with the incoming tenant." The articles remained unsevered from the freehold till the entry of the new tenant, who came in under a demise from the same landlord, but who declined to take them. The plaintiff (after the tenant had been two months in possession) demanded liberty to enter and remove the fixtures, but the tenant refused permission; and the plaintiff thereupon brought an action for the hindrance and trover against the tenant:—Held, that if the landlord's letter to the plaintiff amounted to a license to take away the articles, yet not being under seal it was no valid grant of such privilege as against a new tenant in possession, and not party to the license. Roffey v. Henderson, 17 Q. B. 574; 21 L. J., Q. B. 49; 16 Jur. 84.

Operation and effect.—A party claiming ownership in a field granted to the plaintiff a parol license to search therein for minerals. The plaintiff, acting under this license, dug pits in the field, and threw up sand and gravel, mixed with ore, which the defendant took away, professing to act under the authority of a third party. Before the defendant took away the sand, gravel, and ore, the party who gave the plaintiff the parol license granted him a similar license by deed:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain an action for the gravel, sand, and ore, as against the defendant, who was a wrong-doer. Northam v. Bowden, 11 Exch. 70; 24 L. J., Exch. 237.

Before bathing-machines came into use, certain parts of the shore of Hastings had been used from time immemorial for the purpose of bathing. Subsequently an act was passed prohibiting persons from bathing from the shore, except from bathing-machines, the owners of which were obliged to obtain a license from the local board for permission to ply for hire:—Held, that this license did not confer a right on the proprietors of bathing-machines to place them on the shore without the permission of the owner of the shore. Mace v. Philcox, 15 C. B., N. S. 600; 10 Jur., N. S. 630; 33 L. J., C. P. 124; 12 W. R. 670; 9 L. T., N. S. 766.

A canal company, in consideration of the lessee's expenditure on certain ice-houses on the banks of the canal, granted a lease thereof, with license to take ice from a part of the canal:—Held, that the license was not exclusive, but that it was a grant of sufficient ice to enable the lessee to fill the ice-houses; and that, so long as the lessee was able and willing to take this quantity of ice, the lessors could not derogate from their grant by subsequent licenses which would interfere with it. Newby v. Harrison, 2 Johns. & H. 303; 9 W. R. 349; 4 L. T., N. S. 397; affirmed on appeal, 4 L. T., N. S. 424; 30 L. J., Chanc. 383; 8 De G., F. & J. 287.

The proprietors of a canal by deed granted to the plaintiff the sole and exclusive right of putting or using pleasure-boats for hire on the canal:—Held, that this did not confer such an interest in the plaintiff as to give him a right of action against another person for using pleasure-boats for hire on the canal. Hill v. Tupper, 33 L. J., Exch. 217; 11 W. R. 784; 2 H. & C. 121; 9 Jur., N. S. 725.

Revocation and countermand.—An agreement to let a party have a trench for water, though given for a valuable consideration, if there is no conveyance, is a parol license revocable at the will of the grantor. Fentiman

v. Smith, 4 East, 107. S. P., Cocker v. Couper, 1 C., M. & R. 418; 5 Tyr. 102.

But a parol license to put a sky-light over the defendant's area (which impeded the light and air from coming to the plaintiff's dwelling-house through a window), cannot be recalled at pleasure after it has been executed at the defendant's expense; at least not without tendering the expenses he had been put to; and therefore no action lies as for a private nuisance arising from the existence of such sky-light. Winter v. Brockwell, 8 East, 308.

A parol license, after it is executed at the expense of the grantee, is not countermandable by the grantor. Where, therefore, the plaintiff's father gave the defendant leave, by parol, to lower the bank of a river and erect a weir, whereby a part of the water which before flowed to the plaintiff's mill was diverted:—Held, that his son could not maintain an action against the defendant for continuing the weir, although his father, a few years after the license was given, had required them to raise up the bank and pull down the weir. Liggins v. Inge, 5 M. & P. 712.

A license to be exercised upon land for twenty-one years, granted for a valuable consideration, and acted upon, cannot be countermanded. Wallis v. Harrison, 4 M. & W. 558; 2 Jur. 1019; 1 H. & H. 405.

Action for disturbing the possession of a pew; plea, an agreement by the plaintiff with the defendant and A., being churchwardens, that they should make a partition and divide the pew into two unequal pews, and that the churchwardens should have license to place parishioners in the lesser of them; and that the defendant and A. did, at their expense, so divide the pew, and place parishioners in the pew:—Held, that the agreement not being by deed, the license thereby granted was revocable, though acted upon at the expense of the defendant. Adams v. Andrews, 15 Q. B. 284; 15 Jur. 140; 20 L. J., Q. B. 33.

Where a party, on the 28th of October, sold a rick of hay on his land, with the condition that it might remain there, and be carried away from time to time by the purchaser, up to Lady-day next:—Held, that this license could not be revoked. Wood v. Manley, 3 P. & D. 5; 11 A. & E. 34; 3 Jur. 1028.

The locking of a gate, through which parol leave has been given to pass, is of itself a sufficient notice of revocation of the leave. Hyde v. Graham, 8 Jur., N. S. 1229; 1 H. & C. 598; 7 L. T., N. S. 563.

The plaintiff and the defendant having agreed, on a dispute existing between them as to a right of way, that the defendant should use the way, ad interim, without prejudice, until it should be determined how the question should be settled:—Held, the plaintiff having locked the gate, and the defendant broken the lock, that the equitable position of the parties was not such of the peace to be holden for the county, city, riding, liberty, or division in which such house, room, garden, or other place is situate (who are hereby authorized and empowered to grant such licenses as they in their discretion shall think proper), signified under the hands and seals of four or more of the justices there assembled, shall be deemed a disorderly house or place; and it is further, amongst other things, provided by section 8 of the said act that no such house, room, garden, or other place kept for any of the said purposes, although licensed as aforesaid, shall be open for any of the said purposes before the hour of five in the afternoon:

And whereas it is expedient to amend the said Act as hereinafter mentioned:

Be it enacted, &c., as follows:—

1. Amendment of section 8 of 25 Geo. 2, c. 30.—Section three of the recited act shall be construed as if, instead of the proviso, "that no such house, room, garden, or other place kept for any of the said purposes, although licensed as aforesaid, shall be open for any of the said purposes before the hour of five in the afternoon," there were substituted the proviso, "that no such house, room, garden, or other place kept for any of the said purposes, although licensed as aforesaid, shall be open for any of the said purposes before the hour of noon."

Provided, that if on any special occasion an occasional license of exemption shall have been granted under section 20 of the Licensing Act, 1872, in respect of any house, room, garden, or other place licensed under the recited act, no penalty or forfeiture shall be incurred for contravention of section 3 of the recited act, as hereby amended, on account of such house, room, garden, or other place being kept open for any of the purposes aforesaid on such special occasion from midnight until the hour specified in such occasional license as the hour for closing.

2. This act shall be deemed to have come into operation on the 29th September, 1874, and all proceedings now pending for forfeitures or penalties on account of any breach of either of the conditions mentioned in section 3 of the recited act shall be forthwith stayed, and no proceedings shall be instituted for any forfeiture or penalty on account of any such breach committed before the passing of this act.

3. This Act may be cited as the Public Entertainment Act, 1875.]

Suing for penalties.]—A person keeping a house open is (at all events during the same licensing year) liable only to one penalty. Garrett v. Messenger, 36 L. J., C. P. 337; 2 L. R., C. P. 538; 16 L. T., N. S. 414; 15 W. R. 164; 10 Cox C. C. 408.

The 18th section, which gives a form of declaration, extends to common informers. Green v. Botheroyd, 3 C. & P. 471—Tenterden.

Revocation of license.]—By a local act for the government of Cardiff, no house or room shall be kept or used for public dancing or music without a license from the justices on their general annual licensing day, and any house or room so kept and used without such license shall be deemed a disorderly house, and the persons occupying or rated as the occupier of the same, shall, on conviction before any two justices, be liable to a penalty. An inscription on the door or entrance is to be affixed, "Licensed pursuant to Act of Parliament." No house or room, although licensed, shall be opened for any of the said purposes except between the hours stated in the license, and notice as to the inscription and the limitation of time is to be inserted in the license. In case of a breach of these conditions the license may be forfeited, and revoked by the justices at any subsequent annual licensing day. Provided that it shall be lawful for every person who shall think himself aggrieved by any order of such justices to appeal therefrom to the Queen's Bench. L. received from the justices a license for a room in 1870, and in each subsequent year until 1873, when they refused a further renewal. The license in 1871 contained no limitation as to time, but the others both before and after were for one year. In 1871 L. transferred all his interest in this room to H., and some of his performance were indecent. On these grounds the justices revoked the license in 1873, and neither L. nor H. appealed. H. afterwards opened the room as before, and was convicted of so doing without a license:—Held, that the conviction was right. Hoffmann v. Bond, 32 L. T., N. S. 775—Q. B.

I. HOW CREATED OR ACQUIRED; AND NATURE AND INCIDENTS OF LIENS, IN GENERAL.

How created.]—The right of lien arises either by implication of law, or by express contract between the parties. Kirchner v. Veus, 12 Moore P. C. C. 361.

A party cannot acquire a lien by his wrongful act. Madden v. Kempster, 1 Camp. 12—Ellenborough.

Therefore, goods delivered to a person claiming them wrongfully, who pays freight and other charges, cannot be detained for those expenses against the rightful owner. Lempriere v. Pasley, 2 T. R. 485.

Interpretation and effect of agreements to give liens.]—The plaintiff's intestate bought a coach of the defendant, and gave him bills for the price, and agreed that the defendant "do have and hold a claim upon the coach until the debt be duly paid." One of the bills being dishonored, and the testator dead, the defendant obtained possession of the coach by a trick:—Held, that the agreement operated as a mere personal license from the testator to the defendant to retain possession of the coach, and would have been a defense to an action brought by the testator, but was not available after the property had been transferred to the administrator. Howes v. Ball, 7 B. & C. 481; 1 M. & R. 288.

Where A. pledges a chattel with B., and, pursuant to an agreement made between them at the time, A. has the possession of it for a limited period, for the use of B.; and at the end of such period it is returned to its ordinary place of custody, B. does not forfeit his lien, the possession of A. being, in such case, the possession of B. Reeves v. Capper, 5 Bing. N. C. 136; 6 Scott, 877; 1 Arn. 427; 2 Jur. 1067.

A. being possessed of an old vessel, sent her to B.'s yard to be repaired. B. agreed to find timber for the repairs, and materials were accordingly supplied by B. and other persons to the amount of 200*l*. The vessel was repaired in B.'s yard with these materials, but no work was done upon her either by B. or the other creditors. On the vessel being advertised for sale, B. and the other persons insisted that she should not be removed until they were paid. A.'s agent assented, and said they should be paid out of the purchase-money, and signed an authority to the auctioneer to that effect. The sale then proceeded, and the vessel was knocked down to C. for 300*l*. Immediately after the sale, B. and the other creditors applied to C. for payment, and he promised that he would, the following Thursday, bring the purchase-money for the auctioneer to pay the creditors with. C. did not do so:—Held, that the agreement for payment of the repairs out of the purchase-money, of which C. was cognizant, and to which he had assented, precluded him from maintaining trover until such payment was made. Norris v. Williams, 1 C. & M. 842.

The plaintiff having a cow at grass in the defendant's field, and being indebted for the agistment, agreed with him that the cow should be a security, that he would not remove her till the defendant was paid, and that, if he did, the defendant might take her wherever she might be, and keep her till he was paid. The plaintiff removed the cow, not having paid the debt, and the defendant seized her in the high road. In trespass for the taking:—Held, that the agreement might be set up as a defense under a plea that the cow was not the plaintiff's. Richards v. Symons, 8 Q. B. 90; 10 Jur. 6; 15 L. J., Q. B. 35.

To detain for title deeds, the defendant pleaded that K. was seized of the messuages to which they related, and devised them to D. for life, who agreed with the defendant to sell him all her interest therein; that before this agreement the deeds were in the custody of the defendant as D.'s agent, and that upon the making of the agreement D. left them in the possession of the defendant, that he might hold them till the agreement was performed:—Held, that this statement did not show, with sufficient certainty, any contract whereby the defendant acquired a lien on the deeds. Robertson v. Showler, 13 M. & W. 609; 2 D. & L. 687; 14 L. J., Exch. 120.

A. opened an account with a bank, it being agreed that he should be allowed to overdraw to a certain amount, but that for further overdrafts beyond that amount he should find security. A. overdraw beyond the specified amount without depositing any security. The bank pressed for payment of the whole, or at least a portion of the balance. A., in reply, wrote to the manager to state, that the arrival of the ship Tagus, which was daily expected, would put him in ample funds to adjust the account, and inclosed a policy on the cargo of the Tagus for 5,000*l*., indorsed payable to the manager of the bank:—Held, that this was not such a specific appropriation of the cargo of the Tagus as would give the bank a lien upon it in preference to other creditors of A. Jones v. Starkey, 16 Jur. 510—V. C. T.

To constitute a lien on any property, there must be a clear agreement for the specific appropriation of that property. Id.

By agreement between A., a publican, and B., a brewer, it was stipulated that A. should deposit the lease of his house with B. as security for an advance of 150*l*., for which A. had given B. a promissory note, payable on demand, and B. engaged not to call upon A. to pay the 150*l*. for two years, on condition that the interest thereon should be duly paid half-yearly; that the rent should be paid agreeably to the covenants of the lease, and that A. should take of B. all the beer consumed on the premises, and pay for it every twenty-eight days. The agreement then provided, that in case of failure on the part of A. to perform any or either of the conditions after fourteen days' notice, B. should be at liberty immediately to put the note in force, and if not paid with interest, to sell the lease, and that the expenses attending such sale, together with the principal and interest due on the note, should be deducted from the amount realized by such sale, as also any account that might be then due and owing for beer:—Held, that the power of sale not having been exercised, on payment or tender of the principal and interest due on the note, A. (or his assignee) was entitled to maintain detinue for the lease; and that B. could not set up a lien on it for the balance due on the beer account. Chilton v. Carrington, 15 C. B. 95; 1 Jur., N. S. 89; 24 L. J., C. P. 10; 3 C. L. R. 138.

In December, 1861, a bankrupt contracted with W. to build a barge for him, to be paid for in bricks; the barge to be completed on the 5th of June, 1862. The bankrupt hired a yard for a certain number of months, for the purpose of performing the contract, which period expired before the completion of the work. In June it was agreed by the bankrupt in writing that the barge should be held as a security by W. for advances made by him; and in July the bankruptcy took place. The advances made by W. having exceeded the amount of work done and materials supplied by the bankrupt:—Held, that W. had a lien upon and was entitled to the custody of the barge, unless the assignees chose to complete the contract. Watts, Ex parte, 9 Jur., N. S. 238; 32 L. J., Bank. 35; 7 L. T., N. S. 585—C.

B. & Co. agreed to build a ship for A. To enable them to proceed with the work, and before the agreement was signed, C. advanced money on the understanding that he should have an assignment of the agreement, and a lien upon the ship. The agreement was canceled. B. & Co. then agreed to sell the vessel, which was in an unfinished state, to C. Four days previously they had stopped payment, and shortly afterwards were made bankrupts:—Held, that C. was entitled to a lien upon the ship. Swainson v. Clay, 11 W. R. 811; 8 L. T., N. S. 563; 32 L. J., Chanc. 503—L. J.

When lien is excluded by special agreement.—An agreement that a miller should be paid in a particular manner does not deprive him of his right of lien. Chase v. Westmore, 2 Marsh. 346. And see S. C., 5 M. & S. 180.

The right of lien is not the result of an express contract; it is given by implication of law. If, therefore, a mercantile relation which might involve a lien is created by a written contract, and security given for the result of the dealings in that relation, the express stipulation and agreement of the parties for security exclude lien, and limit their rights by the extent of the express contract that they have made. Chambers v. Davidson, 36 L. J., P. C. 17; 1 L. R., P. C. 296; 15 W. R. 34; 4 Moore P. C. C., N. S. 158.

Liens for services and expenditures in respect of particular property.—Generally speaking, a bailee has a lien on goods bailed to him in those cases only where an additional value has been conferred by him on the chattels, either directly, by the exercise of personal labor and skill, or indirectly, by the intermediate use of any instrument over which he has control; and, therefore, an agister to whom cattle have been bailed, has, by the general law, no lien on them for the value of the pasturage consumed; and this holds whether they are milch cattle or not. Jackson v. Cummins, 5 M. & W. 342; 3 Jur. 436.

A bailee can have no lien on a chattel, where, by the essence of the contract, he has no right to the uninterrupted possession of it. Id.

A workman having bestowed his labor on a chattel, in consideration of a price, the amount of which was fixed by an agreement with the owner, may detain such chattel until the price is paid, although it was delivered to the workman in different parcels and at different times, if the work to be done under the agreement is entire. Chase v. Westmore, 5 M. & S. 180. And see 2 Marsh. 346.

Generally speaking, if a chattel delivered to a party receives improvement from his labor and skill, he has a specific lien upon it for his remuneration, whether the contract for it is express or implied; provided there is nothing in the nature of the contract inconsistent with the existence of a lien. Scarfe v. Morgan, 4 M. & W. 270; 1 H. & H. 262; 2 Jur. 569.

A. put a phaeton into the possession of M. for him to paint it, and paid M. beforehand for the painting. M. never painted it, but placed it on the premises of B., where it stood three months:—Held, that B. had no lien on the phaeton for his charge for the standing of it, unless the jury was satisfied that M. had placed it there by the authority of A. Buxton v. Baughan, 6 C. & P. 674—Alderson.

A. having two pipes of wine lying in a bonded warehouse in the name of B., who had given bond for the duties, sold them to C., and gave him a delivery order, and it was at the same time agreed that C. should pay the duties. When they became payable, B. was called upon and paid them, and took away the wine to his own cellar. A. repaid the amount of duties to B.; C. never required B. to transfer the wine to his name, but he afterwards took away one pipe, and was charged with and paid warehouse rent to B.; C. afterwards became bankrupt, and his assignees demanded the other pipe:—Held, that B., at A.'s request, was entitled to keep it till the duties were paid. Winks v. Hasall 9 B. & C. 372.

A quantity of timber placed in a dock on the bank of a navigable river, being accidentally loosened, was carried by the tide to a considerable distance, and left at low water upon a towing-path. A. finding it in that situation, voluntarily conveyed it to a place of safety, beyond the reach of the tide at high water:—Held, that A. had no lien on the timber for the trouble or expense to which he might have put himself in the carriage of it; but was liable to an action of trover unless he delivered it up to the owner, on demand, though nothing was tendered him by the owner by way of compensation. Nicholson v. Chapman, 2 H. Bl. 254.

The labor and skill employed on a race-horse by a trainer are a good foundation for a lien; but if by usage or contract the owner may send the horse to run at any race he chooses, and may select the jockey, the trainer has no continuing right of possession, and consequently no lien. Forth v. Simpson, 13 Q. B. 680; 18 L. J., Q. B. 263.

T. & Co., owners of flats or barges at Liverpool, were employed by H. & Co. to carry certain copper-ore to L., an owner of crushing mills at Birkenhead, who, in consideration of being employed to crush the ore, agreed to indemnify H. & Co. against all risk in the transit. While on its way to Birkenhead, the barge with the ore on board foundered in the river. T. & Co. thereupon gave notice of the loss to H. & Co. and requested to be employed to raise the cargo, to which a clerk in the employ of H. & Co. replied, "We have nothing to do with it; you had better see Mr. L. He has the management of it." T. & Co. then went to L., who said, "Oh, I am all right. I am insured with M.;" and, in answer to a suggestion of T. & Co. as to the necessity for prompt action, he added, "You had better prepare for getting it up; but you must go to M. for orders." T. & Co. then went to M., who said, "You had better go on with it, and do the best you can for us." T. & Co. thereupon proceeded with the work, and, after incurring great labor and expense, succeeded in recovering the ore. H. & Co. afterwards tendered the sum agreed to be paid for the carriage of the ore to Birkenhead, and demanded it; but T. & Co. refused to part with it, claiming a lien upon it for the expenses incurred in raising it from the bottom of the river:—Held, that there was no contract for the work done, as between T. & Co. and H. & Co., in respect of which such claim of lien could be sustained. Castellain v. Thompson, 13 C. B., N. S. 103; 33 L. J., C. P. 70; 11 W. R. 147; 7 L. T., N. S. 424.

A packer has by custom of trade a general lien upon all the goods of a customer in his possession or in his hands for all moneys due to him from that customer, and not merely for money owing in respect of those particular goods. Will & Co., In re, Shubrook, Ex parte, 45 L. J., Bank. 118; 2 L. R., Ch. Div. 480; 24 W. R. 891; 34 L. T., N. S. 785—C. A.

Liens of consignees for advances, &c.]—A delivery to a master of a vessel, where the consignor has written to the consignee, apprising him that he has consigned to him, and requesting him, on the faith of such consignment, to accept bills (which he accordingly accepts and pays), is not such a constructive delivery to a consignee as will give him a lien against the assignees; it is not within the principle of the cases, which decide that an equitable right will supply the deficiency of an actual delivery, in support of a well-founded lien not perfected by possession. Nichols v. Cleut, 3 Price, 547.

The indorsing a bill of lading by a consignor to the consignee does not constitute a lien in favor of the latter for his advances to the consignor. Smith v. Burrighe, 4 Taunt. 684.

If A. consigns a cargo to B., with a direction to pay to C. out of the proceeds a sum of money, and writes to C. to that effect, C. has no lien on the proceeds. Heywood, Ex parte, 2 Rose. 355.

A. being interested in a moiety of a cargo, and having entered into a contract with B. to let him have half his share, wrote to C. and D., the consignees, informing them, and authorizing them to sell the cargo, and carry the proceeds to their separate accounts. The consignees acted upon this, and made advances to B., and B. also charged his interest in favor of E. It had been agreed between A. and B. that they should pay for the cargo by two bills, each to be paid by one of them. B. did not pay his bill; it did not appear whether A. had paid it or not:—Held, that A. had no lien on the proceeds of B.'s share, either as against him, or as against C. and D., or against E. Holroyd v. Griffiths, 3 Drew. 428.

If the consignee of a cargo, by agreement with the owner, chartered a ship, and expends the money necessary and proper in order to enable her to fetch the cargo, he is, without any special agreement to that effect, entitled to a lien on the proceeds of such cargo in his hands for the advance so made, and a person who is not the consignee has, under such circumstances, a similar lien on the proceeds of the cargo, if he can arrest such proceeds before they come to the hands of the shipper of the cargo. Yonni v. Neill, 32 Beav. 529; 9 Jur., N. S. 976; 11 W. R. 1052; 9 L. T., N. S. 9.

D. advanced to S., who was about to speculate in sugars, 10,999/., on a verbal agreement that D. should have a lien on the sugars imported by S. from the Mauritius and Batavia. S. assigned his property to trustees for creditors before any sugars were bought in Batavia. D. having filed a bill, praying a declaration that he had a lien on sugars sent to S. from Batavia, but omitting any mention of Mauritius sugars:—Held, that D. was precluded from afterwards insisting on any claim in respect of Mauritius sugars. Dean v. Byrne, 11 L. T., N. S. 97; 13 W. R. 209; 2 Moore P. C. C., N. S. 92.

Held, also, that it being no part of the contract that S. should invest the moneys lent in any particular mode, and S. having in fact assigned his property to trustees for his creditors before the purchase, and so S.'s money not being used in purchasing the sugar from Batavia, D. had no lien upon the sugars. Id.

Held, also, that the fact of S.'s trustees allowing S. to purchase Batavian sugar on their account, did not affect them with any equities in favor of D. under his contract with S. Id.

Goods, arriving at Quebec, were taken to the customs' examining warehouse, according to the regulations of the port. The goods were entered by the officer in charge, as consigned to M. & S. The goods remained subject to the lien for freight, and to the charges for customs' duties and storage. Till these several claims were discharged the officer in charge was bound not to part with the goods. Subsequently M. & S. obtained an advance from Y. & Co. on the security of these goods, and gave to them a request note, signed by M. & S., and directed to the officer in charge, requesting him to hold the goods "subject to the order" of Y. & Co., "they paying the duty and storage charge before removal." This note was sent to the officer in charge, who accepted it and made a corresponding entry in his book. Afterwards the goods, while still lying at the customs' warehouse, were seized by a judgment creditor of M. & S.:—Held, that the seizure was bad, there having been a valid constructive delivery and transfer of the goods to Y. & Co. as pledgees. Young v. Lambert, 22 L. T., N. S. 499; 3 L. R., P. C. 143; 18 W. R. 497; 6 Moore P. C. C., N. S. 400.

Lien upon deeds for services, &c.]—Every one has by law a lien upon a specific deed or paper delivered to him to do any work or business thereon, but not on other muniments of the same party, unless the person claiming the lien is an attorney or a solicitor. Hollis v. Claridge, 4 Taunt. 807. See Sanderson v. Bell, 2 C. & M. 304.

A certificated conveyancer is not entitled to a lien upon deeds delivered to him, and "with and in respect of" which he has done business; the business not having been done upon the deeds, or their value thereby increased. Steadman v. Hockley, 15 M. & W. 553; 10 Jur. 819; 15 L. J., Exch. 332.

A mortgage deed was delivered to A., an auctioneer, for the purpose of obtaining payment of the principal and interest due thereon from the mortgagor, and A. made several applications for that purpose:—Held, that A. had no lien on the deed in respect of the charge for making those applications. Sanderson v. Bell, 2 C. & M. 304.

Lien in equity.]—The rules with respect to lien are the same in equity as at law. Ozenham v. Esdaile, 2 Y. & J. 493; 5 D. & R. 49; 3 B. & C. 225.

The equitable rule as to the effect of a person's lying by, and allowing another to expend money on his property, does not apply where the money is expended with knowledge of the real state of the title. Rennie v. Young, 2 De G. & J. 136; 27 L. J., Chanc. 753.

A. agreed to grant a lease to B., who was to enter at once and expend money on improvements, with a proviso that if he failed within three months to grant a valid lease he would repay to B. the amount of his outlay, and from and after such failure B. should be at liberty to quit, and the agreement should cease except as to B.'s right to payment. A. being unable to grant a lease for want of title:—Held, that B. had a lien on A.'s interest on the premises for his outlay. Middleton v. Magnay, 2 H. & M. 233; 12 W. R. 706; 10 L. T., N. S. 408.

An equitable owner of land erected a granary thereon; he afterwards allowed his two sons to use and occupy them, and they erected other buildings thereon at a great expense:—Held, that the sons had a lien on the premises for their outlay. Unity Joint Stock Mutual Banking Association v. King, 25 Beav. 72; 4 Jur., N. S. 470; 27 L. J., Chanc. 585.

When a debtor gave authority by parol to his creditor to take certain goods, passing by delivery, and to sell them, and out of the proceeds to retain his debt:—Held, that the creditor, against the administrator of the debtor, had a lien on such goods to the extent of his claim. Gurnell v. Gardner, 4 Giff. 626; 9 Jur., N. S. 1220; 12 W. R. 67; 9 L. T., N. S. 367.

To and against what parties liens may be made available.]—As between debtor and creditor, the doctrine of lien is so equitable that it cannot be favored too much; but as between one class of creditors and another, there is not the same reason for favor. Jacobs v. Latour, 5 Bing. 130; 2 M. & P. 201.—Best.

A person can only give a lien on deeds as against himself, and to the extent of his own interest. Turner v. Letts, 20 Beav. 185; 1 Jur., N. S. 1057; 24 L. J., Chanc. 638.

A. and B. were joint owners of a house, and A. had laid out on it moneys which he had obtained from B.:—Held, that B. had no lien on the house for the amount. Kay v. Johnston, 21 Beav. 536.

The indorsee of a bill has a lien upon property deposited with the drawer as security. Perfect, Ex parte, 1 Mont. 25.

A holder of a bill has no lien on property deposited by the drawer with the acceptor to cover the liability of the latter in respect of his acceptance, but, on the bankruptcy of drawer and acceptor, the arrangement of property between the two estates may indirectly render such an equity available. Waring, Ex parte, 2 Rose, 182.

Goods pledged (expressly) to secure, by the produce of the sale, acceptors who have taken up and paid bills drawn on them by the owners, are released from further charge as to other bills so taken up and paid subsequently, if the amount of the original sum paid on account of the owner has been repaid to them without resorting to a sale. Birdwood v. Raphael, 5 Price, 593.

Where a person, who is in reality the agent of another, deposits exchequer bills with his own bankers, without informing them whose property these bills are, the bankers may be held entitled to consider these bills as the depositor's property, and to hold them as security for any money due to them from him, if the mode of deposit or the circumstances attending it gave them a lien on the bills as against him. Brandao v. Barnett, 12 C. & F. 787.

What debts secured by liens, generally.]—

A person has a lien on goods for a debt, though his remedy for part of it is barred by the Statute of Limitations. Spears v. Hartly, 3 Esp. 81—Eldon.

A book-keeper in Smithfield market must pay money which he receives for the sale of beasts to the vendor, and cannot retain it for the private debt of the salesman employed by the vendor. Goode v. Jones, Peake, 177—Kenyon.

A distrainer has no lien upon goods taken under a distress for rent and replevied, but is left to his remedy on the replevin bond. Bradyll v. Ball, 1 Bro. C. C. 427.

A farmer who has received sheep from an agister is liable in trover to the owner, on his claiming to detain them for a debt due to the agister, and not allowed to deduct from the amount of the credit the sum for feed which had been tendered by the owner and refused. Prentice v. Taylor, 1 F. & F. 469—Wightman.

Where chattels are deposited with a party who claims a lien on them, after notice from the bailor of the sale of the chattels to a third party, the bailee cannot, as against the vendee, claim a further lien in respect of a debt incurred to him by the bailor after such notice, though the chattels remain in his books in the name of the bailor. Barry v. Longmore, 4 P. & D. 344; 12 A. & E. 639; 1 A. & H. 14.

General lien.]—The question whether a tradesman has a lien on goods in his hands for his general balance, or only for so much as relates to the particular goods, is decided on the same grounds at law and in equity. To extend it, the party must show an agreement, or something from which to infer an agreement. Gladstone v. Birley, 2 Mer. 404.

A factor has a lien both for his expenditure on the goods in his possession, and his general balance. Cowell v. Simpson, 16 Ves. 280.

Calico printers have a lien for a general balance on goods delivered to them to print. Weldon v. Gould, 3 Esp. 268—Kenyon. S. P., Webb v. Fox, Peake's Add. Cas. 167.

So, where calico goods are delivered to a person to have them printed, and such person delivers them to a calico printer for that purpose, to whom he is indebted, the calico printer may hold these goods against the owner, by virtue of his lien. Id.

Seemingly, that by the custom of trade in Manchester, as between calico printers and engravers, the latter have no right of general lien for balances due to them from the former.

Lilley v. Barnsley, 1 C. & K. 344—Rolfe.

A dyer has no lien upon an article delivered to him to be dyed, for a general balance, but only for the particular price of dyeing that article. Bennett v. Johnson, 2 Chit. 455; 3 Dougl. 387. S. P., Green v. Farmer, 4 Burr. 2214; 1 W. Bl. 651.

But in one case at nisi prius it was held, that a dyer had a lien for a general balance. Savill v. Barchard, 4 Esp. 58—Kenyon.

A general lien established in the bleaching trade at Nottingham. Plaice v. Allcock, 4 F. & F. 1074.

The dyers of Halifax were held to have no lien for their general balance, and that they could not retain for the price of dyeing any other than the particular goods dyed, or at most only for the dyeing of such goods as were delivered to them at one and the same time, under one entire contract. Closs v. Waterhouse, 6 East, 528, n.

But an agreement entered into by some dyers, that they would not receive any more goods to be dyed, unless they might have a lien on those goods for their general balance, is good; and a person who, after notice of it, delivers goods to be dyed, must be taken to have assented to the terms of the agreement. Kirkham v. Shawcross, 6 T. R. 14.

Cloths were left by a bankrupt, before his bankruptcy, with a fuller to be dressed. A balance was then due from the bankrupt to him for work done on other cloths. The assignees having tendered him the sum due for work done on the cloths in his possession, and demanded them: on his refusal to deliver them up:—Held, that he had no right to detain them for his general balance; and that the assignees were entitled to recover in an action of trover. Rose v. Hart, 2 Moore, 547; 8 Taunt, 409.

Proprietors of a scribbling and fulling mill, stipulated that all goods on hand should be subject to a lien for a general balance. Having received certain wool and cloth of C., to be scribbled and fulled, and certain oil and dyeing materials to be used by him on the wool, for which purpose he had access to the oil and dyes in a room of which the proprietors of the mill kept the key:—Held, that goods on hand meant the yarn or cloth sent to the mill, and that they had no lien for their general balance on the oil and dyeing materials. Cumpston v. Huigh, 2 Scott, 684; 2 Bing. N. C. 449; 1 Hodges, 373.

The law does not favor general liens, and a general lien can only be claimed as arising from dealings in a particular trade or line of business, such as wharfingers, factors, and bankers, in which the existence of a general lien has been judicially acknowledged, or in other trades where there is express evidence of custom. Bock v. Gorriszen, 7 Jur., N. S. 81; 30 L. J., Chanc. 39; 2 De G., F. & J. 434; 9 W. R. 209; 3 L. T., N. S. 424.

Foreign correspondents of a London firm directed the firm to purchase for them Mexican bonds to a specified amount, at a specified price, and to hold the bonds at the disposal of the correspondents. The London firm made and notified the purchase, and wrote to the correspondents, that they would, until further orders, retain the bonds for safe custody:—Held, that the letters constituted a special contract sufficient to exclude a general lien on the part of the London firm, if they would otherwise have been entitled to any. Ib.

S., a woolstapler at Huddersfield, was in the habit of making purchases of wool, which he directed to be consigned to the defendant, a wharfinger and shipping agent at Hull who forwarded them to him at Huddersfield by carrier. In July, 1841, S. purchased certain wool in Scotland, which was paid for by E., his agent there, and by him forwarded to the defendant at Hull. Part of this wool, consisting of ten bags, arrived at Hull on the 27th of September, and a portion of it was, at ten o'clock on that morning, taken possession of by the defendant, the remainder being taken possession of by him between ten o'clock and four. E. received from S., in repayment of the advances made by him for the purchase of the wool in question, acceptances of S., which were running at the time of S.'s bankruptcy, and were afterwards dishonored. On the 21st of September, E. received a letter from S., in which he informed him of his insolvency, and directed him to get the wool and to do the best he could to save himself. Accordingly, on some day between the 26th of September and the 1st of October, E. gave directions to the defendant to seize the wool. The remaining portion of the wool arrived at Hull on the 3d of October, and was delivered into the defendant's warehouse on the 6th, 7th and 8th of that month. An act of bankruptcy was committed by S. on the 22d of September. The defendant, who claimed to retain the wool in satisfaction of a general balance, had been in the habit of sending to the bankrupt, by the carrier, together with the goods, printed delivery orders, which stated that all goods were considered as general lien, subject not only to freight, but also to the balance of any former account due from the owners or consignors. These orders had been seen more than once in the bankrupt's hands, and, on one occasion, the weights therein stated had been altered by him:—Held, in trover by the assignees of S. to recover the value of the thirty-six bags of wool, first, that E. had no right to the goods, in respect of which the defendant could retain them. Bowman v. Malcolm, 11 M. & W. 833.

Held, secondly, that the defendant had not established any right of general lien, by virtue of which he could retain any part of the goods. Ib.

The general lien of a consignee upon a cargo consigned to him cannot be set up in opposition to positive directions given him by the consignor, as to a third party's claim upon the cargo. If a consignee thinks proper to accept such a consignment with such directions, only what remains, after answering the particular directions, can become subject to the general lien. Prith v. Forbes, 4 De G., F. & J. 409; 8 Jur., N. S. 1115; 32 L. J., Chanc. 10—L. J.

B. & Co. consigned a cargo to the defendants and sent to them the bill of lading in a letter: "The present serves to cover bill of lading for timber, &c., shipped per China, against which we have valued on you, at six months in favor of F., S. & Co., for 1,200l. which please kindly protect." On the same day B. & Co. sent to F., S. & Co. the bill of exchange which was drawn on the defendants to the order of F., S. & Co., and concluded "place the same with or without advice to account consignment per China." After the bill of lading arrived F., S. & Co. presented the bill of exchange, but the defendant refused to accept it. Shortly afterwards B. & Co. stopped payment, and afterwards the cargo arrived:—Held, that it was effectually appropriated to meet the bill, and that F., S. & Co. had a lien upon it in priority to the claim of the defendants for the balance due to them on their general account as consigners. Ib.

When a company has been wound up under the Companies Act, 1862, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, and the business is duly carried on by the official liquidator, a creditor who has continued his dealings with the company cannot exercise a general lien on its goods for the whole amount due to him, by virtue of an agreement made between him and the company previously to the winding up. Wiltshire Iron Company v. Great Western Railway Company, 40 L. J., Q. B. 43; 6 L. R., Q. B. 101; 19 W. R. 177; affirmed on appeal, 49 L. J., Q. B. 308; 6 L. R., Q. B. 776; 19 W. R. 935—Exch. Chanc.

A company was wound up, and the business carried on by the official liquidator. Previously to the winding up the company had made an agreement with a railway company for the carriage of goods on a credit account, upon the terms that goods belonging to or sent by them should be subject to a general lien in favor of the railway company, to take effect, at their option, at any time after failure of any sum due on the credit account, or in case of bankruptcy, insolvency or stoppage of payment:—Held, that the railway company could not enforce this lien upon goods which they had received after the winding up, to be carried on account of the new business. Ib.

B. consigned to the defendants, by the ship Acacia, a cargo which had been purchased at the joint risk of himself and the defendants, and advised them of the particulars of bills which he had drawn against the cargo payable to his own order. The defendants replied, promising to protect the bills. B. indorsed to the plaintiffs three of these bills, which ran, "Pay to the order of myself the sum of 830l., which place to account cargo per A." B. having stopped payment, the defendants refused to accept the bills; but after selling the cargo, offered to pay to the plaintiffs the surplus of the proceeds, after satisfying a balance due to them from B. on the general account between them. The plaintiffs refused to accept this, and filed a bill, claiming a lien for the full amount of the three bills:—Held, that they had no lien on the proceeds of the cargo. Robey & Co.'s Perseverance Ironworks v. Ollier, 7 L. R., Ch. 695; 20 W. R. 956; 27 L. T., N. S. 362.

A right of general lien can only be established either by contract, express or necessarily implied, or by custom; and such a custom in a particular trade is not established by mere evidence of the popular opinion of the members of that trade that a right of general lien was or ought to be a privilege of their trade. Spotten, In re, Provincial Bank, Ex parte, 11 Ir. R., Eq. 412—Bank.

Necessity of possession of the property.—A party cannot have a lien on goods if he never was in possession of them or their produce, whatever equitable interest he may have had. Heywood v. Waring, 4 Camp. 291—Ellenborough.

There can be no lien upon any property unless it is in the possession of the party who claims the lien. Shaw v. Neale, 4 Jur., N. S. 695; 27 L. J., Chanc. 444—Chelmsford, C.

The general rule of the civil law is, that possession of movables is not necessary to the validity of a lien, whether created by contract or act of law, and that such lien will attach upon movable property, even in the hands of a bona fide purchaser without notice. Tatham v. Andree, 1 Moore P. C. C., N. S. 386; 9 Jur., N. S. 1019; 9 L. T., N. S. 2.

Right to detain the property; expenses, sale, &c.—A shipping agent having a lien on a bill of lading of goods which he has shipped, may, if the lien is not satisfied before the goods have reached their destination, have them brought home in order to retain his lien on them, and is not liable to any action for so doing. Edwards v. Southgate, 10 W. R. 528.

An artificer who, in the exercise of his right of lien, detains a chattel upon which he has expended his labor and materials, has no claim against the owner for taking care of the chattel while so detained. Somes v. British Empire Shipping Company, 8 H. L. Cas. 338; 6 Jur., N. S. 761; 30 L. J., Q. B. 229; 8 W. R. 707. Judgment of Exchequer Chamber and of Queen's Bench, El., Bl. & El. 353; 5 Jur., N. S. 675; 28 L. J., Q. B. 220, affirmed.

If an owner of a chattel (for instance, a ship) knew that he must pay for dock room, while his ship was undergoing repairs, and if, while he was unable to pay for those repairs, and the ship was detained in exercise of the shipwright's lien, he received notice that he must pay dock room during the detention, such facts would not create an implied contract on his part to pay it. Id.

The lien at law upon a chattel for a portion of the price unpaid confers no right of sale upon the person having such lien, although the retention of the chattel may be attended with expense. Thames Ironworks Company v. Patent Derrick Company, 1 Johns. & H. 93; 6 Jur., N. S. 1013; 29 L. J., Chanc. 714.

II. HOW WAIVED, DISCHARGED OR LOST.

By claiming in a different right or on a different ground.—A person having a lien upon goods does not waive that lien by the mere fact of his omitting to state that he claims to retain the goods in that right when they are demanded; nor is it sufficient evidence of a waiver of his lien, that he bought these goods with others, which he also refused to deliver up, although he had no lien on them, the sale as to the whole being void. White v. Gainer, 9 Moore, 41; 2 Bing. 23; 1 C. & P. 324.

But a man waives his right of lien, if, upon being applied to to deliver up goods, he claims to retain them on a different ground than that upon which he rests his case of lien. Boardman v. Sill, 1 Camp. 410, n.—Ellenborough.

A lien may be waived by a party's setting up a claim to retain the chattel upon a different ground, and making no mention of the lien. Werks v. Goode, 6 C. B., N. S. 307.

In an action against A. and B. for a lease, the evidence of conversion was as follows: A demand having been made upon A. he declined to give up the lease until rent due to B. was paid, but he added that it was more B.'s business than his own, and as he was not in, he (A.) would either send the lease in the course of the day, or would write the plaintiff a letter declining to return it. The plaintiff receiving neither lease nor letter, issued a writ on the following morning:—Held, that this amounted to an absolute refusal, notwithstanding A. and B. had, at the time (though it was not mentioned), a lien upon the lease for a small sum due to them for business done by them as attorneys for the plaintiff. Id.

Where a party claims to detain goods upon two causes of lien, in such a way as to dispense with tender of either, he is guilty of a conversion, unless he can sustain both. Kerford v. Mondel, 28 L. J., Exch. 303.

In trover by a freighter against a shipowner to recover goods, the charter-party giving a lien for dead freight, but the master to sign bills of lading, which bound the goods for "freight as agreed," the freighter having when he demanded the goods been prepared to pay the freight for carriage, and the shipowner refused to deliver the goods except on payment of the dead freight:—Held, that freight for carriage alone was due, that the refusal was an implied dispensation of the tender of it, and that trover was maintainable. Id.

By claiming a larger or a different sum.—If a party has a specific lien on the goods of another, and when required to deliver them up, claims a lien upon them for a sum either greater than or different from that for which he is entitled to hold them, his lien is gone; but if he claims to hold them both for the sum to which he is entitled, and also for a further sum to which he is not entitled, his lien in respect of the former remains, and the owner ought, on such refusal, to tender that sum. Searfe v. Morgan, 4 M. & W. 270; 1 H. & H. 292; 2 Jur. 569.

Where a party who has a specific lien on goods refuses to deliver them up unless the amount of a general balance is paid, it is unnecessary for the owner to tender the sum due in respect of those goods, in order to support trover. Jones v. Tarleton or Tarlton, 9 M. & W. 675; 6 Jur. 848.

A picture was placed by A. in the hands of B. for sale. B. deposited it with C. On its being demanded by A., C. claimed 5s. for warehouse room; but, on a second demand being made, with an offer to pay any claim which C. might have for warehouse room, C. refused to give up the picture without being paid 8l., due to him from B.:—Held, that the demand of the 8l. amounted to a waiver of the claim for warehouse room, and that it rendered a specific tender in respect thereof unnecessary. Dirks v. Richards, 4 M. & G. 574; 5 Scott, N. R. 534; Car. & M. 626; 6 Jur. 562.

If A. delivers a chattel to B. under a contract by the latter to perform certain work thereon at a fixed price, and, before such work is completed, A. countermands the order and demands the chattel from B., at the same time tendering a sum sufficient to pay for the work actually done, he will be entitled to maintain trover therefor without tendering the contract price. Lilley v. Barnsley, 1 C. & K. 344—Rolfe.

In trover for certain iron-work, the defendant set up as a defense a lien on the iron-work, for work done to it at the plaintiff's request:—Held, that a claim of set-off to a larger amount on the part of the plaintiff was no answer to the lien, unless it had been agreed between the parties that the one should be deducted from the other. Pinnock v. Harrison, 3 M. & W. 532; 1 H. & H. 114.

The mere demand of an excessive sum by a creditor holding a lien does not dispense with a tender from the debtor of the sum really due; but if the demand of the larger sum is so made that it amounts to an announcement that it is useless to tender any smaller sum, this dispenses with any tender, even if it appears that the debtor was unwilling to tender the amount really due. The Norway, B. & L. 404; 3 Moore P. C. C., N. S. 245; 13 L. T., N. S. 50; 13 W. R. 1085.

By taking security.—If a security is taken for a debt for which the party has a lien upon property of the debtor, such security being payable at a distant day, the lien is gone. Hawson v. Guthrie, 3 Scott, 298; 2 Bing. N. C. 755; 2 Hodges, 51.

A., and B., a solicitor, were executors. B. deposited some of his deeds in the trust box, to secure some money due to the testator's estate. The box remained in B.'s possession, and on his death the deeds were found to have been abstracted from it, and they could not be identified. The legal personal representative of B. then deposited certain specific deeds, selected by A., as a security for the debt:—Held, assuming that A. had, in consequence of B.'s wrongful act, obtained a general lien on all B.'s deeds for the money, still that he had waived it by taking the particular security from the legal personal representative. Mason v. Morley, 34 Beav. 471.

If a tradesman, having goods in his possession upon which he has a lien, parts with those goods on the promise of a third person to pay the demand, such promise is not within the Statute of Frauds, and may be by parol. Castling v. Aubert, 2 East, 825. S. P., Houl-ditch v. Milne, 3 Esp. 86.

Where a vendor received part of the purchase-money, which had been borrowed from the defendant, and took a bond with sureties for the residue:—Held, that by entering into the deed of conveyance, which recited the assignment of the premises to the defendant by way of mortgage for the sum advanced, the vendor waived his lien. Cood v. Pollard, 10 Price, 109; 9 Price, 544.

By surrendering possession of the property.—One who has a lien on goods in his possession, if he afterwards delivers them to a ship carrier to be conveyed on account and at the risk of his principal, though unknown to the carrier, cannot recover his lien by stopping the goods in transitu, and procuring them to be re-delivered to him by virtue of a bill of lading signed by the carrier in the course of his voyage. Sweet v. Pym, 1 East, 4.

If A., having repaired a carriage for B., allows him to take it away from time to time, he cannot afterwards detain it for the amount of the repairs, neither can he detain it upon a claim for standage, without an express contract to pay for standage, or unless the owner leaves it upon the premises beyond a reasonable time after notice. Hartley v. Hitchcock, 1 Stark. 408—Ellenborough.

The plaintiffs were merchants in London and Melbourne. The defendant consigned goods to the Melbourne house, on an agreement that the advances made to him by the plaintiffs in London and Melbourne should be retained out of the proceeds of the goods, and that the surplus should be handed over to the defendant. The Melbourne house remitted to the defendant a sum as the balance, but omitted to retain the advances made in London:—Held, that the plaintiffs had merely a right of lien or of retainer, which they had abandoned by remitting the balance. Bligh v. Davies, 28 Beav. 211.

By other acts or conduct inconsistent with right of lien.—If a party, having a lien on goods, causes them to be taken in execution at his own suit, he thereby destroys his right of lien, although the goods were never removed from his premises. Jacobs v. Latour, 2 M. & P. 201; 5 Bing. 130.

A. delivered to B. a pawnbroker's duplicate, for B. to take some goods of A.'s out of pledge. B. did so, but on A. sending to B. for the goods, B. said that he had not got them, and refused to tell who had:—Held, that if, after this, trover was brought against B., he could not insist on a lien on the goods for the money he had advanced to get them out of pledge. Jones v. Clift, 5 C. & P. 560—Taunton.

A., B. and C., being part owners of a vessel, were partners in whale fishery adventures, in which the course had been for C., as ship's husband, to sell the whalebone towards expenses, to deposit the blubber in a warehouse rented by A., B. and C. of D., to divide the oil there produced, to put it into separate casks marked with their respective initials, and for D., the warehouseman, to deliver out the oil upon the order of each partner respectively, unless notice was given by C. that such partner's share of the disbursements was unpaid, and in that case, to detain the oil until payment. Twenty-nine tons having been set apart for A., and placed in casks marked with his initials, and twenty tons having been delivered to his order, he became bankrupt, his share of the disbursements being unpaid. Afterwards notice of non-payment was given by C. to D.:—Held, that B. and C. had a lien as against the assignees of A., upon the remaining nine tons, for A.'s share of the disbursements, not abandoned by the qualified appropriation of the twenty-nine tons, or by the assent to the removal of the twenty tons. Holderness v. Shackels, 8 M. & R. 25; 8 B. & C. 612.

H. & Co. of Newfoundland, by order of D. of Jamaica, shipped a cargo of fish on board a vessel chartered by D., and consigned it to S., D.'s factor, at Kingston, Jamaica. After D. had ordered this cargo, he required from S. a further advance of money (D. being at that time largely indebted to him), and told him that he expected this cargo, and that S. might sell it on D.'s account, and give him credit for the proceeds. S. made the advance required, but nothing was reduced into writing as to the pledge of the cargo. Before the vessel arrived D. became insolvent, and told S., his factor, that, such being the case, he could not think of receiving the cargo. The cargo arrived, and D., by letter to S., repeated his determination not to receive the cargo, and told S. to sell it, and remit the proceeds to H. & Co.'s house at Liverpool. D. also wrote to H. & Co. at Liverpool, to inform them of the transaction, but H. & Co. did not write to acquiesce in that arrangement until eight months afterwards. S. appeared to acquiesce in the wish of D., and did not at that time claim any lien. S. sold the cargo, but refused to account for the proceeds to H. & Co., who thereupon brought an action for their recovery:—Held, that S. must be taken to have acted in the sale as the agent of H. & Co.; and that if S. had any lien originally, he had, by his conduct, waived it. Harrison v. Scott, 5 Moore P. C. C. 357; 10 Jur. 443.

A. agreed to buy of B. a stack of hay for 80*l.*, to be paid for as taken away, and to be removed by the 31st of May. Part of the hay was removed and paid for by A. before the 31st of May, and in August the remainder was cut up and used by B.:—Held, that as B.'s lien on the hay was determined by the act of conversion, A. was entitled to the possession of the hay, and might maintain trover. Gurr v. Cuthbert, 12 L. J., Exch. 309.

I. RIGHTS IN RESPECT OF.

In general.—Light and air are bestowed by Providence for the common benefit of men, and so long as the reasonable use by one man of this common property does not do actual and perceptible damage to the right of another to the similar use of it, no action will lie. Embrey v. Owen, 6 Exch. 353; 15 Jur. 633; 20 L. J., Exch. 212.

The intrusion upon a neighbor's privacy, even by opening a new window to overlook adjoining premises, is not a ground for interference either at law or equity. Turner v. Spooner, 1 Drew. & Sm. 467; 7 Jur., N. S. 1063; 30 L. J., Chanc. 801; 9 W. R. 684; 4 L. T., N. S. 732.

And shutting out a man's house from public view is not a legal injury. Butt v. Imperial Gaslight Company, 15 W. R. 92—C.

Easements and other rights acquired under grants or covenants.—The lessee of a house and garden, forming part of a large area of building ground, will not be entitled, under his ordinary covenant for quiet enjoyment, or otherwise, in the absence of special contract, to restrain the lessor or persons claiming under him from building on the adjoining land so as to obstruct the free access of light and air to the garden. Potts v. Smith, 38 L. J., Chanc. 58; 6 L. R., Eq. 311; 10 W. R. 891; 18 L. T., N. S. 629—V. C. M.

The owner of two leasehold messuages, held on a term for ninety-nine years, demised one for the residue of the term, less one day, to L., he himself occupying the other, in which he carried on the trade of a jeweler. L., on entering, paid a premium of 300*l.*, and a rent of 7*l.* 10*s.* was reserved. Subsequently the owner became, by the completion of twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment, entitled to the use of windows in the rear of his house, looking into a yard, upon which the house demised by him also looked, as ancient lights. In the demise there was a covenant restraining each party from building on the space between the backs of the houses so as to obstruct the light and air between certain points marked in an annexed plan. L. pulled down his house and commenced building nearer and higher than the former erections:—Held, that there was a violation of the covenant, a material injury in the obstruction of light and air, and a clear right to the ancient lights; and a perpetual injunction was granted with costs. Rolison v. Lory, 17 L. T., N. S. 641—V. C. M.

An owner of two contiguous houses in the city of London sold one to the defendant by a conveyance which correctly marked out the ground site of the house conveyed. One of the first-floor rooms in the house retained by the owner projected over the site, and was supported by the other house:—Held, that the vertical column of air over so much of the room as overhung the defendant's site belonged, not to the owner, but to the defendant. Corbett v. Hill, 9 L. R., Eq. 671; 22 L. T., N. S. 263; 39 L. J., Chanc. 547—V. C. J.

A general grant of land, with an intimation by the purchaser of an intention to build, creates a legal easement of light and air, and gives the right to prevent the subsequent obstruction of light by subsequent purchasers of neighboring land by the same grantor. Robinson v. Grace, 27 L. T., N. S. 648; 21 W. R. 223—V. C. W.; affirmed on appeal, 21 W. R. 569; 29 L. T., N. S. 7—L. J.

In 1854, a conveyance was executed of land contracted to be sold in 1852; between those dates houses were erected:—Held, that the conveyance conferred on the purchaser the right of light sufficient for the windows in the houses so erected, and to an injunction to restrain interference with it by purchasers, subsequent to the contract, of neighboring land. Id.

Upon a general conveyance of land, there is no implied grant, by the purchaser, of the easement of light necessary for the enjoyment of an adjacent house of the vendor. Ellis v. Manchester Carriage Company, 2 L. R., C. P. Div. 13; 35 L. T., N. S. 476; 25 W. R. 229.

When the owner of a house which has by prescription acquired a right to light over the adjoining land, becomes the owner of such adjoining land and sells it without reserving the easement of light, the purchaser may build so as to obstruct the light. Id.

In 1867, the plaintiff bought houses in Manchester, the backs of which abutted on a street or way, on the opposite side of which were certain cottages. In 1868 he purchased these cottages, but by a different title. Both sets of premises had existed in their then state for more than twenty years. In 1870, the plaintiff sold the cottages to D., and ultimately D.'s interest therein became vested in the defendants, who pulled down the cottages and erected a large building upon the site of them and also upon a portion of the intervening street or way, and so obstructed the light to the plaintiff's windows. The conveyance to D. contained no reservation of any easement to the plaintiff's houses: and it professed to convey the land up to the back wall of the plaintiff's premises:—Held, that, notwithstanding the plaintiff's houses had acquired an "absolute and indefeasible" right to light at the time of the conveyance of the cottages to D., inasmuch as that conveyance was without reservation, the defendants were guilty of no wrongful obstruction of the plaintiff's lights. Id.

A., the owner of two adjoining houses, granted the lease of one to B., there then existing in it a certain window, for a term which expired at Michaelmas, 1875; and afterwards, in 1874, leased the other house to C.:—Semble, that, during the currency of B.'s lease, C. could not build so as to interfere with the light coming to B.'s window; and that, on the expiration of B.'s lease, C. could build so as to interfere with the light coming to the window, as the lease to C. had been made by A. without any reservation of the right to light. Warner v. M'Bryde, 36 L. T., N. S. 360—V. C. M.

— under the Prescription Act.]—[By The Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 3, when the access and use of light to and for any dwelling-house, workshop, or other building shall have been actually enjoyed for the full period of twenty years without interruption, the right thereto shall be deemed absolute and indefeasible, any local usage or custom to the contrary notwithstanding, unless it shall appear that the same was enjoyed by some consent or agreement, expressly made or given for that purpose, by deed or writing.]

The right to ancient lights depends upon this statute, and not upon any presumption of grant or fiction of license; and being an absolute, indefeasible and unqualified statutory right, cannot be lost by a subsequent intermission of enjoyment, not amounting to intentional abandonment, nor can it be prejudiced by an attempt to extend the access of light beyond that access which has so become indefeasible. Tapling v. Jones, 11 H. L. Ch. 270; 1 C. B., N. S. 166; 11 Jur., N. S. 349; 14 L. J., C. P. 342; 13 W. R. 617; 12 L. T., N. S. 555.

In order to establish the right to the access of an extraordinary amount of light necessary for a particular purpose or business to an ancient window, open, uninterrupted, and known enjoyment of such light in the manner in which it is at present enjoyed and claimed must be shown for a period of twenty years. Leafranchi v. Mackenzie, 4 L. R., Eq. 421; 36 L. J., Chanc. 518; 15 W. R. 614; 16 L. T., N. S. 114—V. C. M.

Under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, ss. 3 and 4, a party is prescriptively entitled to the access and use of light, if his enjoyment thereof commenced twenty years next before the bringing of an action in which the right is contested; provided such enjoyment has not at any time been interrupted, and the interruption acquiesced in for a whole year. Flight v. Thomas, 8 C. & F. 231; West, 671; 5 Jur. 811; S. C., in King's Bench and Exchequer Chamber, 11 A. & E. 688; 3 P. & D. 442.

The period of twenty years' enjoyment, which confers a right to the access of light, under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3, is, by s. 4, the period of twenty years next before any suit or action wherein the claim to the right was brought into question, and is not limited to the period of twenty years next before the pending suit or action. Cooper v. Hubbuck, 12 C. B., N. S. 456; 31 L. J., C. P. 323; 6 L. T., N. S. 826; 9 Jur., N. S. 575.

An actual enjoyment of lights for twenty years, even under a permission verbally asked for by the occupier of a house, and given by the person having right to obstruct, is sufficient to confer a right under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3. The enjoyment under that section need not be as of right or adverse. London (Mayor, &c.) v. Pewterers' Company, 2 M. & Rob. 409—Tindal.

Under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3, a party is not entitled of right to the access and use of light over contiguous land, unless his enjoyment thereof has been for the full period of twenty years, in the character of an easement, distinct from the enjoyment of the land itself. Harbridge v. Warwick, 3 Exch. 552; 18 L. J., Exch. 245.

Mere payment of rent by the occupier of a house for the use of lights is not an interruption of the enjoyment within 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3. Plasterers' Company v. Parish Clerks' Company, 6 Exch. 630; 15 Jur. 965; 20 L. J., Exch. 362—Exch. Cham.

The 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3, limiting twenty years as the period for acquiring an indefeasible right to the access and use of light, is retrospective, so that such an easement may be acquired by virtue of enjoyment prior to the passing of the act. Simper v. Foley, 2 Johns. & H. 555; 5 L. T., N. S. 669.

To acquire a right to the access of light and air by actual enjoyment, under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3, it is not necessary that the house should be occupied, or that it should be fit for immediate occupation during the statutory period. Courtneil v. Legh, 4 L. R., Exch. 126; 39 L. J., Exch. 45; 17 W. R. 466; 19 L. T., N. S. 737.

A house was structurally completed, the roof finished, the floors laid, and the windows put in, but it was not internally completed nor fit for habitation. It so remained till within a period of twenty years before action, and was then finished:—Held, that the owner was entitled to maintain an action for the obstruction of its windows. Ib.

A right to the access and use of light to a house cannot be acquired, under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3, by the lapse of time during which the owner of the house, or his occupying tenant, is also the occupier of the land over which the right would extend. Ladyman v. Grace, 6 L. R., Ch. 763; 25 L. T., N. S. 52; 19 W. R. 863.

During such period of unity of occupation, the running of the twenty years under the statute is only suspended. Ib.

Seemly, that the owner in fee of land demised for a term of years is subject to any right to access and use of light over his land which may be acquired by the owner of an adjoining house during the demise. Ib.

A right to free passage of air is not an easement within the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 2. Webb v. Bird, 31 L. J., C. P. 335; 13 C. B., N. S. 841; 8 Jur., N. S. 621—Exch. Cham.

The presumption of a grant from long-continued enjoyment only arises where the person against whom the right is claimed might have interrupted or prevented the exercise of the subject of the supposed grant:—Held, therefore, that a grant of the right to the free and uninterrupted passage of the currents of wind and air to a mill from over the soil of another, cannot be presumed from an uninterrupted use of the mill for twenty years. Ib.

The twenty years' enjoyment which, under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3, gives an absolute and indefeasible right to the access of light, need not be an enjoyment in fact "without interruption" for the period mentioned, but an enjoyment without such an interruption as is contemplated by section 4, viz., "an interruption submitted to or acquiesced in by the party interrupted for one year" after notice. Glover v. Coleman, 10 L. R., C. P. 103; 23 W. R. 163; 44 L. J., C. P. 66; 31 L. T., N. S. 684.

And, in order to negative submission to or acquiescence in the interruption, it is not necessary that the party interrupted shall have brought an action or a suit, or taken any active steps to remove the obstruction; it is enough to show that he has in a reasonable manner communicated to the party causing the interruption that he does not really submit to or acquiesce in it. Ib.

When, therefore, the plaintiff had for more than twenty years enjoyed the access of light to his workshop, through a window against which the defendant had about fourteen months before action brought erected a permanent building which obstructed it, and the plaintiff had taken no active measures to cause the obstruction to be removed, but had several times, himself or by his tenant, complained of and protested against it:—Held, that it was a question proper to be left to the jury whether or not there had been such a submission to or an acquiescence in the interruption of the enjoyment as to deprive the plaintiff of the right to the light. Id.

Semble, that the same sort of evidence of user or enjoyment need not be given in the case of a light as in the case of a claim of a right of way. Id.

The word "use" in s. 3 of 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71 (The Prescription Act), points to the actual admission of light into a building, and not to the existence of any particular user either in kind or degree, the object of the section being to give title to relief, but not to define its extent. Mackey v. Scottish Widows' Fund Life Assurance Society, 11 Ir. R., Eq. 541—Ch. App.

As to statutes of limitation in respect of real property, generally,—see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS AND SUITS.

— by prescription or presumption of grant, independent of statute.—Before the statute, twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment of windows looking upon the land of another was sufficient ground for presuming a grant or a license to open the windows, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Cross v. Lewis, 4 D. & R. 284; 2 B. & C. 686.

It is a rule of law that there can be no prescription for an easement of light and air over open land. Potts v. Smith, 6 L. R., Eq. 811; 38 L. J., Chanc. 58; 18 L. T., N. S. 629; 16 W. R. 891—V. C. M.

An owner of a windmill cannot claim, either by prescription, or by presumption of a grant arising from twenty years' acquiescence, to be entitled to the free and uninterrupted passage of the currents of wind and air to his mill. Webb v. Bird, 10 C. B., N. S. 268; 30 L. J., C. P. 384; 9 W. R. 899; 4 L. T., N. S. 445; affirmed on appeal, 13 C. B., N. S. 841; 8 Jur., N. S. 621; 31 L. J., C. P. 335—Exch. Cham.

The use of an open space of ground in a particular way, requiring light and air, for twenty years, does not give a right to preclude the adjoining owner from building on his land so as to obstruct the light and air. Roberts v. Macord, 1 M. & Rob. 230—Patteson. Recognized and acknowledged to be good law in Potts v. Smith, 18 L. T., N. S. 629; 16 W. R. 891—V. C. M.

Where lights had been enjoyed for more than twenty years, adjoining land which within that period had been glebe land, but was conveyed to a purchaser under 55 Geo. 8, c. 147:—Held, that no action would lie against such purchaser for building so as to obstruct the lights, as the rector, who was tenant for life, could not grant the easement, and therefore no valid grant could be presumed. Barker v. Richardson, 4 B. & A. 579.

In a suit to restrain a defendant from building so as to obstruct the plaintiff's ancient lights, it was proved that for a period of more than twenty years, extending to within a very short time before the bill was filed, there had been unity of possession of the properties of the plaintiff and the defendant, but there was no evidence of there ever having been any unity of title; and it was proved that before the unity of possession commenced the access of light to the windows had been enjoyed as far back as living memory went:—Held, that the plaintiff had established his title to the access of light, by proof of enjoyment from time immemorial, independently of the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71; for that the statute does not take away any of the modes of claiming easements which existed before its passing. Aynley v. Glover, 10 L. R., Ch. 283; 44 L. J. Chanc. 523; 23 W. R. 459; 32 L. T., N. S. 345; affirming the decision of the Master of the Rolls, 8 L. R., Eq. 544; 43 L. J., Chanc. 777; 31 L. T., N. S. 219; 23 W. R. 147.

— by license and acquiescence.—No license or covenant from A., the owner of adjoining land, to put out or not to obstruct windows in the house of B., is to be inferred from the circumstance of A. being a party to the deed by which the house, with the windows in it, was conveyed to B., and by which deed A. conveyed part of the adjoining land to B. Blanchard v. Bridges, 5 N. & M. 567; 4 A. & E. 176; 1 H. & W. 630.

Where the owner of adjoining land witnesses, without objection, alterations in the windows, there is no agreement on his part to be inferred at any time before the expiration of twenty years not to obstruct the access of light and air, by building up to the extremity of his land. Id.

If A., in licensing B. to build to the extremity of B.'s ground adjoining that of A.'s, expressly reserves to himself the right of building to the extremity of his own ground when he shall think proper to do so, A. may at any time, within twenty years, build to the extremity of his own land, though he thereby renders the house of B. dark, damp and uninhabitable. Id.

A., the side of whose house adjoined B.'s lawn, wrote to B. as follows:—"Before the last coat of paint is put on the side wall, we wish to place a window in it, and our workmen say it can be finished off more neatly with your permission to place the necessary ladder. The motive for doing this is, that I should gain a more cheerful view of the common, and passing objects." B. replied, "You are welcome to place a ladder in my grounds."—Held, that this did not amount to a license by B. to A. to open a window in the side of A.'s house; and therefore that B. might obstruct the window by an erection on her own land. Bridges v. Blanchard, 3 N. & M. 691; 1 A. & E. 536.

If an adjoining owner knowingly permits a messuage and premises to be rebuilt of an increased size and height, with the alteration of ancient lights, and the opening new lights upon an additional floor, he cannot object to them after they are complete, or assert a right to raise a party wall, and build upon his own property so high as to render the new buildings less accessible to light and air than they were at the completion of the work. Cotching v. Bassett, 9 Jur., N. S. 590; 32 L. J., Chanc. 286; 32 Beav. 101; 11 W. R. 107.

By a parol agreement between A., the owner of land and dwelling-houses, and B., also the owner of land and buildings adjoining, a rocky piece of ground which stood close to A.'s freehold was reduced by B., so as to admit further light and air to A.'s dwellings, and buildings were erected by B., so as to be attached to, and to constitute an encroachment on, A.'s freehold. A. was cognizant of and offered no objection to the work as it proceeded, but acquiesced therein:—Held, that the Statute of Frauds did not apply to such an agreement. Fisher v. Moon, 11 L. T., N. S. 623.

As to effect of licenses, in general,—see LICENSE.

Nature and extent of right acquired.—An act of parliament alone can give any person the right of taking the property of another without his consent on payment of an adequate pecuniary compensation, and the right to light and air is as much property as the land which enjoys this easement on the land of another. Dunball v. Walters, 35 Beav. 565.

If the owner of a tenement has windows looking upon the premises of another, he cannot increase their size or number, or claim more extensive rights. Cooper v. Hubbard, 30 Beav. 160; 31 L. J., Chanc. 123; 7 Jur., N. S. 457; 9 W. R. 352.

Where a purchaser takes with notice of adjoining windows, he is thereby put upon his inquiry as to whether they are privileged or not, and if privileged it is immaterial whether as modern windows by grant, or as ancient by prescription. Miles v. Tobin, 16 W. R. 465; 17 L. T., N. S. 433—C.

The title to light acquired under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 3, by a twenty years' enjoyment, is a right to a certain amount of light only, and does not prevent the owner of one of the adjacent tenements from altering the aperture through which that amount of light approaches. Maguire v. Grattan, 16 W. R. 1189; 2 Ir. R., Eq. 246.

The 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, has not altered the law as to the nature and extent of light to which the owner of an ancient light is entitled. Kelk v. Pearson, 6 L. R., Ch. 809; 24 L. T., N. S. 890; 19 W. R. 655.

The owner of an ancient light is entitled to prevent his neighbor from obstructing the access of light, so as to render the house possessing the ancient light substantially less fit for occupation. Id.

The right conferred or recognized by 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, is an absolute indefeasible right to the enjoyment of the light without reference to the purpose for which it is used. Younge v. Shaper, 27 L. T., N. S. 643; 21 W. R. 135—V. C. M.

A man is entitled to the preservation of his ancient lights, even though, at the time, he is not using them for purposes requiring the amount of light laid claim to. Id.

The Bristol Improvement Act, 1840, enacts, that no opening shall be made in any party-wall except for communication from one building to another. The plaintiff had a house, one wall of which was to the height of the first story a party-wall between his house and a building belonging to the defendant, but above that height had ancient windows opening to the external air. The plaintiff pulled down his house, and proposed to rebuild it with windows in the same position as before. Before doing this, he gave notice to the defendant, under the act, that the wall, which he described as a party wall, was out of repair, and a certificate of two surveyors was given, directing the party-wall to be built at the joint expense of the plaintiff and of the defendant. The defendant afterwards proceeded to erect a building which would obstruct the light coming to the ancient windows of the plaintiff:—Held, that the wall above the defendant's building was not a party-wall; and that the plaintiff was not precluded from making windows in it; and an injunction was granted, restraining the defendant from obstructing his ancient lights. Weston v. Arnold, 8 L. R., Ch. 1084.

The plaintiff obtained an ex parte injunction upon filing the bill; but no mention was made in the bill, or in the affidavit in support of the motion, of the notice to pull down the wall, or the certificate of the surveyors:—Held, that inasmuch as these facts were only important as raising a point of law, based on an unreasonable construction of the act, they were not material facts, and the plaintiff was justified in omitting them. Id.

There is no difference in the right of an owner of land to the ordinary easement of light, whether it is acquired by twenty years' user or by grant from the owner of the servient tenement; and if the grant is accompanied by a covenant for quiet enjoyment of the premises, such covenant does not enlarge the right of the covenantee so as to entitle him to an injunction in equity to restrain an obstruction where the damage is not sufficient to enable him to maintain an action at law. Leech v. Schneider, 9 L. R., Ch. 463; 22 W. R. 633; 43 L. J., Chanc. 487; 30 L. T., N. S. 586; reversing the decision of the Master of the Rolls, 22 W. R. 203; 43 L. J., Chanc. 232.

But it is otherwise where the right to light claimed is not the ordinary easement, but a special right created by the covenant; in which case a court of equity will grant an injunction without regard to the amount of damage. Ib.

When the court was not satisfied from the evidence whether the wall proposed to be built by the defendant would or not be a material obstruction to the plaintiff's lights, the court directed a temporary screen to be erected to the height of the proposed wall, and appointed a surveyor to report on the effect. Ib.

The right of an owner of ancient lights is to prevent his neighbor from obstructing the access of sufficient light and air to such an extent as to render his house substantially less comfortable and enjoyable, and The Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, has not altered the nature of the right or the principle on which it is to be determined whether it has been infringed, but has merely substituted a statutory title for an assumed grant. City of London Brewery Company v. Tennant, 43 L. J., Chanc. 457; 9 L. R., Ch. 212; 29 L. T., N. S. 755; 22 W. R. 172.

An agreement to grant A. a lease, in a form set out in a schedule, of property in the city, as soon as the house then in course of erection by A. on the property should be completed, contained a proviso that nothing therein contained should give A. a right to any easement which did not belong to the premises agreed to be demised as they then existed, nor to any right of light and air derived from over the houses opposite (which belonged to the lessors). The lease subsequently granted was of the land together with the house erected thereon, and all lights, easements, and appurtenances thereto belonging, in accordance with the scheduled form:—Held, that the grant by the lease of lights and easements was controlled by the antecedent agreement, which was to be read as part of the lease; and that A. was not entitled to restrain the lessees of the opposite houses from building so as to obstruct the access of light and air to his premises from over such houses. Salaman v. Glover, 20 L. R., Eq. 444; 44 L. J., Chanc. 551; 32 L. T., N. S. 792; 23 W. R. 722—V. C. B.

Abandonment and alteration.—If an ancient light has been completely shut up with brick and mortar above twenty years, it loses its privilege. Lawrence v. Obee, 3 Camp. 514—Ellenborough.

A right to light is acquired by mere user, and may be forfeited by non-user, though for less than twenty years, unless an intention is manifested, when the non-user commences, to resume the right within a reasonable time. Moore v. Rawson, 5 D. & R. 234; 3 B. & C. 332.

The right to an unobstructed access of light and air through a window is lost by a material alteration in the side of the wall in which the window was placed. Blanchard v. Bridges, 5 N. & M. 567; 4 A. & E. 176; 1 H. & W. 630.

The plaintiff was owner of a house in which there were ancient windows. His predecessor blocked them up, and they continued blocked up for nearly twenty years. The defendant purchased the adjoining land, and proposed to build upon it. The plaintiff, by way of asserting the right to the light, reopened his ancient windows. The defendant obstructed them. On the trial of an action for this obstruction, the judge directed the jury that, if the right to light had once been acquired, it continued, unless lost; and he directed them, if they thought the right had once been acquired, to find for the plaintiff, unless they thought his predecessor had, in blocking up the windows, manifested an intention of permanently abandoning his right to the light, or unless they thought that the windows had been kept so closed as to lead the defendant to alter his position in the reasonable belief that the windows had been permanently abandoned. The plaintiff having had a verdict:—Held, that the defendant had no ground to complain of this as a misdirection. Stoke v. Singers, 8 El. & Bl. 81; 3 Jur., N. S. 1256; 26 L. J., Q. B. 257.

Where an owner of the dominant tenement has exceeded the limits of the right which he has acquired to the access of light and air, by opening an additional window, leaving his ancient windows unaltered, he has not necessarily lost or suspended his admitted right, but the opening of the additional window justifies the owner of the servient tenement in obstructing the ancient windows, if the doing so is unavoidable, in the exercise of his right to obstruct the new window. Binckes v. Pask, 11 C. B., N. S. 324; 8 Jur., N. S. 360; 31 L. J., C. P. 121; 10 W. R. 424; 6 L. T., N. S. 125.

The principle as to ancient lights is, that the owner of the dominant tenement cannot depart from the mode of user substantially. He cannot change the position of his lights, nor increase the original aperture into which windows have been put; but if he has, in using his right, contracted to any given extent the original opening by windows of antique and clumsy structure, he may, without affecting his right, replace those windows by windows of an improved structure that let in more light and air. Turner v. Spooner, 1 Drew. & Sm. 467; 7 Jur., N. S. 1068; 30 L. J., Chanc. 801; 9 W. R. 684; 4 L. T., N. S. 732.

If a building, after having been used for twenty years as a malt-house, is converted into a dwelling-house, in its new state it is entitled only to the same degree of light which was necessary to it in the former state, and the owner of the adjoining ground may lawfully erect a wall which prevents the admission of sufficient light for domestic purposes, if what is still admitted would be enough for the making of malt. Martin v. Goble, 1 Camp. 822—Macdonald.

If an ancient window is raised and enlarged, the owner of the adjoining land cannot lawfully obstruct the passage of light and air to any part of the space occupied by the ancient window, although a greater portion of light and air is admitted through the unobstructed part of the enlarged window than was anciently enjoyed. Chandler v. Thompson, 3 Camp. 80—Lo Blanc.

A party may so alter the mode of enjoyment of ancient lights as to lose the right to them altogether. Garritt v. Sharp, 4 N. & M. 834; 3 A. & E. 925; 1 H. & W. 224.

Where lights had been put out and enjoyed without interruption for above twenty years, during the occupation of the opposite premises, by a tenant, that will not conclude the landlord of such opposite premises, without evidence of his knowledge of the fact, which is the foundation of presuming a grant against him, and consequently will not conclude a succeeding tenant, who was in possession under such landlord, from building up against such encroaching lights. Daniel v. North, 11 East, 372.

Where the plaintiff is entitled to lights by means of blinds fronting a garden of the defendant's, which he takes away, and opens an uninterrupted view into the garden, the defendant cannot justify making an erection to prevent the plaintiff from so doing, if he thereby renders the plaintiff's house more dark than before. Cotterell v. Griffiths, 4 Esp. 69—Kenyon.

The easement of a party to have his light and air unobstructed by newly-erected buildings is not lost or diminished by the circumstance that, by means of clearances effected in the neighborhood by other parties shortly before the alterations, the party acquired more light than the buildings could subtract. Dyers' Company v. King, 9 L. R., Eq. 438; 39 L. J., Chanc. 339; 18 W. R. 404; 22 L. T., N. S. 120—V. C. J.

Where a house is erected on the site of an old house which has been burnt down, the windows of which were ancient lights, the question whether the character of ancient lights attaches to the new windows depends on the question whether the servitude they would impose on the servient tenement is substantially the same as that which previously existed; and where the windows of a new house so erected, although somewhat differing in form from the windows of the old house, were of about the same area, and very nearly in the same positions:—Held, that the servitude imposed on the servient tenement, not being a more onerous nor a different servitude, the character of ancient lights attached to the new windows. Curriers' Company v. Corbett, 2 Drew. & Sm. 35; affirmed on appeal, 11 Jur., N. S. 719; 13 W. R. 538; 13 L. T., N. S. 154—L. J.

Where the owner of a house sells a piece of adjoining land, the purchaser may build on it as he pleases; and the vendor cannot prevent his doing so, even although the buildings erected on it may interfere with his ancient lights. Ib.

A building containing ancient lights was pulled down and replaced by another, in which the front was set back and a dormer window converted into a sky-light. Held, that the right to access of light was not lost.

National Provincial Plate-Glass Insurance Company v. Prudential Assurance Company, 6 L. R., Ch. Div. 757; 40 L. J., Chanc. Div. 871; 37 L. T., N. S. 91; 26 W. R. 26—Fry, J.

Held, also, that any substantial alteration in the plane of the windows destroys the right. Ib.—Jessell, M. R.

Held, also, that the right remains where any portion of the light which would have passed over the servient tenement through the old windows passes also through the new windows. Ib.—Fry, J.

As to right to obstruct alterations,—see this title, II., 1; effect of alterations upon remedy for obstruction,—see this title, II., 2.

Extinguishment; merger.—A union of the ownership of dominant and servient tenements for different estates does not extinguish an easement of this description, but merely suspends it so long as the union of ownership continues, and upon a severance of the ownership the easement revives. Simper v. Foley, 2 Johns. & H. 555; 5 L. T., N. S. 669.

Where a right to an easement of this description is acquired against an owner of a leasehold interest in the servient tenement, it is acquired also against the owner of the reversion. Ib.

A. and B. occupied houses adjoining each other, as tenants under leases, both of which were granted by the same lessor on the same day, and both expiring at the same time. B. by building on his own premises obstructed a window in the house of A., though the latter had had an uninterrupted enjoyment of light and air for more than twenty years:—Held, that the circumstance of the two houses being held under the same landlord, and for the same term, did not prevent the one tenant from acquiring an indefeasible right to light as against the other. Frewen v. Philipps, 11 C. B., N. S. 449; 7 Jur., N. S. 1246; 30 L. J., C. P. 356; 9 W. R. 786—Exch. Cham.

II. OBSTRUCTION.

1. What constitutes; and Right to obstruct.

What amounts to an illegal obstruction.—That diminution of light and air which the law recognizes as the ground of an action, against a party who builds near another's premises, is such as really makes them, to a sensible degree, less fit for the purposes of business or of occupation. Parker v. Smith, 5 C. & P. 438—Tindal.

To constitute an illegal obstruction, by building, of ancient lights, it is not sufficient that the plaintiff has less light than he had before; but there must be such a privation of light as will render the occupation of his house uncomfortable, and prevent him, if in trade, from carrying on his business as beneficially as he had previously done. Dack v. Stacey, 2 C. & P. 465—Best.

To sustain an action for darkening windows, it is not sufficient that a ray or two of light should be obstructed. The question is, whether, in consequence of the obstruction, the plaintiff has less light than before, to so considerable a degree as to injure his property in point of value or occupation. Pringle v. Wernham, 7 C. & P. 377—Denman. S. P., Wells v. Ody, 7 C. & P. 410—Parke.

As to injunction against obstruction,—see this title, II., 2; recovery of damages,—see this title, II., 3.

Right to create obstruction.]—The right to obstruct light possessed by an owner of a servient tenement is simply his right of building on his own land, and the opening of new windows by the owner of the dominant tenement neither confers nor enlarges such right. Tapling v. Jones, 11 H. L. Cas. 290; 20 C. B., N. S. 106; 11 Jur., N. S. 809; 34 L. J., C. P. 842; 13 W. R. 617; 12 L. T., N. S. 553. Compare Straight or Straight v. Burn, 5 L. R., Ch. 163; 39 L. J., Chanc. 289; 22 L. T., N. S. 831; 18 W. R. 243.

The "invasion of privacy by opening windows" is not a legal wrong or an injury, the opening of new windows being in law an innocent act. Id.

Where, therefore, the owner of a dominant tenement, while preserving one ancient window, altered old windows, and opened new windows upon the same side of his house, so that the owner of the servient tenement was obliged, in obstructing the new and altered lights, also to obstruct the ancient lights:—Held, that such obstruction was illegal. Id.

A. was an owner and occupier of a house of three stories, which had an ancient window on each floor. He altered the windows in the two lower floors, leaving the window in the third floor unaltered. He also built two new stories to his house, with windows intended to be permanent. He did not intend by making these alterations to abandon any privilege of his ancient windows. B., the owner of adjoining premises, could not obstruct the new windows in the upper floors, without also obstructing the old windows, and he built on his own land a wall which had the effect of obstructing all A.'s windows. A. afterwards blocked up his new windows, and sued B. for continuing the obstruction of the wall, which he refused to remove:—Held, that B. had not at any time the right to build a wall which would have the effect of obstructing the ancient lights in A.'s house, although the new windows could not otherwise have been obstructed. Jones v. Tapling, 11 C. B., N. S. 289; 8 Jur., N. S. 333; 31 L. J., C. P. 342; 10 W. R. 441; 5 L. T., N. S. 728; and S. C., in Exch. Cham., 12 C. B., N. S. 820; 9 Jur., N. S. 426; affirmed, but on a different ground. Id.

In 1855, the owners in fee of a house and adjoining land granted to trustees a lease of the land for ninety-nine years, and they covenanted to build upon it according to a plan. In 1856, the owners conveyed the reversion in fee of the lands to the trustees; in 1857, the owners conveyed the house in fee to a person under whom the plaintiff obtained possession. The defendant subsequently, with the authority of the trustees, built upon the land so as to obstruct the light and air, which for upwards of twenty years had come to the windows of the plaintiff's house. If he had built according to the plan in the lease, the obstruction would not have been to the same extent. Until the lease was granted there had never been any severance either in the title to or possession or occupancy of the land and house, and the same had been occupied and used together by the proprietors for upwards of fifty years:—Held, that the plaintiff could maintain no action against the defendant for building on the land, so as to obstruct the light and air which formerly came to the windows of the plaintiff's house. White v. Bass, 7 H. & N. 722; 8 Jur., N. S. 312; 31 L. J., Exch. 283; 5 L. T., N. S. 843.

Where an owner of ancient lights puts in new lights, the owner of the adjoining land has a right to obstruct the new lights, and, if it is necessary for that purpose, even to obstruct the old lights. Daries v. Marshall, 7 Jur., N. S. 720; 9 W. R. 368; 4 L. T., N. S. 105; 1 Drew. & Sm. 557.

A landlord of two houses granted a lease of one house and its appurtenances in consideration of certain repairs, part of which was the addition of windows. The tenant of the adjoining house afterwards surrendered his lease to the landlord, and took a new lease from him:—Held, that the tenant of the adjoining house could not obstruct the windows so added. Id.

The plaintiff purchased a house of A., and the defendant at the same time purchased of A. the adjoining land, upon which an erection of one story high had formerly stood. In the conveyance to the plaintiff, his house was described as bounded by building ground belonging to the defendant:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to a greater height than one story, if by so doing he obstructed the plaintiff's lights. Scarsborough v. Coventry, 9 Bing. 305; 2 M. & Scott, 362.

A., the owner of two adjoining houses, granted a lease of one of them to B. He afterwards leased the other to C., there then existing in it certain windows. After this B. accepted a new lease of his house from A.:—Held, that B. could alter his tenement, so as to obstruct windows existing in C.'s house at the time of C.'s lease from A., though the windows were not twenty years old at the time of the alteration. Coutts v. Gorham, M. & M. 396—Tindal.

An owner of a house, in which there were ancient lights, rebuilt it, and in so doing altered the position of some of the ancient windows, and also opened new windows. The defendant proposed to build so as to obstruct both the new and ancient windows:—Held, that as he could not possibly obstruct the new windows without at the same time obstructing the ancient lights, the owner was not entitled to an injunction. Weatherly v. Ross, 32 L. J., Chanc. 128; 1 H. & M. 349.

Any alteration of ancient lights, although not prejudicial to the owner of the servient tenement, gives him a right to obstruct them. Cutching v. Bassett, 32 Beav. 101; 32 L. J., Chanc. 286.

As to effect of alterations, generally,—see this title, I.

In 1864, A. granted to B. a lease for twenty-one years of a house "together with all edifices . . . lights . . . easements, advantages and appurtenances thereto belonging, or therewith held, used or enjoyed." At the date of the lease A. held, for the residue of a term expiring at Christmas, 1868, an adjoining house, over which most of the light came to the back windows of the house leased to B. On the expiration of his lease A. purchased the fee simple of the adjoining house, and in 1872 he pulled down that house with the intention of rebuilding it to a greater height than its former height. B., whose lights were not ancient lights, filed a bill to restrain A. from raising the new house to a greater height than the old house:—Held, that the lease to B. only amounted to a grant of the light coming over the adjoining house during A.'s term in it, and that on subsequently acquiring the fee simple of the adjoining house A. was not estopped either at law or in equity from dealing with the house in such a way as to interfere with B.'s lights. Booth v. Alcock, 29 L. T., N. S. 231; 21 W. R. 743; 8 L. R., Ch. 663; 42 L. J., Chanc. 557.

A lessor granted a lease for twenty-one years of a house with its appurtenances, among which lights were specified. At the time of the grant he held an adjoining house for a term of years. He subsequently acquired the reversion expectant on the term in the adjoining house; and after the expiration of the term he proceeded to build on the site of the adjoining house in a manner which might interfere with the lights of the demised house, those lights not being ancient lights:—Held, that the lessor was not by his grant prevented from so building. Ib.

A lease of a house for twenty-one years was made by a deed containing general words including "lights." At the date of the lease, the defendant was entitled, as under-lessee, for a term of which rather more than four years were then unexpired, to certain premises adjoining the house so leased to the plaintiff, and over which light found access to the house. Nine years after the date of the lease, the defendant, having purchased the fee of these adjoining premises, commenced building thereon so as to interfere with the light of plaintiff's house. In a suit by the plaintiff for an injunction to restrain the defendant from so building as to interfere with the light thus coming to his house:—Held, that no warranty or bargain could be implied from the general words that the plaintiff should have the access of light over the defendant's premises unimpeded for a longer time than that for which the defendant was, at the date of the lease, entitled to the adjoining premises. Ib.

Held, also, that during the period for which the defendant was entitled as under-lessee to the adjoining premises, he could not lawfully have interfered with the plaintiff's light coming across the adjoining premises. Ib.

In an action for obstructing light and air by the erection of a wall upon the defendant's premises, contiguous to and against the plaintiff's premises, the defendant relied upon an agreement entered into by the former owners of the respective premises, reserving liberty to the then owner of the defendant's premises to build a wall which would or might obstruct light and air from the plaintiff's premises:—Held, that the agreement, not being in writing, was ineffectual to prevent the easement becoming indefeasible after twenty years' user, and that as a license it was extinguished by the change of ownership. Judge v. Lowe, 7 Ir. R., C. L. 291—C. P.

Right of obstruction in the metropolis.]—The Metropolitan Building Act of 1855, s. 83, par. 6, which gives "a right to the building owner to raise any party structure permitted by this act to be raised, upon condition of making good all damage occasioned thereby to the adjoining premises," does not authorize the raising of a structure so as to obstruct ancient lights in the adjoining premises. Crofts v. Haldane, 2 L. R., Q. B. 194; 10 L. T., N. S. 116; 8 B. & S. 104.

The courts of common law, in deciding cases of light and air within the metropolitan district, require persons erecting additional walls to their premises to carry them back from the original wall in a proportionate distance to the height they are about to be erected. A court of equity, following this rule, restrained a party from building a wall more than ten feet higher than his original wall, this being the distance between the two walls. Beale v. Perry, 15 W. R. 120; 15 L. T., N. S. 345—V. C. S.

A window-frame erected on a party-wall was not a common nuisance within 14 Geo. 3, c. 78, so as to deprive the owner of it of his right to the windows, which were proved to be ancient lights; and even if it was, that would not, without conviction, be an answer to an action for obstructing them. Titterton v. Conyers, 1 Marsh. 140; 5 Taunt. 463.

— in the city of London.]—A prescriptive title is acquired under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, by an adverse enjoyment for twenty years, without interruption, of the access of light to the windows of a house in the city of London, notwithstanding a local custom of the city for the owners of an ancient messuage or foundations to build thereon to such height as the owner may please against the windows of any adjoining house and darken them. Salters'

Company v. Jay, 2 G. & D. 414; 3 Q. B. 111; 6 Jur. 803.

The custom to rebuild to any height upon ancient foundations, in the city of London, is destroyed by the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 8. Truscott v. Merchant Taylors' Company (in error), 11 Exch. 855; 2 Jur., N. S. 856; 25 L. J., Exch. 173. S. P., Cooper v. Hubback, 12 C. B., N. S. 456—Exch. Cham.

2. Injunction to restrain.

What interference or interruption may be restrained, generally.—An injunction against darkening ancient windows is not granted in every case affecting the value of premises in a sufficient degree to support an action; the effect must be that material injury amounting to nuisance, which should not only be redressed by damages, but upon equitable principles prevented. Att. Gen. v. Nichol, 16 Ves. 338.

An owner of ancient lights is entitled not only to sufficient light for the purpose of his then business, but to all the light which he has enjoyed previously to the interruption sought to be restrained. Yates v. Jack, 1 L. R., Chanc. 295; 12 Jur., N. S. 805; 14 W. R. 618; 14 L. T., N. S. 151; overruling Jackson v. Newcastle, 3 De G., J. & S. 275; 83 L. J., Chanc. 608; 10 Jur., N. S. 688, 810; 10 L. T., N. S. 685, 802; 12 W. R. 1000. See Aynsley v. Glover, 18 L. R., Eq. 544; 43 L. J., Chanc. 777; 81 L. T., N. S. 219.

In order to entitle a plaintiff to an injunction against a defendant obstructing the access of light and air to his house, the obstruction complained of must be such an interference with the light and air as to cause material annoyance to those who occupy the house; and the locality of the house, whether in a large town or in the country, is to be taken into consideration in estimating the amount of obstruction necessary to justify the interference of the court. In a large city the mere obstruction of the direct rays of the sun for two hours in the day, during the winter months, is not a sufficient ground for granting an injunction. Clarke v. Clark, 1 L. R., Chanc. 16; 35 L. J., Chanc. 151; 11 Jur., N. S. 914; 14 W. R. 115; 13 L. T., N. S. 482—C.

There is no essential difference in the amount of light and air that may be claimed in town and country, and the court will interfere, though the amount of sky area abstracted is small, if its proportion to the previous amount of sky is such that the abstraction causes inconvenience. Martin v. Headon, 2 L. R., Eq. 425; 12 Jur., N. S. 887; 35 L. J., Chanc. 602; 14 W. R. 723; 14 L. T., N. S. 585—V. C. K.

Where there is, substantially, interference with comfort, and diminution of light for carrying on business, so that substantial damages would be given at law, a court of equity will restrain injury to ancient lights; and the fact that the amount of compensation is capable of being ascertained by a jury does not prevent the court from acting on the ground of irreparable mischief. Dent v. Auction Mart Company, 2 L. R., Eq. 236; 12 Jur., N. S. 447; 35 L. J., Chanc. 555; 14 W. R. 709; 14 L. T., N. S. 827—V. C. W.

The court will not grant an injunction to restrain the erection of a building on account of its obstructing the plaintiff's light, unless the plaintiff can show that he will sustain substantial damage. Robinson v. Whittingham, 1 L. R., Chanc. App. 442; 12 Jur., N. S. 40; 35 L. J., Chanc. 227; 14 W. R. 291; 13 L. T., N. S. 730—L. J.

A plaintiff coming to the court for an injunction to restrain the erection of new buildings by his neighbor, on the ground of interference with his light and air, must show that his own residence will be rendered substantially less comfortable for purposes of occupation. Johnson v. Wyatt, 33 L. J., Chanc. 394—L. J.

The question to be determined in a suit for an injunction to restrain an interference with light and air is still, as it was before the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, whether the acts of the defendant will materially interfere with the access of light and air to the plaintiff's house, so as substantially to affect the comfortable occupation of the house. Kell v. Pearson, 19 W. R. 665; 24 L. T., N. S. 890; 6 L. R., Ch. 809; reversing S. C., 23 L. T., N. S. 458; 19 W. R. 267—V. C. B.

The defendant was erecting a row of houses running east and west. The western wall of the house at the west end of the row immediately adjoined the eastern boundary of the plaintiff's garden, which was on the north side of his house. The south frontage line of the row of houses was almost in a line with the north side of this house. The defendant's houses when completed were intended to be about thirty-two feet deep, and forty-five feet high, which height would exceed by a few feet that of the plaintiff's house. The evidence showed that the nearest house to the plaintiff's house would interfere with the access of light and air thereto, to such an extent as substantially to affect the comfortable enjoyment of his house:—Held, that he was entitled to a perpetual injunction to restrain the building of the house nearest to his own. Id.

Where an occupier of a house and grounds in London erected a translucent screen of glass thirty-five feet high, and thirty feet distant from the plaintiff's dwelling, having louvres to admit air, the court refused to grant an injunction. Raddiffe v. Portland, 3 Giff. 702; 8 Jur., N. S. 1007; 10 W. R. 687; 7 L. T., N. S. 126.

It is not every impediment to the access of light or of air which will warrant the interference of the Court of Chancery by way of injunction, or even entitle the person alleging himself to be injured to damages at law. In order to found a title to relief in equity, or even at law, in respect of such an impediment, some material or substantial injury must be established, and the onus of proving the injury rests with the plaintiff. Curriers' Company v. Corbett, 4 De G., J. & S. 764.

The reversioners in fee of houses on both sides of a court in the city of London, sold their reversion of a house on one side of the court to a person who at the same time obtained from the termor an assignment of his interest. The purchaser cleared the site so obtained by him, and on it, and on adjoining land, commenced building in such a way as to interfere with the access of light and air to the vendor's houses on the opposite side of the court, and the latter filed a bill for an injunction to restrain him from proceeding with or completing his buildings, and for a preventive and mandatory injunction against any building to a greater height than that of the buildings pulled down, or so as to obstruct the light and air to a greater extent than had been the case prior to the clearance of the site:—Held, that there was no such material injury done or occasioned, or likely to be done or occasioned, to the vendors by the acts of the purchaser, as would warrant the interference of a court of equity, and the bill was dismissed without costs, but without prejudice to any remedy at law. Ib.

The Court of Chancery has never assumed or exercised jurisdiction to order a building, which so far as it can impede the progress of light and air has been actually completed, to be pulled down. Ib.

The plaintiff had for fifteen years used an upper room in his house for the special purpose of drying tobacco. There was a free flow of light and air through this room by means of two windows, one at each end of the room, both of them ancient lights. On motion for an injunction to restrain the defendant from raising the roof of his house to a height which would occasion some, but not a material diminution of light to one of these windows:—Held, that as the plaintiff had not used the room for the special purpose for twenty years, he could claim no special right on that account; that to obtain an injunction he must show a material diminution in the quantity of light and air required for the ordinary purposes of the room. Dickinson v. Harbottle, 28 L. T., N. S. 183—V. C. M.

A mandatory injunction was granted on an interlocutory application, the defendant against whom it was sought failing to show that the buildings which he was erecting would not materially interfere with the plaintiff's ancient lights. Younge v. Shaper, 27 L. T., N. S. 643—V. C. M.

The School Board of London having, under the Elementary Education Act, 1870, and the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, acquired land as a site for a school, proceeded to build so as to interfere with the light of an adjoining owner, whose houses the board had not acquired power to take:—Held, that the board was not entitled by its building to interfere with the plaintiff's rights, leaving him to claim compensation under the Lands Clauses Act, s. 68, but that he was entitled to an injunction. Clark v. London School Board, 28 L. T., N. S. 657—V. C. M.

In a suit by the owner and occupier of a house and workshop, complaining of the obscuration of his ancient lights by the defendant raising a low party wall, distant only eight feet from his windows, to a height of twenty-six feet:—Held, that as the plaintiff had not lost his right to relief by delay or acquiescence, he was entitled to a mandatory injunction for the removal of the additional building. Smith v. Smith, 20 L. R., Eq. 500; 28 W. R. 771; 32 L. T., N. S. 787—R.

On a bill filed to compel the removal of so much of a large shed as interfered with the lights of a chapel and school-room below it, and to restrain the carrying on of the business of the defendants as boiler makers so as to interfere with the user of the chapel:—Held, that having regard to the nature of the building, relief as prayed would be granted at the hearing, though the shed was allowed to be erected and completed and the works carried on for some months without complaint. Baxter v. Bower, 44 L. J., Chanc. 625; 23 W. R. 803; 33 L. T., N. S. 41; affirming the decision of Bacon, V. C., 28 W. R. 834.

It is to be understood that an injunction is not to be used oppressively; but the court will not too carefully limit its orders, and will leave any abuse to be dealt with when it arises. Ib.

"Air" is not to be coupled with "light" in an injunction, as a matter of common form. Ib.

As a general rule, in the absence of special circumstances, the owner of a house in a narrow street will be restrained from raising it to a height which will obstruct the access of light below the angle of forty-five degrees to ancient windows opposite. Hackett v. Bais, 45 L. J., Chanc. Div. 13; 20 L. R., Eq. 494—R.

In a street varying from thirty-seven feet six inches to thirty-four feet in width, and having ancient houses on its eastern side, of the average height of forty-four feet, a building owner was restrained from raising a building on the opposite side to a greater height in front than forty-six feet, without prejudice to his putting on a sloping roof higher, so long as the angle of incidence of light over it did not exceed forty-five degrees. Ib.

An ancient light of the plaintiff, a sculptor, had a north aspect, in a street thirty-one feet wide. The defendant's buildings, on the opposite side of the street, were, as to part, exactly thirty-one feet high, and as to other part, a little less than that height. He claimed to have a statutory right to raise his buildings to a height which would subtend an angle of forty-five degrees measured from a base line level with the center of the plaintiff's light:—Held, that the statutory regulation as to the height of buildings in streets is not to be taken as limiting the right by prescription to ancient lights, but that such right depends upon the degree and amount of obscuration in each particular case. Theed v. Debenham, 2 L. R., Ch. Div. 165; 24 W. R. 775—V. C. B.

If there is no interference with the access of light and air, the fact that a shop window is obstructed in such a way that it cannot be seen from so great a distance down the street as formerly, affords no ground for the interference of a court of equity. Smith v. Owen, 14 W. R. 422—V. C. W.

Mandatory injunction refused, and nominal damages, without costs on either side, granted in a case where the plaintiff had only a life interest, subject to an existing lease, and where, though there was a substantial interference with present comfort in respect of light, there was no prospective injury or diminution in the salable value of the property. There being no case as to air, the plaintiff's case as to light was made less strong by its being addressed conjointly to air and light. Perkins v. Slater, 35 L. T., N. S. 356—V. C. II.

B. alleged that in 1864 he had obtained the consent of a company, the owners of an adjoining tenement, to open two windows in a party-wall separating the two tenements. B. had previously opened three other windows in the party-wall. In 1875 the company served B. with notice, under the Metropolitan Building Act, that they intended blocking up all five windows. The three windows in 1875 had been opened up eighteen years. Evidence of consent upon the company's part to B.'s opening the two windows was admitted by Malins, V. C., who held that such consent was fully proved as to the two windows, and that as to the other three after eighteen years a previous consent to open them must be implied:—Held, that the evidence of consent was inadmissible, and that as the other three windows were not ancient lights the plaintiff's case as to the five windows failed, and that part of his bill must be dismissed with costs. Bourke v. Alexandra Hotel Company, 25 W. R. 782—C. A.; reversing the decision of Malins, V. C., 25 W. R. 393.

The Vice-Chancellor (Malins) had also granted an injunction as to eight other windows as to which there was no appeal:—Held, that as the plaintiff had succeeded as to part of his suit and failed as to the rest, the costs of the part as to which he had failed must be taxed and set off against those of the part as to which he had succeeded, and the balance of such costs only paid to the party entitled to most costs. Id.

Since the Judicature Act, as before it, a plaintiff in an action to restrain an alleged obstruction to ancient lights cannot obtain an injunction unless he proves substantial damage. Kino v. Rudkin, 6 L. R., Ch. Div. 160; 46 L. J., Chanc. Div. 807—Fry, J.

An inquiry as to damages will not be directed where the plaintiff has opened a case of substantial damage and has failed to prove it. Id.

A bill was filed by a seed merchant, carrying on business in Dublin, to restrain the defendants, who occupied adjacent offices, from erecting a new building then in progress, which he alleged would obstruct the access of light to an ancient window of the room in which he had sifted his seeds for the previous seventeen years; the plaintiff's interlocutory motion for an injunction was ordered to stand till the hearing, the defendants being at liberty in the meantime to complete their works, on their undertaking to abide any order to be eventually made by the court as to the removal of the new building: on the hearing the vice-chancellor dismissed the bill with costs, and the plaintiff having appealed:—Held, that the defendants, having caused such a diminution of light as, notwithstanding certain compensative illumination afforded by them, prevented the plaintiff from carrying on the delicate operation of sifting seeds in the room, he was entitled to relief, although he had so used the room for less than twenty years, and sufficient light remained in it for the ordinary purposes of a dwelling-house; and that the defendants should be restrained from erecting, or (on account of their undertaking) permitting to remain erected, any building obstructing the access of light as previously enjoyed by the plaintiff, and be directed to remove such portions of the newly-erected edifice as would constitute a breach of the foregoing injunction. Mackey v. Scottish Widows' Fund Life Assurance Society, 11 Ir. R., Eq. 541—Ch. App. And see S. C., 10 Ir. R., Eq. 114—V. C.

As to what interruption or interference constitutes ground for action for damages,—see this title, II., 3.

Effect of alterations or other acts of plaintiff.—A party who, in an insignificant degree, obscured the light and air to his own dwelling:—Held, not thereby disentitled to an injunction to restrain another person from erecting a building so as seriously to diminish the supply of light and air. Arcedeckne v. Kell, 2 Giff. 683; 5 Jur., N. S. 114.

If ancient windows which look over the land or upon the premises of another are enlarged, and are complained of: the court, upon their being restored to their original dimensions, will restrain the owner of the adjoining property from obscuring such restored windows. Cooper v. Hubbard, 30 Bear. 160; 31 L. J., Chanc. 123; 7 Jur., N. S. 457.

When ancient lights are obstructed, the fact that the owner of the building to which the ancient lights belong has himself contributed to the diminution of the light, will not in itself preclude him from obtaining an injunction against the person causing the obstruction. Staigh or Straight v. Burn, 5 L. R., Ch. 162; 39 L. J., Chanc. 289; 18 W. R. 243; 23 L. T., N. S. 831; overruling Heath v. Bucknall, 8 L. R., Eq. 1; 38 L. J., Chanc. 372; 20 L. T., N. S. 549; 17 W. R. 755.

The defendant built a wall to the north of the windows of the plaintiffs' house, by which his ancient lights were interfered with. The plaintiff was at the same time enlarging his own premises, whereby he diminished the light coming to his own windows by shutting off some of the light from the south and south-west:—Held, that he was entitled to an injunction. Ib.

The doctrine of Tapling v. Jones (11 H. L. Cas. 290; 20 C. B., N. S. 166; 11 Jur., N. S. 309; 34 L. J., C. P. 342; 12 L. T., N. S. 555; 13 W. R. 617; cited supra, column 8491), applies to the equitable as well as to the legal remedy. Ib.

When an owner of a building having ancient lights enlarges or adds to the number of windows, he does not thereby preclude himself from obtaining an injunction to restrain an obstruction of the ancient lights. Aynsley v. Glover, 8 L. R., Eq. 544; 43 L. J., Chanc. 777; 31 L. T., N. S. 219; 23 W. R. 147; affirming S. C., 8 L. R., Eq. 544; 43 L. J., Chanc. 777; 31 L. T., N. S. 219; 23 W. R. 147.

A partial interference with lights by the owner is no bar to a suit to prevent a subsequent interference by other persons. Baxter v. Bower, 44 L. J., Chanc. 625; 33 L. T., N. S. 41; 23 W. R. 805; affirming the decision of Bacon, V. C., 23 W. R. 334.

As to effect of alterations, generally,—see this title, I.; right to obstruct alterations,—see this title, II., 1.

Who entitled to injunction.—A lessee of a dwelling-house in which he carries on business as a diamond merchant, is entitled to an injunction restraining the owners of premises adjacent (who afterwards purchased the reversion of the lessee's house) from constructing the party-wall which they were about to rebuild, so as to occasion such an obstruction of the lessee's ancient lights, however slight, as would injure him in his business. Herz v. Union Bank of London, 2 Giff. 686; 1 Jur., N. S. 127.

A lessee of a dwelling-house in which he has for nearly eight years carried on business as a repairer of jewelry and watches, is entitled to damages against the owner of adjacent premises who is in the process of constructing a building which would occasion such an obstruction of his light as to injure him in his business. Lyon v. Dillimore, 14 W. R. 511; 14 L. T., N. S. 183—V. C. S.

The court will restrain the interference with ancient lights, although the plaintiff is not the occupier of the house interfered with, and may have no intention of occupying it. Wilson v. Townend, 6 Jur., N. S. 1109; 30 L. J., Chanc. 25; 1 Drew. & Sm. 324; 3 L. T., N. S. 352; 9 W. R. 30.

A tenant from year to year may file a bill for an injunction to protect the right to the access and use of light; but the injunction will be limited to the period of the continuance of his tenancy. Simper v. Foley, 2 Johns. & H. 555; 5 L. T., N. S. 669.

Where the owner of an ancient light was a lessee whose lease had expired during the obstruction, but who had agreed for a renewal:—Held, that he could still maintain his suit. Gale v. Abbott, 8 Jur., N. S. 987; 10 W. R. 748; 6 L. T., N. S. 852—V. C. K.

Assuming that cases exist wherein a tenant from year to year under notice to quit is entitled to an injunction to restrain the erection of buildings which prejudice the access of light and air to which he is entitled, still the nature of his interest, especially when he can obtain damages at law, renders it imperative upon him to make out a very strong case for the intervention of a court of equity. Jacomb v. Knight, 3 De G., J. & S. 533.

Time of application.—A party coming to the court to prevent an obstruction of ancient lights, must take proceedings before the obstruction complained of is completed, otherwise his remedy is by action; and it is immaterial whether he knew of the obstruction before it was completed. Lawrence v. Austin, 11 Jur., N. S. 576; 34 L. J., Chanc. 598; 13 W. R. 981; 12 L. T., N. S. 757—R.

The mere fact that the damage created by obstruction of light is completed before bill filed, is not of itself a sufficient ground for refusing a mandatory injunction. Darrell v. Pritchard, 1 L. R., Ch. 244; 12 Jur., N. S. 16; 35 L. J., Chanc. 233; 14 W. R. 212; 13 L. T., N. S. 545.

Where an obstruction to an ancient light had existed more than twelve months, but a promise had been given to remove the obstruction, and twelve months had not elapsed from the date of that promise before proceedings were taken:—Held, that there had not been such an interruption of the enjoyment as would deprive the owner of the light of his remedy. Gale v. Abbot, 8 Jur., N. S. 987; 10 W. R. 748; 6 L. T., N. S. 852—V. C. K.

Inspection or survey of buildings obstructed.—A judge of the Court of Chancery ought not to make a personal inspection of buildings in order to ascertain whether a material diminution of light and air is caused in any case. Leech v. Schweder, 43 L. J., Chanc. 232; 22 W. R. 292—R.

The court ought not, under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, s. 42, to make an order before the trial, appointing a scientific person to report upon the question of fact. Baltic Company v. Simpson, 24 W. R. 390—R.

Therefore, in a light and air suit, in which an interlocutory injunction had been granted, a motion by the defendant for the appointment of a surveyor to view the premises and plans and report thereon as to the injury to the plaintiffs, was refused with costs. Ib.

As to inspection of real property, generally.—see INSPECTION.

Restraining at law.—In an action for obstructing ancient lights, with a claim for an injunction, after verdict for the plaintiff, the court granted an injunction to restrain the defendant from continuing the wrongful acts complained of, and from committing any injury of the like kind relating to the property and rights of the plaintiff, and from erecting, keeping erected, and continuing the erection of so much of the wall and buildings as was opposite his premises, so or in such manner as to darken or obstruct any of the ancient lights or windows of the premises, and from erecting any other building and doing any other act whereby the light and air coming to and entering his premises by means of the windows might be obstructed, or such premises might be in any way darkened, and from the repetition or continuance of any act whereby an injury of a like kind might happen to the plaintiff; the writ of injunction to lie in the office till next term, the defendant undertaking to pull down as much of the wall and building as should be sufficient to restore to the plaintiff the full enjoyment of the light and air he had previously, and to do the same to the satisfaction of a surveyor to be agreed on or nominated by one of the judges of the court, the defendant to pay the costs of the rule and of the surveyor. Jessel v. Chaplin, 2 Jur., N. S. 981—Exch.

3. Recovery of Damages.

Instead of injunction, in suit in equity.]—Wherever a plaintiff would recover substantial damages at law he has a right to sue in a court of equity, but there may be cases where the court of equity will exercise the power conferred on it by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, and give damages instead of an injunction. But the court will not let the defendant gain an advantage in this respect by refusing an interlocutory injunction, and merely putting him on an undertaking to pull down if ordered at the hearing. Aynsley v. Glover, 43 L. J., Chanc. 777; 8 L. R., Eq. 544; 31 L. T., N. S. 219—R.; affirmed, 10 L. R., Ch. 283; 44 L. J., Chanc. 523; 32 L. T., N. S. 345; 23 W. R. 459. See also Yates v. Jack, 1 L. R., Chanc. 295; 12 Jur., N. S. 805; 14 L. T., N. S. 151; overruling Jackson v. Newcastle, 3 De G., J. & S. 275; 10 Jur., N. S. 688, 810; 33 L. J., Chanc. 698; 10 L. T., N. S. 635, 802; 12 W. R. 1068.

In considering the amount of injury caused to a party by the obstruction of ancient lights, the court will have regard, not merely to the present, but also to the possible future use of the property. Id.

When an unlawful obstruction of an ancient light had existed for nearly six years, the court being of opinion that before the passing of the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, a bill for an injunction would have been dismissed, refused to direct an inquiry as to damages under that act. Gawst v. Fynney, 42 L. J., Chanc. 122—C.

It is not to be laid down as a general rule that, where a building injuriously affecting ancient lights has been completed before the bill is filed, the court is unable to give damages unless the injury is such as would justify a mandatory injunction. City of London Brewery Company v. Tennant, 9 L. R., Ch. 212; 43 L. J., Chanc. 457; 22 W. R. 172; 29 L. T., N. S. 753.

The fact that the height of a building above an ancient light is not greater than its distance is not conclusive evidence that the light is not injuriously affected, but is prima facie evidence of there being no such interference with the light as the court will restrain, and requires to be rebutted by special evidence of injury. Id.

When the walls of a building which interfered with ancient lights were complete at the filing of the bill, and the roof was on at the hearing of the cause, the court did not grant a mandatory injunction to pull down any part of the building, but ordered an inquiry as to the damage sustained in respect of the loss of light. Mott v. Shoobred, 23 W. R. 545; 20 L. R., Eq. 22; 44 L. J., Chanc. 384.

On a bill for an injunction to restrain the completion and continuance of a building seriously obstructing ancient lights, it appeared that the building was almost completed before the bill was filed; that the plaintiff had, before the commencement of the works, information that some building was proposed, and that she was abroad during the actual building, and had done nothing amounting to acquiescence:—Held, that a mandatory injunction could not be granted, and an inquiry as to damages was directed, though not prayed by the bill. Stanley v. Shrewsbury, 19 L. R., Eq. 616; 44 L. J., Chanc. 389; 23 W. R. 678; 32 L. T., N. S. 248—V. C. H.

The distinction explained between an obstruction to ancient lights and an interference with the water rights of a riparian proprietor, with reference to the question whether damages should be awarded in lieu of an injunction. Pennington v. Brinsop Hall Coal Company, 5 L. R., Ch. Div. 769; 40 L. J., Chanc. Div. 773; 37 L. T., N. S. 194—Fry, J.

When actions for damages may be maintained.]—An action on the case lies for darkening the plaintiff's windows by a wall erected by the defendant partly on his own land and partly on the plaintiff's land. Wells v. Ody, 1 M. & W. 452; 2 Gale, 12; 5 D. P. C. 45.

In an action for obstructing the plaintiff's lights, a clerk who superintended the erection of the building by which they were darkened, and who alone directed the workmen, may be joined as a co-defendant with the original contractor. Wilson v. Peto, 6 Moore, 47.

The occupier of one of two houses built nearly at the same time and purchased of the same proprietor, may maintain an action against the tenant of the other, for obstructing his window lights, by adding to his own building, however short the previous period of enjoyment by the plaintiff. Compton v. Richards, 1 Price, 27.

The owner of a house divided it into two tenements, and demised one of them to the defendant:—Held, that he was liable to an action for obstructing windows existing in the house at the time of the demise, although of recent construction, and though there was no stipulation against the obstruction. Riviera v. Bower, R. & M. 24—Abbott.

To give a cause of action for the obstruction of light, the diminution of light must be sensible; but the plaintiff is entitled substantially to all the light which he enjoyed before the obstruction, and evidence that enough of light remains to enable him to carry on his business is not sufficient to give the defendant a verdict. Manning v. Gresham Hotel Company, 1 Ir. R., C. L. 115.

A reversioner recovered in an action for obstructing an ancient light, to the injury of his reversionary interest. The obstruction was not removed:—Held, that he might maintain a second action for the continuation of the injury to his reversionary interest. Shadwell v. Hutchinson, 2 B. & Ad. 97; 4 C. & P. 833; M. & M. 850.

By an act it was provided that nothing in the act contained should authorize a railway company to take, injure or damage, for the purposes of the act, any house or building which was erected on or before the 30th November, 1835, without the consent in writing of the owner or other person interested therein, other than such as were specified in the schedule to the act, unless the omission therefrom proceeded from mistake. A subsequent clause contained provisions for settling all differences which might arise between the company and the owners or occupiers of any lands which should be taken, used, damaged or injuriously affected by the execution of any of the powers granted by the act, and for the payment of satisfaction or compensation, as well for damages already sustained as for future, temporary or perpetual, or any recurring damages:—Held, that the company was liable to the reversioner of a house erected before the 30th November, 1835, and not specified in the schedule, for damage done to it by the obstruction of its lights by a station erected by the company, and by the dust drifted from the station and embankment into the house; and that the reversioner was not bound to come in under the compensation clause. Turner v. Sheffield and Rotherham Railway Company, 10 M. & W. 425.

Pledgings in actions.]—A declaration for an injury to the reversionary interest of the plaintiff by obstructing ancient lights, is sufficient if it shows an obstruction which may operate injuriously to the reversion, either by its being of a permanent character, or by its operating in denial of the right. Metropolitan Association for Improving Dwellings of Industrious Classes v. Petch, 5 C. B., N. S. 504; 27 L. J., C. P. 330.

A plaintiff complained of an obstruction of the light and air to his ancient windows; of the raising and erecting of walls and buildings, whereby the smoke and vapor from his chimneys were prevented from being carried off; and that the defendant had deprived his house of the support to which he was entitled. He pleaded, that the grievances were occasioned by the pulling down and rebuilding of his own house; that the plaintiff had notice, and that the old building was pulled down, and the new one erected, and large sums of money were expended thereon by the defendant, with the knowledge, acquiescence and consent of the plaintiff, and on the faith that the plaintiff so knew of, acquiesced in, and consented to the so pulling down and rebuilding. The plaintiff replied that the defendant acquiesced and consented upon the faith of false representations made to him by the defendant and her agents, that the grievances would not result from or be produced by the pulling down and rebuilding:—Held, that the plea afforded a good defense on equitable grounds. Davies v. Marshall, 10 C. B., N. S. 697; 31 L. J., C. P. 61; 7 Jur., N. S. 1247; 9 W. R. 866; 4 L. T., N. S. 581.

Held, also, that the replication was a good equitable answer to the plea. Id.

Evidence, and damages.]—In an action for the obstruction of light to the windows of an hotel, the summons and plaint containing no allegation of special damage, witnesses deposed that guests coming to the hotel had refused to take the rooms which were alleged to be darkened, and had stated the darkness of the rooms as a ground for their refusal:—Held, that this evidence of the statements made by the guests was not admissible. Gresham Hotel Company v. Manning, 1 Ir. R., C. L. 125.

In an action for the obstruction of light and air by a boarding erected before the defendant's house, next door to that of the plaintiff, it was further alleged in the declaration that the defendant caused divers persons to commit nuisances, and place rubbish against the boarding, from which nuisances the plaintiff was injured:—Held, that evidence of these nuisances was not admissible, as the defendant could not be liable for their existence. Steele v. Warne, 28 L. T., N. S. 394—C. P.

In an action for removing boards, under a plea of justification that they obstructed an ancient window through which the light ought to pass, it is sufficient to show that the window was one through which the light ought to be allowed to pass, though the window is proved to have been erected within living memory. Penwarden v. Ching, M. & M. 400—Tindal.

IV. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE, 8666.

I. GENERAL OPERATION AND EFFECT OF STATUTES OF LIMITATION.

When a bar to the right, or merely to the remedy.]—The old English Statutes of Limitation barred the remedy only, not the right; but the modern statutes cut off the right as well as the remedy. Dundas Harbor (Trustees) v. Dougall, 1 Macq. H. L. Cas. 317; De Beauvoir v. Owen, 5 Exch. 166; 19 L. J., Exch. 177.

In actions for debts, the statute bars the remedy only, not the debt. Higgins v. Scott, 2 B. & Ad. 413. And see Harris v. Quine, 4 L. R., Q. B. 653; 38 L. J., Q. B. 331; 20 L. T., N. S. 947; 17 W. R. 967.

Effect upon Liens.]—The lien of an attorney remains, although his claim against his client is barred by the statute. Broomhead, In re, 5 D. & L. 52; 16 L. J., Q. B. 355—B. C.—Wightman.

— upon summary proceedings.]—Where a client had a claim upon an attorney for moneys recovered for the client in an action brought on his behalf:—Held, that the statute was no bar to the recovery of the money by an application to the summary jurisdiction of the court. Sharpe, Ex parte, W., W. & D. 354; 1 Jur. 405.

— upon petitions of right.]—The Statute of Limitations cannot be pleaded to a petition of right. Rustomjee v. Reg., 45 L. J., Q. B. Div. 249; 1 L. R., Q. B. Div. 487; 24 W. R. 428; 34 L. T., N. S. 278.

— upon criminal prosecutions.]—There is no limitation at common law to criminal prosecutions by indictment. Dover v. Maestaer, 5 Esp. 92—Ellenborough.

As to limitation of proceedings by certiorari,—see CERTIORARI.

As to limitation of complaints and informations before justices,—see JUSTICE OF THE PEACE; of appeals to the sessions,—see SESSIONS.

Lex loci; what limitation or prescription applies to remedies in different countries.]—The law of the country where a contract is made, or is to be performed, furnishes the rules for expounding the nature and extent of its obligation; but the law of the country where it is sought to enforce performance of a contract, governs all questions as to the remedy and mode of proceeding, including lapse of time. Fergusson v. Fyffe, 8 C. & F. 121.

The time of limitation for bringing an action is governed by the law of the country where the action is brought, and not by the lex loci contractus. Huber v. Steiner, 2 Scott, 304; 2 Bing. N. C. 202; 1 Hodges, 206. See Harris v. Quine, 4 L. R., Q. B. 653; 38 L. J., Q. B. 331; 20 L. T., N. S. 947; 17 W. R. 967.

The law of prescription, or of limitation, is a law relating to procedure, having reference only to the lex fori; and when a court entertains a cause of action which originated in a foreign country, the rule is to adjudicate according to the law of that country, yet the court proceeds according to the prescription of the country in which it exercises jurisdiction. Ruckmaboye v. Lulloobhoy Mottichund, 5 Moore Ind. App. 234; 8 Moore P. C. C. 4.

Where bills were drawn and accepted, and became due in France, but the acceptor, a Scotchman, before such bills became due, returned to Scotland, and there continued till his death:—Held, that more than six years having elapsed between the time of the bills becoming due and the action being brought, the Scotch law of prescription applied, and that its effect was not prevented by the fact that the payee had taken legal proceedings in France, during the absence of the debtor, and had obtained judgment against him. Don v. Lippmann, 5 C. & F. 1.

—when law of England applies to other countries, or to foreigners or foreign contracts.]—A foreigner who always resides beyond sea is not bound by the Statute of Limitations. Strithorst v. Grame, 2 W. Bl. 723; 3 Wils. 145.

The 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, extends to India. East India Company v. Paul, 7 Moore P. C. C. 85; 14 Jur. 253.

And applies to Hindoos and Mohammedans as well as Europeans, in civil actions in the supreme court. Ruckmaboye v. Lulloobhoy Mottichund, 5 Moore Ind. App. 234; 8 Moore P. C. C. 4.

The Statute of Limitations extends to persons in Scotland. Rez v. Walker, 1 W. Bl. 286. And see Campbell v. Stein, 6 Dow, 116; Surtess v. Allen, 2 Dow, 254.

In an action for a debt, it was averred, that before making the instrument and obligation thereafter mentioned, the plaintiffs carried on business in Scotland, and that A. and the defendant were domiciled therein; and that by an instrument and obligation in writing, A. and the defendant became bound, and obliged themselves conjointly and severally, to pay to the plaintiff 400*l.*, and that, by the law of Scotland, at the time of making such instrument, and thence hitherto in force, the time for bringing any suit or instituting any legal proceeding by the plaintiffs against the defendant upon the instrument, and the cause and right of action accruing thereon, had not yet elapsed; that is to say, by virtue of the said law, the plaintiffs had the right and privilege of suing and bringing any action thereon, at any time within forty years from the time of making and signing the bond:—Held, that a plea, that the cause of action did not accrue within six years, was an answer to the action. British Linen Company v. Drummond, 10 B. & C. 903.

Where a foreign statute of limitations requires proceedings to be taken within a shorter period than that prescribed by the English statute, but like the English statute does not affect causes of action, but only the remedy in respect of them, a foreign judgment declaring that a claim is barred by the local statute of limitations is no bar to an action in England for that same claim, within the period prescribed by the English law. Harris v. Quine, 38 L. J., Q. B. 331; 20 L. T., N. S. 947; 4 L. R., Q. B. 653; 17 W. R. 967.

A firm of attorneys in the Isle of Man was retained by the defendant, in 1858, to conduct a suit in one of the Manx courts in which he was defendant. The suit was dismissed in April, 1861; in September, 1861, the plaintiff in the suit appealed to a superior court, and the attorneys continued to act for the defendant, and conducted the appeal on his behalf up to the 1st of October, 1862. By the Manx statute law an action on a simple contract brought in the temporal courts of the island must be commenced within three years of the accrual of the cause of action. The attorneys brought an action in one of the Manx courts more than three years after October, 1862, and the court decided that the action was barred by the statute. They afterward commenced an action in England in January, 1868, to which the defendant pleaded, first, the judgment of the Manx court, and, secondly, the English Statute of Limitations:—Held, first, that, as the Manx statute barred the remedy only, and did not extinguish the debt, the judgment of the Manx court was no bar; and, secondly, that under the circumstances, there was a continuous employment of the attorneys, and that therefore none of the items were barred by the statute. Id.

Legal proceedings in England to recover a debt contracted in India are not barred by the Indian Statute of Limitations, Art. XIV., 1850. Finch v. Finch, 45 L. J., Ch. Div. 816; 35 L. T., N. S. 235—V. C. B.

The English Statute of Limitations binds every one who comes to sue in the court of Chancery. Pardo v. Bingham, 17 W. R. 419; 20 L. T., N. S. 464; 4 L. R., Ch. 735.

Agreements to waive the statute.]—Semble, there may be an agreement, that in consideration of an inquiry into the merits of a disputed claim, no advantage shall be taken of the statute, in respect of the time employed in the inquiry, and an action may be brought for a breach of such agreement. East India Company v. Paul, 7 Moore P. C. C. 85; 14 Jur. 253.

A parol agreement was entered into between the executors of L. and T., that various old accounts between their testators should be settled without reference to the time that they had been running, and that a balance should be struck. The accounts were accordingly settled, and the executors of L. were allowed the value of a promissory note, which, but for the agreement, would have been barred by the statute. The executors of T. afterwards discovered a note from L. to T., which, but for the same reason, would have been barred by the statute:—Held, that the agreement was one for valuable consideration on both sides, to waive the benefit of the statute, and ought to be enforced. Lade v. Trill, 6 Jur. 272—V. C. K. B.

A., being indebted to B. on two overdue bills of exchange, gave a written undertaking as follows:—"In consideration of your not proceeding on the bills, I hereby debar myself of the plea of the Statute of Limitations in case of my being sued for the recovery of the amounts of the bills, and I promise to pay them whenever my circumstances enable me to do so, and I may be called upon for that purpose."—Held, that the statute began to run as soon as A. became of ability to pay, although B. had had no notice or knowledge of such ability, and had made no demand of payment. Waters v. Thanet, 2 G. & D. 166; 2 Q. B. 757; 6 Jur. 708.

As to effect of acknowledgment, new promise, or part payment to avoid the bar of the statute,—see this title, II., 4; III., 4.

II. LIMITATIONS OF RIGHTS OF ENTRY AND OF ACTIONS IN RESPECT OF REAL ESTATE; AND ACTIONS FOR RENTS, MORTGAGES, AND OTHER LIENS AND CHARGES ON LAND.

1. Periods of Prescription or Limitation.

Under the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 2, no person shall make an entry or distress, or bring an action to recover any land or rent, but within twenty years next after the time at which the right to make such entry or distress, or to bring such action, shall have first accrued to some person through whom he claims; or if such right shall not have accrued to any person through whom he claims, then within twenty years next after the time at which the right to make such entry or distress, or to bring such action, shall have first accrued to the person making or bringing the same.]

Interpretation of the statute, in respect of claimants.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 1, the person through whom another person is said to claim shall mean any person by, through, or under, or by the act of whom the person so claiming became entitled to the estate or interest claimed, as heir, issue to issue in tail, tenant by the courtesy of England, tenant in dower, successor, special or general occupant, executor, administrator, legatee, husband, assignee, appointee, devisee or otherwise, and also any person who was entitled to an estate or interest to which the person so claiming, or some person through whom he claims, became entitled as lord by escheat; And the word person extends to a body politic, corporate, or collegiate, and to a class of creditors or other persons, as well as an individual, and every word importing the singular number only extends and applies to several persons or things as well as one person or thing, and every word importing the masculine gender only extends and applies to a female as well as a male.]

The poor of a parish is a class of persons within the meaning of this section. St. Mary Magdalen, Oxford, v. Att. Gen., 6 H. L. Cas. 189; 8 Jur., N. S. 675; 26 L. J., Chanc. 620.

— in respect of lands.]—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 1, the word land extends to manors, messuages, and all other corporeal hereditaments whatsoever, and also to tithes (other than tithes belonging to a spiritual or eleemosynary corporation sole), and also to any share, estate, or interest in them or any of them, whether the same shall be a freehold or chattel interest, and whether freehold or copyhold, or held according to any other tenure.]

Turnpike tolls are not land within the meaning of this enactment. Mellish v. Brook, 3 Beav. 22.

A lord of the manor is barred by the Statute of Limitations from entering for a forfeiture after twenty years. Whitton v. Peacock, 3 Mylne & K. 325.

When the lord had seized copyholds quousque, and had held them for nearly forty years:—Held, that a bill by the heir of the former tenant to compel admittance by the lord was a suit to recover land within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 2, 3, and that the right of the heir was barred by that statute. Walters v. Webb, 5 L. R., Ch. 581; 39 L. J., Chanc. 677; 18 W. R. 587.

— in respect of rents.]—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 1, the word rent extends to all heriots, and to all services and suits for which a distress may be made, and to all annuities and periodical sums of money charged upon or payable out of any land (except modulus or compositions belonging to a spiritual or eleemosynary corporation sole.)]

Where the overseers of a township claimed lands which they had allowed a poor inhabitant to occupy rent free, he keeping up a grindstone upon the land for the convenience of the parish, the enjoyment of this privilege by the parishioners, for upwards of twenty years, while the lands were occupied by persons paying no rent, does not defeat the title of such persons under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Doe d. Robinson v. Hinde, 2 M. & Rob. 441—Parke.

In ejectment for two cottages by churchwardens and overseers, it appeared that the defendant had within twenty years swept the church and tolled the church bell:—Held, that the sweeping of the church and tolling of the church bell were services for which a distress might be made, and that the action was, therefore, brought within the time limited by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 8. Doe d. Edney v. Benham, 7 Q. B. 976; 9 Jur. 662; 14 L. J., Q. B. 842.

The limitation prescribed by section 2, is not applicable to the case of rent reserved on an indenture of lease. Grant v. Ellis, 9 M. & W. 113.

Semble, that the statute would not apply to the case of a contract to re-purchase an estate in twenty-five years, or at any time during the life of another. Alderson v. White, 4 Jur., N. S. 125; 2 De G. & J. 97.

As to the application of the statute to various estates, rights and interests in lands, rents, &c.,—see this title, II., 2.

Tithes.—[By 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 5, actions for not setting out tithes, and suits in equity or the ecclesiastical courts, are to be commenced within six years from the time when the tithes became due.]

The 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 2, enacts that no person shall bring an action to recover any land (which by s. 1 includes tithes) but within twenty years next after the right to bring such action has accrued to him or some person through whom he claims:—Held, that this statute does not operate to prevent a tithe-owner from recovering tithes as chattels from an occupier, although none had been set out for twenty years, but that it is confined to cases where there are two parties, each claiming an adverse estate in the tithes. Ely (Dean and Chapter) v. Cast, 15 M. & W. 617; 15 L. J., Exch. 341.

The right to tithes, as against an ecclesiastical corporation aggregate, is barred under 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 2, by non-payment for twenty years. Ely (Dean and Chapter) v. Bliss, 5 Beav. 574.

Adwosons.—[See 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 30–34, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 54, s. 8.]

Time of limitations against the crown and the duchy of Cornwall.—[By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 62, s. 1, the crown is not to sue after sixty years, by reason of land having been in charge to her Majesty, or stood insuper of record.

23 & 34 Vict. c. 53, extends the provisions of 9 Geo. 3, c. 16, as to the time of limitations of actions and suits to the Duke of Cornwall, in relation to real property belonging to the duchy.]

The crown not being mentioned in the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3, is not within its operation. Lambert v. Taylor, 4 B. & C. 138; 6 D. & R. 189.

The title of the crown to lands, of which it has been out of possession for twenty years, may be tried in an information of intrusion itself, and need not be first found by inquest of office, the only effect of the 21 Jac. 1, c. 14, being to throw the onus of proving title in the first instance, in such case, upon the crown. Att. Gen. v. Parsons, 2 M. & W. 23.

A conveyance of a manor by the commissioners of woods and forests on the part of the crown, does not entitle the purchaser to maintain ejectment against the possessor of land inclosed from the waste of the manor, more than twenty years before the conveyance, without leave of the crown. Doe d. Wall or Watt v. Morris, 2 Scott, 276; 2 Bing. N. C. 189; 1 Hodges, 215.

As to limitations of personal actions on behalf of the crown,—see this title, III., 1, b.

The Real Property Limitation Act, 1874.—[By 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, which commences and comes into operation on the 1st of January, 1879, actions or suits brought for the recovery of land or rent, and of charges thereon, are further limited.]

2. When Right of Entry or of Action Accrues; and when Time begins to run, and how computed, in Respect of Various Estates, Interests, Rents, Liens, and Parties.

General provisions of statute.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 3, the right to make an entry or distress, or bring an action to recover any land or rent, shall be deemed to have first accrued, 1st, when the person claiming such land or rent, or some person through whom he claims, shall, in respect of the estate or interest claimed, have been in possession or receipt of the profits of such land, or in receipt of such rent, and shall, while entitled thereto, have been dispossessed or have discontinued such possession or receipt, then such right shall be deemed to have first accrued at the time of such dispossession or discontinuance, or at the last time at which the profits or rent were or was so received;

2d, when the person claiming such land or rent shall claim the estate or interest of some deceased person, who shall have continued in such possession or receipt in respect of the same estate or interest until his death, and shall have been the last person entitled to such estate or interest who shall have been in such possession or receipt, at the time of such death;

3d, when the person claims in respect of an estate or interest in possession, granted, appointed, or otherwise assured by any instrument (other than a will) to him or some person through whom he claims, by a person being, in respect of the same estate or interest, in the possession or receipt of the profits of the land, or in the receipt of the rent, and no person entitled under such instrument shall have been in possession or receipt at the time the party became entitled by virtue of such instrument;

4th, where the estate or interest claimed shall be in reversion or remainder, or other future estate or interest, and no person shall have obtained possession or receipt of the profits of such land, or receipt of such rent in respect of such estate or interest, at the time when it became an estate or interest in possession;

And lastly, when the claim shall be by reason of forfeiture or breach of condition, when such forfeiture was incurred, or such condition was broken.

By s. 4, when any right to make an entry or distress, or to bring an action to recover any land or rent by reason of any forfeiture or breach of condition, shall have first accrued in respect of any estate or interest in reversion or remainder, and the land or rent shall not have been recovered by virtue of such right, the right to make an entry or distress, or bring an action to recover such land or rent, shall be deemed to have first accrued in respect of such estate or interest at the time when the same shall have become an estate or interest in possession as if no such forfeiture or breach of condition had happened.

By s. 5, a right to make an entry or distress, or to bring an action to recover any land or rent, shall be deemed to have first accrued, in respect of an estate or interest in reversion, at the time at which the same shall have become an estate or interest in possession, by the determination of any estate or estates in respect of which such land shall have been held, or the profits thereof or such rent shall have been received, notwithstanding the person claiming such land, or some person through whom he claims, shall at any time previously to the creation of the estate or estates which shall have determined, have been in possession or receipt of the profits of such land, or in receipt of such rent.

By s. 6, for the purposes of the act an administrator claiming the estate or interest of the deceased person of whose chattels he shall be appointed administrator, shall be deemed to claim as if there had been no interval of time between the death of such deceased person and the grant of letters of administration.]

When the statute begins to run against reversioners and remainder-men, in general.]—[By 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 3, when the estate or interest claimed shall have been an estate or interest in reversion or remainder, or other future estate or interest, and no person shall have obtained the possession or receipt of the profits of such land or the receipt of such rent in respect of such estate or interest, then such right shall be deemed to have accrued at the time at which such estate or interest became an estate or interest in possession. (See also, as to estates or interests in reversion, the provisions of section 5 of the same statute, supra.)]

When a lessor permits his lessee, during the continuance of the lease, to pay no rent either to himself or any other person for twenty years, the lessor is not then barred by this statute from recovering the premises in ejectment. The case falls within the latter branch of section 3, which, in the case of an estate or an interest in reversion, provides that the right of action shall be deemed to have first accrued when it became an estate or interest in possession. The lessor, therefore, may recover in ejectment at any time within twenty years after the lease has expired. Doe d. Davy v. Ozenden, 7 M. & W. 131; 1 H. & W. 4; 4 Jur. 1016.

That branch of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, which relates to estates in reversion expectant on the determination of a particular estate, applies only where another person than the reversioner is entitled to the particular estate. Doe d. Hall v. Mouldsedale, 16 M. & W. 689; 16 L. J., Exch. 169.

In 1784 premises were leased to H. J., for three lives. He, by will, devised all his estates and interest in the premises to his wife, A., her heirs and assigns. She, in 1793, conveyed the estates so devised to her son, J., and the heirs of his body, with a proviso, that if he should have no child living at his death, the limitation thereby made should cease, and the estate should revert to A., her heirs and assigns. In 1811, J. purchased the reversion in fee in the premises expectant on the lease for lives, which was conveyed to him, and at the same time an old satisfied term of 5,000 years affecting the premises was assigned to a trustee for him to attend the inheritance. J. died in 1812, without issue, leaving his nephew, L., his heir-at-law and the heir-at-law of A. The lease for lives determined in 1835. For upwards of twenty years from the death of J. the premises were held adversely to L.:—Held, that his right of entry was barred thereby, and that he had not a new right of entry on the determination of the leases for lives in 1835. Ib.

Action for breaking and entering the plaintiff's closes, and digging minerals therein. A plea justified the trespasses by the defendant as assignee of a lease of the minerals for ninety-nine years, granted by the owner in 1821. Replication, that the right to make an entry did not first accrue within twenty-one years. It appeared that from 1816 B. was in possession of the close under a lease, in which there was no reservation of the mines. In 1821 the owner granted a separate lease of the minerals to B. and P. for ninety-nine years, under whom the defendant claimed. In 1847 the mines were first worked:—Held, that B. was in possession of the mines before 1821, by reason of his being in possession of the surface as lessee under a lease, without reservation of the mines; and that such possession inured for the benefit of himself and P. on the granting of the lease of 1821, so as to make himself and P. possessed of the mines from 1821 under that lease, and not to leave the effect of that lease to be the granting of a mere interesse termini. Keyse v. Powell, 2 El. & Bl. 132; 17 Jur. 1052; 22 L. J., Q. B. 305.

Held also, that although the plea confessed the possession to be in the plaintiff at the time of the trespass in 1847, yet that the defendant was not confined to rely upon the right of entry which accrued to him in 1821, but might rely on a supposed dispossession within twenty-one years before 1847, and his right of immediate entry thereupon. Ib.

Copyhold land was surrendered, in 1798, to a husband and wife for their joint lives, with remainder to the heirs of the husband. In 1805 the husband absconded and went abroad, and was never afterwards heard of. In 1807 a commission of bankruptcy issued against him, and the usual assignment of his estate was made by the commissioners to his assignee. The wife occupied the estate until her death in 1841, whereupon the assignee was admitted:—Held, that an ejectment by the assignee brought after her death was in time, for that the husband's reversion in fee was a future estate within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 3. Doe d. Johnson v. Liversedge, 11 M. & W. 517; 13 L. J., Exch. 61.

Where a copyhold estate was granted to A. for her own life and the life of B., with a grant of the reversion to C. for other lives, and A. devised the estate to B., who kept possession for more than twenty years:—Held, that C.'s right of possession attached on the death of A., and as no claim had been made within twenty years, an ejectment for the premises was barred by the statute. Doe

d. Forster v. Scott, 7 D. & R. 190; 4 B. & C. 706.

In 1788, estates were settled by a marriage settlement, to the use of the wife for life, with remainders to her issue in tail, with remainder to the settlor (whose heiress at law she was), in fee. In 1818, by deeds to which the husband and wife, and their only son, were parties, and by a recovery suffered in pursuance thereof, the estates were limited to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the son, for life, remainder to his issue in tail, and remainder to his sister, for life, with other remainders over. The husband died in 1819, the wife in 1822, and the son in 1828:—Held, that, inasmuch as the estate of the sister was carved out of the estate of the son, she had the same period for bringing an ejectment in respect of any estates comprised in the above deeds, as he would have had if he had continued alive, viz., twenty years from 1822, when his remainder came into possession. Doe d. Curzon v. Edmonds, 6 M. & W. 295.

A. being tenant for life of a copyhold estate, and B., his daughter, being tenant in tail in remainder, joined in a recovery in 1778, and A. surrendered to the use of himself for life, remainder to the use of B. for life, remainder to the right heirs of the survivor. A. and B. shortly afterwards surrendered the fee to a bona fide purchaser, the contingent remainder to A. being void:—Held, that as the surrender passed B.'s life estate, the claim to the fee by B.'s son did not accrue till her death. Doe d. Hinton v. Role, 3 N. & P. 648; 8 A. & E. 650.

Ejectment brought by a remainder-man more than twenty but less than twenty-seven years since the tenant for life was last heard of, cannot be supported without other evidence, from which the jury may infer that the tenant for life was alive within twenty years. Slade v. Nepean, 2 N. & M. 219.

An estate was settled on a tenant for life and remainder-men in tail, with a name and arms clause, providing that in case any person should fail to comply with it for twelve calendar months after becoming entitled in possession the estate should go over as if he were dead. C. entered into possession as tenant in tail, and did not comply with the condition; he remained in possession for more than twenty years after he had forfeited the estate:—Held, that he did not acquire a title by adverse possession, but that under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 4, the right of the remainder-men to enter commenced on his death. Atley v. Essex, 43 L. J., Chanc. 817; 18 L. R., Eq. 290; 30 L. T., N. S. 485—R.

At the death of the tenant for life the next remainder-man was in India and was ignorant of the clause until after the twelve months expired:—Held, that his ignorance did not prevent the forfeiture operating as to his interest. Ib.

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 4, extends to forfeitures which operate to accelerate an estate under a conditional limitation, as well as to forfeitures of which the heir-at-law only can take advantage. Ib.

As to when future estates in land are barred by the running of the statute against party entitled to possession,—see this title, II., 6.

— in cases of tenancies at will. — [By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 7, when any person shall be in possession or in receipt of the profits of any land, or in receipt of any rent, as tenant at will, the right of the person entitled subject thereto, or of the person through whom he claims, to make an entry or distress or bring an action to recover such land or rent, shall be deemed to have first accrued either at the determination of such tenancy, or at the expiration of one year next after the commencement of such tenancy, at which time such tenancy shall be deemed to have determined: provided always, that no mortgagor or cestui que trust shall be deemed to be a tenant at will, within the meaning of this clause, to his mortgagee or trustee.]

Section 7 of the statute is not retrospective, and applies only to tenancies at will, created after the passing of the act, or, at most, to such tenancies at will as existed when it passed. Doe d. Evans v. Page, 5 Q. B. 787; D. & M. 601; 8 Jur. 999; 13 L. J., Q. B. 153.

Under this enactment, no title accrues to a party who is tenant at will, and holds without interruption for twenty years after the expiration of the first year, but who has quitted possession before the act passed. Doe d. Thompson v. Thompson, 2 N. & P. 656; 6 A. & E. 721; W., W. & D. 236.

A tenancy at will, commencing in 1824, and determined in 1831, is no bar, under ss. 2 and 7, to an ejectment commenced in 1847. Doe d. Birmingham Canal Company v. Bold, 11 Q. B. 127; 13 Jur. 871.

It is only on the determination of a tenancy at will that there is such a vested right of entry as is contemplated by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 2. Ib.

A. in 1817 let B. into possession of a farm as tenant at will, and in 1827 A. entered upon the land without B.'s consent, and cut and carried away stone therefrom:—Held, this entry amounted to a determination of the estate at will. Turner v. Doe d. Bennett (in error), 9 M. & W. 643—Exch. Cham; affirming judgment of Exchequer, 7 M. & W. 226.

The granting a lease to a third person by the lessor of a tenant at will, though it determines the tenancy at will as against the lessor, does not give him such a right of entry as is contemplated by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 2. Hogin v. Hand, 9 W. R. 673; 4 L. T., N. S. 465; 14 Moore P. C. C. 310.

If a person who has agreed to purchase real property is let into possession, he is a tenant at will, and such tenancy at will is determined by his death; and if after his death his widow, who is also devisee of his real estate, continues in possession, this is not a continuance of his tenancy at will, so as to prevent the operation of the statute. Doe d. Stanway v. Rock, 4 M. & G. 30; Car.

& M. 549; 6 Jur. 266. See Drummond v. Sant, 41 L. J., Q. B. 21, 25; 25 L. T., N. S. 419, 423.

On the death of A. intestate, his widow and son, a minor, resided in a dwelling-house till her marriage with the defendant in 1798, after which the defendant held and occupied the premises in his own name. C., the son, continued to reside there till 1805, when he left the premises, but between that year and 1841 he resided there occasionally, two or three weeks at a time, with the defendant and his wife. In 1842, the defendant having applied to the plaintiff for an advance of money upon a mortgage of the premises, in an interview with the solicitor of the plaintiff, produced the title-deeds, and, upon its being stated that C. was heir-at-law, and was the proper party to grant a mortgage, he said that C. would execute the mortgage, and on a subsequent day he brought C., who executed the mortgage deed in his presence, whereupon he received the mortgage money. In ejectment:—Held, that the defendant was tenant at will to C., and was estopped from alleging that he had acquired an estate by virtue of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, and that the tenancy at will had been determined by C. coming upon the premises. Doe d. Groves v. Groves, 10 Q. B. 486; 11 Jur. 558; 16 L. J., Q. B. 297. See Care v. Mackenzie, 46 L. J., Chanc. Div. 564, 565; 37 L. T., N. S. 218, 219.

A., purchaser of land, was let into possession before execution of a conveyance. He let in his son as tenant at will; the son occupied and built a cottage on the land; afterwards A. took a conveyance from the vendor, and some time after he mortgaged the land. The son continued to occupy the premises in all respects as at first, till his death, which happened within twenty-one years of his entry. The son's widow continued to occupy till the expiration of twenty-one years from her husband's entry:—Held, that an ejectment afterwards brought against her was barred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 2 and 7; for that the tenancy at will was not determined by the father's taking a conveyance, and that, if it had, in point of law, been so determined by that event or by the mortgage, a tenancy by sufferance must be deemed to have commenced from such determination, there being no evidence of a new tenancy at will; and the tenancy altogether had continued more than twenty years from the end of the first year. Doe d. Goody v. Carter, 9 Q. B. 863; 18 L. J., Q. B. 305.

In 1830, A. inclosed about six acres of waste land, and built a cottage thereon, and was allowed to remain in possession, without acknowledgment or payment of rent, to 1845, when the steward of the owner of the fee served him with a declaration and notice in ejectment; whereupon A. consented to give up four acres of the land, on his being allowed to continue in possession of the cottage and the other two acres until his death. A. died in 1861:—Held, that that which took place in 1845 amounted to an actual entry, and operated as a determination of the original tenancy at will, and the creation of a new tenancy; and consequently that the period of limitation prescribed by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, was to be reckoned from that time. Locke v. Matthews, 13 C. B., N. S. 753; 9 Jur., N. S. 874; 32 L. J., C. P. 98; 11 W. R. 343; 7 L. T., N. S. 824.

The lessee of premises for a term of ninety-nine years, dependent on four lives, inclosed, with the assent of the lessor, given by word of mouth, a piece of adjoining waste which belonged to the lessor, as lord of the manor, on the understanding that the piece so inclosed should be treated as if comprised in the lease. Upon the determination of the lease, which was more than twenty-one years from the date of the inclosure, the reversioners brought an ejectment to recover the land so inclosed from the tenant:—Held, that the assent of the landlord to the inclosure of the additional piece of land did not create such a tenancy of the land as to bring the case within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 7, or prevent such inclosure from being an encroachment within the ordinary rule of law that an encroachment made by a tenant must be taken to be made for the benefit of the landlord, and treated as part of the demised premises; and that consequently the Statute of Limitations did not begin to run till the determination of the lease, and the reversioners were entitled to recover the land. Whitmore v. Humphries, 7 L. R., C. P. 4; 41 L. J., C. P. 43.

— in cases of tenancies from year to year, or for other periods.]—[By 3 & 4 Will. c. 27, s. 8, when any person shall be in possession or in receipt of the profits of any land, or in receipt of any rent, as tenant from year to year, or other period, without any lease in writing, the right of the person entitled subject thereto, or of the person through whom he claims, to make an entry or a distress or to bring an action to recover such land or rent shall be deemed to have first accrued at the determination of the first of such years or other periods, or at the last time when any rent payable in respect of such tenancy shall have been received (which shall last happen).]

The 8th section has a retrospective effect, and applies to a tenancy from year to year, created previously to the passing of the act. Doe d. Jukes v. Sumner, 4 M. & W. 39; 9 Jur. 413; 14 L. J., Exch. 337.

In 1824, B. was let into possession of a cottage under an agreement purporting to be a demise by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of a parish, at the rent of 1s. 6d. per week, B. to quit on one month's notice being given. This agreement was signed only by one of the overseers. The churchwardens did not sign, nor was there any evidence to show that they had assented to the agreement. B. never paid any rent or made any acknowledgment. B. afterwards sold the premises to the defendant:—Held, in an ejectment, brought after twenty years, by the churchwardens and overseers for the time being, against the defendant, that as the agreement did not pass an interest it did not amount to a lease in writing within the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 8, and that consequently the claim of the churchwardens and overseers was barred by twenty years' adverse possession. Doe d. Lansdell v. Gower, 16 Jur. 100; 21 L. J., Q. B. 57; 17 Q. B. 589.

In ejectment by a landlord to recover land held under a tenancy from year to year, a statement made by the tenant in 1835 (since deceased), when speaking to an agent of the landlord about the property, "I have no property in W. but what I hold of Lord S., for which I pay 100*l.* a year," is evidence of payment of rent for the land at that time, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 8, so as to prevent an adverse right running against the landlord from the period of the determination of the first year of such tenancy. Doe d. Spencer v. Beckett, 4 Q. B. 601; 12 L. J., Q. B. 236; 7 Jur. 532.

Where a person makes a payment expressly or impliedly on account of something else than the rent of land of which he is tenant, such a payment is not a payment of rent within the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 8; and under such circumstances a defense founded on that statute is a complete bar. Att. Gen. v. Stephens, 6 De G., M. & G. 111; 2 Jur., N. S. 51; 25 L. J., Chanc. 888.

A. let land to B. by parol from year to year, reserving rent payable in March and November. The last payment of rent was in 1846; rent again became due in November, but was not paid. A. died in December of the same year, and B. retained possession. In ejectment by A.'s heir:—Held, that the time under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ran from the last payment of rent, and not from the death of A., as the case fell within s. 8, and not within s. 3. Baines v. Lumley, 16 W. R. 674—C. P.

To bring a person rightfully entitled to a rent within s. 3 of the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, so as to divest him of his rights, there must be a discontinuance of the receipt by him, either by not applying for payment, or omitting to enforce his remedies, with knowledge that the payment has not been made. Adnam v. Sandwich, 46 L. J., Q. B. Div. 612; 2 L. R., Q. B. Div. 485.

In 1812 lands, subject to a fee farm rent, were sold by C. to E., and subsequently became vested in the plaintiff. From 1812 to 1872 C. and his successors in title continued regularly to pay the fee farm rent, notwithstanding that they had ceased to hold any of the lands out of which the rent issued. During this time neither the defendant nor his predecessors had any notice that C. had parted with his interest in the lands by the sale in 1812. In 1872 the successors of C. declined to continue payment of the rent in question, and the defendant, in 1874, applied to the plaintiff, the then owner, for the two years' arrears. The plaintiff declined to pay the rent, and denied her liability to do so. Accordingly a distress was levied, whereupon the plaintiff replevied and brought an action, alleging that the receipt of the rent having been discontinued for more than twenty years, the defendant's title to the rent was barred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 20, ss. 2, 3:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to judgment, on the ground that there had been no discontinuance of the receipt of the rent within the meaning of the statute. Also, because, on the above facts, the fair presumption was that the continual payment had been made by C. and his successors under some arrangement entered into at the time of the purchase by E. in 1812, to which the latter was a party, and by which his successors were bound. Ib.

—in cases of adverse receipt of rent reserved.]—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 9, when any person shall be in possession or in receipt of the profits of any land, or in receipt of any rent, by virtue of a lease in writing, by which a rent amounting to the yearly sum of twenty shillings or upwards shall be reserved, and the rent reserved by such lease shall have been received by some person wrongfully claiming to be entitled to such land or rent in reversion immediately expectant on the determination of such lease, and no payment in respect of the rent reserved by such lease shall afterwards have been made to the person rightfully entitled thereto, the rights of the person entitled to such land or rent, subject to such lease, or of the person through whom he claims, to make an entry or distress or to bring an action after the determination of such lease, shall be deemed to have first accrued at the time at which the rent reserved by such lease was first so received by the person wrongfully claiming as aforesaid; and no such right shall be deemed to have first accrued upon the determination of such lease to the person rightfully entitled.]

Section 9 of the statute is retrospective. Doe d. Angell v. Angell, 9 Q. B. 328; 10 Jur. 705; 15 L. J., Q. B. 193.

A., in 1776, demised lands for sixty-one years. Upon his death, in 1786, the defendant's father, and subsequently the defendant, received the rent under the lease until its expiration in 1837. An ejectment was brought in 1837, after the expiration of the lease, by the plaintiff claiming under the will:—Held, that as section 9 was retrospective in its operation, the action would be barred by lapse of time, but was saved by section 15. Ib.

Seemle, that the provisions of section 9 are applicable to a case where rent is reserved, and no rent paid, but not to a case where no rent is reserved. Jones, Ex parte, 4 Y. & C. 466.

A person claiming, without any real title, to be entitled to land, is a person wrongfully claiming within the meaning of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 9; and that section applies, although the claim may be put forward under a mistake and without any improper intention to deprive others of their property. Williams v. Pott, 12 L. R., Eq. 149; 40 L. J., Chanc. 775—R.

As to what constitutes adverse possession or adverse receipt of rents,—see this title, II., 8, 4.

When the statute begins to run, against rights of mortgagors or mortgagees in respect of mortgaged premises.][By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 28, when a mortgagee shall have obtained the possession or receipt of the profits of any land, or the receipt of any rent, comprised in his mortgage, the mortgagor, or any person claiming through him, shall not bring a suit to redeem the mortgage but within twenty years next after the time at which the mortgagee obtained such possession or receipt, unless in the meantime an acknowledgment of the title of the mortgagor or of his right of redemption shall have been given to the mortgagor, or some person claiming his estate, or to the agent of such mortgagor or person, in writing signed by the mortgagee or the person claiming through him; and in such case no such suit shall be brought but within twenty years next after the time at which such acknowledgment, or the last of such acknowledgments if more than one, was given.

It was doubted whether this section comprehended the case of a mortgagee, so as to render it necessary for him to bring an ejectment within twenty years from the day of default made in the payment of the mortgage money. Doe d. Jones v. Williams, 5 A. & E. 301.

Therefore, by 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 28, it is declared and enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any person entitled to or claiming under any mortgage of land, being land within the definition contained in section 1 of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, to make an entry or bring an action at law or suit in equity to recover such land at any time within twenty years next after the last payment of any part of the principal money or interest secured by such mortgage, although more than twenty years may have elapsed since the time at which the right to make such entry or bring such action or suit in equity shall have first accrued, any thing in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, notwithstanding.]

A. mortgaged his premises in fee to B., with a proviso for redemption on payment of the mortgage money on a given day; but A. continued in possession until his death, after which C., his son and heir, and his widow, continued in possession until the death of the latter, when C. conveyed the premises in fee to D., who levied a fine with proclamations, and entered into possession. On an ejectment being brought by E., the heir-at-law of B., the original mortgagee, and a special verdict found as a fact, the non-payment of the mortgage debt on the given day, without finding either an adverse possession by A. or his heir, or that interest had been paid upon the mortgage money by the mortgagor:—Held, before the above enactment, that though there had been a lapse of thirty-seven years since default in payment of the principal, the statute was no bar to the ejectment, and, consequently, that the mortgagee was not precluded thereby. Hall

v. Doe d. Surtees, 1 D. & R. 340; 5 B. & A. 687.

By deeds of lease and release, of 7th and 8th September, 1819, lands were mortgaged in fee, subject to a proviso, that if the mortgagor should pay the principal and interest on the 25th of March then next, the mortgagee, his heirs and assigns, should and would re-convey and re-assure the premises to the mortgagor, his heirs and assigns. There was also a covenant that it should be lawful for the mortgagee, his heirs and assigns, from time to time and at all times after default should be made in payment of the principal and interest, peaceably and quietly to enter into, have, hold, occupy, possess and enjoy the premises; and also a covenant by the mortgagor for further assurance in case of such default:—Held, that the mortgagee had the right of possession under this deed from the time of its execution, and not merely from the 25th March, 1820, and, therefore, that an ejectment for the recovery of the premises by the heir-at-law of the mortgagee, within twenty years of the latter but not of the former date (no interest having been paid in the meantime), was too late. Doe d. Roylance v. Lightfoot, 8 M. & W. 553; 5 Jur. 966.

The 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 28, is not confined to cases where a mortgagor has been in possession of the mortgaged premises, but its object was to protect mortgages generally, and to make mortgages an available security, wherever they are valid in their inception; and the mortgagee having received payment of his interest, cannot be charged with any laches. Doe d. Palmer v. Eyre, 17 Q. B. 366; 15 Jur. 1081; 20 L. J., Q. B. 431.

A., in 1821, became entitled to the possession in fee simple of premises, of which he had never been in actual possession, but which had been occupied by the defendant, as tenant at will to him, for more than twenty years before action brought. In 1823, A. mortgaged the property to B., who afterwards assigned the mortgage to the plaintiff. A. had paid interest upon this mortgage within twenty years before the action was commenced, but had done so without the knowledge of the defendant:—Held, that 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 28, applied, and that the plaintiff, having brought his action within twenty years next after the last payment of interest upon the mortgage, was not barred, although more than twenty years had elapsed since the time at which the right to bring such action had first accrued. Id.

A mortgagee in possession for six years, without making any acknowledgment of the mortgagor's title, then purchased the interest of the tenant for life of the equity of redemption, and continued in possession for twenty years longer:—Held, that such possession was not adverse during the existence of the life estate so purchased, and that 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 28, was not, therefore, a bar to any suit for redemption by the re-remainder-man or reversioner. Hyde v. Dallaway, 2 Hare, 528.

In 1821, N., being seized in fee of land, leased it to W. In 1822, W. mortgaged it for a term of years. In 1834, the mortgage was paid off, and the mortgagee and the owner of the equity of redemption conveyed all their interest to the person under whom the plaintiff claimed:—Held, that the plaintiff was a person claiming under a mortgage within 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 28, and therefore might bring ejectment within twenty years after the mortgage was paid off, though after the expiration of twenty years from the payment of rent to the mortgagor, or acknowledgment of title in him by the tenant in possession. Doe d. Baddeley v. Massey, 17 Q. B. 873; 15 Jur. 1031; 20 L. J., Q. B. 434.

An owner in fee of land, prior to mortgaging it for a term of years, put A. into possession. A. occupied for twenty-five years without payment of rent or written acknowledgment of the mortgagor's title. A. then conveyed in fee to D., and after attorning to him as his tenant, gave up possession for a sum of money to B., the representative of the mortgagor, and C., the executor of the mortgagee (whose mortgage had been kept alive by payment of interest). B. and C. afterwards joined in a conveyance of the premises to the defendants:—Held, in an action of ejectment, first, that the defendants were not estopped from setting up their title to the premises; and, secondly, that they were persons claiming under a mortgage within the meaning of the 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 28, and consequently that the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, did not operate to bar their title. Ford v. Ager, 2 H. & C. 279; 9 Jur., N. S. 804; 32 L. J., Exch. 269; 11 W. R. 1073; 8 L. T., N. S. 546.

In ejectment by a mortgagee to recover possession of land mortgaged, it is sufficient to prove part payment of interest by a surety, without giving any evidence that the mortgagor was in default, or that the surety was compelled to pay, or that the payment was made at the request of the mortgagor. Cann v. Taylor, 1 F. & F. 651—Pollock.

In ejectment by a mortgagee, the mortgage being above twenty years old, and the interest upon it having been paid by the mortgagor, the plaintiff was allowed to recover upon proof of an agreement between them, and the defendant showing that he had held under him on terms which gave him a right of re-entry. Pole v. Davies, 1 F. & F. 284—Martin.

In 1836 certain property was mortgaged; in 1847 a portion of it was taken possession of by the mortgagee, who commenced an ejectment to recover possession; in the present action no proof of the service of the proceedings in ejectment in 1847 was given, but it was shown that a paper was served on the mortgagor:—Held, that the representative of the mortgagee was not entitled to recover, as there was no proof of possession by him or his predecessors in title within twenty years. Thorp v. Facey, 12 Jur., N. S. 741; 35 L. J., C. P. 840; 1 H. & R. 678.

As to what constitutes acknowledgment of title or right, within the above section, and its effect,—see this title, II., 4.

When the statute begins to run against claims for money secured by mortgages, judgments, liens, or other charges upon land or rent, legacies, &c.]—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40, after the 31st day of December, 1833, no action or suit, or other proceeding shall be brought to recover any sum of money secured by any mortgage, judgment, or lien, or otherwise charged upon or payable out of any land or rent, at law or in equity, or any legacy, but within twenty years after a present right to receive the same shall have accrued to some person capable of giving a discharge for or release of the same, unless in the meantime some part of the principal money, or some interest thereon, shall have been paid, or some acknowledgment of the right thereto shall have been given in writing signed by the person by whom the same shall be payable, or his agent, to the person entitled thereto, or his agent; and in such case, no such action or suit or proceeding shall be brought but within twenty years after such payment or acknowledgment, or the last of such payments or acknowledgments, if more than one was given.]

Money due upon a bond, in which the heirs of the obligor are bound, is not money charged upon or payable out of land within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40. Wodden v. Morley, 1 De G. & J. 1; 3 Jur., N. S. 449; 26 L. J., Chanc. 438. See Pears v. Laing, 12 L. R., Eq. 41, 55, 56; 40 L. J., Chanc. 225, 229; 24 L. T., N. S. 19, 21, 22; 19 W. R. 653—V. C. B.

Freeholds and leaseholds were mortgaged in 1822. The mortgagor devised and bequeathed his residuary estate upon trust to pay his debts, including mortgage debts, and afterwards on trust for H. A beneficial tenant for life under the will of the mortgagor in a moiety of a freehold not comprised in the mortgage, and also interested in the residue under the will of H., paid interest on the mortgage down to her death in 1859:—Held, that such payment prevented the Statutes of Limitation being a bar to the mortgagee's proceeding, either against the property comprised in the mortgage or on the covenant for repayment against the estate of the mortgagor. Pears v. Laing, 40 L. J., Chanc. 225; 12 L. R., Eq. 41; 24 L. T., N. S. 19; 19 W. R. 653—V. C. B.

In 1806, bonds for payment of money were given by B., with warrants of attorney to confess judgment. The conditions were, to pay the principal upon the death of B., with interest on the first bond from the day of its date, and on the latter from the day of the death of the obligor. The obligees were T., a son of the obligor, and C., in whom the bonds were vested as trustees of the marriage settlement of G., upon trusts for the benefit of the children of the marriage. In 1807 the real estates of B. were settled upon T., one of the obligees, subject to a term of 300 years, for raising 5,000/., which was to be applied in satisfying a debt, and the remainder was to go towards payment of "judgment and specialty debts then owing by B." The obligor died in 1816, leaving his son T. his executor, who survived his co-trustees C., and died in 1830. On the death of T., B. came into possession of the estates. On a bill filed by the children of G. against B. and his children, who were entitled to the estates subject to the term, and also against the owners of the term, praying for an account, and payment of the amount due on the bonds, and that the same might be decreed to be well charged on the lands included in the term:—Held, that the bonds did not come within the description of "judgment and specialty debts now due and owing," and therefore were not a charge upon the estate subject to the term, but that the children of G. were entitled to be paid out of the general assets of the obligor, of which the money to be raised by the term formed part. Burroues v. Gore, 6 H. L. Cas. 907; 4 Jur., N. S. 1245.

Held, also, that the statute was no bar to the right of the cestuis que trust, the children of G., to sue upon the bonds, although the obligees were barred, inasmuch as B. was their trustee, and his was the hand to pay and the hand to receive. Id.

T. being the trustee of the bonds and the personal representative of B., the right of the cestuis que trust did not accrue until the death of G. in 1846, and therefore the statute did not apply. Id.

As to what acknowledgment of title or right is within the above section, and its effect,—see this title, II., 4.

—claims for arrears of dower.]—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 41, s. 41, after the 31st day of December, 1833, no arrears of dower, nor any damages on account of such arrears, shall be recovered or obtained by any action or suit for a longer period than six years next before the commencement of such action or suit.]

A widow's right to sue in equity for dower is barred when she has not, for upwards of thirty years, taken any proceedings, either at law or in equity, to have it assigned to her. Marshall v. Smith, 34 L. J., Chanc. 189; 10 Jur., N. S. 1174; 13 W. R. 198; 11 L. T., N. S. 443—V. C. S.

—claims for arrears of rent, interest, annuities, rent-charges, and other charges upon land or rent, in general.]—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, no arrears of rent or of interest in respect of any sum of money charged upon or payable out of any land or rent, or in respect of any legacy, or any damages in respect of such arrears of rent or interest, shall be recovered by any distress, action, or suit, but within six years next after the same respectively shall have become due, or next after an acknowledgment of the same in writing shall have been given to the person entitled thereto, or his agent, signed by the person by whom the same was payable, or his agent: Provided, nevertheless, that where any prior mortgage or other incumbrancer shall have been in possession of any land or in the receipt of the profits thereof within one year next before an action or suit shall be brought by any person entitled to a subsequent mortgage or other incumbrance on the same land, the person entitled to such subsequent mortgage or incumbrance may recover in such action or suit the arrears of interest which shall have become due during the whole time that such prior mortgage or incumbrancer was in such possession or receipt as aforesaid, although such time may have exceeded the term of six years.]

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, does not apply to any case in which there is not strictly a suit or an action for the recovery of interest. Edmund v. Waugh, 1 L. R., Eq. 418; 12 Jur., N. S. 326; 35 L. J., Chanc. 234; 14 W. R. 257; 13 L. T., N. S. 739—V. C. K.

Therefore where, under a power of sale in a mortgage deed, the property mortgaged was sold, and the proceeds paid into court to the general credit of an account in an administration suit of the estate of the mortgagees upon a partition by trustees of the parties beneficially entitled to the fund in court:—Held, that they were entitled to the full arrears of interest on the mortgage, the fund after sale, having been in their possession, and no recovery by distress, suit, or action being requisite. Id.

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, has reference only to the land on which a demand is secured, the object being to relieve land from arrears of charges beyond six years; and this object is not affected by the terms of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3, which relates to a different subject, namely, to personal actions only. Hunter v. Nockolds, 1 Mac. & G. 640; 1 H. & T. 644; 14 Jur. 256; 19 L. J., Chanc. 177.

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3, is to be treated as an exception out of the 42d section of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, and the construction of the two acts, taken together, is, that no more than six years' arrears of rent or interest in respect of any sum charged upon or payable out of land or rent, shall be recovered by any distress, action or suit, other than and except in actions upon covenant or debt upon specialty, in which case the limitation is twenty years. Id.

The 42d section of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, is not repealed by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42. Humphrey v. Gery, 7 C. B. 567.

Debts secured by judgments are sums of money charged upon or payable out of land within the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, and only six years' arrears of interest can be recovered in respect of such debts. Henry v. Smith, 2 Dru. & W. 381; 1 Con. & L. 506 (Irish).

—claims for arrears of interest on mortgages.]—A mortgagee, notwithstanding the interest mortgaged in reversion, can only recover six years' arrears of interest as against the land mortgaged, although he may recover twenty years' arrears on the covenant to pay. Sinclair v. Jackson, 17 Beav. 405.

A mortgagee in a suit to foreclose can only recover arrears of interest for six years next preceding the suit, though the principal and interest are secured by the covenant and bond of the mortgagor. Round v. Bell, 31 L. J., Chanc. 127; 30 Beav. 121.

After the sale of an estate by a trustee for a mortgagee, under a power of sale, in a suit by the mortgagor to recover the surplus money, the mortgagee cannot, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, retain more than six years' arrears of interest out of the purchase money. Mason v. Broadbent, 33 Beav. 298; 13 W. R. 1118; 9 L. T., N. S. 565.

Under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, a mortgagee, irrespective of a covenant to pay or a term to secure the payment, is entitled to six years' arrears of interest. Shaw v. Johnson, 1 Drew. & Sm. 412; 9 W. R. 629; 4 L. T., N. S. 460; 30 L. J., Chanc. 646.

So far as a covenant to pay affects the land, it is limited to six years. Id.

When a term is created on an express trust to secure principal and interest, the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, does not operate as a bar, and a mortgagee's right is not confined to six years. Id.

Where a married woman, entitled, after the death of a tenant for life, to a share of a fund arising from moneys the proceeds of lands devised upon trust for sale, joined with her husband in a mortgage by deed acknowledged of her reversionary estate, such mortgage containing a covenant by husband and wife to pay full interest:—Held, that the wife's estate was money payable out of land within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42; and that the mortgagee could not recover more than six years' arrears of interest on the mortgage of such an estate. Lowyer v. Woodman, 3 L. R., Eq. 313—V. C. W.

Turnpike tolls are not within the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27; and consequently, more than six years' arrears of interest may be recovered on a mortgage of turnpike tolls, notwithstanding s. 42. Mellish v. Brook, 3 Beav. 22.

A canal company conveyed, under seal, the canal works and rates to a mortgagee, to hold, until repayment of certain money borrowed, and interest. There was no covenant to repay:—Held, that, although the mortgagee could recover the principal within twenty years, yet his remedy for arrears of interest was limited to six years. Hodges v. Crofton Canal Company, 3 Beav. 86.

Where a debt is secured by a bond and a covenant of the debtor, as well as by a mortgage of his lands, the mortgagee will be entitled, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, and 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3, to carry back the interest account in a suit to foreclose the mortgage for a period of twenty years. Du Vigier v. Lee, 2 Hare, 326; 7 Jur. 299; 12 L. J., Chanc. 345.

A corporation agreed to purchase freehold premises subject to an equitable mortgage, with an agreement to give a legal mortgage, and paid the money into court. The equitable mortgagee petitioned that out of the fund there might be paid to him the principal money then due and nineteen years' interest:—Held, that the petition must be treated as a suit within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, and that the mortgagee was entitled only to his principal money and six years' interest. Stead, In re, 35 L. T., N. S. 465; 24 W. R. 698; 45 L. J., Chanc. Div. 634; 2 L. R., Ch. Div. 713—V. C. M.

—claims for arrears of rent.]—A. was, from the 2d of July, 1805, till the 10th of July, 1841 (when he was found a lunatic), and B., his committee, had ever since been, seized as of fee of two-thirds of a fee-farm rent of 20l. 5s. per annum, payable on the 29th of September and 25th of March, created by letters patent of Hen. 8. No payment of this rent, or of any part thereof, had been made since March, 1831, nor had there been any acknowledgment in writing relating thereto:—Held, that the case was governed by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, and consequently, that neither the lunatic, nor his committee, was entitled to recover any arrears of the rent after the expiration of six years from the 29th of September, 1831. Humfrey v. Gery, 7 C. B. 567.

A defendant in replevin avowed the taking of the goods for arrears of an ancient quit-rent issuing out of a tenement held of him as lord of a manor by fealty and rent. The last payment was made on the 25th of January, 1823, for rent due on the 4th of October, 1824. The distress was made on the 13th of May, 1845:—Held, that by the operation of 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 2, 3, and 34, the rent was extinguished by the lapse of twenty years from the day on which the last payment was made, and that the limitation need not be pleaded specially, but was available under a plea of non tennit. De Beauvoir v. Owen, 5 Exch. 166; 19 L. J., Exch. 177—Exch. Cham.

The limitation prescribed by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, does not apply to an action on a collateral covenant for payment of a rent charged on land, and the covenantee may recover damages for the breach of that covenant, notwithstanding his right to recover the rent charge is barred. Manning v. Phelps, 10 Exch. 59; 24 L. J., Exch. 62.

So long as the relation of landlord and tenant subsists, the right of the landlord to rent is not barred by non-payment, except that under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, the amount to be recovered is limited to six years. Archbold v. Scully, 9 H. L. Cas. 369; 7 Jur., N. S. 1109; 4 L. T., N. S. 160.

Where the rents of mines are reserved by means of payment of produce in specie, the profits will be considered as accruing to the lessor at the time of receiving such produce, and not at the time of the sale of it; and, therefore the statute will run from the time of such receipt, and not from the time of such sale. Denys v. Shuckburgh, 4 Y. & C. 42.

The statute is a good defense to an action by a landlord for rent against one who had once been his tenant from year to year, but who had not within the last six years occupied the premises, paid rent, or done any act from which a tenancy could be inferred, although the tenancy had not been determined by a notice to quit. Leigh v. Thornton, 1 B. & A. 625. And see Hughes v. Thomas, 18 East, 474.

In 1850, a suit for administration was instituted by a tenant for life under a will of leaseholds, who subsequently mortgaged her life interest. The mortgagee obtained, under an order made in 1860, liberty to enter, and did enter, into possession of the rents, for the purpose of keeping down the interest on her mortgage, and paying the balance to the tenant for life. In March, 1866, the tenant for life left her home, and was never heard of afterwards. On a petition presented in 1875 by the persons entitled in remainder, it was held that, under the circumstances, the tenant for life must be taken to have died soon after June, 1866. On a petition presented by the same parties for an account of arrears of rent received by the mortgagee:—Held, that the petitioners had been guilty of no laches in not filing their petition till the expiration of seven years after the disappearance of the tenant for life, and that they were, therefore, entitled to an account of rents; but that there was no fiduciary relation between the mortgagee and the petitioners, and, therefore, they were only entitled to arrears for six years before the filing of the petition. Hickman v. Upcull, 4 L. R., Ch. Div. 144; 46 L. J., Chanc. Div. 245; 25 W. R. 175; 35 L. T., N. S. 919—C. A. See S. C., 2 L. R., Ch. Div. 617; 24 W. R. 694—V. C. H.

—claims for arrears of annuities and rent-charges.]—An annuitant claiming under a will, who has never received the annuity, is barred from his remedy of distress or action by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, when more than twenty years have elapsed since the right to the annuity first accrued to him. James v. Salter, 4 Scott, 168; 3 Bing. N. C. 544; 5 D. P. C. 496; 3 Hodges, 70; 1 Jur. 135.

An action upon a covenant in an indenture, granting an annuity or a rent-charge issuing out of land, may be brought within the period of twenty years, limited by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3, and is not barred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, which limits the recovery of arrears of rent within six years. Strachan v. Thomas, 4 P. & D. 229; 12 A. & E. 536; 4 Jur. 1183.

A devisee, claiming an annuity granted by will, is not barred under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 2, 3, by the lapse of twenty years, if he has never received any payment in respect of the annuity. James v. Salter, 2 Scott, 750; 2 Bing. N. C. 505; 1 Hodges, 405.

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, limiting the period within which an action may be brought "to recover any land or rent," does not apply to an action on a covenant to pay a rent charged on land. Manning v. Phelps, 10 Exch. 59; 24 L. J., Exch. 62.

Arrears of an annuity are recoverable for more than six years if there is a term to secure it. Snow v. Booth, 8 De G., M. & G. 69; 2 Jur., N. S. 244; 25 L. J., Chanc. 417.

Three annuities, charged upon an estate, were granted in 1814. No payment had been made in respect of them since March, 1815. In January, 1855, a bill was filed for an account of the rents and profits of the estate, and payment of the arrears of the annuities:—Held, that the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, did not operate as a bar. Knight v. Bowyer, 3 Jur., N. S. 968; 26 L. J., Chanc. 796; affirmed on appeal, 4 Jur., N. S. 569; 27 L. J., Chanc. 521.

Arrears of an annuity charged on a reversionary interest in land, are recoverable more than six years after the same became payable, the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, having no application so long as the interest is reversionary. Wheeler v. Howell, 3 Kay & J. 198.

But an annuity bequeathed out of personalty is not within the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42. Ashwell, In re, 1 Johnson, 112.

Where a rent-charge had been received from the occupier of one part of the premises charged down to the present time, and then, for the first time, had been levied by distress on the occupier of another part, which, for more than twenty years had been in a separate ownership, and the owner or occupier of which had never paid the rent before:—Held, that the right to distrain for the rent on that portion of the premises charged was not barred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Woodcock v. Titterton, 12 W. R. 865—Q. B.

By will, in 1810, B. devised to trustees his estate in Jamaica to hold to the use that H. should, out of the rents and profits, receive for life an annuity payable quarterly for her separate use, with powers of distress and entry and perception of the rents and profits, and after her decease to the use that the trustees should pay the annuity unto her children, as she should appoint, for their lives. B. gave other annuities out of the rents and profits of the estate, and gave the estate to the use of his son for life, with remainders over. The last payment on account of H.'s annuity was in 1842. H. died in 1853. She made an appointment, and arrears were due to her and her appointees. The estate was for some years a waste, and no rents and profits were received till 1870, and when received they were paid into court:—Held, that the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, did not apply to Jamaica, and that the legal personal representative of H. was entitled to be paid the arrears due to her. Pitt v. Daere, 3 L. R., Ch. Div. 295; 45 L. J., Chanc. Div. 796; 24 W. R. 943—V. C. H.

As to what acknowledgment of right is within the above section, and its effect,—see this title, II., 4.

3. Adverse Possession, in General.

What adverse possession constituted a bar, before the Statute of Limitations.]—A wrongful continuation of possession for twenty years after the expiration of a title, under which the tenant lawfully entered, constituted such an adverse possession as created a bar to an entry, or to an ejectment. Doe d. Parker v. Gregory, 4 N. & M. 308; 2 A. & E. 14.

As, where the husband of a tenant for life held over twenty years after her decease. Id.

L. R. died seized of freehold premises, leaving a widow and a son (by her), R. R., his heir-at-law, twelve years old. The widow entered into receipt of the rents, and two years afterwards married again, and went to reside on the premises, which she occupied with her second husband during his life, and from his death until her own, the whole period of such occupation by her being more than fifty years. During her occupation she frequently said that the premises after her death belonged to R. R., but she left a will devising the property to H., her son by her second husband, and describing it as having descended to her from her mother. After her death, H., then in possession, promised that he would sign an agreement to rent the premises under R. R., but he never did sign it:—Held, that a jury was bound to find an adverse possession of the widow during the fifty years. Doe d. Roffey v. Harbrow, 3 A. & E. 67, n.; 1 N. & M. 422.

Land was devised in 1774 by a man to his wife in fee; and, after having married again, she lived on the property with her second husband for nine or ten years, and then went to reside elsewhere, and they were never afterwards in possession, but under what circumstances they left was never explained. The wife died in 1828, before the husband, who survived until 1832:—Held, that the heir of the wife was barred by the adverse possession of above forty years; though the wife was always under the disability of coverture, and her husband had a tenancy by the curtesy during his life, and it was admitted that no fine had been levied. Doe d. Corbyn v. Branston, 4 N. & M. 664; 3 A. & E. 63; 1 H. & W. 162.

A lease for years was granted to a married woman living apart from her husband, under the supposition that she was a feme sole:—Held, on a question whether there had been an adverse possession, that it was not a misdirection to put it as a question, whether the possession had been adverse as against the wife, instead of as against the husband. Doe d. Wilkins v. Wilkins, 5 N. & M. 434; 1 H. & W. 574; 4 A. & E. 86.

E. being in occupation of land attorned to L., who claimed the fee, and had entered in the name of taking possession. The land was copyhold. After the attornment, L. was not admitted, nor did he receive rent, or occupy, or in any way interfere with the land, the fee in which was several times sold, with proper formalities, in the copyhold court, within the twenty years following:—Held, that L. was absolutely barred from bringing ejectment at the end of the twenty years, though E. continued in occupation till within twenty years of the ejectment being brought. Doe d. Linsey v. Edwards, 5 A. & E. 95; 6 N. & M. 633.

A., in 1819, agreed to purchase lands of B. for 670*l.*, and paid a deposit of 10*l.* The agreement did not contain any stipulation that A. should be let into possession, but in fact he was so, at Michaelmas, in 1819. A. continued in possession, and neither paid any more of the purchase-money, nor any rent or interest; and in 1822, A. cut down timber, and in 5 Geo. 4, levied a fine with proclamations, and mortgaged the property, and after that died, leaving the property, subject to the mortgage, to his daughters:—Held, that these facts were no bar to B. in ejectment, brought within twenty years after Michaelmas, 1839; as A., coming in under an intended purchase, was, in equity, the owner of the land, with a liability to pay the purchase-money; and his cutting trees was consistent with his holding in that character, and not adversely to the rights of the vendor, to whom at law he was tenant at will. Doe d. Counsell v. Caperton, 9 C. & P. 112—Alderson.

When a widow continued to reside in a freehold house of which she was seized, for more than twenty years after her husband's death:—Held, that her possession was not adverse, except perhaps against the heir, as her possession might be intended to be in respect of dower. Doe d. Hickman v. Haslewood, 1 N. & P. 352; 6 A. & E. 167; 1 Jur. 1138; W., W. & D. 116.

S. devised his estate to his wife in fee, and died seized, leaving his widow and two sons him surviving. After his death the widow and the younger son, by deed, conveyed the estate in fee to H., without the privy of the eldest son and heir-at-law of the testator; H. continued in undisturbed possession of the estate for twenty-two years, and died possessed, bequeathing it to his children; six years after H. entered into possession, the eldest son and heir-at-law of S. devised all his real estate to his wife and to his younger brother, in trust for the life of the wife, and then to his children, and died three years afterwards, without ever disturbing H.'s possession:—Held, that the trustees might maintain ejectment to recover the possession of the estate, notwithstanding the quiet enjoyment of H. for twenty-two years. Doe d. Souter v. Hall, 2 D. & R. 38.

Possession of the cestui que trust was not adverse to the title of the trustee. Smith d. Dennison v. King, 16 East. 283.

S. demised lands to a rector for forty years, at a certain rent; in the lease, the rector, after covenanting for payment of the rent, further granted to S. the tithe of oats of the parish; the lease also contained a proviso for re-entry, in case the rent should be in arrear, or S., his heirs, &c., should be disturbed by the rector or his assigns in the receipt of the tithe, and concluded with a covenant on the part of S. that the rector should quietly enjoy the lands, under the covenants, grants, and agreements contained in the lease. After the expiration of the lease, the rector continued to hold the land, but withheld the rent for more than twenty years; the heirs of S. at the same time continuing to take the tithe of oats, and some confusion existing as to the respective rights of the rector and the heirs of S., the latter being portionists of the tithes of the parish:—Held, that the possession of the land by the rector was not adverse, so as to let in the operation of the statute. Roe d. Pellatt v. Ferrara, 2 B. & P. 542.

Declarations made by a widow in the possession of premises for more than twenty years, that she held them for her life only, and that after her death they would go to the heirs of her husband, are admissible to negative the fact of her having had twenty years' adverse possession. Doe d. Human v. Pe tet, 5 B. & A. 223.

In ejectment for lands, it appeared that, in 1788, G. purchased the estate in fee, of which he died seized and intestate in 1790, leaving two sons, J. and E., and in 1812, J. died intestate, leaving a son, J. In 1788, C. was tenant in possession, and so continued until the time of the trial. From the death of the purchaser, C. paid his rent (with the exception hereinafter mentioned) to E., the younger son, until 1817, when he died, leaving two sons, J. G. (who received the rent from 1817 until the time of his death in 1835), and the defendant. The eldest son of the purchaser received in 1804 a half-year's rent from C., and in 1805 sold and cut down timber on the estate. In June, 1813, J. employed an agent to demand of C. the rent in arrear, when he answered that his connection as tenant with J. G. had ceased for several years. In 1820, an action of ejectment was commenced:—Held, that there was no adverse possession to bar the recovery of the lessor of the plaintiff in ejectment. Doe d. Grubb v. Grubb, 10 B. & C. 816.

G., under whom the defendant claimed, was let into possession twenty-two years before action, by virtue of a contract with P. for the purchase of an allotment accruing to P. under an inclosure act, which provided that a purchaser let into possession of an allotment should have the same rights as the vendor. G. paid interest on a portion of the purchase-money for some years, but never completed the purchase:—Held, that even after a lapse of twenty years his possession was not adverse to P.'s title; held, also, that it did not lie in the mouth of G., or any claiming under him, to raise as an objection to P.'s title, that the commissioners of inclosure had made no formal award. Doe d. Milburn v. Edgar, 2 Scott, 732; 2 Bing. N. C. 496; 1 Hodges, 437.

Where a lease for years, determinable on lives, was granted in 1732, and in 1784 the same lessor granted a similar lease of the same premises to another lessee, who always afterwards paid rent; and another person who was in possession at the granting of the second lease claimed to be entitled to the estate, on the ground that one of the lives in the first lease was in existence, and continued to hold it until his death in 1811:—Held, that he had no adverse possession to give him the freehold. Rex v. Ashbridge, 4 N. & M. 477; 2 A. & E. 520; 1 H. & W. 74.

A, thirty years before suit brought, died seized of a cottage, leaving a son, B., and a daughter, C. At his death, C., his daughter, then unmarried, took possession of it, and afterwards married D., and after his death W. After her death W. remained in possession sixteen years:—Held, that the son of B., who was the heir of C. as well as being the heir of A. and B., might recover in ejectment, although W., including the term he had occupied the cottage with his wife, had had more than twenty years' possession of it. Doe d. Tranter v. Wing, 6 C. & P. 538—Williams.

Where an entire manor or other district has been in charge to the crown within sixty years, acts done in different parts of it by different persons, such as the erection and occupation of lime-kilns for burning limestone found within the district, and of cottages for the purpose of such occupation, and the sale of the lime so produced, do not amount to such an adverse possession as to displace the title of the crown to the district, although they may have been continued for above sixty years. Doe d. Williams v. Roberts, 13 M. & W. 520; 14 L. J., Exch. 274.

What possession constitutes a bar, under the Statute of Limitations, in general.]—By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 2, 3, the doctrine of non-adverse possession is done away with, except in cases provided for by section 15; and an ejectment must be brought within twenty years after the original right of entry of the plaintiff (or of the party under whom he claim-) accrued, whatever is the nature of the defendant's possession. Nepean v. Doe d. Knight, 2 M. & W. 894; M. & H. 291.

Though by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 34, the right is extinguished at the end of twenty years, still adverse possession by a succession of independent trespassers, for a period exceeding twenty years, confers no right on any one of them who has not himself had twenty years' uninterrupted possession, except as furnishing a defense to a trespasser in possession against an action by the rightful owner. Dixon v. Gayfer, 17 Beav. 421; 23 L. J., Chanc. 60.

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 3, does not apply to cases of want of actual possession, but to those cases only where the owner has been out of it and another party has been in possession for the prescribed time; for there must be both absence of possession by the person who has the right, and actual possession by another, whether adverse or not, to be protected, to bring the case within the statute. Smith v. Lloyd, 9 Exch. 562; 2 C. L. R. 1008; 23 L. J., Exch. 104.

In ejectment, it appeared that the plaintiff's husband had been in possession as a tenant at will for eighteen years, ending in 1834, when he died, leaving a son (not a party to the action), and that she became possessed and remained in possession for thirteen years:—Held, that the plaintiff could not rely on the husband's possession except as prima facie evidence of a seizin in fee, on which supposition it was also evidence of title in his heir, which defeated the title of the plaintiff, and that she could not insist on her own possession for thirteen years, as it was not derived from the husband's possession, although the possession by herself and her husband for more than twenty years consecutively would have entitled her to a verdict if she had been defendant in an ejectment brought by the real owner. Doe d. Carter v. Burnard, 13 Q. B. 945; 18 L. J., Q. B. 300.

In 1829, W. leased land to the defendant for twenty-one years. The defendant applied to W. for leave to take in a piece of ground adjoining, but W. declined to give such leave, stating that other persons, to whom he had sold adjoining houses, had a right of way over it. The defendant, notwithstanding, inclosed and occupied it for twenty years, without payment of rent or acknowledgment of title:—Held, that the piece of ground could not be considered as having been occupied by the defendant as part of the demised premises in respect of which rent was paid, and therefore an action by W. was barred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 2, 3. Doe d. Buley v. Massey, 17 Q. B. 373; 15 Jur. 1031; 20 L. J., Q. B. 434.

One who occupies as his own land belonging to another, and before the expiration of twenty years becomes tenant to the latter of land so occupied, does not thereby change the character of his possession, but can, while he remains tenant, acquire, as against his landlord, a prescriptive title to the land first occupied by him. Dixon v. Baty, 1 L. R., Exch. 259; 12 Jur., N. S. 1024; 14 W. R. 830.

A father seized of land made a will, invalid as to real estate, whereby he appointed his brother, to whom he was indebted, executor, and died, leaving two infant daughters. The uncle entered upon the real estate and kept down the interest on a mortgage, and laid out considerable sums on improvements:—Held, that the possession of the uncle could not be treated as having been adverse to his nieces. Pelley v. Buscombe, 11 Jur., N. S. 52; 34 L. J., Chanc. 233; 13 W. R. 306—L. J.

A field adjoining a public road was separated from it only by a hedge and bank. The trustees, who, under an act of parliament, constructed the road upwards of fifty years before the commencement of the suit, made the hedge and bank, and also made on the field side of the fence a ditch of three feet in breadth. This ditch had become filled up and obliterated, and had never been re-opened by the trustees; but a ditch about a foot wide had been subsequently made by the occupier of the field, and that also had become obliterated. The owners of the land had always included the hedge in their leases, and the tenants had held and used the strip within the hedge as part of their field for much more than twenty years, and had at their own expense trimmed the hedge on both sides. During the same time the trustees had not interfered in any way with the site of the ditch:—Held, that these circumstances were not sufficient to constitute an adverse possession, and to give the owners of the land a title under the Statute of Limitations to the site of the three-foot ditch. Searby v. Tottenham Railway Company, 5 L. R., Eq. 409.

A gravel pit and a road leading to it were allotted by commissioners under an inclosure act to the surveyors of highways. From 1837 the surveyors ceased to take gravel from the pit or to use the road, and took no steps whatever to assert their right to the pit or road, but procured gravel from another pit by purchase from the plaintiff and his father. The pit and road were entirely surrounded by old inclosures belonging and land allotted to the plaintiff's predecessors in title, and in 1837 the tenant of the greater part of the land in which the pit was situated filled it up and took it into cultivation. In 1839 another tenant of the plaintiff's father plowed up the remaining portion of the pit, which abutted upon land in his occupation, and also the allotted road, which passed through other land in his occupation:—Held, that since 1837 the gravel pit having been treated as practically exhausted, and the acts of the tenants in 1837 and 1839 amounting to an actual taking possession of the pit and road, the time of limitation began from those years respectively, and the right of the surveyors had been extinguished by the adverse possession of the plaintiff for more than twenty years. Smith v. Stocks, 17 W. R. 1135; 38 L. J., Q. B. 306; 20 L. T., N. S. 740; 10 B. & S. 701.

The purchaser of a house in London having taken various objections to the title, the vendor filed a bill for specific performance, and obtained a reference as to title. The objections were overruled; but before the certificate had been signed the purchaser discovered in a long blank wall, which formed one side of the house and fronted on a street, a stone with an inscription, dated in 1776, stating that the wall had been built by and belonged to the East India Company, who had thrown the adjoining ground into the street. It turned out that the wall had been rebuilt in 1831 by the tenant of the house, and the stone set up again; but under what circumstances did not appear. No rent had from that time been paid to the company, nor any acknowledgment of their title given; but their successors in title, on being applied to, claimed the wall as theirs, and the vendor obtained a release from them:—Held, that the vendor had not a good title when the bill was filed, for that there was no ground for holding a title to have been gained by possession adversely to the East India Company. Phillipson v. Gibbon, 6 L. R., Ch. 428.

Held, that the vendor was to blame, as he might, with reasonable diligence, have informed himself of this defect before selling, and that therefore, although he had been right on all points which arose before the bill was filed, he ought not to receive costs. Id.

By an inclosure act it was provided that it should be lawful for the lord of the manor for the time being from time to time to come upon the commons and waste lands intended to be inclosed, to search for and raise any coal and ironstone being in or under the commons and waste lands. The commissioners allotted certain plots of land to S. and E., which afterwards vested in the defendant, who in 1843 worked the coal under one of the plots of land, in 1847 under a second, in 1848 under a third, in 1849 under a fourth, and in 1855 under a fifth. The plaintiffs, who claimed the coal under the lord of the manor at the time of the inclosure act, commenced, in 1867, an action for working the coal:—Held, that the action was maintainable, for that the acts of trespass committed more than twenty years before suit could not be relied upon as constituting a possession adverse to the plaintiffs, there being no sufficient evidence that the then owner of the mines was aware that the acts of trespass were being committed. Dartmouth v. Spittle, 19 W. R. 414; 24 L. T., N. S. 67—Exch.

Possession is adverse for the purpose of limitation when an actual possession is found to exist under circumstances which evince its incompatibility with a freehold in the claimant. Des Barres v. Shoy, 20 L. T., N. S. 592; 23 W. R. 273—P. C.

A husband, by a will in 1824, devised all his real and personal estate, and also all other his estate and efforts of which he might be possessed at the time of his death, to his wife and another trustee, in trust to pay the rents to his wife for life, with remainders over. The testator purchased a freehold estate after the date of his will. On his death, his widow (the other trustee having disclaimed) became sole trustee of his will, and entered into possession of the after-acquired property, as well as the devised estate, believing that all the property passed by the will. She continued in possession for more than twenty years, and then, being informed that she had acquired a title by adverse possession, she sold the estate to a purchaser for value:—Held, that the tenant for life had acquired a good title by adverse possession against the remainder-man. Prine v. Jones, 18 L. R., Eq. 320; 30 L. T., N. S. 779; 23 W. R. 837—V. C. M.

By a lease dated in 1783, the governing body of a charitable corporation granted a lease of hereditaments, belonging to the charity, for ninety-nine years, at a peppercorn rent, to G. Subsequently, the then governing body brought an action to have it declared that the lease was void under 13 Eliz. c. 10, and for possession. The successors in title of G. and their under tenants, demurred to the action, on the ground that it was barred by the Statute of Limitations:—Held, that the lease was not void, but voidable by the plaintiffs; that adverse possession began to run at the time the plaintiffs brought their action and not at the commencement of the lease, and that the demurrer must be overruled. Muglalan Hospital v. Knott, 36 L. T., N. S. 139—R.

The defendant, who shared with others a right of way over a piece of land, the property in which was in the lord of the manor, used a portion of the same, amounting to about three-quarters of the whole, in all respects as if it was properly part of his farm, plowing it up from time to time and raising produce thereon. Such user was uninterrupted, and was continued for twenty years and more. As to the remaining quarter, which was not in any way fenced off from the above, it remained in its original condition, and was used for the purposes and in the manner that the whole was originally intended to be used:—Held, that a good title, as against the lord of the manor, to the soil and minerals underlying the soil of three-quarters of the strip of land, had been thus acquired; but that nothing had been done to disturb the original rights in the soil, and minerals underlying the soil, of the remaining one quarter of the piece of land. Seddon v. Smith, 36 L. T., N. S. 168—C. A.

Operation and effect of mere entry, or continual claim.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 10, no person shall be deemed to have been in possession of any land within the meaning of the act merely by reason of having made an entry thereon.

By s. 11, no continual claim upon or near any land shall preserve any right of making an entry or distress or of bringing an action.]

A., more than twenty years before action brought, without the permission of the lord, inclosed a small portion of the waste of a manor, on which he built himself a hut. In 1835, the encroachment having been presented at the lord's court, the then lord of the manor, accompanied by his steward, went to the premises, A.'s family being there, and, stating that he took possession, directed that a stone should be taken out of the wall of the hut, and that a portion of the fence should be removed. All this was done in the absence of A. The lord and his steward then retired, and nothing more was done:—Held, that the acts so done by the lord did not amount to a dispossession of A., and a resumption of possession by the lord, so as to entitle the latter to maintain ejectment within twenty years from that time. Dos d. Baker v. Coombes or Coombes, 9 C. B. 714; 19 L. J., C. P. 906.

Before the passing of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, A. was let into possession of land as tenant at will to B. He never paid rent after that statute passed, and before twenty-one years B. entered and turned A. out. A. immediately afterwards resumed possession, but no fresh tenancy at will commenced, and he paid no rent:—Held, that B. might enter at any time before the lapse of twenty years from such resumption of possession by A., though after the lapse of twenty-one years from the first letting him into possession, and was not barred by ss. 2, 7 & 10. Randall v. Stevens, 2 El. & Bl. 641; 1 L. R., Q. B. 642; 18 Jur. 128; 23 L. J., Q. B. 68.

Possession of one or more of several parcels, joint tenants, or tenants in common.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 12, when any one or more of several persons entitled to any land or rent as coparceners, joint tenants, or tenants in common, shall have been in possession or receipt of the entirety, or more than his or their undivided share or shares of such land or of the profits thereof, or of such rent, for his or their own benefit, or for the benefit of any person or persons other than the person or persons entitled to the other share or shares of the same land or rent, such possession or receipt shall not be deemed to have been the possession or receipt of or by such last-mentioned person or persons or any of them.]

This provision applies not only to the case where one of several joint tenants has been in possession of the entirety of the whole of the lands held jointly, but also to the case where such tenant has been in possession of the entirety of any portion of such lands; and the words "or more than his or their undivided share or shares of such land," apply as well to the case where one of several joint tenants has been in possession of more than his undivided share in any portion of the lands held jointly, as to the case where he has been in possession of more than his undivided share in the whole of such lands. Murphy v. Murphy, 15 Ir. C. L. R. 205—C. P.

The statute operates to make the possession of tenants in common a separate possession from the time they first became tenants in common, and not merely from the time of the passing of the statute. Doe d. Holt v. Horrocks, 1 C. & K. 566—Cresswell.

Three females being coparceners in tail, two of them suffered recoveries of their shares, but the third did not. They all married, and their husbands entered into an agreement for a partition by deed of the lands held in coparcenary, but for nothing more. No such deed appeared to have been executed, but the lands had been held according to the agreement from its date. An action being brought by the heir in tail of the parcener who did not suffer a recovery within twenty years after her death, and before 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, to recover her share, which had been held by the husband of one of the other coparceners:—Held, that the possession was under the agreement, and not adverse. Doe d. Millett v. Millett, 11 Q. B. 1036; 12 Jur. 649; 17 L. J., Q. B. 202.

Held also, that nothing could be presumed beyond what was contemplated by the agreement, which provided for a deed, and not for a recovery. Id.

Where one tenant in common has been out of possession for twenty years prior to the passing of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, he is barred by ss. 2 and 12 from bringing his action, but might maintain it under s. 15, within five years of the passing of the act, if the other tenant in common had not been in possession adversely to him at the time of passing the act. Culley v. Doe d. Taylerson, 3 P. & D. 539; 11 A. & E. 1008.

In ejectment, by the heir of T., for two acres of land, it appeared that the father of T., more than fifty years before, had devised four acres (comprising the two in question) to his widow, for life, and then to T. and his sister S. in remainder in fee. For more than twenty years T., by arrangement between his mother and S., occupied the two acres, and devised them to his widow for life, and on her death or marriage to his daughter; and then there was a demise in similar terms, on the same event, to his son the heir. The daughter occupied with her husband until her death, and he, without giving any notice as tenant in common, claimed to defend the action:—Held, that although there was no deed of partition, the long occupation inevitably barred the title of S. as tenant in common, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 12. Tidball v. James, 29 L. J., Exch. 91. But see Murphy v. Murphy, 15 Ir. C. L. R. 205, 214, 215.

Possession of younger brother or other relation of heir.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 13, when a younger brother or other relation of the person entitled as heir to the possession or receipt of the profits of any land, or to the receipt of any rent, shall enter into the possession or receipt thereof, such possession or receipt shall not be deemed to be the possession or receipt of or by the person entitled as heir.]

A. was possessed of lands for more than twenty years, and died in 1817. His widow had possession from that time till her death in 1838. B. was the eldest son of A. and his wife:—Held, that, though B. could not recover in ejectment as the heir of his father, because more than twenty years had elapsed from the death of his father, yet that the jury might infer that the property belonged to B.'s mother, and survived to her on the death of his father, and descended to B., as his heir, on her death, in 1838. Doe d. Bennett v. Long, 9 C. & P. 773—Coleridge.

Where a daughter entered into occupation of premises on the death of her mother, to whom they had belonged till then, and held them without interruption for twenty years, but the mother had left a son, who was living during the whole time of the daughter's occupation:—Held (in an ejectment brought before 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, came into operation), that it could not be presumed from this circumstance alone that the sister's occupation was virtually that of the brother. Doe d. Draper v. Lawley, 13 Q. B. 954.

Receipt of rent generally.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, s. 35, the receipt of the rent payable by any tenant from year to year, or other lessee, shall, as against such lessee or other person claiming under him (but subject to the lease), be deemed to be the receipt of the profits of the land for the purposes of the act.]

purchased the reversion subject to a lease for years, at a rent of 4*l.*, and to an annuity of 4*l.*, and the tenant in possession under the lease paid the sum of 4*l.* yearly for upwards of twenty years to the annuitant, until his death, in 1830; and, subsequently, to his widow:—Held, that it was for the jury to consider in what character the tenant made such annual payment, and if as agent for his landlord, the possession was not adverse; and the right of the person entitled to the reversion was not barred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Doe d. Newman v. Goddill, 5 Jur. 170—Q. B.

The possession of an agent is the possession of the principal; and the principal may acquire a possessory title to real estate by receiving the rents for twenty years through an agent, although that agent is the person really entitled to the estate. Williams v. Pott, 12 L. R., Eq. 149; 40 L. J., Chanc. 775—R.

So long as an agent is in receipt of the rent of land, the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 3, will not run against his employer; and if a person commences to receive rents as the agent for another, and afterwards continues to receive such rents, without paying them over, he must be presumed to receive as agent till the contrary is shown. Smith v. Bennett, 30 L. T., N. S. 100—Exch.

As to when adverse receipt of rent prevents the running of the statute,—see this title, II., 2.

As to when adverse possession begins, in general,—see this title, II., 2; effect, upon character of possession, of acknowledgment of title or right,—see this title, II., 4; suspension by disabilities, interruption of possession, &c.,—see this title, II., 5; operation of adverse possession as a bar,—see this title, II., 6.

4. Acknowledgment of Title or Right by Party in Possession.

Effect of acknowledgment of title to land or rent, upon character of possession, generally.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 14, when any acknowledgment of the title of the person entitled to any land or rent shall have been given to him or his agent in writing, signed by the person in possession, or in receipt of the profits of such land, or in receipt of such rent, then such possession or receipt of or by the person to whom such acknowledgment shall have been given shall be deemed, according to the meaning of this act, to have been the possession or receipt of or by the person to whom or to whose agent such acknowledgment shall have been given at the time of giving the same, and the right of such last-mentioned person, or any person claiming through him, to make any entry or distress or bring an action to recover such land or rent shall be deemed to have first accrued at and not before the time at which such acknowledgment, or the last of such acknowledgments, if more than one, was given.]

Whether a writing amounts to an acknowledgment of title is a question for the court, and not for the jury, to decide. Doe d. Curzon v. Edmonds, 6 M. & W. 295.

A party in possession adversely of land, being applied to by the party claiming title to it to pay rent, and offered a lease of it, wrote as follows:—"Although, if matters were contested, I am of opinion that I should establish a legal right to the premises; yet, under all circumstances, I have made up my mind to accede to the proposal you made of paying a moderate rent, on an agreement for twenty-one years." The bargain subsequently went off, and no rent was paid, or lease executed:—Held, that this letter was not an acknowledgment of title. Ib.

Construction of a document given in evidence as an acknowledgment of title. See Furdon v. Clogg, 10 M. & W. 572.

A mortgage deed was dated the 27th of October, 1927, but was not executed until the 23d August, 1834, and it contained a covenant by the mortgagor admitting the title to be in the mortgagee, his heirs and assigns:—Held, that this was a sufficient acknowledgment of title to enable the mortgagee to recover within twenty years of the execution of the deed. Jayne or Jaynes v. Hughes, 10 Exch. 430; 24 L. J., Exch. 113.

An answer in Chancery put in within twenty years, by the person through whom a defendant in ejectment claims in the course of a Chancery suit between him and the plaintiff with reference to the same property, and containing an admission by him of the then plaintiff's title, is a sufficient acknowledgment of the plaintiff's title to prevent the action being barred. Goode v. Job, 1 El. & El. 6; 5 Jur., N. S. 145; 28 L. J., Q. B. 1.

In 1818, the plaintiff's and the defendant's grandfathers became seized as tenants in common of a meadow. The meadow was then in the possession of the defendant's grandfather, who had previously held it under a lease. The plaintiff's father became possessed in 1826, and so continued till his death, in 1836. In 1837, Newton, who was proved to be a land agent, who received the defendant's rents and managed his property, wrote the following letter to the plaintiff's agent:—"Sir, Mr. P. (the defendant) is now in possession of his two-thirds of the meadow, who will, no doubt, accept a lease (three lives) for Ley's (the plaintiff's) one third, at a fair rack rent. You must be aware Mr. P. is bound to pay rent for Ley's one-third during the time his father held the meadow, but no doubt he will do so in case you agree for a lease. (Signed) J. Newton. Will you favor me with the terms of a lease for the one-third of the meadow, that I may lay it before Mr. P." No answer was shown to have been given to this letter, but the defendant continued in possession of the land down to 1857, when an ejectment was commenced:—Held, that the letter was not a sufficient acknowledgment of the plaintiff's title. Ley v. Peter, 3 H. & N. 101; 27 L. J., Exch. 230.

— where the possession was not adverse at the passing of the act.]—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 15, when no such acknowledgment of title as afore-said (see section 14, supra, column 8553) shall have been given before the passing of the act, and the possession or receipt of the profits of the land, or the receipt of the rent, shall not at the time of the passing of the act have been adverse to the right or title of the person claiming to be entitled thereto, then such person, or the person claiming through him, may, notwithstanding the period of twenty years hereinbefore limited shall have expired, make an entry or distress, or bring an action to recover such land or interest at any time within five years next after the passing of the act.]

The word interest, which is in the parliament roll, appears to be a mistake for rent. Doe d. Angell v. Angell, 8 Q. B. 360—Denman, C. J.

W. permitted J. to occupy land, of which he was seized in fee, for twenty years previously to J.'s death in 1831; W. died in September, 1833, and the defendant, who was his son and heir-at-law of J., occupied till 1836. On ejectment brought by the devisees of W., it was found by the jury that the possession of J. was not adverse to W.:—Held, that the right of action in the devisees was not barred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 2 and 7, but was saved by s. 15, being brought within five years from the passing of the act. Doe d. Burgess v. Thompson, 1 N. & P. 215; 5 A. & E. 532; 2 H. & W. 451.

D. mortgaged land in fee to J., subject to a proviso of cesser, upon payment of the money secured, upon a day more than twenty years before the passing of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Within twenty years before the passing of the statute, D. acknowledged that the mortgage money was unpaid. On ejectment by the heir of J., within five years after the passing of the statute, the jury found that the mortgage money was unpaid:—Held, that the ejectment was not barred by s. 2, D.'s possession not being adverse at the time of passing the statute; and, therefore, the heir of J. had, by s. 15, five years from that time to bring the action, though no proof was given that he had been in possession, or received rent or interest. Doe d. Jones v. Williams, 6 N. & M. 816; 5 A. & E. 291; 2 H. & W. 214.

By a marriage settlement a husband became entitled to the moiety of an estate in fee, which moiety originally belonged to his wife. During the coverture, the other moiety descended to the wife, as heirress at law to her brother. The wife afterwards died in the husband's lifetime without issue; and the husband, from the time of her death, in 1815, till a sale of the estate in 1828, remained in uninterrupted possession of the entire property, without making any acknowledgment of the title of any other person:—Held, that this was a case falling within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 15, and that, notwithstanding the husband's possession of the moiety which descended to the wife might not be adverse, the heir-at-law of the wife, not having made his claim within five years after the passing of the act, was barred by the statute. Hasell, Ex parte, 3 Y. & C. 617; 3 Jur. 1101.

In 1781, a lord of a manor, with the consent of the tenants of the manor, granted to certain persons license to inclose a piece of the waste, and that they and their heirs should hold the same in trust for the purpose of building a workhouse, rendering to the lord of the manor the yearly rent of 5s. for the same forever. The churchwardens and overseers entered into possession, and built a workhouse, and used it as such until 1836. The yearly rent was paid from 1781 to 1791, and from 1825 to 1836. In 1835, the persons to whom the license was granted in 1781 being dead, notice was given to the officers of the parish, by the steward of the manor, to nominate other persons for the purpose of admission, to save a forfeiture. Seven persons were accordingly nominated and admitted, the parish paying a fine on their admission. In 1840, the parish officers, in conformity with a resolution of the inhabitants in vestry assembled, surrendered the premises into the hands of the lord of the manor, and the latter took possession, and afterwards conveyed the premises to the defendant. In an action by the churchwardens and overseers to recover the premises:—Held, that the grant of the license in 1817 did not manifest an intention to convey a freehold estate, and that the admission of fresh trustees in 1840, and the payment of the 5s., were acknowledgments that the freehold was in the lord of the manor, and that the land was held by his permission; and therefore the possession was not adverse at the time of the passing of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Hodgson v. Hooper, 6 Jur., N. S. 911; 29 L. J., Q. B. 222; 8 W. R. 637; 8 El. & Bl. 149.

Held, also, that the first tenancy being a tenancy at will, the admission in 1835, being inoperative to convey a copyhold estate, operated to create a fresh tenancy at will; and, therefore, the right of entry of the lord was not barred until twenty years after. Id.

D. permitted the defendant and his wife, the daughter of D., to be in the occupation of premises without paying rent for more than thirty years, and they were so in the occupation in 1838. D. died in 1837, having devised the premises to the defendant's wife for life, and after her death to the plaintiff. By his will an annuity was given to the defendant's wife, which the defendant received continually. The ejectment was brought upon the death of the wife in 1844:—Held, first, that, assuming that the defendant was tenant at will to D., the right of D. was barred by s. 7, and not saved by s. 15 of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Doe d. Dayman v. Moore, 9 Q. B. 555; 10 Jur. 815; 15 L. J., Q. B. 324.

Held, secondly, that defendant was not precluded from insisting on the statute, either by the receipt of the annuity under the will, or by the estate for life which the testator professed to give to his wife. Id.

Effect, as between mortgagor and mortgagee, of acknowledgment of title, right to redeem, &c., or of payment of interest.]—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 28, when a mortgagee shall have obtained the possession or receipt of the profits of any land, or the receipt of any rent, comprised in his mortgage, the mortgagor, or any person claiming through him, shall not bring a suit to redeem the mortgage but within twenty years next after the time at which the mortgagee obtained such possession or receipt, unless in the meantime an acknowledgment of the title of the mortgagor or of his right of redemption shall have been given to the mortgagor, or some person claiming his estate, or to the agent of such mortgagor or person, in writing signed by the mortgagee or the person claiming through him; and in such case no such suit shall be brought but within twenty years next after the time at which such acknowledgment, or the last of such acknowledgments if more than one, was given;

And when there shall be more than one mortgagor or more than one person claiming through the mortgagor or mortgagors, such acknowledgment, if given to any of such mortgagors or persons, or his or their agent, shall be as effectual as if the same had been given to all such mortgagors or persons; but where there shall be more than one mortgagee or more than one person claiming the estate, or interest of the mortgagee or mortgagees, such acknowledgment, signed by one or more of such mortgagees or persons, shall be effected only as against the party or parties signing as aforesaid, and the person or persons claiming any part of the mortgage money or land or rent by, from, or under him or them, and any person or persons entitled to any estate or estates, interest or interests, to take effect after or in defeasance of his or their estate or estates, interest or interests, and shall not operate to give to the mortgagor or mortgagors a right to redeem the mortgage as against the person or persons entitled to any other undivided or divided part of the money or land or rent;

And where such of the mortgagees or persons aforesaid as shall have given such acknowledgment shall be entitled to a divided part of the land or rent comprised in the mortgage, or some estate or interest therein, and not to any ascertained part of the mortgaged money, the mortgagor or mortgagors shall be entitled to redeem the same divided part of the land or rent, on payment, with interest, of the part of the mortgage money which shall bear the same proportion to the whole of the mortgage money as the value of such divided part of the land or rent shall bear to the value of the whole of the land or rent comprised in the mortgage.]

In 1816, a mortgagee, under a mortgage created some years before, entered into possession of the mortgaged premises; and in 1827 he executed a transfer of his mortgage to another. The transferee thereupon entered into possession, and in 1828 executed a transfer of his mortgage to a second transferee, who then entered into possession. The mortgagor was not a party to either transfer, and had not, from the time the original mortgagee entered into possession, received any acknowledgment in writing of his equity of redemption. In 1833, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, passed. In 1845, the representative of the mortgagor filed a bill for redemption against the representatives of the second transferee:—Held, that the statute operated retrospectively, by taking from the mortgagor the benefit of the acknowledgment which had already been made of the mortgage title in the transfers of the mortgage made in 1827 and 1828; and that the suit (as to that estate) was therefore barred. Batchelor v. Middleton, 6 Hare, 75.

On the death of the mortgagor in 1833, his widow (who was entitled to dower) took possession of the mortgaged estate, with the consent of the co-heirs, and she paid interest on the mortgage. In 1838, the mortgagee instituted a suit to realize his mortgage, in which it did not appear that any interest had been paid by one of the co-heirs during the interval:—Held, that the payment of the interest by the widow prevented the statute running, for either such co-heir was himself barred, or the payment of interest had been made on his behalf. Ames v. Mannering, 36 Beav. 583.

A mortgagee in fee in possession for more than twenty years, having devised the estate to his son in tail, with limitations over:—Held, that an acknowledgment by the tenant in tail of the mortgage title restored the right of redemption, so as to bind the remainder-man; and that a purchase of the equity of redemption by him, and conveyance of it to him in fee, gave him an absolute right to the estate, to the exclusion of the devisees in remainder under the will of the mortgagee, who had, as mortgagee, been more than twenty years in possession. Pendleton v. Rooth, 1 Giff. 35; 5 Jur. N. S. 840; 29 L. J., Chanc. 265; affirmed on appeal, 1 De G., F. & J. 81; 6 Jur. N. S. 182; 29 L. J., Chanc. 265; 8 W. R. 101.

A first mortgagee, in possession for more than twenty years, was applied to by the solicitor of a subsequent incumbrancer for an account of the rent and profits. He replied, as follows: "In answer to your letter, I beg to say that I deny the claim of your client. I need only add, that if he were entitled to the account it would be of no use, as the rents and profits of the estate have never been sufficient to pay the interest of the first charge."—Held, that this was not an acknowledgment, within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 28, of the second incumbrancer's right to redeem. Thompson v. Boyer, 9 Jur., N. S. 863; 11 W. R. 975—R.

An acknowledgment by a mortgagor of more than six years' arrears of interest being due upon a first mortgage does not preclude a puisne mortgagee from relying on the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Balding v. Lane, 1 De G., J. & S. 122; 9 Jur., N. S. 500; 33 L. J., Chanc. 219.

When an owner of an estate contracts for valuable consideration with his mortgagee to put a man in possession, and directs him to apply the rents in payment of the interest on the first mortgage, and then the interest on the second, the mortgagor cannot afterwards urge that the Statute of Limitations excludes the second mortgagee, because the rents were no more than sufficient to pay the first, and the second mortgagee had for more than twenty years received nothing. Knight v. Bowyer, 23 Beav. 600; 8 Jur., N. S. 968.

If estates A., B. and C. are included in one mortgage, and the owner of A. pays the interest, the mortgagee is not barred by 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 28, or by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40, from his remedy against B. and C. Chinnery v. Evans, 10 Jur., N. S. 855; 13 W. R. 20; 11 L. T., N. S. 68; 11 H. L. Cas. 115.

An acknowledgment of the title of a mortgagor given by one only of two joint mortgagees, who, on the face of the mortgage deed, are shown to advance the money on a joint account as trustees, does not keep alive the right of redemption either as against the whole property or against a moiety of it, but is wholly inoperative. Richardson v. Younge, 6 L. R., Ch. 478; 40 L. J., Chanc. 838; 25 L. T., N. S. 230; 19 W. R. 612; affirming S. C., 10 L. R., Eq. 275; 39 L. J., Chanc. 475; 18 W. R. 800—V. C. M.

When a demise for a term of 1,000 years by way of mortgage is created in land, and no payment of principal or of interest or acknowledgment is made for more than twenty years, and the mortgagor and those claiming under him remain in possession of the premises without interruption, the title of the mortgagee under the mortgage is thenceforth barred. Hemming v. Blanton, 42 L. J., C. P. 158; 21 W. R. 636.

Therefore a payment of arrears of interest and the principal to the mortgagee under a decree in a foreclosure suit, after that time has elapsed, does not revive the title in the mortgagee, and an ejectment does not then lie to recover the possession. Id.

Effect of acknowledgment of claims secured by mortgages or other charges on lands or rents; claims for arrears of rent, interest, annuities, and other charges.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40, after the 31st day of December, 1833, no action or suit or other proceeding shall be brought to recover any sum of money secured by any mortgage, judgment, or lien, or otherwise charged upon or payable, out of any land or rent, at law or in equity, or any legacy, but within twenty years next after a present right to receive the same shall have accrued to some person capable of giving a discharge for or release of the same, unless in the meantime some part of the principal money, or some interest thereon, shall have been paid, or some acknowledgment of the right thereto shall have been given in writing signed by the person by whom the same shall be payable, or his agent, to the person entitled thereto, or his agent; and in such case, no such action or suit or proceeding shall be brought but within twenty years after such payment or acknowledgment, or the last of such payments or acknowledgments if more than one, was given.

By s. 42, no arrears of rent or of interest in respect of any sum of money charged upon or payable out of any land or rent, or in respect of any legacy, or any damages in respect of such arrears of rent or interest, shall be recovered by any distress, action, or suit, but within six years next after the same respectively shall have become due, or next after an acknowledgment of the same in writing shall have been given to the person entitled thereto, or his agent, signed by the person by whom the same was payable, or his agents: Provided, nevertheless, that where any prior mortgagee or other incumbrancer shall have been in possession of any land or in receipt of the profits thereof within one year next before an action or suit shall be brought by any person entitled to a subsequent mortgage or other incumbrance on the same land, the person entitled to such subsequent mortgage or incumbrance may recover in such action or suit the arrears of interest which shall have become due during the whole time that such prior mortgagee or incumbrancer was in such possession or receipt as aforesaid, although such time may have exceeded the term of six years.]

The payment of interest on an Irish mortgage made by a receiver appointed over the estates mortgaged, is, within the terms of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40, payment by an agent of the party liable. Chinnery v. Evans, 11 H. L. Cas. 115; 10 Jur., N. S. 855; 13 W. R. 20; 11 L. T., N. S. 68.

The words in s. 40, "by the person by whom the same shall be payable, or his agent," apply equally to the making of a payment, and the signing of an acknowledgment. Id.

The payment of money to a mortgagee by the person liable to pay, in respect of the interest on the mortgage, continues the mortgage in all its integrity and force with respect to all the estates properly comprised in the mortgage, and which had not been aliened or conveyed away by the mortgagee, or with his assent. Id.

A receiver of the rents of a mortgaged estate is the receiver of the mortgagor, and any payment made by such receiver, by order of the court, is a payment in law by the legal agent of the person liable to pay within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40. Id.

The assignment by a mortgagor of outstanding terms to a trustee for the purchaser is not a possession of a prior incumbrancer within the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, so as to entitle the mortgagee to more than six years' arrears of interest. Id.

But the payment of interest on a mortgage by a mere stranger would not be a payment within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 40, 42. Id.

S., being indebted to his bankers in 1826, assigned to them an annuity of 20l. a year, payable during three lives and the lives and life of the survivors and survivor, for securing 200l., part of his balance. S., in 1828, mortgaged to them the equity of redemption

Effect, as between mortgagor and mortgagee, of acknowledgment of title, right to redemption, &c., or of payment of interest.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 28, when a mortgagee shall have obtained the possession or receipt of the profits of any land, or the receipt of any rent, comprised in his mortgage, the mortgagor, or any person claiming through him, shall not bring a suit to redeem the mortgage but within twenty years next after the time at which the mortgagee obtained such possession or receipt, unless in the meantime an acknowledgment of the title of the mortgagor or of his right of redemption shall have been given to the mortgagor, or some person claiming his estate, or to the agent of such mortgagor or person, in writing signed by the mortgagee or the person claiming through him; and in such case no such suit shall be brought but within twenty years next after the time at which such acknowledgment, or the last of such acknowledgments if more than one, was given;]

And when there shall be more than one mortgagor or more than one person claiming through the mortgagor or mortgagors, such acknowledgment, if given to any of such mortgagors or persons, or his or their agent, shall be as effectual as if the same had been given to all such mortgagors or persons; but where there shall be more than one mortgagee or more than one person claiming the estate, or interest of the mortgagee or mortgagees, such acknowledgment, signed by one or more of such mortgagees or persons, shall be effected only as against the party or parties signing as aforesaid, and the person or persons claiming any part of the mortgage money or land or rent by, from, or under him or them, and any person or persons entitled to any estate or estates, interest or interests, to take effect after or in default of his or their estate or estates, interest or interests, and shall not operate to give to the mortgagor or mortgagors a right to redeem the mortgage as against the person or persons entitled to any other undivided or divided part of the money or land or rent;

And where such of the mortgagees or persons aforesaid as shall have given such acknowledgment shall be entitled to a divided part of the land or rent comprised in the mortgage, or some estate or interest therein, and not to any undivided part of the mortgaged money, the mortgagor or mortgagors shall be entitled to redeem the same divided part of the land or rent, on payment, with interest, of the part of the mortgage money which shall bear the same proportion to the whole of the mortgage money as the value of such divided part of the land or rent shall bear to the value of the whole of the land or rent comprised in the mortgage.]

In 1816, a mortgagee, under a mortgage created some years before, entered into possession of the mortgaged premises; and in 1827 he executed a transfer of his mortgage to another. The transferee thereupon entered into possession, and in 1828 executed a transfer of his mortgage to a second transferee, who then entered into possession. The mortgagor was not a party to either transfer, and had not, from the time the original mortgagee entered into possession, received any acknowledgment in writing of his equity of redemption. In 1833, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, passed. In 1845, the representative of the mortgagor filed a bill for redemption against the representatives of the second transferee:—Held, that the statute operated retrospectively, by taking from the mortgagor the benefit of the acknowledgment which had already been made of the mortgage title in the transfers of the mortgage made in 1827 and 1828; and that the suit (as to that estate) was therefore barred. Batchelor v. Middleton, 6 Hare, 75.

On the death of the mortgagor in 1813, his widow (who was entitled to dower) took possession of the mortgaged estate, with the consent of the co-heirs, and she paid interest on the mortgage. In 1858, the mortgagee instituted a suit to realize his mortgage, in which it did not appear that any interest had been paid by one of the co-heirs during the interval:—Held, that the payment of the interest by the widow prevented the statute running, for either such co-heir was himself barred, or the payment of interest had been made on his behalf. Ames v. Mantering, 26 Beav. 583.

A mortgagee in fee in possession for more than twenty years, having devised the estate to his son in tail, with limitations over:—Held, that an acknowledgment by the tenant in tail of the mortgage title restored the right of redemption, so as to bind the remainder man; and that a purchase of the equity of redemption by him, and conveyance of it to him in fee, gave him an absolute right to the estate, to the exclusion of the devisees in remainder under the will of the mortgagee, who had, as mortgagee, been more than twenty years in possession. Fendleton v. Booth, 1 Giff. 35; 5 Jur., N. S. 840; 29 L. J., Chanc. 265; affirmed on appeal, 1 De G., F. & J. 81; 6 Jur., N. S. 182; 29 L. J., Chanc. 265; 8 W. R. 101.

A first mortgagee, in possession for more than twenty years, was applied to by the solicitor of a subsequent incumbrancer for an account of the rent and profits. He replied, as follows: "In answer to your letter, I beg to say that I deny the claim of your client. I need only add, that if he were entitled to the account it would be of no use, as the rents and profits of the estate have never been sufficient to pay the interest of the first charge."—Held, that this was not an acknowledgment, within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 28, of the second incumbrancer's right to redeem. Thompson v. Bowyer, 9 Jur., N. S. 863; 11 W. R. 975—R.

An acknowledgment by a mortgagor of more than six years' arrears of interest being due upon a first mortgage does not preclude a puisne mortgagee from relying on the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Dadding v. Lane, 1 De G., J. & S. 122; 9 Jur., N. S. 500; 33 L. J., Chanc. 210.

When an owner of an estate contracts for valuable consideration with his mortgagee

to put a man in possession, and directs him to apply the rents in payment of the interest on the first mortgage, and then the interest on the second, the mortgagor cannot afterwards urge that the Statute of Limitations excludes the second mortgagee, because the rents were no more than sufficient to pay the first, and the second mortgagee had for more than twenty years received nothing. Knight v. Bowyer, 23 Beav. 609; 3 Jur., N. S. 968.

If estates A., B. and C. are included in one mortgage, and the owner of A. pays the interest, the mortgagee is not barred by 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 28, or by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40, from his remedy against B. and C. Chinnery v. Evans, 10 Jur., N. S. 855; 13 W. R. 20; 11 L. T., N. S. 68; 11 H. L. Cas. 115.

An acknowledgment of the title of a mortgagor given by one only of two joint mortgagees, who, on the face of the mortgage deed, are shown to advance the money on a joint account as trustees, does not keep alive the right of redemption either as against the whole property or against a moiety of it, but is wholly inoperative. Richardson v. Younge, 6 L. R., Ch. 478; 40 L. J., Chanc. 838; 25 L. T., N. S. 230; 19 W. R. 612; affirming S. C., 10 L. R., Eq. 275; 39 L. J., Chanc. 475; 18 W. R. 800—V. C. M.

When a demise for a term of 1,000 years by way of mortgage is created in land, and no payment of principal or of interest or acknowledgment is made for more than twenty years, and the mortgagor and those claiming under him remain in possession of the premises without interruption, the title of the mortgagee under the mortgage is thenceforth barred. Hemming v. Blanton, 42 L. J., C. P. 158; 21 W. R. 636.

Therefore a payment of arrears of interest and the principal to the mortgagees under a decree in a foreclosure suit, after that time has elapsed, does not revive the title in the mortgagee, and an ejectment does not then lie to recover the possession. Ib.

Effect of acknowledgment of claims secured by mortgages or other charges on lands or rents; claims for arrears of rent, interest, annuities, and other charges.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40, after the 31st day of December, 1833, no action or suit or other proceeding shall be brought to recover any sum of money secured by any mortgage, judgment, or lien, or otherwise charged upon or payable, out of any land or rent, at law or in equity, or any legacy, but within twenty years next after a present right to receive the same shall have accrued to some person capable of giving a discharge for or release of the same, unless in the meantime some part of the principal money, or some interest thereon, shall have been paid, or some acknowledgment of the right thereto shall have been given in writing signed by the person by whom the same shall be payable, or his agent, to the person entitled thereto, or his agent; and in such case, no such action or suit or proceeding shall be brought but within twenty years after such payment or acknowledgment, or the last of such payments or acknowledgments if more than one, was given.

By s. 42, no arrears of rent or of interest in respect of any sum of money charged upon or payable out of any land or rent, or in respect of any legacy, or any damages in respect of such arrears of rent or interest, shall be recovered by any distress, action, or suit, but within six years next after the same respectively shall have become due, or next after an acknowledgment of the same in writing shall have been given to the person entitled thereto, or his agent, signed by the person by whom the same was payable, or his agents: Provided, nevertheless, that where any prior mortgagee or other incumbrancer shall have been in possession of any land or in receipt of the profits thereof within one year next before an action or suit shall be brought by any person entitled to a subsequent mortgage or other incumbrance on the same land, the person entitled to such subsequent mortgage or incumbrance may recover in such action or suit the arrears of interest which shall have become due during the whole time that such prior mortgagee or incumbrancer was in such possession or receipt as aforesaid, although such time may have exceeded the term of six years.]

The payment of interest on an Irish mortgage made by a receiver appointed over the estates mortgaged, is, within the terms of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40, payment by an agent of the party liable. Chinnery v. Evans, 11 H. L. Cas. 115; 10 Jur., N. S. 855; 13 W. R. 20; 11 L. T., N. S. 68.

The words in s. 40, "by the person by whom the same shall be payable, or his agent," apply equally to the making of a payment, and the signing of an acknowledgment. Ib.

The payment of money to a mortgagee by the person liable to pay, in respect of the interest on the mortgage, continues the mortgage in all its integrity and force with respect to all the estates properly comprised in the mortgage, and which had not been aliened or conveyed away by the mortgagee, or with his assent. Ib.

A receiver of the rents of a mortgaged estate is the receiver of the mortgagor, and any payment made by such receiver, by order of the court, is a payment in law by the legal agent of the person liable to pay within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40. Ib.

The assignment by a mortgagor of outstanding terms to a trustee for the purchaser is not a possession of a prior incumbrancer within the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42, so as to entitle the mortgagee to more than six years' arrears of interest. Ib.

But the payment of interest on a mortgage by a mere stranger would not be a payment within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 40, 42. Ib.

S., being indebted to his bankers in 1826, assigned to them an annuity of 20l. a year, payable during three lives and the lives and life of the survivors and survivor, for securing 200l., part of his balance. S., in 1828, mortgaged to them the equity of redemption of a leasehold estate for securing his general balance of 1,500*l*. Interest was paid on the mortgage up to 1833, first, to the bankers (who became bankrupt in 1828), and afterwards to their assignees; and they received the annuity until 1847, when the annuity expired, and the money thus received was more than enough to pay the 200*l*. In 1834, the first mortgagee of the leasehold estate entered into possession of the property and remained in possession. In 1838, B. filed a bill against the mortgagee for redemption:—Held, that the payments of the annuity having exceeded the 200*l*, must be taken to have been made in reduction of the general balance due on the mortgage, and having been made within twenty years, the same took the case out of the operation of the 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 40, 42. Staley v. Barrett, 26 L. J., Chanc. 831—L. J.

A., who had a life interest in certain estates, gave a bond to a creditor, and a warrant of attorney to confess judgment for its amount. No judgment was entered up. A. died within three years of the date of the bond, leaving no assets, real or personal. B., his son, the first tenant in tail of the estates, entered into possession, and expressed, in letters to the creditor, a wish to pay his father's debts, but would not give any security for them. B. made a will, in which, reciting his own wish, and a promise in conformity with it, made by him to his father and mother, he said, "And in case I should not be able to fulfill my intentions during my lifetime, and that I should not have a sufficient fund for that purpose arising from my personal estate, I hereby charge all my just debts, and also all the debts of my late father A., which remain unpaid at the time of my decease, upon all my real estates wheresoever." He then directed his trustees to stand seized of all his estates, "subject, in manner aforesaid, to the payment of all my just debts, and to the debts of my father." B. survived his father many years. The obligee of the bond filed a charge thereof against the trustees under the son's will:—Held, that the debts of the father which were not barred by the statute at the death of the father, were charges on the real estates of the son. O'Connor v. Haslam, 8 H. L. Cas. 170.

A contract for the sale of an estate made in March, 1811, stipulated that the purchase-money should be paid in on the 13th of May following. The purchase-money was not paid, but the purchaser entered into possession, and he and persons claiming under him continued in such possession. In 1834, their agent signed a written acknowledgment of the vendor's title, sufficient to take his lien for the principal of the purchase-money out of the 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40. In 1840, the assignees of the vendor filed a bill in equity, seeking to enforce the vendor's lien on the estate for the purchase-money:—Held, that the 42d section did not apply to the arrears of interest, but that the whole was recoverable from the 13th of May, 1811. Taft v. Stearns, 5 De G., M. & G. 785.

As to effect of acknowledgment of claim upon limitation of personal actions and proceedings,—see this title, III., 4.

As to pleading and proof of acknowledgment of title or right,—see this title, IV.

5. Suspension; Disabilities; Interruption of Possession.

What disabilities suspend the running of the statute; and to what extent. —[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 18, if at the time at which the right of any person to make an entry or distress, or bring an action to recover any land or rent, shall have first accrued as aforesaid (see sections 2 & 14), such person shall have been under any of the disabilities hereinafter mentioned (that is to say), infancy, coverture, idiocy, lunacy, unsoundness of mind (or absence beyond seas, now no longer a disability, by virtue of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 10), then such person, or the person claiming through him, may, notwithstanding the period of twenty years hereinbefore limited shall have expired, make an entry or distress, or bring an action to recover such land or rent at any time within ten years next after the time at which the person to whom such right shall first have accrued as aforesaid shall have ceased to be under any such disability, or shall have died (which shall have first happened).]

In 1832, an infant became entitled to real estate in fee, and his father entered into possession. In 1836, he attained his majority. In 1832, the father died, having continued in possession of the property down to the time of his death. In 1854, he filed a bill against the devisees of his father for an account of the rents and profits:—Held, that the entry of his father in 1832 must be taken to have been as his guardian and not as a trespasser; and the statute, therefore, could not be set up successfully. Thomas v. Thomas, 25 L. J., Chanc. 159; 2 Kay & J. 79; 1 Jur., N. S. 1160.

A testator (whose will was not discovered for fifteen years after his death) died in 1847, leaving his devisee an infant, who attained full age in 1852:—Held, in an ejectment brought in 1869 by the devisee against the grantees of the heir-at-law, that by the lapse of twenty years from the death of the testator, and of ten years from the time of the devisee's attaining full age, his right was barred by the statute. Lambert v. Brown, 5 Ir. R., C. L. 218—Exch.

[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 17, no entry, distress, or action shall be made or brought by any person who, at the time at which his right to make an entry or distress, or to bring an action to recover any land or rent shall have first accrued, shall be under any of the disabilities hereinafter mentioned, or by any person claiming through him, but within forty years next after the time at which such right shall have first accrued, although the person under disability at such time may have remained under one or more of such disabilities during the whole of such forty years, or although the term of ten years from the time at which he shall have ceased to be under any disability, or have died, shall not have expired.]

Effect of succession of disabilities.—[By 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 18, when any person shall be under any of the disabilities hereinbefore mentioned at the time at which his right to make an entry or distress, or to bring an action to recover any land or rent shall have first accrued, and shall depart this life without having ceased to be under any such disability, no time to make an entry or distress, or to bring an action to recover such land or rent, beyond the said period of twenty years next after the right of such person to make an entry or distress, or to bring an action to recover such land or rent shall have first accrued, or the said period of ten years next after the time at which such person shall have died, shall be allowed by reason of any disability of any other person.]

This section is so far retrospective as to extend to a case where the first person under disability died before the passing of the act. Devine v. Holloway, 9 W. R. 642; 4 L. T., N. S. 190; 14 Moore P. C. C. 290.

A claimant to land in the colony of New South Wales, whose ancestor died under disability in 1835, and who himself continued under disability till he brought an ejectment to recover the land in 1856, was barred by a Colonial Ordinance of 1837, which applied the 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, to the colony of New South Wales. Id.

Before this enactment, when the ancestor died, leaving a son and a daughter infants; and on the death of the ancestor a stranger entered, and the son soon after went to sea, and was supposed to have died abroad within age:—Held, that the daughter was not entitled to twenty years to make her entry after the death of her brother, but only to ten years; more than twenty years having, in the whole, elapsed since the death of the person last seized. Doe d. George v. Jesson, 6 East, 80; 2 Smith, 266.

A. was tenant for life, with a power of appointment, by will attested by three witnesses; he appointed the land to B. for life, and after her death to C. in fee. B. was one of the witnesses to the will, and the appointment to her was therefore void. On the death of the testator, the husband of B. entered, and held the land till his death, which was three years after the death of B.:—Held, that the statute did not begin to run against C. till the death of B. Doe d. Allen v. Blakey, 5 C. & P. 563—Taunton. And see Fausett v. Carpenter, 5 Bligh, N. S. 75.

If an estate descends to parceners, one of whom is under a disability, which continues more than twenty years, and the other does not enter within twenty years, the disability of the one does not preserve the title of the other after the twenty years have elapsed. Roe d. Langdon v. Rowleston, 2 Taunt. 441.

When the person to whom the right to make an entry or to bring an action for the recovery of land accrues is under a disability, and before the removal of that disability the same person falls under another disability, the 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 16, preserves his right to bring an action until ten years after the removal of the latter disability. Borrows v. Ellison, 6 L. R., Exch. 128; 40 L. J., Exch. 181; 19 W. R. 850; 24 L. T., N. S. 865.

In 1833, the plaintiff became entitled to land, which the defendant then entered into possession of, and continued to occupy until action brought. At the time when the plaintiff's title accrued she was an infant; she married under age, and continued under coverture until the time of bringing her action in 1870. In an action by herself and her husband in her right to recover the land:—Held, that the action was maintainable, notwithstanding that more than twenty years had elapsed since the title accrued, and more than ten years since the removal of the disability of infancy. Id.

Countries not beyond seas within the meaning of the act.—[By 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 19, no part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, nor the islands of Man, Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, or Sark, nor any island adjacent to any of them (being part of the dominions of his Majesty), shall be deemed to be beyond seas within the meaning of the act.]

This section is applicable to cases of residence in Ireland before the passing of the statute, if the controversy has not arisen till after the passing of it. Hasell, Ex parte, 3 Y. & C. 617; 3 Jur. 1101.

Interruption or discontinuance of adverse possession.—[If there is an adverse possession of land, that adverse possession will be interrupted (so as to cause the statute to cease to run as against the true owner) by the true owner entering upon the land, asserting his rights, and entirely removing that which constituted the possession of the tortious possessor. And as a matter of law it is unnecessary for the true owner to go on and show that he continued in possession. Worsam v. Vandenbrande, 17 W. R. 53—C. P.]

Action for entering the plaintiff's garden. The plaintiff was tenant to W. L. of the garden, and the defendant was owner of premises comprising a cottage and yard, which had formerly been part of the estates of the L. family, with a privy in the yard abutting upon the garden, which privy had stood there sixty years. L., who died in 1811, was owner of the garden and the premises belonging to the defendant, and devised certain of his estates, including those premises, to H. L. in trust to sell. H. L. sold various lots, and in 1812, W. became the purchaser of a lot which included those premises. In 1821, W. built the cottage, and on his death, in 1849, the premises devolved upon the defendant in right of his wife, who was heiress of W. In 1823, S. became tenant of the garden, and continued so until 1857. In 1830 he walled up stones against the opening of the privy into the garden, and W. knocked them down. S. complained of that act to H. L., who went with his agent to look at the place, and met there S. and W. Declarations of W. and H. L. on that occasion were admitted in evidence at the trial. A low wall was accordingly built round, and a loose flagstone put at the top so as to form a cesspool, and the privy was cleaned out through the garden until about 1852. Under the will of L., the garden came to W. L. on his attaining twenty-one, in 1817. After the declarations were given in evidence, it appeared that H. L. was trustee of W. L. during his minority, and subsequently by his request received his rents. In October, 1861, the tenant of the garden, by direction of W. L., built a wall to prevent the defendant going through it. A correspondence between the attorneys for the defendant and W. L., in which there was negotiation as to a reference of the matter to arbitration, began on the 28th of December of that year, and continued until the 18th of February, 1863. The trespass for which the action was brought was committed on the 3d of February, 1863, and the writ issued on the following day. The judge left to the jury the question whether the defendant had submitted to or acquiesced in the interruption for one year within 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 4, and they said he had not, and found for him a verdict:—Held, first, that the question was properly left to the jury, as an interruption might be shown to have been not submitted to or acquiesced in within 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 4, though no suit or action had been brought. Bennison v. Cartwright, 5 B. & S. 1.

Held, secondly, that the declaration of W. was admissible as explanatory of acts about to be done by him, showing the nature of the enjoyment of the way. Ib.

Seemingly, that even taking H. L. as a stranger to the estate at the time of the conversation between him and S. and W., his declaration was admissible as part of the conversation. Ib.

A gravel pit and a road to it were allotted by commissioners under an inclosure act to the surveyors of highways of a hamlet, for the repair of its roads and ways. From 1837 to 1863 the surveyors ceased to take gravel from the pit or to use the road, and took no steps to assert their right to the pit or road, but got gravel for the repair of the highways from another pit two miles off, which they purchased from time to time from the plaintiff's father and from the plaintiff. The land allotted for the road and gravel pit was entirely surrounded by old inclosures belonging and land allotted to the plaintiff's predecessors in title. In 1837 the tenant of the greater part of the land in which the pit was situated filled up part of the pit, and from that time cultivated the surface as arable land, together with the adjacent parts of the field. In 1839 another tenant plowed up the remaining portion of the pit, which abutted upon land in his occupation, and also the allotted road, which passed through other land in his occupation; and both continued to be cultivated by the plaintiff's tenants as arable land from that time till 1863. In 1844 the tenant of the plaintiff, who was in occupation of the surface of the greater part of the pit, was elected one of the surveyors of the highways, and held that office for one year:—Held, that actual possession of the gravel pit and road was taken by the tenant of the adjoining lands in 1837 and 1839, and therefore the title of surveyors of highways to the gravel pit and road had, by the operation of 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 2, 3, 34, become extinguished; and that the circumstances of the tenant occupying part of the pit being elected surveyor of highways after possession had been taken of it, did not interrupt the running of the period of limitation, as the character of his possession as tenant under the plaintiff was not altered during his year of office. Smith v. Stocks, 10 B. & S. 701.

The merely ceasing to work a mine is not such an abandonment as amounts to a discontinuance of possession within 2 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 3. Low Moor Company v. Stanley Coal Company, 38 L. T., N. S. 486—Exch.

As to suspension of running of statute in respect of personal actions,—see this title, III., 2.

6. Effect of Bar by Adverse Possession or Limitation.

Effect of adverse possession, generally before the Statute of Limitations.]—If no other title appears, a clear possession of twenty years is strong presumptive evidence of a fee. Doe d. Barnwell v. Barnard, Cowp. 595.

But possession of land for any term less than twenty years by a feeoffee, is not presumptive evidence of livery of seisin. Doe d. Wilkes v. Cleveland, 9 B. & C. 864; S. C. nom. Doe v. Cleveland, 4 M. & R. 666.

An adverse possession for twenty years is no bar to the church, except as against the same incumbent who submits to it. Runcorn v. Doe d. Cooper, 8 D. & R. 450; 5 B. & C. 696.

Though a leasee sets up an adverse claim to the property in the premises which he holds under the lease, yet that does not incapacitate him from maintaining possession under the lease. Rees d. Powell v. King, Forrest, 19; 3 B. & B. 514.

M., seized in fee of an undivided moiety of an estate, by her will, made many years before her death, devised the same to her nephew and two nieces as tenants in common. One of her nieces having died in her lifetime, leaving an infant daughter, she, by another will, but which she never executed, devised the estate to her nephew, her surviving niece, and that infant. Upon the death of M., her nephew and surviving niece covenanted to carry her unexecuted will into effect, and to convey one-third of the estate to a trustee, to convey to the infant when she attained twenty-one, or to her issue, if she died before twenty-one leaving any, or otherwise to themselves again; but no conveyance was ever executed in par-suance of the deed. The infant died under age and without issue, but the rents were received by her trustee for her use during her life. In ejectment by the devisee of the nephew, brought above twenty years after the death of the nephew, but within twenty years after the death of the infant:—Held, that the adverse possession began only after the latter event, and, therefore, that the action was maintainable. Doe d. Coldlough v. Hulso, 5 D. & R. 650; 3 B. & C. 757.

Twenty years' adverse possession of a waste inclosed is a bar to the entry of a commoner. Hawke v. Bacon, 2 Taunt. 156.

A., forty-five years before suit, inclosed a piece of ground from the waste, and built a cottage on part of it; he died twenty-nine years before the suit; and, after that, his widow and daughter lived on the premises till the death of the former, a month before the trial:—Held, in ejectment by A.'s eldest son, that his claim was barred unless the jury was satisfied that his mother held the premises by his permission, and not adversely. Doe d. Pritchard v. Janney, 8 C. & P. 99—Coleridge.

The plaintiff proved twenty years' possession; the defendant ten years following the twenty:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, as his earlier possession must prevail. Doe d. Harding v. Cooke, 7 Bing. 345; 5 M. & P. 181.

Operation of bar by 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 1, in respect of estates in tail and remainder.—The twenty years within which a formedon in descender must have been brought under 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 1, began to run when the title descended to the first heir in tail; and there was no distinction between the heir of a tenant in fee taking by descent and the heir of a tenant in tail. Tolson v. Kaye, 6 Moore, 542; 3 B. & B. 217; S. C. (in error), 6 M. & G. 530; 7 Scott, N. R. 222.

A tenant in tail died, leaving issue in tail, a granddaughter, a feme covert; the granddaughter died covert, leaving issue in tail two sons, infants; the elder attained the age of twenty-one and died; the younger attained his age of twenty-one, and fourteen years after sued out a writ of formedon in the descender:—Held, that he was barred by 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 1. Cotterell v. Dutton, 4 Taunt. 826.

An estate being limited to the use of A. and his wife, and the heirs of their bodies, with remainder to A. in fee, and A. having died, leaving his widow and G., an only son, and L. and H., only daughters, the widow, in 1735, by a deed poll, in consideration of an annuity granted to her by G., and of natural affection, granted, surrendered and yielded up the estate to him in fee; and he afterwards, during her life, suffered a recovery. She died in 1767. G. died without issue in 1779, having devised the estate to trustees, to secure an annuity to B., only son of his sister L. (then dead), and subject thereto to W., eldest son of B., for his life, with remainder to B.'s second son. In 1790, W., on his father's death, entered into possession of the whole estate, claiming under the will of G., and subsequently did various acts in the character of devisee for life. In 1814 he suffered a recovery of one moiety of the estate, and in 1816 conveyed the entirety to mortgagees in fee. In 1818, M., the descendant of H., the other coparcener, suffered a recovery of the other moiety, which, it was declared, should inure (subject to the trusts of a term) to the use of W.'s mortgagees:—Held, first, that the deed poll of 1735 operated as a covenant to stand seized, and created a base fee, determinable by the entry of the issue in tail; secondly, that the base fee did not, on the widow's death, become merged in the reversion in fee in G., as the estate tail subsisted as an intermediate estate; thirdly, that although G., being estopped by the recovery suffered by him, was not remitted to the estate tail, no right of entry accrued to any one until his death, and therefore the period of twenty years, for the operation of the Statute of Limitations against the issue in tail, was to be calculated from his death, and not from the death of his mother, and consequently W.'s entry (in 1790) was not barred by lapse of time; fourthly, that although W. entered under the will, and manifested an intention to take the estate under it for his life only, that was immaterial, and he was remitted as to his moiety to the original estate tail which was barred by the recovery in 1814; and fifthly, that the entry and remitter of W. did not operate to remit his coparcener M. to the other moiety of the estate. Doe d. Daniel v. Woodroffe, 2 H. L. Cas. 811; 13 Jur. 1013.

An heir in tail brought ejectment against a defendant who had been in receipt of the rent thirty years, during the life of the ancestor in tail, and seven years after his death. The ancestor had had seisin:—Held, that such possession by the defendant was no bar to the action, and that the lessor of the plaintiff was not bound to rebut the presumption arising from such possession, by showing that the ancestor had not conveyed by fine and recovery. Doe d. Smith v. Pike, 3 B. & Ad. 738; 1 N. & M. 385.

Operation of bar by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, of estates or interests in possession, against right of parties barred to future estates, interests, &c.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 20, when the right of any person to make an entry or distress, or bring an action to recover any land or rent to which he may have been entitled for an estate or interest in possession, shall have been barred by the determination of the period hereinbefore limited, which shall be applicable in such case, and such person shall, at any time during the said period, have been entitled to any other estate, interest, right or possibility, in reversion, remainder or otherwise, in or to the same land or rent, no entry, distress or action shall be made or brought by such person, or any person claiming through him, to recover such land or rent, in respect of such other estate, interest, right or possibility, unless in the meantime such land or rent shall have been recovered by some person entitled to an estate, interest or right which shall have been limited or taken effect after or in defeasance of such estate or interest in possession.]

A father devised lands to his son A.; and, in case his son either married or took up with a Roman Catholic, or in case he died without a lawful heir, then he directed that all he had devised to A. should go to his, the testator's, son B. Both events happened:—A. took up with a Roman Catholic after the testator's death, and died without a lawful heir. A few months after the happening of the second event, but more than twenty years after the happening of the first event, B. brought an ejectment against the devise of A.:—Held, that 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 20, deprived B. of the benefit of the new right of action which accrued on the happening of the second event; and that as more than twenty years had elapsed from the happening of the first event, when B. was bound to have asserted his title, he could not maintain the ejectment. Clarke v. Clarke, 9 Ir. R., C. L. 895.

Operation of bar by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 28, of tenants in tail, against remainder men and others.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 21, when the right of a tenant in tail of any land or rent to make an entry or distress, or to bring an action to recover the same, shall have been barred by reason of the same not having been made or brought within the period hereinbefore limited, which shall be applicable in such case, no such entry, distress or action shall be made or brought by any person claiming any estate, interest or right which such tenant in tail might have lawfully barred.

By s. 22, when a tenant in tail of any land or rent, entitled to recover the same, shall have died before the expiration of the period hereinbefore mentioned, which shall be applicable in such case, for making an entry or distress or bringing an action to recover such land or rent, no person claiming any estate or interest or right which such tenant in tail might lawfully have barred, shall make an entry or distress or bring an action to recover such land or rent but within the period during which, if such tenant in tail had so long continued alive, he might have made such entry or distress or brought such action.

By s. 23, when a tenant in tail of any land or rent shall have made an assurance thereof, which shall operate to bar an estate or estates to take effect after or in defeasance of his estate tail, and any person shall, by virtue of such assurance, at the time of the execution thereof, or at any time afterwards, be in possession or receipt of the profits of such land, or in the receipt of such rent, and the same person, or any other person whatsoever (other than some person entitled to such possession or receipt in respect of an estate which shall have taken effect after or in defeasance of the estate tail), shall continue or be in such possession or receipt for the period of twenty years next after the commencement of the time at which such assurance, if it had then been assented by such tenant in tail, or the person who would have been entitled to his estate tail if such assurance had not been executed, would, without the consent of any other person, have operated to bar such estate or estates as aforesaid, then at the expiration of such period of twenty years, such assurance shall be and be deemed to have been effectual as against any person claiming any estate, interest, or right to take effect after and in defeasance of such estate tail.

These enactments are retrospective. Goodell v. Skerratt, 3 Drew. 216; 1 Jur., N. S. 57; 24 L. J., Chanc. 323.

If the statute has begun to run against a tenant in tail, it will continue to run against the remainderman, though he may be under disabilities. Id.

In ejectment, the plaintiff proved that A., being seized in fee of the land in question, devised it to the father of the plaintiff in tail general, and died in 1799; the plaintiff's father received the rents and profits from 1799 to 1807, at which time he was succeeded by a person of whom the defendant obtained possession:—Held, that under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 21, since the tenant in tail was barred, the issue in tail was also barred. Austin v. Lloydlyn, 9 Exch. 276; 23 L. J., Exch. 11; 2 C. L. R. 409.

An estate tail having been discontinued by a feoffment made by the tenant in tail more than twenty years before his death:—Held, that the issue in tail might bring his writ of formedon at any time within twenty years next after such death, the period of limitation prescribed by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, not running against him during the life of the tenant in tail. Cannon v. Rimington, 13 C. B. 1; 21 L. J., C. P. 137; affirmed in error, 13 C. B. 18; 23 L. J., C. P. 153—Exch. Chanc.

A tenant in tail in 1847 conveyed his lands by deed not enrolled, and possession was enjoyed for more than 20 years under that deed:—Held, that his issue in tail was not barred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 22, and that he was entitled to have the property delivered up to him with an account of rents from the filing of the bill. Morgan v. Morgan, 39 L. J., Chanc. 493; 10 L. R., Eq. 99; 18 W. R. 744; 23 L. T., N. S. 595—R.

Fraudulent sales had been made by a tenant for life; his son died in his life-time; the tenancy for life continued to exist for above thirty-five years after these fraudulent sales. On the tenant in remainder becoming entitled, he filed a bill to redeem:—Held, that he was not barred by the lapse of time. Dandon v. Becker, 8 C. & F. 479.

A tenant for life was executrix of a preceding tenant for life, both being impeachable for waste, and both having committed waste by cutting timber:—Held, that the Statute of Limitations began to run against the remaindermen in fee from the time when the timber was cut, and not from the time of the death of the tenant for life. Higginbotham v. Hawkins, 7 L. R., Ch. 670; 27 L. T., N. S. 328; 20 W. R. 953; 41 L. J., Chanc. 828.

Held, that though an injunction and an account were granted against the existing tenant for life, yet as no injunction could be granted against the preceding tenant for life, no account could be granted against her executrix for waste committed by the preceding tenant for life. Ib.

A remainder-man paid with his own money, after he came into possession, interest which had accrued, during the preceding estate for life, upon charges affecting the inheritance:—Held, first, that his executor was entitled, in 1870 (as against the personal representative of the tenant for life), to be recouped out of a fund in court, the produce of rents of the life estate brought in, in 1815, by a receiver appointed in an incumbrancer's suit instituted against the tenant for life. Loulin v. Sheppard, 6 Ir. R., Eq. 38—V. C.

Held, secondly, that the fund having remained in court, during the whole period from 1815 to 1870, in usum jus habentium, the claim of H.'s executor was not barred. Ib.

By a private act of 2 & 3 Philip & Mary, lands were limited to N. and others successively in tail male, with limitations over, and an ultimate limitation to the crown; and it was provided that "no feoffment, discontinuance, fine, or recovery, with voucher or otherwise, or any other act or acts thereafter to be made, done, suffered, or acknowledged of the premises, or any part or parcel thereof," by N., or the other persons named, "or by any of them, or by any of their heirs male of their several bodies, should bind or conclude, or put from entry," the crown, or any of the heirs in tail. A lease for three lives was made in 1781, by the heir in tail male of N., then in possession, of part of the lands so settled; the lease expired in 1832, and since that time the land had been held by the defendant, and those through whom he claimed, without payment of rent or acknowledgment of the title of the tenants in tail for the time being. In an action by the present heir in tail male of N. to recover the land:—Held (by Chaunnell and Cleasby, BB., Bramwell, B., dissentiente), that he was not barred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Abergavenny v. Brace, 7 L. R., Exch. 145; 41 L. J., Exch. 120; 26 L. T., N. S. 514; 20 W. R. 462.

Semble, that the section of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, which bars issue in tail, is s. 2, and not s. 21. Ib.

When a tenant for life with remainder (in the events which happen) to himself in tail executes an assurance which, for want of the protector's consent, creates only a base fee, time does not run under the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 23, to make such assurance effectual against the reversions, so long as any estates coming between his estate for life and estate in tail are in existence. Mill v. Capel, 41 L. J., Chanc. 674; 20 L. R., Eq. 692—V. C. H.

Lands limited in equity to T., F., and F.'s wife E. successively for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of F. and E. successively in tail male, with remainder to F. in tail general, with remainders over, were in 1835, without the consent of T., the protector of the settlement, by deed inrolled, reciting, contrary to the fact, the seizure in fee simple of F., conveyed by F., E. joining to transfer or bar her dower, to a purchaser in fee simple; and the purchaser then entered into possession. T. died in 1848, F. died without issue in 1850, and E. died in 1873:—Held, that until 1873 the possession of the purchaser was a possession by virtue of the subsisting life estates, and not of the estate tail in remainder of F., and, consequently, was not a possession the continuance of which for the period of twenty years would, under s. 23, bar the remainders over. Ib.

Extinguishment of right and title under the statute, generally.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 34, at the determination of the period limited by the act to any person for making an entry or distress, or bringing any writ of quare impedit, or other action or suit, the right and title of such person to the land, rent, or advowson, for the recovery whereof such entry, distress, action or suit respectively might have been made or brought within such period, shall be extinguished.]

Semble, that the effect of this section is to give title by possession for twenty years, but that such twenty years' possession must be either by the same person, or several persons claiming one from another. Doe d. Carter v. Barnard, 13 Q. B. 945; 18 L. J., Q. B. 306.

Under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 2, 3, and 34, the right to rent is extinguished by the lapse of twenty years from the time of the last payment of such rent, although twenty years have not expired since the rent became due. De Beauvoir v. Owen, 5 Exch. 166; 19 L. J., Exch. 177—Exch. Chanc.

The effect of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 2, 3, 4, as to land, is, that after twenty years' possession adverse to a title, it is extinguished, so that it cannot be revived or revested by a re-entry after that period, upon the doctrine of remitter, because such an application of that doctrine requires that the former title should be in existence at the time of the re-entry; and the express provision in the statute, that no person shall be deemed in possession of lands merely by reason of an entry thereon, applies to cases of such re-entry. Brassington v. Llewellyn, 27 L. J., Exch. 297; S. C. at Nisi Prius, 1 F. & F. 27.

N. died in 1830, in New South Wales, seized of real estate in that colony. E., his heir-at-law, lived in Ireland, and died there in 1837. J., the heir of E., and also of N., likewise lived in Ireland, and in 1856 went to New South Wales, and brought an ejectment there to recover the land of which N. died seized. The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, had been adopted in the colony:—Held, that J.'s right of action was barred by ss. 2 and 10. Devine v. Holloway, 14 Moore P. C. C. 290; 9 W. R. 642; 4 L. T., N. S. 190.

A party, being indebted by bond, devised real estate to his son for life, with remainder, subject to a term for the payment of legacies to his grandson in tail, and died. Upwards of twenty years after the date of the latest of the bonds, the tenant for life and his assignee for value, filed a bill against the tenant in tail and the legatees, alleging that the tenant for life had paid off the bonds, and seeking to stand in the shoes of the obligees as against the inheritance. The tenant in tail pleaded the statute, the other legatees did not:—Held, that the payment of the bonds by the tenant for life did not constitute him an incumbrancer on the estate, and that the bonds themselves, being more than twenty years old, the presumption was that they had been satisfied. Morley v. Morley, 5 De G., M. & G. 610; 1 Jur., N. S. 1097; 23 L. J., Chanc. 1.

A testator devised a copyhold in 1700 to W. for life, with remainder to her children as tenants in common, without words of limitation. W., who had three children, let the property to her two sons, L. and B., and after the death of L. to his son R. and B., who occupied the estate together till the death of W. in 1841. On W.'s death the property—subject, as to one-third, to R.'s life estate—belonged in moieties to R. and X., as the co-heirs of the testator. R. and B. continued to occupy the whole property as owners, and farmed it at their equal expense, till the death of B. in 1862, after which it was similarly farmed by B.'s son and R. till 1869, when B.'s son died. The devisee of B.'s son afterwards filed a bill for a partition:—Held, that R. and B., as regarded that third share, of which their possession became wrongful on the death of W., must be considered as joint tenants; and that as B. had died first, his interest in the estate had determined, and the devisee of B.'s son had no title. Ward v. Ward, 6 L. R., Ch. 789.

A tenant at will without interruption for more than twenty years, during which period he had let and transferred portions of the land, with the knowledge and without the interference of the owner in fee, acquires an indefeasible title against the owner, whose right of entry after that period is barred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 2, 7, 34. Day v. Day, 3 L. R., P. C. 751; 40 L. J., P. C. 33; 24 L. T., N. S. 850; 19 W. R. 1017.

In May, 1842, a father let his son into possession of land. The son continued to occupy the land as tenant-at-will until 1864. In 1852 the son, with the knowledge of his father, let portions of the land on weekly and yearly tenancies, and received rent for the same:—Held, that the right of entry accrued at the end of the first year from the creation of the tenancy, and that the right of entry in the father was barred by the uninterrupted occupation by the son for twenty years. Id.

One whose title to real estate is barred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, the Statute of Limitations, if he subsequently makes an entry, is not thereby remitted to his former title. Dryan v. Cowdal, 21 W. R. 698—C.

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, cannot give a person who has entered into a life estate under an invalid will, a right against other devisees of the will. Barcl v. Boord, 9 L. R., Q. B. 48; 43 L. J., Q. B. 4; 29 L. T., N. S. 459; 23 W. R. 206.

A tenant by the curtesy of premises, devised them to trustees for his daughter for life, with remainder to his grandson. Upon the death of the testator, the daughter entered into possession of the premises purported to be devised, and paid for some years the annuities charged by the will upon the premises, and was suffered by the heir at law to remain in possession undisturbedly for more than twenty years. The grandson conveyed his remainder to the plaintiff. The daughter, after she had been in possession more than twenty years, conveyed the premises in fee to the defendant, who, upon her death, took possession. The plaintiff, the assignee of the grandson, the remainder-man, having brought ejectment:—Held, that the daughter having entered under the will, the defendant claiming through her was estopped as against all those in remainder from disputing the validity of the will, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Id.

7. Exceptions by Statute; Equitable Claims, Trusts, Fraudulent Concealment, Acquiescence, &c.

Equitable claims in general.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 24, no person claiming any land or rent in equity shall bring any suit to recover the same, but within the period during which by virtue of the provisions contained in that statute, he might have made an entry or distress or brought an action to recover the same respectively if he had been entitled at law to such estate, interest, or right in or to the same as he shall claim therein in equity.]

Express trusts.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 23, when any land or rent shall be vested in a trustee upon any express trust, the right of the cestui que trust, or any person claiming through him, to bring a suit against the trustee, or any person claiming through him, to recover such land or rent, shall be deemed to have first accrued according to the meaning of the act, at and not before the time at which such land or rent shall have been conveyed to a purchaser for a valuable consideration, and shall then be deemed to have accrued only as against such purchaser and any person claiming through him.]

By the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 69), s. 23, sub-s. 2, no claim of a cestui que trust against his trustee for any property held on an express trust, or in respect of any breach of trust, shall be held to be barred by the Statute of Limitations.]

This section only bars equitable rights, so far as they would have been barred if they had been legal rights. Archbold v. Scully, 9 H. L. Cas. 300; 7 Jur., N. S. 1169; 4 L. T., N. S. 160.

In cases of express trust, the statute is no bar to a demand of a cestui que trust, though the other cestui que trust have for more than twenty years received from the trustee the whole of the rents to the exclusion of the claimant. Knight v. Bowyer, 3 De G. & J. 421; 27 L. J., Chanc. 520.

The doctrine that where there is an express trust lapse of time is not material, does not apply where there has been gross laches on the part of the cestui que trust. Bright v. Legerton, 2 De G., F. & J. 606; 8 W. R. 678.

A cestui que trust of real estate under a will was discharged in 1825, under the Insolvent Debtors' Act, but omitted the estate from his schedule. In 1831 he became bankrupt, and his assignee in bankruptcy took a conveyance of the estate from the trustee, in trust for the creditors under the bankruptcy:—Held, that it thereby became vested in him upon an express trust, viz., that declared by the will, the benefit of which belonged to the creditors under the insolvency, and that on a bill being filed by the assignee in insolvency in 1853, the statute afforded no defense to the recovery of the estate or the mesne profits. Sturgis v. Morse, 3 De G. & J. 1.

Upon the grant of an annuity secured on real estate, a term was vested in trustees, to raise and pay the arrears, and hold the surplus of the proceeds for the grantor:—Held, that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust being created, as between the trustee and the grantor and the grantee, the case came within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 25, and that the annuitant's right to arrears was not limited to six years, under s. 42, as against the grantor and his subsequent incumbrancers. Lewis v. Duncombe, 29 Beav. 175; 30 L. J., Chanc. 732, 867; 7 Jur., N. S. 695. But see Birmingham, In re, 4 Ir. R., Eq. 187, 195, 196.

Charities are trusts, and are, as such, within the operation of the above section. St. Mary Magdalen, Oxford, v. Att. Gen., 6 H. L. Cas. 189; 3 Jur., N. S. 675; 26 L. J., Chanc. 620.

Where the attorney-general, having no independent rights of his own, stands only in the same situation as those who are entitled to the benefit of a charity, if they are barred by lapse of time, he is equally barred. Id.

A testator charged all his real estate with payment of his debts, if his personal estate was insufficient to pay them, and directed his executors to raise sufficient for their payment by mortgage or otherwise:—Held, that this did not create an express trust within the exception contained in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 25. Dickenson v. Teasdale, 1 De G., J. & S. 52; 9 Jur., N. S. 237; 32 L. J., Chanc. 37; 7 L. T., N. S. 655.

B., in consideration of a sum of money, by indenture granted an annuity for lives, and by the same instrument demised the lands out of which the annuity issued to a trustee for a term of years upon trusts, for the better securing the annuity:—Held, that the creation of the term operated to create the relation of trustee and cestui que trust between the trustee of the term and the owner of the lands, and to avoid the bar of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, so long as the term had not determined by effluxion of time. Birmingham, In re, 4 Ir. R., Eq. 187.

By a post-nuptial settlement dated in 1814, made in pursuance of an ante-nuptial agreement, after reciting that the husband had agreed to settle 1,000*l.* in manner thereafter mentioned, and to enter into the covenants thereafter contained, and reciting that this sum had been paid to G., it was witnessed that G. covenanted with the settlor that he would hold that sum upon trust, with the approbation of the settlor, to invest it, in the joint names of the settlor and himself, either in the public funds or in government or real securities, and would hold the trust funds and securities upon trust for the settlor and his wife during their respective lives, and after their death upon trust for the benefit of their children; and the settlor covenanted that he would at the expiration of twelve months pay to G. another sum of 1,000*l.* to be held by him upon the same trusts as the first sum. G. died in 1821, and the settlor, having survived his wife, died in 1868. Neither of the sums was really paid to G., or invested in the joint names of G. and the settlor:—Held, first, that the settlor had constituted himself a trustee of the first sum, and that his estate was liable for his breach of trust in not seeing that it was invested, notwithstanding the Statute of Limitations. Stone v. Stone, 5 L. R., Ch. 74; 39 L. J., Chanc. 196; 22 L. T., N. S. 182.

Held, secondly, that as to the second sum, the settlor was in the position of a simple covenantor, and that the remedy of the claimants for his breach of the covenant was barred by the statute. Id.

A. entered into articles of agreement for leases of ninety nine years from Lady-day, 1768, of building land abutting on the Thames, with trustees who were tenants in fee. Soon afterwards, by a local act, A. and others were empowered to embank the Thames, and win part of the bed of it. It enacted that the ground and soil of the river to be inclosed and embanked in the front of each house should vest in the owner of the house according to his respective estate, trust, or interest. A portion of the bed of the river, fronting the land on which he had built houses under his leases, was reclaimed by him pursuant to the statute, and he occupied it more than twenty years before Lady-day, 1867. No lease of the reclaimed land was ever executed either by the trustees or by A. The leases, if they had been granted, would have expired at Lady-day, 1867. No rent was ever paid by A. in respect of the reclaimed land:—Held, that by the local statute, the fee simple of the reclaimed land was vested in the trustees; and that their representatives were not barred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, and were entitled to the reclaimed land at Lady-day, 1867. Drummond v. Sant, 6 L. R., Q. B. 763; 41 L. J., Q. B. 21; 25 L. T., N. S. 410; 20 W. R. 18; distinguishing Doe d. Stanway v. Stock, Car. & M. 549; 4 M. & G. 80; 6 Jur. 268.

The proviso in section 7 of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, applies to actual direct trusts, and is not limited to express trusts. Id.

Under a devise of land upon trust for sale, the proceeds to be considered as part of the personal estate, the trustees allowed part of the land to remain unsold for fifty years:—Held, that the trust was an express trust within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, the Statute of Limitations, s. 25, and a decree for the execution of the trust of the unsold land was made at the suit of a residuary legatee. Mullow v. Bigg, 18 L. R., Eq. 246; 23 W. R. 469.

A. devised his real estate to B., charged with the payment of 10,000*l.* each to K. and his nephew C. K. had no nephew C., but had a grand-nephew called C., who was unknown to A. A. died in 1831, and in 1833, C. claimed the legacy from B., who refused to pay it on the ground that C. was not the legatee intended. C. did not again claim. B.'s heir (on whom the estate descended) by his will created an express trust "for the payment of all charges or claims then existing" on the estate, and died before 1851. In 1860 the personal representative of C. (although previously for years in possession of the previous correspondence about the legacy) claimed the 10,000*l.* from the person then in possession of the lands charged, subject to the last-mentioned trusts:—Held, that the claim was barred by lapse of time and C.'s knowledge or means of knowledge of his rights, notwithstanding the express trust. Carry v. Cuthbert, 23 W. R. 249—Ir. R.

An executor who has, under the terms of the will, active duties as a trustee to perform in respect to the raising and investment of a legacy bequeathed upon trust for a minor, by assenting to it becomes an express trustee, so as to save the bar of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40. O'Reilly v. Walsh, 6 Ir. R., Eq. 555—R.

A testator having devised lands to R. and W., as trustees of his will, with power to grant leases of such duration as they should think advisable, directed that W. should receive the rent to be reserved, upon certain trusts. On the death of W., his heir-at-law, H., entered into possession of the whole of the lands:—Held, in a suit for an account by one of the cestui que trust of the rent, that H. was an express trustee of the rent within s. 25 of the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, and that the plaintiff was entitled to rely upon the section, although there was an absence of evidence that W. was the surviving trustee of the will. Smith v. Smith, 10 Ir. R., Eq. 273—V. C.

To prove a conveyance for value within s. 25, the defendant, who was the eldest son of H., offered in evidence, as proof of a lost deed, a memorial in the registry of deeds office of a deed, to which H., A., M. and G. were parties, whereby H. conveyed the lands to M. and G. upon certain trusts, which were not, however, disclosed by the memorial. It was also proved that in the same year in which the deed bore date a marriage was solemnized between H. and A.; and that H., until his death in 1863, and thenceforward the defendant, had been continuously in possession and in receipt of the rent for their own use and benefit:—Held, that it might be inferred that the lost deed was a settlement executed on the marriage of H. and A., under which H. took a life estate, and the defendant as estate in remainder, and that under it the defendant was a purchaser for value. Id.

Held, also, that the statute began to run in the defendant's favor from the time of the execution of the deed. Id.

The Statute of Limitations does not apply to an express trust for a legacy, yet where the beneficiary or his representative has allowed a very long time to elapse without attempting to enforce the trust, equity will, when enforcing it, apply as to interest on the legacy, the principle of the statute. Thompson v. Eastwood, 3 L. R., App. Cas. 215—H. L.

A will, in 1807, began thus: "I appoint my after-named executor, Charles E., my youngest brother, to be trustee for the following legacies." Several were then named, and the will went on, "considering that money will be more essential to my dear brother, Samuel E., than a distant possession of land, I bequeath to Samuel E. during his natural life the interest of 3,000*l.* and after his death, to his eldest son, James E., by his last wife, Margaret J., or M., or E., till he attains twenty-one, and then to obtain the principal. In order that my youngest brother, Charles E., shall be liable to all my lawful debts of every description, and pay them as soon as he can, and also pay my legacies when regularly due, and all expenses; and to enable him to do all this, I bequeath, unconditionally, to him all my estates and landed property, with all emoluments belonging to them, in the county of Armagh; I also bequeath to him, the said Charles, all my estates, &c., with all their emoluments, in the county of Louth, or elsewhere:"—Held, that the will constituted an express trust, so as to prevent the statute applying to it. Id.

But, there having been no proceedings taken until 1873 with the direct purpose of enforcing payment of the legacy (though other proceedings connected with the will had been going on), and the estates having passed into the hands of the representatives of the original trustee; the interest on the legacy was directed to be calculated only from six years before filing the bill. Id.

The word "unconditionally," as used in the will, did not mean without any condition annexed to the payment of the legacies, but that the trustee was made absolute owner of the fee simple for the purpose of doing what the testator had ordered. Id.

Other cases of trusts. The proviso as to cestui que trust contained in s. 7 of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, applies only to cases of declared and express trusts, and not to a person holding under an agreement to purchase. Doe d. Stanway v. Rock, Car. & M. 549; 4 M. & G. 30; 6 Jur. 266. But see Drummond v. Sant, 6 L. R., Q. B. 768; 41 L. J., Q. B. 21, 25; 25 L. T., N. S. 419, 423; 20 W. R. 18.

The object of the statute was to settle the rights of persons adversely litigating with each other, not to deal with cases of trustee and cestui que trust, where there is but one single interest, viz., that of the person beneficially entitled. Gurrard, dem., Tuck, ten., 8 C. B. 231; 18 L. J., C. P. 338.

A cestui que trust who enters into possession of land becomes at law tenant at will to the trustee. Id.

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 3, does not apply to a cestui que trust holding possession of land under the trustee. Id.

In 1767, the residue of a satisfied term of 500 years (created in 1766) was assigned to a trustee for H. to attend the inheritance; in 1844, the administrator of the trustee brought ejectment on behalf of persons who claimed the beneficial interest through H., the defendants also claiming it under title derived through H. The owner of the legal interest in the term had never been in possession. No demand of possession had been made before action brought:—Held, that the action was not maintainable, for, if a tenancy at will existed as between the trustee and cestui que trust, it had not been determined by demand of possession; and if no tenancy existed such as to render necessary a demand of possession, then the action might have been brought twenty years before, and was consequently barred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 2 and 3. Doe d. Jacobs v. Phillips, 10 Q. B. 130; 11 Jur. 692; 16 L. J., Q. B. 269.

The doctrine that a cestui que trust who is in possession of the estate by the consent or acquiescence of the trustee, must be regarded as his tenant-at-will, only applies where the cestui que trust is the actual occupant; where he is merely allowed to receive the rents, or otherwise deal with the estate in the hands of occupying tenants, he is merely the agent of the trustees. Melling v. Leak, 16 C. B. 652; 3 C. L. R. 1017; 1 Jur., N. S. 759; 24 L. J., C. P. 187.

The management of an estate was intrusted by the trustees in fee, to the cestui que trust for life, as beneficial owner, and the latter, having never been in actual occupation, let C. into possession, who occupied during the life of the cestui que trust for more than twenty years, without paying rent or acknowledging title:—Held, that a tenancy-at-will had not been created between the cestui que trust and C., and that C. had therefore acquired a good title by adverse possession under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Id.

The possession of trustees cannot be adverse to their true cestuis que trust, and the fact that for upwards of twenty years they have treated the land as belonging to one cestui que trust, whereas in fact it belonged to another cestui que trust, does not operate as a bar under the Statute of Limitations. Lister

v. Pickford, 11 Jur., N. S. 649; 34 L. J., Chanc. 582; 13 W. R. 827; 12 L. T., N. S. 587—R.

A mortgagee of real estate made by way of a conveyance to a trustee, upon trust to sell at discretion and out of the proceeds of sale to pay the mortgage debt, and to pay the surplus moneys to the mortgagor, does not constitute an express trust in favor of the mortgagor within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 25. Locking v. Parker, 42 L. J., Chanc. 257; 8 L. R., Ch. 80; 27 L. T., N. S. 635; 21 W. R. 113; reversing S. C., 41 L. J., Chanc. 544; 27 L. T., N. S. 29; 20 W. R. 737—R.

Under such a mortgage the only right of the mortgagor is to redeem, and he cannot file a bill for a sale. The only right of the mortgagee is to have the property sold, and he is not entitled to foreclose. Id.

The mortgagor's right to redeem under such a mortgage is barred under section 28 by twenty years' possession by the mortgagee without any acknowledgment of the mortgagor's title. Id.

In 1824 an estate was conveyed to A. in fee by way of mortgage, the conveyance being upon trust to sell. A., by his will, executed in February, 1826, devised his real estates to trustees for sale, and to hold the proceeds as part of his personal estate; he then devised to the same trustees all estates vested in him by way of mortgage or in trust for any persons on payment to them of the mortgage moneys to convey the mortgaged hereditaments to the persons entitled to the equity of redemption in the same, and directed that the mortgage moneys when so paid to them should be held upon the same trusts as declared concerning his personal estate. Subsequently to the date of his will A. purchased the equity of redemption in the estate, and entered into possession, but no conveyance was ever made to him. A. died in October, 1826, leaving Y. and C. his co-heirs-at-law. In 1827 the trustees of A.'s will entered into possession of the estate, and administered and dealt with the net rents and profits in accordance with the trusts of the will for more than forty years. In 1869 the representatives of Y. set up a claim to three-fourths of the estate, on the grounds, first, that A. having died intestate as to the estate, one moiety descended on Y. as one of his heirs-at-law; secondly, that C. having by deed released all her right and interest in the estate to the trustees of the will, such release operated in favor of (in the events which happened) A.'s two residuary legatees, of whom Y. was one, and consequently that a moiety of the other moiety of the estate also belonged to them:—Held, that although A. died intestate as to the estate, and a moiety thereof descended on Y. as one of his co-heirs, yet that the claim of Y.'s representatives was barred by the Statute of Limitations, there being no trust, express or implied, on the face of the will, in favor of the testator's heirs. Yardley v. Holland, 33 L. T., N. S. 301; 20 L. R., Eq. 428—V. C. B.

A testator, by a will made in 1779, devised freeholds unto his son A., and the heirs of his body, "upon special trust and confidence" that in case he should leave no issue of his body, he would not do or suffer any act in law or otherwise to prevent the several following limitations of the estates from taking effect. And the testator devised (in case his son should die leaving no issue of his body) the freeholds to trustees in trust (subject to certain prior limitations) for B. (the plaintiff's grandfather) for life, with remainder to B.'s eldest son (the plaintiff's father) in tail. A. died, leaving no issue. The statement of claim alleged that, upon the death of B. in 1852, the plaintiff's father became entitled, as tenant in tail, to the possession of the property. The defendant demurred, on the ground that the alleged trust contained in the will did not operate to prevent A. from suffering a recovery; that the recovery suffered by A. was valid to defeat the estates limited over in case A. should die leaving no issue of his body; and "on other grounds sufficient in law to sustain this demurrer."—Held, first, that the right to suffer a recovery was a necessary incident to a legal estate tail, not in the least interfered with by the expression of "trust and confidence" that the tenant in tail would not do so, and that the recovery, when suffered, defeated the limitations over contained in the will. Dawkins v. Parnryn, 36 L. T., N. S. 680—V. C. M.; affirmed on appeal, 37 L. T., N. S. 80; 26 W. R. 6; 6 L. R. Ch. Div. 318—C. A.

Held, secondly (assuming the limitations over to have taken effect), that, as on the plaintiff's own statement his title accrued more than twenty years before, the Statute of Limitations was an absolute bar to his claim, and, as the demurrer stated "some ground of law," the defense of the statute was properly raised upon this demurrer. Id.

Cases of fraudulent concealment of rights.]

—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 20, in every case of a concealed fraud, the right of the person to bring a suit in equity for the recovery of any land or rent of which he, or any person through whom he claims, may have been deprived by such fraud, shall be deemed to have first accrued at and not before the time at which such fraud shall or with reasonable diligence might have been first known or discovered: Provided that nothing in this clause contained shall enable any owner of lands or rents to have a suit in equity for the recovery of such lands or rents, or for setting aside any conveyance of such lands or rents, on account of fraud, against any bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration who has not assisted in the commission of such fraud, and who at the time that he made the purchase did not know and had no reason to believe that any such fraud had been committed.]

To prove that a fraud was concealed, within the meaning of this section, it is not sufficient to show that the party was in such an imbecile or an uncultivated condition of mind that it was scarcely possible, though the alleged fraud was by an open act, that he should have discovered the fraud, if the condition of his mind was not that of actual lunacy; for the court cannot possibly estimate for this purpose the chance which the state of mind and education of a man may afford of his making such discovery, and is, therefore, compelled to assume that every one not actually a lunatic is competent to judge of and to obtain advice concerning his rights, and to assert them if necessary. Manby v. Newill, 8 Kay & J. 242.

In 1825, a debtor, on his insolvency omitted from his schedule (which he verified on oath) an estate to which he was entitled. In 1852, his assignee filed a bill in equity against the assignees under a subsequent bankruptcy and others, for the recovery of the property:—Held, that the claim was not barred by the statute, there having been a concealed fraud. Sturges v. Mordaunt, 24 Beav. 541; affirmed on appeal, 3 De G. & J. 1.

To a plea of the statute, in an action of trespass, or trespass on the case, the plaintiff will not be allowed to reply, as an equitable answer, that the trespasses were underground, and had been fraudulently concealed from the plaintiff till within six years before action. Hunter v. Gibbons, 1 H. & N. 450; 2 Jur., N. S. 1240; 26 L. J., Exch. 1.

A person whose legal title to lands is barred by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, may, if he has been deprived by a concealed fraud, recover by a suit in equity under s. 26, but he is bound to show with the utmost strictness that he is entitled to the privilege given by that section. Chatham v. House, 89 L. J., Chanc. 876; 9 L. R., Eq. 571; 22 L. T., N. S. 57—V. C. M.

Therefore, where a plaintiff sued to recover property to which his predecessor, as he alleged, became entitled in 1769, and insisted that a register book containing a certificate of marriage, forming the principal link in his title, had been fraudulently mutilated in order to prevent him or his ancestors from obtaining evidence of the marriage:—Held, that, by reasonable diligence, evidence of the marriage might have been ascertained within twenty years after the alleged fraud had been committed; and that he had not brought his case within that section. Id.

In a case of concealed fraud a purchaser for value is not entitled to the protection of the proviso at the end of s. 26 of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, if his agent who negotiated the purchase had in the course of the transaction actual knowledge of the fraud, or had reason to believe that a fraud had been committed. Vane v. Vane, 21 W. R. 252; 28 L. T., N. S. 320; 43 L. J., Chanc. 290; 6 L. R., Ch. 398. See S. C., 27 L. T., N. S. 534; 21 W. R. 60—V. C. M.

By the words a "bona fide purchaser" in s. 26, is meant a person who has given full value for the property. Id.

The section applies where the person who has been kept out of possession by a concealed fraud has had all along a legal right to enter, as well as where he has had only an equitable right. Id.

A plaintiff alleged in his bill that his father married A. in 1797. Three weeks before the marriage his mother A. had borne a son B., but the fact of his having been born before wedlock was carefully concealed, and he was brought up as a legitimate son and heir apparent to his father's title and estates, to which he eventually succeeded. B. married C. in 1823, before his father's death, and he died in 1842, leaving D. his eldest son and heir. In 1866 the plaintiff, who was the eldest son born after the marriage of his father to A., discovered the fact of B.'s illegitimacy, and also that that fact was known to B., and also to the father of C. upon the negotiation for the marriage of B. and C. He prayed a declaration of his title, and an account of rents and profits against D.:—Held, that the bill sufficiently alleged a concealed fraud, which the plaintiff could not with reasonable diligence have known sooner; that C. must be taken to have had notice of B.'s illegitimacy through the communication thereof to her father upon the negotiation for a settlement on her marriage with B.; and that her son D., claiming through the same marriage settlement, was equally affected with the same notice. Id.

The plaintiffs, the owners of coal mines, discovered in 1872 that the defendant more than six years previously had, when working an adjoining colliery, worked a large quantity of the plaintiffs' coal by breaking their boundary. There had been no subsidence of the surface or anything to put the plaintiffs on inquiry, and the defendant, in plans which he kept of the workings in his own mine, had not marked the illegal workings:—Held, that the omission in the plans was not sufficient to constitute a case of concealed fraud so as to entitle the plaintiffs to an account and damages. Daves v. Bagnall, 23 W. R. 690—V. C. II.

Effect of acquiescence, &c.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 27, nothing in the act contained shall be deemed to interfere with any rule or jurisdiction of courts of equity in refusing relief on the ground of acquiescence or otherwise to any person whose right to bring a suit may be not barred by virtue of the act.]

III. LIMITATIONS OF PERSONAL ACTIONS AND PROCEEDINGS.

1. Periods of Limitation; and when Time begins to run.

(a) In Respect of Particular Causes of Action and Subject-Matters.

General provisions of statutes.—[By 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3, all actions of trespass quare clausum fregit, all actions of trespass, detinue, actions sur trover and replevin for taking away of goods and cattle, all actions of account and upon the case (other than such accounts as concern the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant, their factors, or servants) (but by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 9, this exception is repealed), all actions of debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty, all actions of debt for arrears of rent, and all actions of assault, menace, battery, wounding, and imprisonment, or any of them, shall be commenced and sued within the time and limitation hereafter expressed, and not after; that is to say, the said actions upon the case (other than for slander), and the said actions of account, and the said actions for trespass, debt, detinue, and replevin, for goods or cattle, and the said action of trespass quare clausum fregit, within six years next after the cause of such actions or suits, and not after; and the said actions of trespass, of assault, battery, wounding, imprisonment, or any of them, within four years next after the cause of such actions or suit, and not after; and the said action upon the case for words, within two years next after the words spoken, and not after.

By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3, all actions of debt upon any award where the submission is not by specialty, or for any fine due in respect of any copyhold estates, or for any escape (the action of debt for an escape is abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98, s. 31), or for money levied on any ft. fa., shall be commenced and sued within six years after the cause of such actions or suits.]

Contracts, in general.—In an action on promises, the breach of a contract is the cause of action, and the statute runs from the time of the breach, and not from the time of the refusal to perform the contract. East India Company v. Paul, 7 Moore P. C. C. 85; 14 Jur. 253.

The Statute of Limitations in a case of contingency runs from the time when the contingency happens. Fenton v. Imblers, 1 W. Bl. 354; 3 Burr. 1278.

Bonds; upon presumption of payment, independent of statute.—Before the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3 (see infra), twenty years without any demand was of itself a presumption that a bond had been paid. Oswald v. Leigh, 1 T. R. 270. S. P., Colnell v. Budd, 1 Camp. 27; Hillary v. Waller, 12 Ves. 288.

Payment of money secured by a bond was not to be presumed, although more than twenty years had elapsed since an acknowledgment that any sum was due upon it, if the obligee, ever since that acknowledgment, had resided abroad. Newman v. Newman, 1 Stark. 101—Ellenborough.

Indorsements on a bond, acknowledging the receipt of interest, or payment of part of the principal, were not evidence against the obligor, to prove that the bond was on foot, without showing that they were on the bond recently after their dates, and at a time when their purport was contrary to the interest of the obligee. Rose v. Bryant, 2 Camp. 321—Ellenborough.

The producing a receipt for interest within twenty years, indorsed on a bond by the obligee, was sufficient to take off the presumption of payment, though no proof was given when such receipt was written and signed. Barrington v. Searle, 3 Bro. P. C. 598.

Where, in an action on a bond more than twenty years old, to rebut the presumption of payment, the obligee gave evidence of payment of interest by the obligor to A., equal in amount to the interest that would become due on the bond:—Held, that an indorsement on the bond in the handwriting of the obligee, and which appeared to have been made at or about the time when the bond was executed, but which was not proved to have been ever seen by the obligor, stating that the bond was given to the obligor in trust for A., was admissible to connect the payment of interest with the bond. Glendon v. Atkin, 1 C. & M. 410; 3 Tyr. 289.

Bonds and other specialties; under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3.—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3, all actions of debt for rent upon an indenture of demise, all actions of covenant or debt upon any bond or other specialty, and all actions of debt or scire facias upon any recognizance, and also all actions of debt upon any award, where the submission is not by specialty, shall be commenced and sued within the time and limitation hereinafter expressed, and not after; that is to say, the said actions of debt for rent upon an indenture of demise or covenant, or debt upon any bond or other specialty, actions of debt or scire facias upon recognizance, within ten years after the end of this present session of Parliament, or within twenty years after the cause of such actions or suits, but not after; and the said other actions within three years after the end of the then session, or within six years after the cause of such actions or suits; provided that nothing therein contained is to extend to any action given by any statute where the time for bringing such actions by any statute is specially limited.]

This provision did not apply to actions commenced before 24th July, 1833, when it was passed. Puldon v. Bartlett, 5 N. & M. 883; 3 A. & E. 884; 1 H. & W. 477.

The limitation in actions for arrears of rent under an indenture is governed by the above statute. Paget v. Foley, 3 Scott, 120; 2 Bing. N. C. 679; 2 Hodges, 82.

An action for arrears, upon a covenant for payment of an annuity contained in a deed securing the annuity on land, is barred after twenty years by the above statute; but not after six years, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42. Sims v. Thomas, 13 A. & E. 536; 4 P. & D. 229; 4 Jur. 1183.

To an action of covenant six years is not a good plea of limitation. Hartshorne v. Watson, 5 Scott, 506; 4 Bing. N. C. 178; 2 Jur. 155.

By a deed between D. and H., D. sold to H. beds of coal, and he covenanted to pay to D. a sum named for the purchase-money, "in manner and at the times following;" that is to say, part in cash on the day of the date of the deed, and the remainder by five promissory notes under his hand bearing even date with the deed, payable to D. or order on the 1st of July in every year till the whole purchase-money should be paid, with interest, until the notes should be paid. D. declared against H. on this deed, alleging that, though H. gave D. two notes, according to the language of the covenant, and afterwards paid a part of the principal and interest mentioned in those notes, yet he did not pay the residue of the principal and interest mentioned in those notes, but, except as to the part so paid, those notes and so much of the purchase-money and interest as was therein mentioned remained wholly unpaid to D.:—Held, a good breach, the covenant extending to the payment of the money named in the notes, and not being satisfied by the mere delivery of the notes; and that it was a bad plea, that the causes of action did not accrue within six years before action. Dixon v. Holdroyd, 7 El. & Bl. 908; 3 Jur., N. S. 213; 27 L. J., Q. B. 43.

The proper limitation to an action by an incorporated company against one of its members for calls under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, is twenty years, by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3, and not six years, under 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3. Cork and Brandon Railway Company v. Goode, 13 C. B. 827; 17 Jur. 555; 22 L. J., C. P. 108.

The 82 Geo. 3, c. 74, s. 8, imposes duties to be paid by the master or owner for every ship or vessel of a certain burden passing from, to, or by Rammgate. By s. 16, if any master or owner shall elude or avoid payment of the duties, he shall stand charged to and be liable to payment of the same, and the same are to be recovered as penalties imposed by the act. By s. 72, penalties are recoverable by action. A party was sued for duties under this act which he had not paid:—Held, that the action being on a specialty, the period of limitation was twenty years, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3. Shepherd v. Hills, 11 Exch. 53.

By a deed of settlement of a company it was provided, that whenever any shares should be transferred to a new holder, the responsibility of the previous holder in respect of such shares should cease, but that he should not be released from his proportion of losses (if any) sustained by the company up to the period of his ceasing to be such shareholder:—Held, that a transferrer of shares was liable in respect of losses that accrued prior to the date of the transfer, though, the liability being by way of specialty, a holder who transferred his shares more than twenty years before the date of the winding up was entitled to the benefit of the statute. Moray, Ex parte, 2 L. R., Eq. 167; 14 W. R. 417; 14 L. T., N. S. 47—V. C. K.

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3, constitutes a bar to an action on a writing obligatory, in those cases only where every breach of the condition has taken place more than twenty years previously to the commencement of the action. Sanders v. Conard, 3 D. & L. 281, 13 M. & W. 49; 10 Jur. 186; 15 L. J., Exch. 97.

In 1831 an obligee of a bond brought an action against the obligor. After notice of trial the action abated by the death of the obligor in 1835. The obligor left a will, which was proved by the executor named therein. On the 18th of May, 1857, administration of the goods and effects of the obligor, with the will annexed, was granted to the defendant. In March, 1852, the obligee petitioned the Insolvent Debtor's Court, and his effects vested in the provisional assignee, who commenced an action on the bond against the defendant on the 17th of May, 1858:—Held, that the right of action was not barred by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3. Sturgis v. Darell, 6 Il. & N. 120; 6 Jur., N. S. 1351; 29 L. J., Exch. 472; 8 W. R. 653—Exch. Cham.

By a marriage settlement, personal estate belonging to the lady was vested in trustees for the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to the children of the marriage, with remainders over. Part of the settled fund was a bond to secure a sum of money lent by the lady to her intended husband, conditioned for repayment by him, with 5l. per cent. interest, in six months, if he should be called upon to do so. There were no children of the marriage. Neither principal nor interest was ever paid by the husband, or by the wife, who was his executrix:—Held, that after more than twenty years from the date of the bond, the representative of the trustees was entitled to enforce payment of the sum secured by the bond. Mills v. Borthwick, 11 Jur., N. S. 558; 35 L. J., Chanc. 31; 13 W. R. 707; 12 L. T., N. S. 600—V. C. K.

Action, on the obligatory part only, upon two bonds dated in 1828 and 1829. Plea, that the causes of action did not accrue within twenty years. Replication, that the causes of action did accrue within twenty years. The first bond stated that M. and the defendant bound themselves, and each of them, to the plaintiff in 300l. The condition (after reciting that M. had agreed with the plaintiff for the sale to him, for 150l., of an annuity of 20l. to be paid to the plaintiff during the joint and several lives of the plaintiff and his wife, and the survivor; that M. had requested the defendant to join in and execute the bond, which he had agreed to do, for securing the regular payment of the annuity; and that the 150l. had been paid to M.) was for payment of the annuity by M. or the defendant, or either of them, by equal half-yearly payments, during the joint and several lives of the plaintiff and his wife, and of the survivor, and a proportionate part in case of the survivor dying between the days of payment. The second bond and condition were similarly framed for the payment, by and to the same parties, of an annuity of 10l. The plaintiff suggested that, in 1851, two-and-a-half years' arrears were due in respect of each annuity, and were still unpaid. At the trial, it appeared that M. had paid the annuities half-yearly down to 1848, but never till after the day of payment fixed by the condition, so that there had been breaches of the condition twenty years before action, and that the arrears suggested were still due:—Held, that a new cause of action arose upon each successive breach of the condition; that, on the record as it stood, the plaintiff was entitled to prove at the trial breaches within twenty years; and that, on such proof, he was entitled to a verdict upon the issue on the Statute of Limitations. Amott v. Holden or Holder, 18 Q. B. 593; 17 Jur. 318; 23 L. J., Q. B. 14.

Action by an administrator of B. on a bond made by A. to B., dated 5th of December, 1812. The condition recited that B. had agreed to advance to A. the produce of the sale of stock in the funds without any other advantage than B. would have been entitled to if the stock had remained in his name; that B. had sold the stock and paid the produce to A., and that it had been agreed that the stock should be replaced and transferred to B., and the condition was, that if A., before the 5th of June following, purchased stock, and transferred it to B., and paid to B., in lieu of dividends, such sums as B. would have been entitled to receive for dividends if the stock had continued in his name, at such times and in such proportions, and in such manner as the dividends would have been payable to B. if the stock had not been sold, then the bond to be void. Breach, first, that A. did not on the 5th of June, or since, purchase the stock and transfer to B. or to his administrator; secondly, that the dividends, if the stock had remained in B.'s name, would have been payable half-yearly, and the first and only one of such dividends before the 5th of June would have been payable on the 5th of January, 1813; that on the 11th of September, 1824, B. died; that if the stock had continued in his name, or his administrator, the dividends would have been paid half-yearly, and that there was a large sum payable in lieu of such dividends, and due after B.'s death, and that the stock had not been transferred, and A. had failed to pay the sum due in lieu of dividends. Plea, that the causes of action did not accrue within twenty years next before action. Replication, as to the first breach, that while the stock remained untransferred, and the money was due in lieu of the dividends, on the 10th of September, 1824, A. made an acknowledgment to B. that the stock remained untransferred, by A. making satisfaction to B. on account, and that the action was brought within twenty years after such acknowledgment; and as to the other causes of action, that they did accrue within twenty years. Rejoinder, as to the first part of the replication, a traverse of the bringing of the action within twenty years after the acknowledgment, and issue thereon; and as to the second part of the replication, issue was joined. It was proved that B. had, since the advance, agreed to board and lodge with A., that the amount was to be deducted from the interest of the money which A. had borrowed, and that a settlement should be made every six months. B. had boarded and lodged with A. till B.'s death, but no settlement had ever taken place, though frequently demanded by B.:—Held, first, that supposing the issue raised upon the rejoinder cast upon the plaintiff the burden of proving that the acknowledgment was made within twenty years before action, there was sufficient evidence to entitle the plaintiff to a verdict. Blair v. Ormond, 17 Q. B. 423; 15 Jur. 1054; 20 L. J., Q. B. 4.

Held, secondly, that the bond was not within the 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 43, s. 5, and that the replication, therefore, was no answer to that part of the plea which related to the first breach. Ib.

But held, thirdly, that that part of the condition which stipulated for the payment from time to time of the sums payable in lieu of the dividends, still remained in force, as to so much as had accrued due within twenty years before action, the penalty of the bond not having been insisted upon in respect of sums accruing due earlier. Ib.

A bond was executed in favor of the Bank of England by B. in 1818. In 1823, B. made a voluntary settlement of his property, giving certain funds to trustees in trust to pay thereout the principal and interest due on the bond when and as B. should be required to pay the same. B. died in 1828, and the trust funds subsequently became the property of E. E., by her will, made in 1869, gave certain funds to trustees in trust to pay the principal and interest due on the bond, when, and if, the trustees of the deed of 1823 should be called on to pay the same, and subject thereto as herein mentioned. The bank was unaware of being entitled till 1870, and no claim was made by them under the bond:—Held, that no trust for the bank was created by the deed or will, and that the only person who could call on the trustees to pay was B.; the claim, therefore, was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Henriques v. Hennessy, 20 W. R. 850—V. C. M.

When two separate sums are secured by one bond, a payment in respect of one sum does not prevent the statute running in respect of the other. Ashlin v. Lee, 31 L. T., N. S. 731; 23 W. R. 287; 44 L. J., Chanc. 174—V. C. H.; affirmed on appeal, 33 L. T., N. S. 348; 23 W. R. 459; 44 L. J., Chanc. 876.

In 1827 an agreement was entered into between J. H. and M. H., by which the payment of 1,000*l.* was to be secured by the bond of H. M., the 1,000*l.* to be applied thus: 750*l.* of it was to be paid to certain parties in certain events, and 250*l.* of it to other parties in other events. The bond, with two obligees, was in the same year duly executed by M. H., and trusts were by a separate deed declared of the 1,000*l.* accordingly. The 750*l.* was paid by installments, and ultimately discharged in full in 1854. The 250*l.* was not paid. The obligor died. In 1873 the parties interested in the 250*l.* filed a creditors' bill to enforce its payment, and to administer the obligor's estate. They contended that the full discharge of the 750*l.*, in 1854, was a satisfaction pro tanto of the 1,000*l.*, and that their claim to the balance, namely, the 250*l.* was not therefore barred by the statute:—Held, that the limits of the plaintiffs' legal and equitable rights were commensurate; that the causes of action in respect of the two sums of 750*l.* and 250*l.* were distinct; that the payment of the 750*l.* was not on account of the 250*l.*; that the claim to that sum was therefore barred by the statute; and that the bill must be dismissed with costs. Ib.

As to limitation of actions for moneys secured by mortgage or other lien or charge on land,—see this title, II., 2, 4.

Bills, notes and checks.—A promissory note payable on demand is payable immediately, and the Statute of Limitations runs from the date of the note, and not from the time of demand. Christie v. Forswick, 1 Selw. N. P. 186, 361—Mansfield.

So, a note, payable on demand, with lawful interest, is payable immediately, and therefore the statute runs from the date of the note. Norton v. Ellam, 2 M. & W. 461; M. & H. 69; 1 Jur. 433.

But where a note is made payable "two years after demand," the statute does not begin to run until the two years after the demand have elapsed. Thorpe v. Coombe, 8 D. & R. 347; S. C. nom. Thorpe v. Booth, R. & M. 388.

The statute is no bar to an action on a note payable after sight, unless a presentation for payment six years before the action is proved. Homes v. Kerrison, 3 Taunt. 323.

Where a bill of exchange is drawn payable at a certain future period, for the amount of a sum of money lent by the payee to the drawer at the time of drawing the bill, the payee may recover the money, although six years have elapsed since the time when the loan was advanced; the statute beginning to operate only from the time when the money was to be repaid, i. e., when the bill became due. Wittersheim v. Carlisle, 1 H. Bl. 631.

Where a note is made and deposited with a banker, to be delivered to the payee on his producing a certain other note canceled, the cause of action to the payee on the first note accrues on receiving it from the banker, and is not barred by the lapse of six years from the date. Savage v. Aldren, 2 Stark. 233—Ellenborough.

Where a note was payable after sight, with interest thereon, and the interest was duly paid for several years:—Held, that the note must be taken to have been acted upon, according to its form and tenor, and, therefore, that the presentment for sight must have been made before the interest was paid, and that the payment became due upon the note at the prescribed date after such presentment, and that the statute would begin to run from the time the payment so became due. Way v. Bassett, 5 Haro. 65; 10 Jur. 891; 15 L. J., Chanc. 1.

A holder of a bill of exchange, on non-acceptance, and protest, and notice thereon, has an immediate right of action against the drawer, and does not acquire a fresh right of action on the non-payment of the bill when due, and the statute, therefore, runs against him from the former, and not from the latter period. Whitehead v. Walker, 9 M. & W. 506.

A defendant, in 1840, gave A. for value his acceptance in blank on a 5s. stamp. A., in 1852, filled in his own name as drawer for 200l., at five months. The defendant being sued on the bill by an innocent indorsee for value, pleaded the statute:—Held, that the statute ran from the time the bill became due as filled up, and not from the time it would have become due if completed when it was accepted in blank, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Montagus v. Perkins, 17 Jur. 557; 22 L. J., C. P. 187.

K. being indebted to the plaintiff and to the defendant, and also to a banking company, it was agreed between all the parties that, to secure K.'s debt to the company, the defendant should draw upon K. three bills of exchange, payable to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff should indorse them to the company. The bills became due in 1843, and were dishonored. In 1847 the company sued the plaintiff on the bills, and the plaintiff, in 1851, paid the amount:—Held, that the plaintiff was barred by the statute from suing the defendant as drawer. Webster v. Kirk, 17 Q. B. 944; 10 Jur. 247; 21 L. J., Q. B. 159.

The plaintiff, in pursuance of an agreement to lend money to the defendant, sent him a check on the 14th June, 1861, which was received by him on the following day, and presented for payment and paid on the 21st June, 1861. On the 21st June, 1867, an action was commenced to recover the amount of the check:—Held, that the check not having been given in payment of any pre-existing debt, the cause of action did not arise till it was actually paid, and that the action was not barred by the statute. Garden v. Bruce, 18 L. T., N. S. 544; 16 W. R. 366; 3 L. R., C. P. 300; 37 L. J., C. P. 112.

Sales.—On a sale of goods on credit the statute begins to run from the time of credit expired. Helps v. Winterbottom, 2 B. & Ad. 431.

Where A., under a contract to deliver spring wheat to B., had delivered winter wheat, and B. having again sold the same as spring wheat, had in consequence been compelled to pay damages to the purchaser; and afterwards B. brought an action of assumpsit against A. for his breach of contract, alleging as special damage the damages so recovered:—Held, that although such special damage had occurred within six years before the commencement of the action by B. against A., yet that the breach of contract having occurred and become known to B. more than six years before that period, actio non accrevit infra sex annos was a good plea in bar to the action. Battley v. Faulkner, 3 B. & A. 288.

Work and labor.—By a turnpike act the trustees were to pay first the expenses of obtaining the act, and next the expenses of erecting toll-houses; and an action for work and labor in erecting such toll-houses was brought by a builder, more than six years after the work done, but within six years of the time when the trustees had funds in hand by having paid off the expenses of the act:—Held, that he was too late, as the action was maintainable immediately after the work was done, though the execution would have been postponed. Emery v. Day, 1 C., M. & R. 245; 4 Tyr. 695.

[By 4 & 5 Anne, c. 10, s. 17, all actions and suits in the Court of Admiralty for seamen's wages shall be commenced and sued within six years after the cause of such suits or actions shall accrue, and not after.]

Money lent or deposited paid, had and received.—Money deposited with a banker in the usual way by a customer is money lent to the banker, with a superadded obligation that it is to be paid when called for; and consequently, if not noticed for six years, will be affected by the statute. Pott v. Clog, 16 M. & W. 321; 11 Jur. 289; 10 L. J., Exch. 210.

In an action to recover the consideration money of a void annuity, when the annuity was granted more than six years before action, but was treated by the grantor as a subsisting annuity within that period, although subsequently avoided at his instance:—Held, that the statute did not begin to run until the annuity had been avoided. Cowper v. Godmond, 3 M. & Scott, 219; 9 Bing. 748.

In 1832 the defendant, being indebted to the plaintiff, gave a warrant of attorney for the amount of his debt, subject to a defeasance, stating that the warrant was given to secure payment of the debt by installments, the last of which was payable in 1835; and that, in case default should be made in payment of any of the installments, the plaintiff should be at liberty to enter up judgment and issue execution for all or so much of the debt as should be unpaid at the time, the same as if all the periods for payment had expired by effluxion of time. To an action brought to recover some of these installments, the defendant pleaded the statute, and, at the trial, it appeared that the first default in payment of an installment was made more than six years before the action:—Held, that the plaintiff might have sued on the first default for the whole amount remaining unpaid, and that, therefore, the statute was a bar as to all the installments. Hemp v. Garland, 3 G. & D. 402; 4 Q. B. 519; 7 Jur. 302; 12 L. J., Q. B. 134.

Action to recover the consideration money paid for an annuity in 1826, one of the securities given being a warrant of attorney on which judgment was entered up. The warrant and judgment were set aside in 1842;

it did not appear on what grounds:—Held, that the statute, inasmuch as the annuity might be voidable only and not void, was no bar, and would not begin to run until the annuity was avoided in 1843. Huggins v. Coates, D. & M. 433; 5 Q. B. 432; 8 Jur. 334; 13 L. J., Q. B. 48.

When money is advanced to a firm to be repaid on demand with compound interest, the statute runs from the date of the advance. Jackson v. Ogg, Johnson, 397; 5 Jur., N. S. 976.

Entries made in the books of the firm crediting the person who advanced the money with interest from time to time, on the footing of periodical rests, do not bar the statute. Id.

A. and B. expended moneys in procuring a railway act in 1830. The railway was not constructed. The company had no assets till 1872. In 1872, the company obtained assets, and A. and B. put in their claims:—Held, that these claims were not barred, as the statute did not begin to run in favor of the company until the company had assets to meet their claims. Kensington Station Act, In re, 28 W. R. 463; 20 L. R., Eq. 197—V. C. M.

Accounts.—[By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 9, all actions of account, or for not accounting, and suits for such accounts as concern the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant, their factors or servants, shall be commenced and sued within six years after the cause of such actions or suits, or, when such cause has already arisen, then within six years after the passing of that act (29th July, 1856); and no claim in respect of a matter which arises more than six years before the commencement of such action or suit shall be enforceable by action or suit, by reason only of some other matter of claim comprised in the same account having arisen within six years next before the commencement of such action or suit.]

The exception as to merchants' accounts in the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3, was confined to cases where an action of account would lie, or an action upon the case for not accounting. Cottam v. Partridge, 4 Scott, N. R. 819; 4 M. & G. 271.

An open account between two tradesmen for goods sold by each to the other, without any agreement that the goods delivered on the one side shall be considered as payment for those delivered on the other, did not constitute such an account as concerned the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant within the exception of the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3. Id.

Since the 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 1, the existence of items within six years in an open account will not operate to take the previous portion of the account out of the statute. Id.

As an action does not lie for not accounting till after a demand made of an account, the statute runs only from the time of a demand made. After a reasonable time has elapsed, a jury may presume that the consignor had made a demand, and that the factor had accounted. And fourteen years would be a sufficient time for such a presumption, if not rebutted by circumstances. Topham v. Brodick, 1 Taunt. 573.

Where B. and C. were permitted by a mortgagee not in possession of the mortgaged property, consisting of coal mines, to enter upon the working of the mines, to sell the property, and to receive the value, in taking an account of the quantity and value of the coal wrought by B. and C. more than six years before the bill was filed, by the permission of the mortgagee, they being strangers to the mortgagor:—Held, that the Statute of Limitations did not apply. Hood v. Easton, 3 Jur., N. S. 729—V. C. R. This decision was afterwards questioned on appeal, but no judgment was given, 2 Jur., N. S. 917.

The exception of the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3, as to merchants' accounts, did not apply to an action of indebitatus assumpsit, but only to the action of account, or to an action on the case for not accounting. Inglis v. Haigh, 3 M. & W. 789; 9 D. P. C. 847; 5 Jur. 704.

Mutual debts, there being no written accounts between the parties, were not within the exception. Miller v. Fowler, 7 Scott, 444; 5 Bing., N. C. 455; 2 Arn. 62; 3 Jur. 406.

A sale of wine upon one side, and money on the other, do not constitute merchants' accounts. Dutton v. Hutchinson, 1 Jur. 772.

If there was a mutual account of any sort between plaintiff and defendant, for any item of which credit had been given within six years, that was evidence of an acknowledgment of there being such an open account between the parties, and of a promise to pay the balance, so as to take the case out of the statute. Catling v. Skoulding, 6 T. R. 189.

A. occupied a house and land under B., at the rent of 16*l.* a year, and A., at B.'s request, entered into his employment as a farming bailiff, and to perform other services, in the place of another person who had been employed by A., and had been paid 12*s.* a week. A. continued in B.'s service for more than twelve years; but there was no payment of rent on the one hand, or of wages on the other. In an action brought by A., to recover wages for twelve years, deducting the rent. Held, that it was not such an open account as would take the case out of the statute since the 9 Geo. 4, c. 14; but there must be a part payment in cash, or what is equivalent to it, to have that effect. Williams v. Griffiths, 3 C., M. & R. 45; 1 Gale, 65; 5 Tyr. 748.

Merchants' accounts, after six years' total discontinuance, are within the statute. Martin v. Horsbottle, 2 Eden, 169.

The plaintiff, having lent the defendant a sum of money, took from him the following memorandum:—

"I O U 100*l.*—C. R. 30 July, 1821."

"August 17th, received 50*l.*—C. R."

The last item alone was infra sex annos—Held, that it did not amount to an acknowledgment of the existence of the prior debt, so as to take it out of the statute. Roberts v. Roberts, 1 M. & P. 487; 3 C. & P. 296.

An account stated between a debtor, being part owner and ship's husband, and his co-owners, in which the items of the creditor's account for work done and money advanced are included, is not such an acknowledgment as will take the case out of the operation of the statute. Nash v. Hill, 1 F. & F. 198—Coleridge.

The circumstance of there being no ascertained or adjusted debt till within six years, will not delay the operation of the statute. Id.

The phrase "comprised in the same account" in the 10 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 9, means that "would have been comprehended in," Knaz v. Gye, 5 L. R., H. L. Cas. 656.

Real estate was devised to A. for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to the first and other sons of A. in tail male, with remainder to B., C. and D., and their first and other sons in a similar way, with remainder to the testator's right heirs, with liberty to any tenant for life for the time being to fell and convert timber for the purpose of repairs. A. enjoyed the estate as tenant for life, the ultimate remainder in fee being vested in him, down to his death in 1859. B. enjoyed the estate in the same way down to his death in 1864. C. then entered into possession. A. and B. had each cut timber and sold it, but had expended money in repairs. In 1860 C. filed a bill to make their estates respectively account for such timber. The court refused an account against A.'s representative; first, because he had expended more than he had received; secondly, because the claim was barred by the statute. An account of what had been received and paid by B. during his life was directed. Birch-Wolfe v. Birch, 30 L. J., Chanc. 845—V. C. J.

An agent who stands in a fiduciary relation to his principal cannot set up the statute in bar of a suit for an account by his principal. Burdick v. Garrick, 5 L. R., Ch. 238; 39 L. J., Chanc. 369.

An agent who was a solicitor in London, held a power of attorney from his principal in America to sell his property and invest the proceeds in his name. The agent received certain moneys under the power and paid them into his own bankers to the general account of his firm. The principal died in 1859 intestate. In 1867 his widow took out administration to his estate, and in 1868 she filed a bill against the agent for an account:—Held, that the agent held the money in trust for his principal, and, therefore, the statute was no bar to the suit. Id.

There being no proof that the agent had made any interest or profit by the money in his hands, he was charged with simple interest at 5l. per cent. Id.

Guaranties and contracts of indemnity.]—A right to sue upon a contract of indemnity against the costs of an action is first vested, when the party to whom the indemnity is given pays the bill of costs, and not when it is delivered to him, and the statute therefore does not begin to run against his right of action until after such payment. Collinge v. Heywood, 1 P. & D. 502; 9 A. & E. 633; 2 W., W. & H. 107.

A., in consideration of B.'s supplying C. with goods, guaranteed to B. the payment of the price. B. having supplied C. with goods, and C. having neglected to pay the price, A., in consideration of B.'s extending to C. a period of two years and upwards for the liquidation of his debt, agreed to reserve to B. all right and claim which B. might then have against him, A., by virtue of the security previously entered into on C.'s behalf, and to be bound by it, if, at the expiration of such period, B.'s demand should not have been fully discharged:—Held, that A.'s liability attached upon default made by C. after the expiration of two years and a few days; that B.'s right of action then accrued; and that, therefore, the statute then began to run. Holl v. Hadley, 4 N. & M. 515; 2 A. & E. 758.

H., and plaintiff and D., as his sureties, joined in making a promissory note. The amount of the principal and interest due on the promissory note was paid by the plaintiff more than six years before the commencement of the suit, with the exception of 30l., which was paid by him within that period. The plaintiff having brought an action for contribution against D.:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover only to the extent of 30l., which had been paid within the six years, and that the statute was a bar to the rest, as the right of action attached as soon as the plaintiff had paid more than his proportion. Davies v. Humphries, 6 M. & W. 153; 4 Jur. 250.

Held, also, in an action on the same note against the principal, that the statute was a bar to all except 30l., as the plaintiff had a right of action against the principal the moment he paid anything, for so much money paid to his use. Id.

Upon a contract to indemnify an accommodation acceptor, the statute begins to run from the time at which the plaintiff is damaged by actual payment, and not from the day when the bill became payable. Reynolds v. Doyle, 2 Scott, N. R. 45; 1 M. & G. 758; 1 Drink. 1; 4 Jur. 992.

A note being given by A. and a surety, to a banker, and a contemporaneous memorandum of agreement, showing the note to be given as security for the banking account to be kept by A. with the bank:—Held, that the statute did not run from the time when A. became indebted to the bank, but from the time when the balance was struck. Hartland v. Jukes, 1 H. & C. 667; 9 Jur., N. S. 180; 32 L. J., Exch. 162; 11 W. R. 519; 7 L. T., N. S. 792; 8 F. & F. 149.

When a party is called upon to pay the debt of another, his remedy over against such other runs from the time of actual payment by him, and not from the time when he became merely liable to pay. Angrove v. Tippetts, 11 L. T., N. S. 708—Q. B.

In 1816 G. shipped goods on board a vessel chartered by him for Calcutta, and B. & Co. made advances to enable him to do so, under an arrangement that the goods should be transmitted to the agents at Calcutta of B. & Co., who were to dispose of the outward cargo there, and send the proceeds in goods or bills to B. & Co. in London, who were to reimburse themselves their charges, and hold the balance at the disposal of G. In November, 1817, G. being in difficulties, and indebted to the defendants in 850*l.*, they and G. applied to B. & Co. to pay off this debt by a further advance to G. on his consignment, and the defendants gave B. & Co. the following guaranty:—"Messrs. B. & Co., you having expressed some doubts of the propriety of paying G.'s draft on you for 850*l.*, in our favor, we hereby engage, if you will pay us the same, that we will reimburse you the amount on demand, with interest, in the event of your finding it necessary to call upon us to do so, either from the state of G.'s pending account with you, or from any other circumstances." B. & Co. thereupon accepted and paid a bill for 850*l.*, drawn by G. on them in favor of the defendants. The vessel returned to England with a cargo in April, 1818, when C., the owner (G. having become bankrupt), gave notice to the East India Company (in whose docks she lay), not to deliver any part of the cargo without his authority; they thereupon sold the cargo, and paid the owner's demand for freight, and in consequence of conflicting claims from G.'s assignees and from B. & Co., filed an interpleader bill, and paid the balance of the proceeds into court. Proceedings at law and equity were continued between all the parties, under legal advice, up to 1837, when the result was, that B. & Co. were obliged to pay C.'s costs. In 1838 B. & Co. demanded of the defendants the 850*l.* due by the guaranty, with interest, and their share of the expenses incurred by the law proceedings, and, on their refusing to pay, brought an action against them on the guaranty:—Held, that the statute began to run against the plaintiffs, not from the termination of the legal proceedings in 1837, but from the return and sale of the cargo in 1818, when all the facts were ascertained upon which the defendant's legal liability depended, and therefore it was a bar to the action. Cole v. Buche, 8 M. & W. 690.

is an action for not laying out the plaintiff's money in an annuity on a good and a sufficient security, which the defendant promised to do:—Held, that the statute was a bar to the recovery, as the promise of the defendant was the gist of the action, although it was commenced within the period of six years from the time it was discovered that the security was invalid, and he knew it to be so at the time the annuity was granted. Brown v. Howard, 4 Moore, 508, 2 B. & B. 73.

But where a declaration against an attorney assigned for breach that he did not make diligent inquiry at the bank, to ascertain whether stock was standing in the name of certain persons there:—Held, that the cause of action arose on the breach of duty by the attorney, and not on its discovery by the client. Short v. McCarthy, 3 B. & A. 626.

And though, on the discovery being made the attorney acknowledged the neglect, and allowed that he was responsible:—Held, that actio non accrevit infra sex annos having been pleaded, such an acknowledgment was not sufficient to support the declaration. Id.

The plaintiff declared that the defendant promised to invest his money on good security, and assigned for breach that he invested it on bad security, and the defendant pleaded the statute; replication, that he promised within six years, and it was proved that, within that time, he acknowledged the security to be bad, and promised that the plaintiff should be paid:—Held, that as the declaration did not state a debt to which a subsequent promise could be applied, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Wadehead v. Howard, 2 B. & B. 372, 5 Moore, 105.

The statute, in the absence of fraud, applies to an action or a suit brought by a client against his solicitor Hindmarsh, In re, 1 Drew. & Sm. 129. But see Burdick v. Garrick, 39 L. J., Chanc. 369, 372; 18 W. R. 387, 388.

[Torts or wrongs.] The statute is a bar to an action of trover commenced more than six years after the conversion, though the plaintiff was ignorant of the conversion till within six years; the defendant not having committed any fraud to prevent the plaintiff's earlier knowledge. Ginger v. George, 7 D. & R. 729; 5 B. & C. 149. And see Compton v. Chandless, 4 Esp. 20.

In trover the statute runs from the time of conversion, and not from the time of sale. Denys v. Shuckburgh, 4 Y. & C. 42.

If a captain of a ship insured, barratrously carries her out of the course of her voyage, and, procuring her to be condemned in a vice-admiralty court, sells and delivers her up to the purchaser, the statute as between the assured and the underwriter begins to run only from the delivery. Hibbert v. Martin, 1 Camp. 539. Edenborough.

A's furniture was seized under an execution by the sheriff, who assigned it to the judgment creditor. A's friends afterwards purchased it from the judgment creditor, and the sheriff's officers then returned and left the goods in A.'s possession, who remained in undisturbed enjoyment for more than six years. After his death the furniture was claimed by his friends, who had purchased it, and, adversely, by his administratrix:—Held, that the rights of the former were not barred by the statute, and that as A.'s possession was rightful, the statute could only apply from six years from a conversion. Edwards v. Clay, 28 Beav. 145.

Where a statute limits the period within which an action is to be brought for an act done or committed, if the cause of action is a single act, or one which amounts to a trespass (except it is a continuing trespass), the action must be brought within the prescribed period after the actual doing of the thing complained of; but if the cause of action is, not the doing of the thing, but the resulting of damage only, the period of limitation is to be computed from the time when the party sustained the injury. Whitehouse v. Fellows, 10 C. B., N. S. 765; 30 L. J., C. P. 306; 9 W. R. 557; 4 L. T., N. S. 177.

A. was owner of houses standing on land which was surrounded by the lands of B., C. and D. E. was owner of mines running underneath the lands of all these persons. He worked the mines in such a manner (without actual negligence) that the lands of B., C. and D. sank in; and after more than six years' interval the sinking occasioned an injury to the houses of A.:—Held, that a right of action accrued to A. when this injury actually occurred, and that his right was not barred by the statute. Backhouse v. Bonomi, 9 H. L. Cas. 503; 34 L. J., Q. B. 181; 7 Jur. N. S. 800; 9 W. R. 769; 4 L. T., N. S. 754. See also Bonomi v. Backhouse, 5 Jur., N. S. 1345; 28 L. J., Q. B. 378; El., Bl. & El. 622—Exch. Cham.; and Spoor v. Green, 9 L. R., Exch. 99, 111; 43 L. J., Exch. 57.

Under 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, a commission of bankruptcy issued against a person entitled in remainder to real property, and no assignee was appointed; but neither under that act nor under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, was any bargain and sale of the future real estate executed by the commissioners. In 1844, after the death of the assignee, the estate vested in the bankrupt in possession, and he afterwards (before the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106) conveyed it to the defendant. In 1853 the bankrupt, without having obtained his certificate, died. No assignee had been reappointed since the estate came to him until 1859, when assignees were appointed, and they, having recovered the property in ejectment, demanded the deeds, and on refusal brought detinue against the defendant, who pleaded, denying the assignees' property, and also the Statute of Limitations:—Held, that the action was maintainable, and that there was no defense under the statute. Plant v. Cotterell, 5 H. & N. 430; 29 L. J., Exch. 198.

A count, in an action for a libel, was in respect of a newspaper published more than seventeen years before action; the statute being pleaded:—Held, that the plea was negatived by proof that a single copy had been purchased from the defendant for the plaintiff by his agent within the six years. Brunswick v. Harmer, 14 Q. B. 185; 14 Jur. 110; 19 L. J., Q. B. 30.

Other counts were, in respect of other libels, alleged to impute to the plaintiff the libelous matter charged in the first count, which was set out by way of inducement in each count. The libels themselves, in those other counts, did not refer to the libel in the first count. The statute was pleaded to so much of these counts as related to the matter in the first count:—Held, that the plea was negatived as to those counts also. Ib.

Goods having been bailed by the plaintiffs to the defendant for safe custody, he wrongfully sold them; and the plaintiffs, more than six years after the date of the sale, being ignorant of the fact of its having taken place, demanded the return of the goods, which he refused:—Held, in an action of detinue for the goods, that the statute ran from the date of the demand and refusal, and not from that of the sale, inasmuch as the plaintiffs, in such a case, though entitled if they had discovered the sale to sue immediately for a conversion of the goods, were also entitled to elect to sue upon the breach of the bailee's duty in the ordinary course, by the refusal to deliver up on request. Wilkinson v. Verity, 6 L. R., C. P. 206; 40 L. J., C. P. 141; 24 L. T., N. S. 32; 19 W. R. 604.

When the continuance of a wrongful act causes fresh damage it constitutes a new cause of action. Decary v. Grand Canal Company, 9 Ir. R., C. L. 194—Exch. Cham.; and see S. C., 8 Ir. R., C. L. 511—C. P.

A canal company in 1865 wrongfully obstructed a stream flowing by the plaintiff's lands, and continued the obstruction down to 1873, when it caused the flooding of his lands:—Held, that the continuance of the wrongful obstruction in 1873 was a fresh cause for action in that year, and therefore the Statute of Limitations began to run from the time of damage in 1873. Ib.

Forfeitures and penalties.—[By 31 Eliz. c. 5, s. 5, all actions, suits, bills, indictments [or informations] brought, sued or exhibited for any forfeiture upon any penal statute made or to be made, whereby the forfeitures shall be limited to the queen, her heirs or successors only, shall be had, brought, sued or exhibited within two years next after the offense committed against such act penal, and not after two years;

And all actions, suits, bills [or informations] for any forfeiture upon any penal statute, the benefit and suit whereof is or shall be by the said statute limited to the queen, her heirs or successors, and to any other which shall prosecute in that behalf, shall be had, brought, sued or commenced by any person that may lawfully pursue for the same as aforesaid, within one year next after the offense committed against the said statute, and in default of such pursuit, then the same shall be had, sued, exhibited or brought for the queen's majesty, her heirs or successors, at any time within two years after that year ended;

And if any action, suit, bill, indictment [or information] for any offence against any penal statute, shall be brought after the time in that behalf before limited, then the same shall be void and of none effect.

By s. 6, where any action [information], indictment or other suit is or shall be limited by any penal statute, to be had, sued, commenced or brought within shorter time than is afore rehearsed, in every such case the action, information, indictment or other suit shall be brought within the time limited by such statute.

By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 50, so much of the above act as relates to the time limited for exhibiting an information for a forfeiture upon any penal statute is repealed, and by s. 11, the information shall be laid within six calendar months from the time when the matter of such information arose.

By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3, all actions for penalties, damages or sums of money given to the party grieved by any statute now or hereafter to be in force shall be commenced and sued within the time and limitation hereinafter expressed, and not after; that is to say, the said actions by the party grieved within two years after the cause of such actions or suits, but not after, provided that nothing herein contained shall extend to any action given by any statute where the time for bringing such action is or shall be by any statute specially limited.]

The 31 Eliz. c. 5, s. 3, includes penal actions where the penalty is given to a common informer alone, and, therefore, he must sue within one year after the offense committed. Dyer v. Best, 4 H. & C. 189; 1 L. R., Exch. 152; 12 Jur., N. S. 142; 35 L. J., Exch. 103; 14 W. R. 336; 13 L. T., N. S. 754.

In a penal action the plaintiff is at liberty to show the action commenced within a year, as well after as before the objection is made that it does not appear on the record. Maugham v. t. v. Walker, Peake, 164; 5 T. R. 98.

The proviso in section 143 of the Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, is not confined to that part of the section which immediately precedes it, but extends to the whole matter in the section; and, therefore, if a party seeking to recover the penalties imposed by that act omits to commence his action within the prescribed time, he is not merely barred of his right to costs, but of his right of action altogether. Cobbett v. Warner, 1 H. & N. 383; 26 L. J., Exch. 11—Exch. Cham.

An action for a penalty incurred under a by law made by virtue of a royal charter under the great seal, is not an action of debt grounded upon a contract without specialty, within 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3, and therefore a plea of the statute bars the recovery of the penalty if the action is not commenced within six years after it was incurred. Tobacco-pipe Makers Company v. Loder, 16 Q. B. 705; 15 Jur. 1194; 20 L. J., Q. B. 414.

The commencement of a suit by information by the attorney-general on the part of the crown, for the recovery of forfeitures under a penal act, must, with reference to the Statute of Limitations, be taken to be the issuing of process, and not the actual filing of the information. Att. Gen. v. Hall, 11 Price, 700.

Equitable claims generally.—Though the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, does not apply to any equitable demand, equity takes the same limitation in cases analogous to those at law. Stackhouse v. Barnston, 10 Ves. 466.

Time is a bar in equity to stale demands, independently of the statute. Harcourt v. White, 28 Benv. 303; 30 L. J., Chanc. 691.

Length of time, where it does not operate as a statutory or a positive bar, operates simply as evidence of assent or of acquiescence. Life Association of Scotland v. Toddall, 7 Jur., N. S. 785; 4 L. T., N. S. 311—H. L.

When there is a remedy at law, and a corresponding remedy in equity, supplementing that of the common law, and the legal remedy is subject by statute to a limit in point of time, a court of equity, in affording the corresponding remedy, will act by analogy to the statute, and impose on the remedy it affords the same limit as to time. Knox v. Gue, 5 L. R., H. L. Cas. 656; 43 L. J., Chanc. 234.

When, therefore, in the matter of enforcement of a legal right, the court of common law would, under the provisions of the Statute of Limitations, refuse the enforcement after the lapse of six years from the accruing of the right of action, a court of equity will, where its power to grant relief is asked for under similar circumstances, adopt the principle of the statute, and decline to grant such relief. Id.

T. advanced 12,000l. to G. on the terms of partnership. T. made a will, leaving this money equally between K. and G. T. died in December, 1854, before old Covent Garden Theater was burned down, which event took place in March, 1856. There had been before December, 1854, negotiations between G. and H. to allow G. the use of Her Majesty's Theatre; but though 5,000l. (part of T.'s 12,000l.) had been paid to H. under these negotiations, he had never performed his contract. G. finally brought an action against H., and recovered judgment for 5,000l., but ultimately (after the death of T., yet within six years of the date of a bill filed by K. for an account) consented to accept 2,500l. as a compromise. K., in December, 1864, filed a bill against G. for an account of profits in the partnership with T., and what was due to K. in respect thereof under T.'s will.—Held, that his right under T.'s will began in December, 1854, and was barred in equity by analogy to the Statute of Limitations, the bill not having been filed till 1864. Id.

Held, also, that the surviving partner not being a trustee for the executors of his deceased partner, the payment of the 2,500l.

from H. within six years from filing the bill did not take the case out of the statute. Ib.

As to limitation of equitable claims in respect of lands and rents, and liens and other charges thereon,—see this title, II., 7.

Trusts.—[By 36 & 37 Vict. c. 69 (Judicature Act, 1873), s. 25, sub-s. 2, no claim of a cestui que trust against his trustee for any property held on an express trust, or in respect of any breach of trust, shall be held to be barred by the Statute of Limitations.]

Where a party receives money in the character of a trustee, the statute will not run in his favor. Bolton, Ex parte, 1 Deac. & Chit. 556.

Though the rule as to limitation by time does not apply in the case of express trusts, yet, as to them, in equity, the general rule is, that stale demands are not to be encouraged. M'Donnel v. White, 11 H. L. Cas. 271.

After a dissolution of partnership, by which the continuing partner covenanted to pay the debts and to pay the retiring partner a sum equal to half the next half-year's profits:—Held, that non-payment of a debt by the continuing partner during the half-year could not be set up against the retiring partner as an answer to the Statute of Limitation. Watson v. Woodman, 20 L. R., Eq. 721; 24 W. R. 47—V. C. H.

Held, also, that though the debt was from solicitors to a client in respect of moneys received, there was no express trust to exclude the operation of the statutes. Ib.

A fund was established at Bombay by the covenanted civil servants of the East India Company serving in that presidency, for granting pensions and annuities to members, their widows and children. By the original articles certain persons were appointed managers, and they were declared to be "the trustees of the fund," and the property was vested in them:—Held, that they were not mere trustees for the association, but trustees properly so-called, and that the members of the fund were the beneficiaries, so that the defense of the Statute of Limitations could not be set up against a claimant on the fund, merely on account of lapse of time. Edwards v. Warden, 1 L. R., App. Cas. 281; 45 L. J., Chanc. Div. 713; 35 L. T., N. S. 174—H. L.

As to limitations in respect of trusts in real property,—see this title, II., 7.

Intestate's personal estate; distributive shares; legacies.—[By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 13, after the 31st of December, 1860, no suit or other proceeding shall be brought to recover the personal estate, or any share of the personal estate, of any person dying intestate, but within twenty years next after a present right to receive the same shall have accrued to some person capable of giving a discharge for or release of the same, unless in the meantime some part of such estate or share, or some interest in respect thereof, shall have been accounted for or paid, or some acknowledgment of the right thereto shall have been given in writing, signed by the person accountable for the same, or his agent, to the person entitled thereto, or his agent; and in such case no such action or suit shall be brought, but within twenty years after such accounting, payment, or acknowledgment, or the last of such accountings, payments, or acknowledgments, if more than one, was made or given.]

The Statute of Limitations is no bar to a claim made by the intestate, where property has been taken possession of by his heir-at-law, being also his administrator, under a mistake as to its real nature. Reed v. Penn, 35 L. J., Chanc. 464; 14 W. R. 704.

A testator being, at the time of his death in 1857, indebted to B. on simple contract, gave by his will his real and personal estate to his wife for life, and appointed executors. The will was not proved for many years, but the widow took possession of all the property, and paid interest on the debt to February, 1864. In September, 1870, the will was proved, and then B. filed a bill on behalf of himself and other creditors against the widow and the executors:—Held, that the claim was barred by the Statute of Limitations, and that the bill must be dismissed with costs. Boatwright v. Boatwright, 17 L. R., Eq. 71; 43 L. J., Chanc. 12; 29 L. T., N. S. 603—R.

Semble, that if the remedy of a creditor against the personal estate is barred, while his remedy against the real estate has been kept alive, the real estate can be made liable, although there is no legal personal representative. Boatwright v. Boatwright, 23 W. R. 147—R.

A testator gave all his real and personal property to his wife, out of which he desired that she would discharge all his legal debts and enjoy the surplus for her life, and at her death the property was to be divided as in the will mentioned. A farm servant of the testator left his wages from time to time in his master's hands, and it was agreed between them that the debt thus due should carry interest:—Held, that the statute did not operate as a bar to arrears of interest upon the sum left by the servant in his master's, the testator's, hands. Blower v. Blower, 5 Jur., N. S. 33; 28 L. J., Chanc. 181—V. C. S.

A testator gave a fund to his executrix for her life, subject to the immediate payment thereout of a legacy, to be divided among the children of P., to whom he also gave the fund after the death of the executrix. He died in 1847. One of P.'s children, of whom there had been five, was last heard of in 1845. The executrix, W., retained one-fifth of the legacy. She became lunatic in 1851, whereupon the fund was carried to an account entitled "The account of W. and the children of P.," and the income of the whole was applied for the benefit of the lunatic. To a petition presented in 1871 by the four surviving children, for payment of the fifth share, which remained unpaid out of the fund, and for the payment of the interest thereon out of another fund belonging absolutely to the lunatic, it was objected that the Statute of Limitations was a bar.—Held, that the statute was no bar to the claim for the principal, but was a bar to the claim for more than six years' interest. Walker, In re, 41 L. J., Chanc. 219; 7 L. R., Ch. 120; 20 W. R. 171.

An ordinary administration decree in a legatee's suit operates as a judgment in favor of creditors; so that time under the Statute of Limitations begins to run from the date of the decree. Finch v. Finch, 45 L. J., Chanc. Div. 610; 35 L. T., N. S. 285—V. C. B.

As to when claims for legacies are barred by lapse of time, — see LEGACY.

Claims of set off.—In cases under 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 2, the statute is not a bar to a set-off, unless the six years have expired before the action is brought. Walker v. Clements, 15 Q. B. 1046.

In an action which contained several demands, a defendant pleaded, except as to one, a set-off and the statute. The plaintiff, in order to take the case out of the statute, put in evidence the particulars of set-off, containing an item, "paid to the plaintiff 15l.:"—Held, that the particulars were no evidence in support of the plea of set-off. Burkitt v. Blanshard, 3 Exch. 80; 18 L. J., Exch. 34.

A debt due to an intestate's estate from one of the next of kin, barred by the Statute of Limitations, was set off against his share in the estate. White v. Cordwell, 44 L. J., Chanc. 746; 20 L. R., Eq. 644; 33 W. R. 826—V. C. B.

Bills of costs.—Where a client employs an attorney to conduct a suit, it is an entire contract to carry on the suit to its termination, and determinable only on reasonable notice; and where no such notice has been given, the statute is no bar to that part of the demand which is for business done more than six years before the commencement of an action by the attorney for business done in the suit, which was not brought to a termination till within six years of the commencement of the action. Harris v. Osbourn, 2 C. & M. 629; 4 Tyr. 445.

A proctor sued for the amount of his bill, which was chiefly for work done in prosecuting an appeal to judgment; after the judgment a communication had been made by the adverse party to the proctor, and attended to by him, respecting the costs, and an item in respect of this transaction was added to his bill. No previous part of the demand accrued within six years.—Held, that the latter item did not take the rest out of the statute. Rothery v. Munnings, 1 B. & Ad. 15.

Where costs are incurred in a suit, the statute does not begin to run against the earlier items, until the suit is terminated. Martindale v. Fulkner, 2 C. B. 700.

A employed an attorney in procuring him money to pay off a mortgage. In an action against A for the bill of costs, it appeared by items in the bill that the attorney had made applications in several quarters for this purpose, but without success, after which he wrote to the attorney informing him what he had done, and requesting to know his wishes. This item bore date more than six years before action. The next, dated within six years, was, "Paid the postage of your answer." By subsequent items it appeared that further endeavors were made by the attorney to raise the money. Ultimately it was obtained.—Held, that the transaction was not one in which the attorney's employment was continuous, and that the latter items did not draw after them the previous ones, so as to take these out of the statute. Phillips v. Broadley, 9 Q. B. 744; 11 Jur. 264; 16 L. J., Q. B. 72.

A solicitor was retained in a chancery suit in which his client was a defendant, and an order was made that a supplemental bill should be filed, to make the next of kin parties to the suit; no decree was ever made, nor was there any further step taken in the suit. Upwards of ten years after this order had been made the solicitor's client died.—Held, in an action by the solicitor against the representative of the client for his bill of costs up to the time when the order was made, that the debt was not barred by the statute. Whitehead v. Lord, 7 Exch. 691, 21 L. J., Exch. 239.

Two attorneys in partnership having been retained to defend an action, it was decided in favor of the defendant, upon which the plaintiffs appealed. While the appeal was pending, the partnership was dissolved, and the proceedings were continued by one of the partners separately.—Held, that the partners were not entitled to sue for their costs till the appeal was decided, so that the statute did not until then begin to run as against their claim. Harris v. Quine, 38 L. J., Q. B. 331; 4 L. R., Q. B. 653; 20 L. T., N. S. 947; 17 W. R. 367.

Writs of error.—[By the Common Law Procedure Act, 1853 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 146, no judgment in any cause shall be reversed or avoided for any error or defect therein, unless error be commenced or brought and prosecuted with effect, within six years after such judgment signed or entered of record.

By s. 147, if any person that is or shall be entitled to bring error is or shall be, at the time of such title accrued, within the age of twenty-one years, fons covert, non compos mentis, or beyond the seas, then such person shall be at liberty to bring error, so as such person commences, or brings and prosecutes the same with effect, within six years after coming to or being of full age, discovert, of sound memory, or return from beyond the seas; and if the opposite party shall, at the time of the judgment signed or entered of record, be beyond the seas, then error may be brought, provided the proceedings be commenced and prosecuted with effect within six years after the return of such party from beyond seas.]

On reversal of judgment or of outlawry.—[By 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 4, if in any the said actions or suits judgment be given for the plaintiff off, and the same be reversed by error, or a verdict pass for the plaintiff, and upon matter alleged in arrest of judgment, the judgment be given against the plaintiff, that he take nothing by his plaint, writ or bill, or if any the said actions shall be brought by original and the defendant therein be outlawed, and shall after reverse the outlawry, in all such cases the party plaintiff, his heirs, executors or administrators, as the case shall require, may commence a new action or suit from time to time within a year after such judgment reversed, or such judgment be given against the plaintiff or outlawry reversed, and not after.

By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 6, a similar limitation and permission are prescribed as to actions upon awards where the submission is not by specialty, or for fines due in respect of copyhold estates, or for money levied under a fi. fa.]

A writ of revivor is not an action upon a judgment within the Irish C. L. P. Act, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 113, s. 20; and the period of limitation in such proceedings is still regulated by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 40. Wall v. Walsh, 4 Ir. R., C. L. 108—Q. B.

(b) In Respect of Particular Persons and Officers; and of Acts done under Statutes of a Local and Personal Nature.

The crown.—[See 21 Jac. 1, c. 2, s. 1; 9 Geo. 3, c. 16, the Nullum Tempus Act; 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, ss. 1, 2; 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 100; 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 99, ss. 12, 13.]

The crown not being mentioned in 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3, is not within its operation. Lambert v. Taylor, 4 B. & C. 138; 6 D. & R. 188.

Returns of any particular subject-matter by auditors in their accounts of the crown revenue, are sufficient proof of its having been kept in charge to protect the claim of the crown from the operation of the 9 Geo. 3, c. 16, although they have returned "Nihil," and the claim has not been put in suit thereon for more than sixty years. Att. Gen. v. Eardley, 8 Price, 39; 1 Daniel, 271.

So, if the auditors make due returns to the office of commissioners for auditing the public accounts of the rents and other profits of lands, forming part of the crown revenue, those returns constitute a putting in charge within that statute, so as to save the right of the crown from the operation of that act; although the auditors have for more than sixty years received nothing in respect of such revenue, and though the crown within that time had not instituted any suit or proceeding to recover any part of it. Att. Gen. v. Maxwell, 8 Price, 76, n.

The statute may be pleaded to a scire facias issued by the crown against the drawer of a bill of exchange in the hands of the crown debtor, and which has been seized by the sheriff under an inquisition on prerogative process. Rez v. Morrall, 9 Price, 24.

As to limitations of proceedings on behalf of the crown in respect of real property,—see this title, II., 1.

Corporations are not less liable to the operation of prescription than private persons. Dundee Harbor (Trustees) v. Dougall, 1 Macq. H. L. Cas. 317.

Actions by or against assignees or trustees of insolvents or bankrupts; and for acts done under the bankruptcy laws.—[By the Bankruptcy Consolidation Act, 13 & 18 Vict. c. 106, ss. 159, 278, every action against any person for anything done in pursuance of that statute, must be commenced within three calendar months next after the fact committed.]

Where the statute had begun to run against a petitioning creditor's debt, before the commission issued, it shall not be taken advantage of by a third person against the assignees. Quantock v. England, 2 W. Bl. 702; 5 Burr. 2628.

A debtor to a bankrupt, when sued by his assignees, cannot set up the statute as an objection to the petitioning creditor's debt. Mavor v. Pyne, 2 C. & P. 91; 3 Bing. 285; 11 Moore, 2.

The statute does not attach to a debt proved under a commission or a fiat of bankruptcy. Healey, Ex parte, 1 Deac. & Chit. 861.

Or affect the creditors of an insolvent, in respect of the time elapsed since his discharge. Barton v. Tattersall, 1 Tam. 878.

If property is delivered by a trustee to an auctioneer for sale, who retains the proceeds, and pays interest thereon to the cestuis que trust, he is a constructive trustee; so that, on his bankruptcy, the statute is no bar to a proof. Gowers, Ex parte, 3 Mont. & Ayr. 172.

To an action by the assignees of an insolvent debtor to recover money owing to him before his insolvency, in which they declared that, in consideration of the money being due to the insolvent, the defendant promised to pay it to them as assignees, it is a bad plea to say "that the cause of action first accrued to the insolvent before the plaintiffs became assignees, and that six years had elapsed after the cause of action first accrued to the insolvent, and before the suing out the writ of the plaintiffs." Kinder v. Paris, 2 H. Bl. 561.

Trover may be brought against the assignees of a bankrupt after the expiration of three months from the time of the alleged conversion, and therefore, they are not within the protection of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 44. Carruthers v. Payne, 2 M. & P. 429; 5 Bing. 270.

Where assignees of a bankrupt entered the premises of a third person, to seize goods which were the property of the bankrupt, it is not necessary that an action should be brought against them within three months after the fact committed; the act of the assignees not being done "in pursuance of the statute," within 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 44. Edge v. Parker, 8 B. & C. 697; 3 M. & R. 365.

The 52 Geo. 3, c. 165, s. 54, by which a right was reserved to creditors to obtain payment out of the future effects of the insolvent, did not prevent the operation of the statute. Browning v. Purns, 5 M. & W. 117; 7 D. P. C. 398; 2 H. & H. 63.

Actions against justices of the peace.—[By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 8, no action shall be brought against any justice of the peace, for anything done by him in the execution of his office, unless the same be commenced within six calendar months next after the act complained of shall have been committed. (Former similar provision, 24 Geo. 2, c. 24, s. 8.)]

A complaint having been made against a pawnbroker before a police magistrate, appointed under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 73, the pawnbroker called his assistant as a witness, and he was sworn and examined before the magistrate, who cautioned him against committing perjury. The case was subsequently dismissed from want of jurisdiction in the magistrate; but he, being dissatisfied with the evidence of the assistant, ordered him to be detained without any complaint being made, and afterwards took bail for his appearance, as on a charge of perjury, upon a subsequent day. Upon that day the parties attended, and the charge of perjury was gone into, and the magistrate subsequently took the recognizance of the assistant for his appearance to answer an indictment for perjury. A bill was preferred, but returned not found. The assistant afterwards brought an action for trespass and false imprisonment against the magistrate. The action was not commenced until more than three months after the commission of the alleged trespass, but within six months:—Held, that the magistrate was entitled to the statutory protection of section 53, which limits the time for commencing the action to three months after the fact committed, and therefore the action was too late. Haseldine v. Grove, 3 G. & D. 210; 3 Q. B. 997; 7 Jur. 86; 12 L. J., M. C. 54.

The time limited for bringing actions against justices of a metropolitan police district, in respect of a conviction, under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 18, made in exercise of the jurisdiction given them by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 64, s. 6, is three calendar months, the period prescribed by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 53, and not six calendar months, the period given by 10 Geo. 4, c. 44, s. 41. Barnett v. Cox, 1 Q. B. 617; 2 New Sess. Cas. 486; 11 Jur. 118; 16 L. J., M. C. 27.

A magistrate is liable to answer in an action for such part of an imprisonment suffered under his warrant, as was within six calendar months before the action commenced against him. Mussey v. Johnson, 12 East, 87.

An action brought within six months after the end of a long imprisonment by a justice's warrant is sufficient. Pickersill v. Palmer, Bull. N. P. 24.

In an action against a justice of the peace, for false imprisonment, it appeared that the plaintiff was discharged from prison on the 14th December, and the writ issued on the 14th of June:—Held, that the action was commenced in time. Hardy v. Ryle, 9 B. & C. 608; 4 M. & R. 205.

In an action against magistrates for an act done by them ex officio the plaintiff must show at nisi prius that he proceeded upon a writ sued out within six months after notice to them of the action, although there is a continuing cause of action, and therefore he must show a return and a continuance of the first writ, if the second is out of the time fixed by the notice. Weston v. Fournier, 14 East, 491.

Actions against constables.—[By 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, s. 8, no action shall be brought against any justice of the peace for anything done in the execution of his office, or against any constable, headborough or other officer, or person acting as aforesaid, unless commenced within six calendar months after the act committed.]

A constable who, acting bona fide under a warrant commanding him to take the goods of one person, by mistake takes those of another, is protected, and, therefore, an action must be brought against him within six calendar months. Parton v. Williams, 3 B. & A. 830.

So, where constables were directed under a warrant, to search a house for black cloth, and took cloths of another description, and carried them before a magistrate, refusing at the time they took them to tell the owner of the house searched whether they had any warrant or not:—Held, within the protection of the statute, and that an action against them ought to have been commenced within six calendar months. Smith v. Waltham, 5 Moore, 823; 2 B. & B. 619.

A constable acting colore, not virtute officii, is not protected from actions not commenced within six months. Alcock v. Andrews, 2 Esp. 543, n. Kenyon.

So, if he acts without a warrant at all. Postlethwaite v. Gibson, 3 Esp. 226—Kenyon.

It seems that if a constable acts in his character as such, even without a warrant, that he is within the statute. Fried v. Croft, 5 Moore, 830, cited. And see Graves v. Arnold, 3 Camp. 242.

An overseer of the poor, who distrains for a poor's rate under a justice's warrant, is an officer within the protection of the act. Nutting v. Jackson, Bull. N. P. 24.

Where a constable having a magistrates' warrant of distress to levy a church rate, under 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, broke the door of and entered the plaintiff's dwelling-house:—Held, that although he thereby exercised his authority, yet that no action could be maintained after the expiration of three calendar months. Theobald v. Cuthmore, 1 B. & A. 227.

Under 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 12, which requires that an action for anything done in pursuance of the act shall be commenced within three calendar months after the fact committed, an action for seizing, taking, and carrying away and distraining and selling the plaintiff's goods, under a warrant of distress for arrears of a church rate, may be brought within three calendar months after the sale. Collins v. Rye, 5 M. & W. 194.

A constable who does an act bonâ fide, intending to do his duty, is within the protection of the statute. Gosden v. Elphick, 4 Exch. 445; 7 D. & L. 194; 13 Jur. 989; 19 L. J., Exch. 9.

A. obtained a magistrate's warrant for the apprehension of B. upon a criminal charge which, on the hearing, was dismissed. This warrant was directed "To the constable of D." (a parish in the county of W.) A. delivered the warrant to a county constable of W., and directed him to execute it, which he did:—Held, that the warrant could not be executed by any other constable than by a constable of the parish of D., and consequently that the execution of it by the county constable was illegal; and that the action not having been brought within six months after the commission of the trespass, the constable was protected. Freegard v. Freegard v. Barnes, 7 Exch. 837; 21 L. J., Exch. 320.

Actions against guardians of unions or of parishes.—No action can be maintained against the guardians of a union or a parish for any debt, claim, or demand due from them unless such action is commenced within the half-year in which the same shall have been incurred or become due, or within three months after the expiration of such half year, or unless the time has been extended by the Poor Law Board, under 23 & 23 Vict. c. 49, s. 1. Baker v. Billericay Union (Guardians), 2 H. & C. 642; 33 L. J., M. C. 40; 13 W. R. 11.

Actions against officers of excise.—[By 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 115, any action or suit against any person or persons, for any matter or thing done by any officer or officers of excise, or any others acting in his or their aid, must be commenced within three calendar months next after the cause of action shall have arisen.]

An action cannot be maintained against officers of the customs, for seizing goods as forfeited by the revenue laws, unless brought within three months after the actual seizure: notwithstanding a suit is instituted in the Court of Exchequer for the condemnation of the goods, which is depending at the expiration of the three months. Godin v. Ferris, 2 H. Bl. 14.

Where the commander of one of the king's armed vessels seized a vessel and cargo at sea, and brought them into the next port on suspicion of smuggling, and after process in the Exchequer the owner obtained an order for redelivery, under which he obtained only part of the goods from the defendant:—Held, that the owner could not maintain trover for the remainder, if the action was brought after three months from the original seizure, though within three months from the order for the redelivery. Saunders v. Saunders, 2 East, 254.

Where an officer in the preventive service boarded a ship, and left three men on board, and two days afterwards decided on seizing her; and the owner having sued him for such seizure:—Held, that the three months within which the action should have been commenced under 23 Geo. 3, c. 37, s. 23, must be computed from the day of boarding the vessel. Crook v. M. Turkish, 8 Moore, 265; 1 Bing. 167.

Actions for acts done under particular statutes, and statutes of a local and personal nature.—[Whereas, divers acts commonly called public, local and personal, or local and personal acts, and divers other acts of a local and personal nature, contain clauses limiting the time within which actions may be brought for anything done in pursuance of the several acts respectively: and whereas the periods of such limitations vary very much, and it is expedient that there should be one period of limitation only: be it therefore enacted, that, from and after the passing of this act (10th August 1842), the period within which any action may be brought for anything done under the authority or in pursuance of any such act or acts, shall be two years, or, in case of continuing damage, then within one year after such damage shall have ceased; and that so much of any clause, provision or enactment by which any other time or period of limitation is appointed or enacted, shall be and the same is hereby repealed. (5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, s. 5.)]

An act which was printed as a local and personal act, and contained a clause, enacting that it should be deemed a public act, and judicially noticed as such, gave jurisdiction to the commissioners appointed under it over debts wheresoever contracted, and any person might sue in this court, if the defendant happened to be in any of the places named in the act:—Held, a public local and personal act within this statute. Cock v. Gent, 1 D. & L. 413; 12 M. & W. 234; 13 L. J., Exch. 24.

But the Metropolitan Police Acts, 3 & 3 Vict. c. 47; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71; and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 84, are not. Barnett v. Cox, 2 New Sess. Cas. 487; 9 Q. B. 617; 11 Jur. 118; 16 L. J., M. C. 27.

The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 21, empowers justices of the county of Lancaster to make rates on the division of Manchester for the purposes of the act; and s. 21 enacts, that all the provisions of any subsisting act, relating to the enforcing of county rates, shall be taken to apply to rates made under this act. The 55 Geo. 3, c. 51 (a County Rate Act), by s. 23, enacted, that all actions against any person, for anything done by virtue of that act, shall be brought within three months after the fact committed:—Held, that an action against the justices, for issuing a warrant of distress against the goods of an overseer for not collecting and paying over a rate made under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 21, ought to have been brought within three months, as s. 21 of the latter act incorporated s. 23 of 55 Geo. 3, c. 51. Boden v. Smith, 13 Jur. 428; 18 L. J., C. P. 121.

Held, also, that even supposing the 8 & 9

Vict. c. 31, to be a local act, it repealed the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, so far as regarded the period of limitation for bringing this action. Id.

The Ramsgate Harbor Acts, 33 Geo. 3, c. 74, and 35 Geo. 3, c. 84, are acts of a local and personal nature. Sharp v. Shepherd, 1 H. & N. 115; 2 Jur., N. S. 617; 25 L. J., Exch. 254—Exch. Cham. S. P., Moore v. Shepherd, 10 Exch. 424; 24 L. J., Exch. 28.

If a statute for allotting waste lands within a manor directs all disputed claims to be tried by a feigned issue, and limits the time of bringing such action to six months: an action brought against a copyholder within time, if abated by his death, must be revived against the heir, within six months after the plaintiff has notice of the descent, though the heir is not admitted till long after that time. Knight v. Bate, Cowp. 738.

An act authorized a company to make and maintain docks, and to appoint a dock-master, who should have power to direct the mooring, unmooring, moving and removing of all vessels into or in the docks, and should have control over the space of 100 yards from the entrance into the docks, so far as related to the transporting of vessels in and out; the company to be sued in the name of their treasurer; and every action brought against any person for anything done in pursuance of the act, to be commenced within six calendar months after the fact committed. In an action brought against the treasurer for damage done to a vessel by means of improper directions given by the dock-master in transporting her into the docks:—Held, that giving such directions was a thing done in pursuance of the act, and that the action should have been commenced within six calendar months after those directions were given. Smith v. Shaw, 5 M. & R. 225; 10 B. & C. 277.

Where a canal company was empowered to supply the canal with water from all streams whatsoever within the distance of 2,000 yards, except as thereafter mentioned, with a proviso that nothing should extend to authorize them to take water from certain specified streams, between 10th June and 10th September, except only that, if one of those streams should overflow, the same may be taken into the canal so long as such overflowing should continue, and that all actions should be brought for anything to be done in pursuance of the act, or in the execution of the powers and authorities before given, within six calendar months after the fact committed; or, in case of a continuation of damages, within three calendar months after the committing such damages should have ceased:—Held, that the taking and continuing to take the water by the company from one of the specified streams, during the prohibited times, might, nevertheless, be so far a thing done in execution of the powers and authorities given them by the act, as to entitle the company to the protection of the act as to the time of commencing the action against them. Gaby v.

Wills and Berks Canal Company, 3 M. & S. 580.

By acts of parliament enabling a company to make and maintain a canal navigation, and to take lands for that purpose, making satisfaction, it was provided that the company should not take any garden ground without the consent of the owners and occupiers, and that any action to be brought for anything done in pursuance of these acts should be commenced within six calendar months next after the facts should have been committed; or, if there should be a continuance of damage, then within six calendar months next after the committing of such damage should have ceased. The company, wishing to take garden ground for the purpose of sloping the banks of the canal, told the occupier, a tenant, that they had obtained the consent of the owner's agent, without which the tenant would not have given their permission; but the statement was not true. They then paid him a sum which he demanded on account of a former transaction, after which they entered and sloped away the ground. The land in consequence was thenceforth overflowed by the Thames at every high tide. For this damage the landlord sued the company, but not before more than six calendar months after the ground was taken, and the tide let in:—Held, that the injury was one for which an action should have been brought within six calendar months after the taking away of the land; and that the company was within the protection of the limiting clause, inasmuch as the act complained of was really done for the purpose contemplated by the statutes, though in the prosecution of that purpose the company had been guilty of a misrepresentation amounting to bad faith towards the occupier. Onkley v. Kensington Canal Company, 5 B. & Ad. 138.

A canal company was authorized by statute to demand and sue for tolls upon the carriage of goods, and to distrain any carriage of goods in respect of which such tolls ought to be paid, and to detain the same until payment made of such tolls and of all arrears of the same due from the owner of such carriage or goods; and in case such distress should not be redeemed within five days, to appraise and sell the same, as in the case of a distress for rent; they were not expressly authorized to levy any toll upon carriages. The statute enacted, that any action brought for anything done in pursuance of the act, or in execution of the powers and authorities granted by it, should be brought within six calendar months next after the fact committed:—Held, first, that a distress for non payment of tolls was a thing done in pursuance of the act. Jenkins v. Cooke, 1 A. & E. 372.

Held, secondly, that where the owner of trams let them to a third person, and during such letting they were illegally distrained for arrears due from the person hiring, while not carrying such person's goods, and afterwards sold, such owner might sue within six months from the time of sale on a count complaining of injury done to his reversionary interest by the seizure and sale. Id. S. P., Collins v. Ross, 5 M. & W. 194.

A surveyor under a local drainage act may take advantage of a clause limiting the commencement of actions to six months after the act done, where the injury happened to the plaintiff within six months of the action brought, although it does not appear that a compensation, as directed by the statute for the act complained of, has been made, or a certain course therein specified pursued, on the observance of which he only could have a right of entry on the lands of others. Boothby v. Morton, 7 Moore, 51; 3 B. & B. 239.

Though the 18 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 81, directed that actions against any persons for anything done or acted in pursuance thereof, should be commenced within three calendar months after the fact committed, and not afterwards; yet where surveyors of highways, in the execution of their office, undermined a wall adjoining to the highway, which did not fall till more than three months afterwards, they were subject to an action on the case for the consequential injury, within three months after the falling of the wall. Roberts v. Read, 16 East, 215.

By a private act it was enacted, that a company should be sued within "six calendar months after the fact committed."—Held, that the limitation ran from the time of the consequential injury happening, and not from the doing of the act which caused that consequential injury; the act itself not being tortious or injurious, except from those consequences which occurred some time after. Gillon v. Boddington, 1 C. & P. 541; R. & M. 161—Abbott.

A local improvement act enacted that actions against persons proceeding under the act should be brought within six calendar months next after the matter or thing done. The treasurer, surveyor, and contractors under the act dug a sewer near the plaintiff's house, in consequence of which the foundation was sunk and the walls were cracked:—Held, that the right of action was limited to six months from the day the cracks were occasioned. Lloyd v. Wigney, 4 M. & P. 222; 6 Bing. 489.

By a railway act it was provided, that no action should be brought against any person for anything done, or omitted to be done, in pursuance of the act, unless such action should be commenced within six months next after the act committed, or, in case of a continuation of damages, then within six months next after committing such damages should have ceased. By a subsequent act the company was authorized to alter the course of a canal, provided that, if, in the execution of the works, the canal should be obstructed, the company should pay to the proprietors of the canal 10*l.* an hour as liquidated damages during the continuance of the obstruction, and in default of payment of such sum on demand, the proprietors might recover the same in an action. The company in the execution of their works obstructed the canal in 1840, and June, 1841. In May, 1842, the proprietors of the canal made a demand on the company for the penalties for the two obstructions, the last of which they described in their demand as having ceased on the 11th of June, 1841. In June, 1842, they brought an action for the penalties:—Held, that the action was not brought in time, as the limitation of six months for bringing the action began to run from the ceasing of the obstruction, and not from the demand and non-payment of the penalties. Kennet and Avon Canal Company v. Great Western Railway Company, 7 Q. B. 824; 4 Railw. Cas. 90; 9 Jur. 788; 14 L. J., Q. B. 825.

A. was mortgagee from B. of leasehold coal mines and barges. B. afterwards demised the mines, and assigned the barges to C.:—Held, that A. might bring trover against D., who tortiously seized and sold the barges and part of the produce of the mines. The seizure and sale were for tolls claimed to be due to a canal company:—Held, that no injury resulted to it until the sale; and that therefore an action brought within six months of the sale, but more than six months after the seizure, was not barred by a clause in the canal act, limiting the commencement of actions for anything done in pursuance of that act to within six months after the fact committed. Frazer v. Swansea Canal Company, 3 N. & M. 391; 1 A. & E. 354.

By a statute, it was provided that no action should be brought "after six calendar months after the cause of such action should have arisen." A nuisance was caused on the 2d April, and continued until the 2d July, and the jury gave damages at the rate of 10*l.* per month; the action was not commenced until the 30th December:—Held, that damages for two days only could be recovered, the action being brought too late to sustain the previous damage. Wilks v. Hungerford Market Company, 2 Scott, 446; 2 Bing. N. C. 281; 1 Hodges, 281.

A., who was entitled by an act of Parliament to all the surplus water and such as was not necessary for the purposes of a canal, brought an action against the canal company for an illegal abstraction of water, and alleged in his declaration continuing acts of commission and omission from an antecedent period, by which he was deprived of the water for nine weeks in 1825, and for seventeen weeks in 1826:—Held, that the company was within the protection of the limitation clause of the 30 Geo. 3, c. 82, s. 79, which enacts, that any action for anything done in pursuance of the act shall be brought within six calendar months next after the fact committed, unless there was a continuation of damage; and also, that there was no continuation of damage, inasmuch as there was a cessation of injury, although the cause from which the injury proceeded was continuing. Blakemore v. Glamorganshire Canal Company, 3 Y. & J. 60.

By 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 147, all actions against trustees of any turnpike-road for anything done in pursuance of the act must be commenced within three months after the fact committed. Trustees of a turnpike-road, acting bona fide in execution of the powers conferred upon them by their act, converted an open ditch at the side of the road into a covered drain, placing gratings at intervals, with catch-pits, to carry off the water from the surface of the road into the drain; but, in consequence of the negligent way in which the catch-pits were constructed and kept, the drain was, in times of heavy rain, insufficient to carry off the water in its accustomed channel, and it was consequently diverted to the plaintiff's land, and drowned his colliery:—Held, that an action within three months after the damage sustained from this continuing nuisance was in time, and that the trustees were liable. Whitehouse v. McGregor, 10 C. B., N. S. 765; 80 L. J., C. P. 806; 7 W. R. 557; 4 L. T., N. S. 177.

The plaintiffs claimed compensation in respect of their messuage having been injuriously affected by the sewage works of the Board of Works, made by them under the powers of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855; and by an agreement between the plaintiffs and the Board of Works, under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the amount of compensation, if any, to which they were entitled was referred to an arbitrator:—Held, in an action for the amount of compensation awarded, that it was no defense that the claim for compensation was made more than six months after the damages had been sustained, since s. 106 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, so limiting the time for issuing process, or instituting any proceeding against the Board of Works, for anything done under the powers of their acts, did not apply to such a claim, and if it could apply, the objection that the claim was made too late should have been set up when the plaintiffs gave notice of their claim, and not after the matter had, with the board's consent, been referred. Delany v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 8 L. R., C. P. 111; 37 L. J., C. P. 59; 17 L. T., N. S. 262; 16 W. R. 137—Exch. Cham.; affirming S. C., 3 L. R., C. P. 532; 36 L. J., C. P. 237; 16 L. T., N. S. 380; 15 W. R. 841.

H., late in the evening, was crossing a bridge, from which the handrail had fallen into the brook below. He stretched out his hand to hold it, believing it to be in its usual place, fell over the bridge, and sustained injuries for which he sued the highway board in the county court. Notice that the rail was unsafe had previously been given to the board, and it was repaired by them a few days after. The county court judge nonsuited the plaintiff on the ground that the action was not brought within three months, according to the Highway Act, 1835, s. 6 & 4 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 109:—Held, that this omission to repair was something done in pursuance or under the authority of that act, and that the county court judge was right.

Holland v. Northwich Highway Board, 34 L. T., N. B. 187—D. C. A.

2. Suspension; Disabilities; Exceptions.

Suspensory disabilities, generally.]—By 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 7, if any person or persons that is or shall be entitled to any such action of trespass, detinue, action sur trover, replevin, actions of account, actions of debt, actions of trespass for assault, menace, battery, wounding or imprisonment, actions on the case for words, be or shall be at the time of any such cause of action given or accrued, fallen or come within the age of twenty-one years, feme covert, non compos mentis [imprisoned or beyond the seas are no longer disabilities by virtue of] 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 10, then such person or persons shall be at liberty to bring the same actions, so as they take the same within such times as are before mentioned after their coming to or being of full age, discreet, of sane memory [or returned from beyond the seas, as other persons having no such impediment should have done].

By 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, s. 18, if any person or persons who is or shall be entitled to any suit or action for seamen's wages, be or shall be at the time of any such cause of suit or action accrued, fallen or come within the age of twenty-one years, feme covert, non compos mentis [imprisoned or beyond the seas are no longer disabilities since] 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 10, then such person or persons shall be at liberty to bring the same actions, so as they take the same within six years next after their coming to or being of full age, discreet, of sane memory [at large, and returned from beyond the seas].

By s. 10, if any person or persons against whom there is or shall be any such cause of suit or action for seamen's wages, or against whom there shall be any cause of action of trespass, detinue, actions sur trover, or replevin, for taking away goods or cattle, or of action of account, or upon the case, or of debt grounded upon any lending or contract, without specialty of debt for arrears of rent, or assault, menace, battery, wounding and imprisonment, or any of them, be or shall be at the time of any such cause, or suit, or action given or accrued, fallen, or come, beyond the seas, then such person or persons who is or shall be entitled to any such suit or action shall be at liberty to bring the said actions against such person or persons after their return from beyond the seas, so as they take the same after their return from beyond the seas, within such times as are respectively limited for the bringing of the said actions before by this act and by the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16.

By 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 4, if any person or persons that is or are or shall be entitled to any such action or suit, or to such action [see section 3, col. 8545], is or are or shall be at the time of any such cause of action accrued within the age of twenty-one years, feme covert, non compos mentis [or beyond the seas, by] 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 10, this is no longer a disability, then such person or persons shall be at liberty to bring the same actions, so as they com-

once the same within such times after their dying to or being of full age, discover, of sound memory [or returned from beyond the seas], as her persons having no such impediment should, according to the provisions of this act, have done; and if any person or persons, against whom there shall be any such cause of action, is or are or will be at the time of such cause of action accrued beyond the seas, then the person or persons entitled to any such cause of action shall be at liberty to bring the same against such person or persons within such times as before limited after the return of such person or persons from beyond the seas, no longer a disability by virtue of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 10.]

When the statute once begins to run, it continues to do so, notwithstanding any subsequent disability. Cutterell v. Dutton, 4 Taunt. 826. S. P., Doe d. Griggs v. Sheen, 4 Taunt. 826.

In computing the time under 3 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 17, it is not necessary to the operation of the statute that there must be continued laches on the part of the plaintiff during the full period of six years; but the rule is, that the statute begins to run so soon as there is in existence in England a plaintiff capable of suing; and having once begun to run, no subsequent interruption to the right of suing, even from causes beyond his control, will stop it. Rhodes v. Smethurst, 4 M. & W. 42; 1 H. & H. 237; 2 Jur. 893; affirmed in error, 6 M. & W. 351; 4 Jur. 702—Exch. Cham.

But if, after the statute has begun to run, the right to sue and the liability to be sued meet by act of law in the same person, the running of the statute is suspended. Seagram v. Knight, 36 L. J., Chanc. 918; 15 W. R. 1152—C.

On reversal of judgment or of outlawry.]

—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 6, if in any of the said actions [see section 4, supra, col. 8618] judgment be given for the plaintiff, and the same be reversed by error, or a verdict pass for the plaintiff, and upon matter alleged in arrest of judgment the judgment be given against the plaintiff, that he take nothing by his plaint, writ or bill, or if in any of the said actions the defendant shall be outlawed, and shall after reverse the outlawry, then in all such cases the party plaintiff, his executors or administrators, as the case shall require, may commence a new action or suit from time to time within a year after such judgment reversed, or such judgment given against the plaintiff, or outlawry reversed, and not after.]

Parties in prison.]—[By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 10, no person or persons who shall be entitled to any action or suit with respect to which the period of limitation within which the same shall be brought is fixed by 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3, or by 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 17, or by 43 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 5, or by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 40, 41, 42, and 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3, or by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 113, s. 20 (Irish), shall be entitled to any time, within which to commence and sue such action or suit, beyond the period so fixed for the same by the enactments aforesaid, or in cases in which, by virtue of any of the aforesaid enactments, imprisonment is now a disability, by reason of such person or some one or more of such persons being imprisoned at the time of such cause of action or suit accrued.]

This section applies to cases where the cause of action accrued before the act came into operation, and no action is commenced till after that period. Cornill v. Hudson, 8 El. & Bl. 429; 3 Jur., N. S. 1257; 27 L. J., Q. B. 8.

An action was brought for willfully and maliciously procuring A., as creditor of the plaintiff, to oppose the discharge of the plaintiff by the Insolvent Debtors Court, and for willfully and maliciously obtaining from A. an affidavit, containing, to the defendant's knowledge, a false statement, and for using the affidavit in the opposition, by reason of which the plaintiff was adjudged to be discharged as soon as he should have been in custody sixteen months from the date of the order, at the suit of A., and that, by reason of the premises and of a detainer lodged by the defendant, at the suit of A., while the plaintiff continued in custody, and before the expiration of the sixteen months, the plaintiff did not enjoy the benefit of the act so soon as he otherwise would, and was detained in prison. The action was commenced more than six years from the order of the court and the lodging of the detainer, but within six years of the termination of the imprisonment:—Held, that the action was barred by the statute. Violet v. Sympton, 8 El. & Bl. 344; 3 Jur., N. S. 1217; 27 L. J., Q. B. 138.

An action of assumpsit for unliquidated damages was within the saving clause of the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 7, and therefore, such an action accruing while the plaintiff was in prison, might be brought at any time within six years from the first time of his being at large. Or it might be commenced while the plaintiff continued in prison, or before his enlargement, although more than six years after the cause of action accrued. Piggott v. Rush, 6 N. & M. 376; 4 A. & E. 912; 2 H. & W. 29.

Foreigners and parties abroad.]—[By 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 7, no part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, nor the islands of Man, Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, and Sark, nor any islands adjacent to any of them, being part of the dominions of his Majesty, shall be deemed to be beyond the seas within the meaning of that act, or of the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16.

By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 10, no person or persons who shall be entitled to any action or suit with respect to which the period of limitation within which the same shall be brought is fixed by 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 3, or by 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 17, or by 43 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 3, or by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 40, 41, 42, and 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3, or by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 113, s. 20 (Irish), shall be entitled to any time, within which to commence and sue such action or suit, beyond the period so fixed for the same by the enactments aforesaid, by reason only of such person or some or one of such persons being, at the time of such cause of action or suit accrued, beyond the seas.

By s. 11, where such cause of action or suit with respect to which the period of limitation is fixed by the enactments aforesaid, or any of them, lies against two or more joint debtors, the person or persons who shall be entitled to the same shall not be entitled to any time within which to commence and sue any such action or suit against any one or more of such joint debtors, who shall not be beyond the seas at the time such cause of action or suit accrued, by reason only that some other one or more of such joint debtors was or were at the time such cause of action accrued beyond the seas;

And such person or persons so entitled as aforesaid shall not be barred from commencing and suing any action or suit against the joint debtor or joint debtors who was or were beyond seas at the time the cause of action or suit accrued after his or their return from beyond seas, by reason only that judgment was already recovered against any one or more of such joint debtors who was not or were not beyond seas at the time aforesaid. See King v. Hoare, 13 M. & W. 494.

By s. 12, no part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, nor the islands of Man, Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, and Sark, nor any islands adjacent to any of them, being part of the dominions of her Majesty, shall be deemed to be beyond seas within the meaning of the 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, or of the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97.]

The 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 7, was no bar to a party, whether a subject of the realm or a foreigner, who was not in England at the time the cause of action accrued, and who continued resident abroad. Le Vaux v. Berkeley, 3 D. & L. 81; 5 Q. B. 886; 8 Jur. 686; 13 L. J., Q. B. 218.

The absence beyond seas of one of several co-contractors, against whom there was a cause of action, prevented the statute from running. Fannin v. Anderson, 7 Q. B. 811; 9 Jur. 909; 14 L. J., Q. B. 282.

If one plaintiff is abroad, and the others in England, the action must be brought within six years after the cause of action arises. Perry v. Jackson, 4 T. R. 516.

The proviso in favor of persons under disabilities in 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 7, applied as well to foreigners who had never been in England as to parties residing abroad at the time of the accruing of the cause of action, and returning afterwards to England. Lafond v. Ruddock, 13 C. B. 818; 1 C. L. R. 339; 23 L. J., C. P. 217; 17 Jur. 624.

The words in 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 7, beyond the seas, are synonymous in legal import with the words out of the realm, or out of the land, or out of the territories, and are not to be construed literally. Ruckmaboy v. Lul-loobhoy Muttichund, 5 Moore Ind. App. 234; 8 Moore P. C. C. 4.

Under 4 Anne, c. 10, s. 10, if a right of action accrued against several, one of whom was beyond seas, the statute did not run till his return or death, though the others had never been absent from the kingdom. Tucas v. Mead, 16 C. B. 123; 3 C. L. R. 381; 1 Jur. N. S. 335; 24 L. J., C. P. 89.

The statute does not apply to a defendant who was abroad when the cause of action accrued, and who has not since returned, for, by 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 19, a plaintiff is not barred of his action, unless the defendant has returned, and six years have elapsed since his return. Forbes v. Smith, 11 Exch. 161; 1 Jur. N. S. 503; 24 L. J., Exch. 299.

Where two partners were sued in 1812 for a debt, and, one of them being abroad, writs were issued against him, with a view to outlawry; but a commission of bankruptcy having been sued out against the other partner, resident in England, the proceedings as to the outlawry were suspended; and the absent partner never returned to England, except by touching at Deal, in 1814, for a mere temporary purpose, in his passage from one foreign port to another:—Held, that the touching at Deal was not a return from beyond seas. Gregory v. Hurrell, 8 Moore, 169; 1 Bing. 324.

A. and B., bankers at Frankfort, sued C. on a bill of exchange, which became due on the 2d of December, 1848. He pleaded the statute, to which they replied, that, at the time of the accruing of the debt, they were beyond the seas, and that they did not, nor did either of them, come to England until within six years before the commencement of the action. In support of the replication, A. was called. He stated that he was not in England at any time between the maturity of the bill and 1851; and that his partner, B., had never been in England. Upon cross-examination, he admitted that B. was occasionally absent from Frankfort for three or four days, and sometimes for a week or a month together: Held, evidence to go to the jury, and that it was not necessary to call B. himself to negative his having been in England. Koch v. Sheppard, 18 C. B. 191.

Though the cause of action accrued within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court at Calcutta while both the parties were resident there, and by the king's charter, granted in pursuance of the 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, that court is authorized to exercise the same jurisdiction in civil cases as is exercised by the court of King's Bench within England by the common law, and assuming that by such authority the provisions of the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 7, and 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 19, are transferred to India, as part of the law of England, auxiliary to the common law, yet, by the express terms of the savings in those statutes, as applicable to the English courts, the plaintiff's right of action upon an assumpsit is saved, if he (having returned home before the defendant) commenced such action within six years after the defendant's return home, though more than six years had elapsed in India after the cause of action accrued there, and during the defendant's stay within the jurisdiction of the court in that country. Williams v. Jones, 13 East, 439.

The word "return" in 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 7, means being in England at the time when the statute begins to run, although the person has never been in England before. Pardo v. Bingham, 4 L. R., Ch. 735; 89 L. J., Chanc. 170; 20 L. T., N. S. 464; 17 W. R. 419.

The Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 10, is retrospective in its operation. Id.

Where, therefore, a creditor who was domiciled abroad, and had visited England in 1846, made no claim in England against his debtor's estate for debts contracted abroad before the passing of that act, within the time fixed by the Statute of Limitations:—Held, that he was barred from recovering with regard to debts contracted both before and after he was in England. Id.

As to the extent to which statutes of limitation are binding on foreigners, generally,—see this title, I.

License, fraud and other acts of creditor.]

—A mere letter of license by a creditor to his debtor does not suspend the operation of the statute. Fuller v. Redman, 26 Beav. 614.

Where a personal representative found among the papers of the deceased a mortgage deed, and assigned it more than six years before for the mortgage money, affirming and reciting in the deed of assignment that it was a mortgage deed, made or mentioned to have been made between the mortgagor and mortgagee for that sum:—Held, that the assignee could not recover back the mortgage money, although it appeared that the mortgage was a forgery, and that the assignee did not discover the forgery till within six years before he brought his action, unless the assignee knew it to be a forgery. Bell v. Holbeck, 2 Dougl. 654.

It is no answer to a plea of the statute that the plaintiff was prevented by the fraud of the defendant from knowing of the cause of action, until after the time of limitation expired. Imperial Gaslight and Coke Company v. London Gaslight Company, 10 Exch. 89; 2 C. L. R. 1230; 23 L. J., Exch. 803; 18 Jur. 497. See Hunter v. Gibbons, 1 H. & N. 459; 26 L. J., Exch. 1.

As to effect of fraudulent concealment of rights in respect of real property—see this title, II., 7.

Death of creditor or of debtor.]—If a plaintiff is in England at the time the cause of action accrues, the time of limitation begins to run; so that if he dies abroad, and his executor or administrator does not sue within six years, he is barred. Smith v. Hill, 1 Wils. 134.

But when a person dies abroad, to whom a right of action has accrued during his residence there, and he never returned to England after the accrual thereof, his executors may sue for it, although more than six years have elapsed since it accrued. Townsend v. Deacon, 3 Exch. 706; 6 D. & L. 659; 18 Jur. 386; 18 L. J., Exch. 298.

No one has a complete cause of action,—that is, a right to prosecute an action with effect,—until there is some one within the jurisdiction of the courts whom he can sue; and therefore, where a testator resided and died abroad:—Held, that his executor in England might be sued at any time within six years after taking out probate for a cause of action arising while the testator was abroad. Douglas v. Forrest, 4 Bing. 686; 1 M. & P. 663.

When a creditor of a firm in India died there before his right of action was barred by lapse of time, and his personal representative in Scotland brought an action there against the partner of the firm, twenty-three years after the creditor's death:—Held, that the English Statute of Limitations did not take effect, the action having been brought within six years after English letters of administration were taken out to the deceased creditor. Fergusson v. Pyffe, 8 C. & F. 121.

If time has once begun to run against a debt in the debtor's lifetime, it does not afterwards cease to run during the period which may elapse between his death and the time at which a personal representative to him is constituted. Fronke v. Cranefeldt, 3 Mylne & C. 499; 4 Jur. 1080. S. P., Rhodes v. Smethurst, 4 M. & W. 42; 2 Jur. 893; S. O. (in error), 6 M. & W. 851; 4 Jur. 702.

In an action by an administrator upon a bill of exchange, payable to the testator, but accepted after his death, the statute begins to run from the time of granting the letters of administration, and not from the time the bill becomes due, there being no cause of action until there is a party in a capacity to sue. Murray v. East India Company, 5 B. & A. 204.

It is not competent to an executor to maintain an action for a debt which accrued to his testator more than six years before the issuing of the writ of summons. Penny v. Brice, 18 C. B., N. S. 393; 13 W. R. 342; 11 L. T., N. S. 632.

A. had a right of action against B. for a debt, in respect of which the statute began to run in September, 1856. A. died on the 31st of May, 1862. His executor proved his will on the 12th of July, and commenced an action against B. on the 5th of November:—Held, that the statute was a bar to the claim, notwithstanding a jury (or an arbitrator) might think that the executor had commenced the action within a reasonable time. Id.

Where an action by a creditor against his debtor, commenced within six years, abates by reason of the death of the debtor, the reasonable time allowed for commencing a fresh action against the personal representatives of the debtor, in order to prevent the operation of the statute, under the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 4, dates from the grant of the letters of administration; and the right of a creditor in this respect is not affected by delay or laches on the part of the next of kin of the debtor in obtaining administration. Curlewis v. Morrington, 7 El. & Bl. 283; 8 Jur., N. S. 660; 26 L. J., Q. B. 181; affirmed on appeal, 4 Jur., N. S. 1102; 27 L. J., Q. B. 439—Exch. Cham.

In 1831 an obligee of a bond brought an action upon it against the obligor. After notice of trial, the action abated by the death of the obligor in 1835. The obligor left a will, which was not proved. In 1857, administration of the goods and effects of the obligor, with his will annexed, was granted to the defendant. In 1852, the obligee petitioned the Insolvent Debtors' Court, and his effects vested in the provisional assignee, who commenced an action on the bond against the defendant in 1859.—Held, that the right of action was not barred by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 6. Sturgis v. Darrell, 4 H. & N. 622; 28 L. J., Exch. 266; affirmed on appeal, 6 H. & N. 120; 6 Jur., N. S. 1851; 29 L. J., Exch. 472; 9 W. R. 653—Exch. Cham.

The same equitable construction which has been given to the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, should be given to the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, as regards actions on specialties. Id.

A person resident in Jersey died in 1850 indebted to a person resident in England. He appointed his wife executrix, and she proved the will in Jersey alone. The executrix had in 1851 been in England for three weeks, and had, while in Jersey, received a sum due to her testator in England.—Held, in 1860, that the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 12, did not apply, the executrix not having been liable to be sued in England, and having done no act there to constitute herself an English executrix. Flood v. Patterson, 29 Beav. 295; 30 L. J., Chanc. 486; 7 Jur., N. S. 824.

After six years from the last acknowledgment the Statute of Limitations is a bar to a simple contract debt of a testator, although there has been no legal personal representative to sue. Boatwright v. Boatwright, 23 W. R. 147—R.

3. Avoidance by Process.

Within what time.—[By 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 58, a plaintiff shall be deemed out of court unless he declares within one year after the writ of summons is returnable.]

Where an action must be brought within three months, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to prove a writ sued out within such time, and his declaration within a year afterwards, without showing such writ returned. Parsons v. King, 7 T. R. 6.

A concurrent writ of summons under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 9, can only be issued within six months from the time of issuing the original writ. Cole v. Sherard, 11 Exch. 482.

Where there are cross demands between parties, which accrued at nearly the same time, for which bills are given, both of which would be barred by the statute, but the plaintiff has saved his limitation by suing out process, and the defendant has not, such process operates upon the set-off, and prevents the plaintiff from availing himself of the statute to defeat it. Ord v. Ruggins, 2 Esp. 570—Kenyon.

A plea of the statute stated that the cause of action did not accrue within six years next before the commencement of the suit. The plaintiff replied, that the cause of action did accrue within six years.—Held, that without specially replying process issued, the plaintiff might, on this replication, prove a quomodo to have issued within the six years, and produce the roll to show the continuances regularly entered up accordingly. Dickenson v. Teague, 1 C., M. & R. 241, 4 Tyr. 450.

Process and service.—[By 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 2, all personal actions in the superior courts of law at Westminster are to be commenced by writ of summons.]

By 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 2, all personal actions brought in her majesty's superior courts of common law shall be commenced by writ of summons.

By s. 14, the writ of summons in any action may be served in any county.

By s. 168, in ejectment a writ shall be issued directed to the persons in possession by name, and to all persons entitled to defend the possession of the property claimed.]

Under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 39, s. 10, it was not necessary to serve or endeavor to serve a writ which was issued to avoid the effect of the statute; it was sufficient to return it non est inventus, and enter it of record. Williams v. Roberts, 1 C., M. & R. 676; 3 D. P. C. 513; 5 Tyr. 421; 1 Gale, 58.

The court would not allow process to be served at the house of the agent of a defendant out of the jurisdiction, in order to save the statute. Frith v. Donegal, 2 D. P. C. 527.

The court will allow a writ of summons to be amended where the statute would otherwise operate as a bar. Green v. Kettleby, 8 D. P. C. 783.

The court refused to allow the dates of writs of summons to be altered, for the purpose of preventing the plaintiff's claim from being barred by the statute. Campbell v. Smart, 5 C. B. 106; 5 D. & L. 395; 17 L. J., C. P. 63.

Where a writ of summons, tested in time to save the statute, was re-sealed in consequence of an alteration in the description of the defendant and the county in which he resided, and was not served until after the six years had expired.—Held, that the re-sealing did not amount to a re-issuing of the writ, and that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to show when the re-sealing took place. Braithwaite v. Montford, 2 C. & M. 408; 4 Tyr. 276.

Renewing and continuing process; before the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852.—The issue, as set out in a writ of trial, stated the suing out of a former writ of summons to meet a plea of the statute. The plaintiff having obtained a verdict upon an issue taken on the accrual of the action within six years, the court refused to grant a new trial upon an affidavit that no such writ had ever been returned, and that no continuance had been entered upon the roll, and that the issue delivered contained no notice of a former writ. Harper v. Phillips, 7 M. & G. 397; 8 Scott, N. R. 115.

To a plea of the statute, the plaintiff replied that a writ issued under 2 Will. 4, c. 89, s. 10, and alleged that the writ was returned "by Henry Weeks and William Gilbertson:"—Held, no ground of demurrer. Williams v. Williams, 2 D., N. S. 209; 10 M. & W. 174.

It was not necessary, in order to prevent the operation of the statute, that the writ of summons should, after an appearance entered by the defendant subsequently to the issuing of a distringas, have been served on the defendant in person, or returned non est inventus, or entered of record in compliance with 2 Will. 4, c. 39, s. 10. Jones v. Boxer, 6 D. & L. 574; 7 C. B. 58; 13 Jur. 960; 18 L. J., C. P. 185.

A declaration stated that the plaintiff retained the defendant as an attorney to prosecute and conduct an action, for the recovery of a debt, and it became his duty, as such attorney, to use due care and diligence in prosecuting and conducting the action. Breach, that he did not use due care and diligence; but, on the contrary thereof, prosecuted and conducted the action in a careless and an unskillful manner, in this, to wit, that he, having sued out writs for the purpose of preventing the action from being barred, "did not duly file the writs with the proper officer of the court, according to the necessary and accustomed practice of the court:"—Held, after verdict, and after judgment for the plaintiff, that the word "filing" might be understood of bringing the writ into the office for the purpose of its being entered on the record; and that the duty of the defendant was properly laid, and the breach of that duty properly assigned in the declaration. Hunter v. Caldwell, 10 Q. B. 60; 12 Jur. 285—Exch. Cham.

[The provisions relating to the duration of writs and to alias and pluries writs, and to the proceedings for making the first writ available to prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations, under the Uniformity of Process Act, 2 Will. 4, c. 89, s. 10, were repealed by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 10, except as to writs issued before the 24th of October, 1852, and proceedings thereon.]

A writ of summons issued under the Uniformity of Process Act expired before the 24th of October, 1852, when the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, came into operation:—Held, that an alias to save the statute must issue pursuant to the former act. Gapp v. Robinson, 12 C. B. 828.

—under that act.—[By the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 11, no original writ of summons shall be in force for more than six months [by 18 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 4, calendar months] from the day of the date thereof, including the day of such date; but if any defendant therein named may not have been served therewith, the original or concurrent writ of summons may be renewed, at any time before its expiration, for six months from the date of such renewal, and so from time to time during the currency of the renewed writ, by being marked with a seal, bearing the date of the day, month and year of such renewal, such seal to be provided and kept for that purpose at the offices of the masters, and to be impressed upon the writ by the proper officer of the court out of which such writ issued, upon delivery to him by the plaintiff or his attorney of a præcipe;

And a writ of summons so renewed shall remain in force and be available to prevent the operation of any statute whereby the time for the commencement of the action may be limited, and for all other purposes, from the date of the issuing of the original writ of summons.

The six months during which a writ continues in force after its renewal are to be computed inclusively of the day of renewal. Anon., 1 H. & C. 664; 32 L. J., Exch. 88; 11 W. R. 298; 7 L. T., N. S. 718.

By s. 12, where a writ of summons issued before, and is in force at the commencement of the act, the writ may, before it expires, be renewed according to the provisions of s. 11. So, where a writ issued in continuation of a preceding writ, under 2 Will. 4, c. 89, is in force, or where one month after the expiration thereof has not elapsed at the commencement of the act, such continuing writ may, without being returned or entered of record, be filed within one month after the expiration of the writ, or within twenty days after the act came into operation, and the original writ may thereupon be renewed in the manner directed by the act. A writ so renewed is to have the same duration and effect for all purposes, and may, if necessary, be subsequently renewed, as if the writ had issued under the new act.

By s. 13, the production of a writ of summons purporting to be marked with the seal of the court, showing the same to have been renewed according to the act, shall be sufficient evidence of its having been so renewed, and of the commencement of the action as of the first date of such renewed writ for all purposes.]

Where a writ of summons has been issued before the Common Law Procedure Act of 1852 came into operation, and has been duly continued up to that time, the first renewal under that act is quasi the original writ. Cole v. Sherard, 11 Exch. 482.

A writ of summons was issued dated November 7, 1853, with a view to save the statute. It was renewed on the 6th of May, 1854. On November 6th following, the plaintiff applied to the officer of the court to renew it again, but the latter refused, considering it too late, and that the six calendar months had expired. The court, without deciding whether the renewal would be valid, directed that the writ should be renewed nunc pro tunc, as the dates would appear on the record. Anon., 3 C. L. R. 78; 18 Jur. 1104; 34 L. J., Q. B. 22. S. P., Black v. Green, 15 C. B. 202; 8 C. L. R. 38; 18 Jur. 1017; 24 L. J., C. P. 1.

Within six months of issuing a writ, the plaintiff's attorney paid the proper fees at the office for its renewal, but he inadvertently neglected to get the seal of the court impressed upon it; after the lapse of the six months the omission was discovered. There having been no default in their officer, the court refused to order the seal to be impressed nunc pro tunc, in order to prevent the running of the statute. Nasir v. Wade, 31 L. J., Q. B. 5; 1 B. & S. 728; 8 Jur., N. S. 134; 5 L. T., N. S. 604. S. P., Bailey v. Owen, 9 W. R. 128.

The last day for re-sealing a writ, so as to save the statute, expired on Saturday, the 28th December, within the Christmas holidays. A party who attended at the office on that day for the purpose, found it shut, and the officer having refused to re-seal the writ on the following Monday, the court refused to order him to do it afterwards nunc pro tunc. Evans v. Jones, 2 B. & S. 45.

Where any one of several defendants named in a writ of summons has not been served, and there are others, upon whom service might have been, but is not, effected, a renewal of the writ, on the ground of the non-service of such one, will prevent the operation of the statute in favor of such others. Dickson v. Capas, 11 Ir. C. L. R. 334—Exch.

A creditor issued a writ of summons in the Common Pleas against an administrator for a debt not then barred by statute. Within six months after issuing this writ (which was never served), at which time the debt was barred unless saved by the writ, the creditor took out an administration summons:—Held, that the writ only saved the bar for six months in the Court of Common Pleas, and that the statute was a bar to the administration suit. Manby v. Manby, Fisset v. Manby, Manby. In re, 3 L. R., Ch. Div. 101; 35 L. T., N. S. 307; 24 W. R. 699—V. C. M.

After the expiration of a writ of summons, the court will not enlarge the time for its renewal where so doing would defeat the Statute of Limitations. Doyle v. Kaufman, 36 W. R. 98—Q. B. Div.

A company was ordered to be wound up in February, 1868. The certificate of debts and claims was made in December, 1870; and in January, 1871, a dividend was paid on the debts which had been established. In March, 1871, the holder of bills of exchange to a large amount, which had been accepted by the company and had become payable in February, 1865, gave the first notice of his claim and applied for leave to prove, not disturbing previous dividends:—Held, that by the Companies Act, 1862, the assets are made applicable to the payment of all liabilities of the company subsisting at the date of the winding-up order; that from that time the Statute of Limitations does not run against a creditor, and that the claimants were entitled to prove, not disturbing former dividends. General Rolling Stock Company, In re Joint Stock Discount Company's Claim, 7 L. R., Ch. 646; 27 L. T., N. S. 88.

4. Acknowledgment by Writing or by Part Payment.

(a) Acknowledgment of Debts on Simple Contracts.

Statute.—[By 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 1, is action of debt, or upon the case, grounded upon any simple contract, no acknowledgment or promise, by words only, shall be deemed sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract, whereby to take any case out of the operation of the enactments of the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, or the 10 Car. 1, s. 2, c. 6 (Irish), or to deprive any party of the benefit thereof, unless such acknowledgment or promise shall be made or contained by or in some writing, to be signed by the party chargeable thereby.]

And, where there shall be two or more joint contractors, or executors or administrators of any contractor, no such joint contractor, executor or administrator shall lose the benefit of the said enactments, or either of them, so as to be chargeable in respect or by reason only of any written acknowledgment or promise made and signed by any other or others of them; provided that nothing herein contained shall alter, or take away, or lessen the effect of any payment of any principal or interest made by any person whatsoever.

Provided also, that in actions to be commenced against two or more such joint contractors, or executors or administrators, if it shall appear at the trial or otherwise that the plaintiff, though barred by either of the said acts, as to one or more of such joint contractors, or executors or administrators, shall nevertheless be entitled to recover against any other or others of the defendants, by virtue of a new acknowledgment, or promise, or otherwise, judgment may be given, and costs allowed for the plaintiff, as to such defendant or defendants against whom he shall recover, and for the other defendant or defendants against the plaintiff.

By s. 2, if any defendant or defendants, in any action on any simple contract, shall plead any matter in abatement, to the effect that any other person or persons ought to be jointly sued, and issue be joined on such plea, and it shall appear at the trial that the action could not, by reason of the said acts, or either of them, be maintained against the other person or persons named in such plea, or any of them, the issue joined on such plea shall be found against the party pleading the same.

By s. 3, no indorsement or memorandum of any payment, written or made upon any promissory note, bill of exchange, or other writing, by or on the behalf of the party to whom such payment shall be made, shall be deemed sufficient proof of such payment, so as to take the case out of the operation of either of the said statutes.

By s. 4, the said acts shall be deemed and taken to apply to the case of any debt on simple contract, alleged by way of set-off on the part of any defendant, either by plea, notice or otherwise.

By s. 8, no memorandum or other writing, made necessary by the act, shall be deemed to be an agreement within the meaning of any statute relating to the duties of stamps.]

Construction and operation of the statute generally.—The first clause has a retrospective operation, and applies to a parol acknowledgment made before the statute came into effect, although the acknowledgment was made before the passing of the act. Towler v. Chatterton, 3 M. & P. 619; 6 Bing. 258. S. P., Ansell v. Ansell, 3 C. & P. 563; Amner v. Cuttle, 2 M. & P. 367. But see Moon v. Durden, 2 Exch. 22.

The statute does not alter the law as to the nature of the promise, but merely substitutes a different mode of proof. Haydon v. Williams, 4 M. & P. 811; 7 Bing. 163. S. P., Dickinson v. Hatfield, 5 C. & P. 46; 1 M. & Rob. 141.

The construction of a doubtful document, given in evidence, to defeat the statute, is for the court and not for a jury; if it is explained by extrinsic facts, they are for the consideration of the jury. Morrell v. Frith, 3 M. & W. 402; 8 C. & P. 246; 1 H. & H. 100; 2 Jur. 619.

The question whether a particular document takes a case out of the statute, is for the judge and not for the jury. Sidwell v. Mason, 2 H. & N. 306; 3 Jur. N. S. 649; 26 L. J., Exch. 407.

— in connection with the Statute of Frauds.]

—Where a person having entered into a written guaranty, and become liable upon it, at a period of more than six years before the commencement of the action, verbally promised, within six years, that the matter should be arranged; and afterwards, on an action being brought, pleaded actio non accrevit infra sex annos:—Held (before 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 1), that the Statute of Frauds having been once satisfied by the original promise being in writing, it was not necessary, in order to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations, that the latter promise should also be in writing. Gibbons v. M'Casland, 1 B. & A. 690.

What acknowledgment is sufficient, in general.—To take a case out of the statute, the acknowledgment of a debt must contain an express or implied promise to pay. Linley or Linsell v. Bonsor, 2 Scott, 399; 2 Bing. N. C. 241; 1 Hodges, 305. S. P., Brigstocke v. Smith, 1 C., M. & R. 483; 2 Tyr. 445.

A debtor having accompanied an acknowledgment of debt with an assertion that he should have nothing to do with the claim; that he wished the claimant would make him a bankrupt, and that he would rather go to jail than pay the claimant:—Held, that it was properly left to a jury to consider whether the acknowledgment was one from which a promise to pay could be implied. Id.

The acknowledgment in writing must either amount to a distinct promise to pay, or to a distinct acknowledgment that the sum is due. Buckett v. Church, 9 C. & P. 209—Parke.

If a debtor by a letter admits a balance to be due, without stating the amount, this will take the case out of the statute. Dickinson v. Hatfield, 5 C. & P. 46; 1 M. & Rob. 141—Tenterden.

But, if the whole evidence is merely proof of the writing, and no proof of the original cause of action, the creditor can only recover nominal damages. Id.

When a debt is barred by the statute there must be, in order to take it out of the statute, one of three things; an acknowledgment of the debt from which a promise to pay it must be implied; or an unconditional promise to pay the debt; or a conditional promise to pay the debt, in writing, and evidence that that condition has been performed. River Steamer Company, In re, Mitchell, Ex parte, 25 L. T., N. S. 819; 19 W. R. 1130; 6 L. R., Ch. 822. S. P., Skeet v. Lindsay, 2 L. R., Exch. Div. 814; 46 L. J., Exch. Div. 249; 36 L. T., N. S. 98.

Acknowledgment by statement or recognition of debt.—A mere parol statement of an antecedent debt, without any new contract or consideration, made within six years before action brought, does not constitute a sufficient cause of action to prevent the operation of the statute. Jones v. Ryder, 4 M. & W. 82; 1 H. & H. 250.

A letter, the fair effect of which is, that the writer is not certain whether the debt is owing, and will have the matter examined into, is not a sufficient acknowledgment, notwithstanding that it contains expressions of regret that the debt should have been left so long unpaid. Collinson v. Margesson, 27 L. J., Exch. 805.

But a letter not in itself sufficient to bar the statute may be left, with other evidence, to the jury, upon the question whether there have been payments or deliveries of goods, in part satisfaction of the debt, within the six years. It will be a question for the jury, whether the payments or deliveries of goods were made and received on account of the particular debt sued for. Id.

The defendant having a claim against the plaintiff, the latter, at the foot of his bill, acknowledged the debt as follows:—"By Mr. Lacy's bill," leaving a blank for the amount. He then wrote below, "Agreeably to your request above, I send you my bill, which I will thank you to peruse, and, if correct, favor me with a bill for the balance:"—Held, a sufficient acknowledgment of the defendant's claim. Waller v. Lacy, 1 Scott, N. R. 180; 1 M. & G. 54; 8 D. P. C. 508; 4 Jur. 495. See Wauugh v. Cope, 6 M. & W. 824.

A letter as follows:—"I beg to say I cannot comply with your request. The best way for you would be to send me the bill you hold, and draw another for the balance of your money, 30*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*," is a sufficient acknowledgment that the balance was due. Dalke v. Humphries, 10 Bing. 446; 4 M. & Scott, 285.

In 1847, the plaintiffs, who were solicitors, lent to the defendant 100*l.* on a mortgage, 40*l.* on a promissory note, and they had also a claim against him for costs. In 1837, the defendant wrote to the plaintiffs as follows:—"September 26. I wish to inform you that I received yours this morning. I am going to leave my situation on the 1st November, and when the policy is paid, on the 20th October, I hope that you will have the whole of your account ready for me, as I hope to be with you on that day." "October 25. Mr. V., when here on Saturday, stated that the amount due against me was about 280*l.*; of course this includes the 100*l.*, and interest, that I had some years since, and the 40*l.* promissory note, that I jointly signed with the late Mr. B.; of course, you are aware that you have paid 25*l.* to my credit that Mr. Y. paid over when he could not complete the purchase of the property in the High street."—Held, a sufficient acknowledgment. Godwin v. Culley, 4 H. & N. 373.

The following passages, in a letter written by a debtor to his creditor:—"Before closing this, I have to request you will be pleased to send me in any bill or what demands you have to make on me, and if just, I shall not give you the trouble of going to law. If you refer to your books you will find the last payment I made was in May, 1839. I shall leave town to-morrow, but shall be back in a few days for a month, and if you will bring my bill in here to me, by eleven, I shall be at your service."—are sufficient to take the debt out of the statute. Spong v. Wright, 9 M. & W. 629; 12 L. J., Exch. 144.

L., being the holder for value of certain promissory notes made by the defendant, and being indebted to the defendant and D., as executors, in a large amount, it was agreed between them that the amount of the notes should be set off against, and satisfied by, the same amount of L.'s debt. On that occasion, the defendant gave to L., a paper, in which the amounts of the several notes and the interest thereon were enumerated, at the foot of which the defendant wrote as follows:—"8th June, 1842. Approved due to T. L.—W. D." L. retained possession of the notes, and afterwards indorsed them to the plaintiff for value:—Held, that the paper so signed by the defendant was not such an acknowledgment in writing as to defeat a plea of the statute, inasmuch as, coupling it with the evidence, no promise to pay the debts could be inferred from it. Cripps v. Davis, 12 M. & W. 159; 13 L. J., Exch. 217.

To an action by the executor of an attorney, for his bill of costs, the defendant pleaded a set-off. The testator had transacted the law business of the defendant, and received his tithes and rents. The defendant, for the purpose of taking his set-off out of the statute, put in evidence an account furnished by the testator to the defendant, in obedience to a rule of the court; and also an affidavit made and signed by the testator on the occasion of his furnishing such account. The account contained items to the credit of the defendant, for tithes and rents received by the testator for the defendant, and also items to the credit of the testator, for cash paid to the defendant, and for work done; and the account claimed a balance as due to the testator. The affidavit in like manner claimed a balance as due to the testator on the same account:—Held, that the account and affidavit were not sufficient to take the set-off out of the statute. Williams v. Griffiths, 3 Exch. 335; 18 L. J., Exch. 210.

A., being indebted to B., supplied him with goods, and afterwards sent 10*l.* on account of his own debt, and a bill for the goods supplied. B. replied by letter, "I beg to acknowledge the receipt of 10*l.* and a bill amounting to 17*l.*, both of which sums I have placed to your credit. I have inclosed your bill; receipt it and return the same by post.—B." No receipt was returned:—Held, that the letter was sufficient to defeat the statute for the price of the goods. Evans v. Siman, 9 Exch. 282; 2 C. L. R. 416; 23 L. J., Exch. 16.

In 1853, H., as principal, and the defendant as surety, gave to the plaintiff their joint and several note for payment of 200*l.*, on demand. In 1861, H. assigned all his property for the benefit of his creditors, and the defendant signed and gave to the plaintiff the following letter:—"I hereby consent to your receiving the dividend under H.'s assignment, and agree that your so doing shall not prejudice your claim upon me for the same debt." The plaintiff accordingly received the dividend, and in 1862 sued the defendant for the balance of the note:—Held, that the letter was not an acknowledgment of the debt, so as to take the case out of the statute. Cockrill v. Sparke, 1 H. & C. 699; 9 Jur., N. S. 307; 32 L. J., Exch. 118; 11 W. R. 428; 7 L. T., N. S. 752.

To an action by the executor of an attorney, for his bill of costs, the defendant pleaded the statute. The testator had transacted the law business of the defendant, and received his tithes and rents. A letter, written to the testator by the steward of the defendant by his desire, stated that the defendant wished to have the testator's account, for the purpose of settling it. Another letter, written in Welsh, stated that the defendant intended to borrow money on his estates, and that the writer would come to the testator's house for the deeds, and if any account required looking over, the writer and testator might do that at the same time. With reference to the last mentioned letter, the testator wrote to the defendant as follows:—"I have received a (Welsh) letter from your agent, and as far as I am able to understand it, he requests to have the abstract of title, and my bill against you, and account, as you are about to receive a sum of money to pay off the mortgages on your estates. I should be glad to hear from you, as I am no Welsh scholar, myself, precisely what is wanted." In answer, the defendant wrote, "Being one of those people who think short accounts make long friends, I directed my agent, last year, to apply to you for your bill, in order that we might settle the like accounts. What he applied to you in Welsh the other day, was for my title-deeds."—Held, that the letters were not sufficient to take the plaintiff's claim out of the statute. Williams v. Griffith, 8 Exch. 385; 18 L. J., Exch. 210.

M. agreed with a company to build for them certain ships, to be delivered at certain times, and to be paid for by installments. In case of delay in delivery of the ships, fortnightly sums were to be paid as liquidated damages, and the company was to be at liberty to deduct them from the unpaid purchase-money. The agreement contained a provision for referring all disputes to arbitration. The ships having been supplied, M., who had received some installments, sent in, at the end of 1861, an account, showing the final balance which he claimed. The company insisted that he was liable to deductions for delay to an amount exceeding this balance, and that nothing was due to him. A correspondence ensued, and the company proposed to refer the dispute to arbitration; and in 1863, a draft reference having been approved, they named an arbitrator on their part, but M. would not name one on his. On the 19th of February, 1867, the managing director wrote to M. saying that his account omitted all the deductions to which the company was entitled, and which would leave the balance in their favor, but that they were still willing to have all questions decided by arbitration, according to the contract, and called on M. to concur in referring them. This letter was expressed to be "without prejudice." M. did not answer this letter, nor take any steps to proceed to arbitration. A petition to wind up the company was presented in October, 1869, and an order made. M. claimed to prove for his balance, which was resisted, on the ground of the statute:—Held, that the letter did not contain an acknowledgment taking the case out of the statute, for that it did not contain any admission of a debt, since under the contract the liquidated damages were a deduction from the price, and not merely matter of set-off; and, semble, even the admission of a debt, if coupled with a claim to a set-off of larger amount, would not take a case out of the statute, as no promise to pay could be implied from it. Nor did it contain any unconditional promise to pay. Nor did it contain any promise to pay upon a condition which had since been performed; for on its fair construction it contained at most only a promise to pay what should be found due on an arbitration under the contract, if M. named an arbitrator within a reasonable time, which he had not done. River Steamer Company, In re, Mitchell, Ex parte, 6 L. R., Ch. 822; 25 L. T., N. S. 819; 19 W. R. 1130.

In 1859, B. M., with his two brothers, made a joint and several promissory note to secure a sum of money advanced by the plaintiff to one of the brothers. No acknowledgment of liability was made by him until September, 1870, when, the brother to whom the money was advanced having failed to pay the amount, the lender applied for payment to B. M., who, in reply, wrote to the lender as follows: "I suppose I and my brother Thomas signed the note of hand to serve my brother Robert, therefore we trust you will use such means that you know will make him pay (he having plenty by him) before you ask us, you being able to do that which we should not like to take in law with a brother. Please don't let him know you have applied for the money, and oblige, yours respectfully, B. MITCHELL. You had better send him a writ at once."—Held, that this was a sufficient acknowledgment, or promise, to prevent the operation of the statute. Fisk or Fiske v. Mitchell, 24 L. T., N. S. 272; 19 W. R. 793—Q. B.

In 1846, L. gave B. and S. a promissory note for 500*l*. The note was made payable three months after date to B. or S. M., his wife. In 1866, after the death of B., and on the application of S. M., L. wrote his name, and the date 1866, on the back of the note:—Held, a sufficient acknowledgment within 9 Geo. 4, c. 14; and that the debt, therefore, was not barred. Bourdin v. Greenwood, 41 L. J., Chanc. 73; 25 L. T., N. S. 782; 13 L. R., Eq. 281; 20 W. R. 166—V. C. W.

To an action on a promissory note, the defendant pleaded the statute. As an answer the plaintiff put in evidence the following letter written by the defendant to the plaintiff:—"The old account between us, which has been standing over so long, has not escaped our memory, and as soon as we can get our affairs arranged we will see you are paid. Perhaps in the meantime you will let your clerk send me an account of how it stands."—Held, that the letter was a sufficient acknowledgment of the debt to bar the statute, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Chasemore v. Turner, 45 L. J., Q. B. Div. 66; 10 L. R., Q. B. 500; 33 L. T., N. S. 823; 24 W. R. 70—Exch. Cham.

Entries in books of public commissioners or companies.—Commissioners under a town improvement act, being in debt, appointed a finance committee, who made a report, to which was appended a schedule of liabilities, including arrears of salary due to the clerk of the commissioners more than six years. The commissioners made an entry in their minute-book that they accepted the report:—Held, no sufficient acknowledgment of the debt. Bush v. Martin, 2 H. & C. 811; 10 Jur., N. S. 347; 33 L. J., Exch. 17.

Where a turnpike act provided that all orders of the trustees should be entered in a book kept for that purpose, an order by them to pay a bill is not an act done so as to take a debt out of the statute, unless it is so entered in writing. Emery v. Day, 1 C., M. & R. 245; 4 Tyr. 693.

A resolution by a board of directors that "L. shall have the option of taking, within one month, any number of shares not exceeding 1,600, at par, in liquidation of 1,600/., part of his claim (the claim therein referred to having been made only as to a collateral security for part of an alleged debt), is no acknowledgment sufficient to defeat the operation of the statute. Lowndes v. Garnett and Moseley Gold Mining Company, 83 L. J., Chanc. 418; 13 W. R. 572; 10 L. T., N. S. 329—V. C. W.

Insertion of debt in bankrupt's or insolvent's schedule.—An admission in an unsigned letter, sent by order of the assignees of a bankrupt, will not take a debt out of the statute. Pott v. Cleg, 16 M. & W. 321; 11 Jur. 289; 16 L. J., Exch. 210.

One of three joint makers of a note became insolvent, and inserted the note and the holder's name in his schedule, and a dividend was afterwards paid to the holder by order of the Insolvent Debtors' Court in respect of the note:—Held, that such was not sufficient to take the case out of the statute, either as against the other makers of the note or as against the insolvent himself. Davis v. Edwards, 7 Exch. 22; 15 Jur. 1014; 21 L. J., Exch. 4.

A creditor proved, that within six years of action brought, the debtor presented a petition for arrangement with his creditors, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 70, and had inserted the debt upon which the action was brought in the account of his debts; and his proposal was, that, "for the future payment or compromise of such debts and engagements," he proposed to assign all his estate and effects to trustees:—Held, not to be sufficient to take the case out of the statute, as not showing that from which the court could infer an unconditional promise, or a promise upon a condition fulfilled. Eberett v. Robertson, 1 El. & El. 10; 4 Jur., N. S. 1083; 28 L. J., Q. B. 23.

The insertion of a debt in the schedule to a deed of inspectorship executed for the purpose of administering the estate of a debtor, is not, although the schedule is verified by the affidavit of the debtor, a sufficient acknowledgment to take the debt out of the operation of the statute, so as to entitle the creditor to prove for the debt under a subsequent administration of the debtor's estate in bankruptcy. Topping. Ex parte, 4 De G., J. & S. 551; 34 L. J., Bank. 44; 13 W. R. 1025; 12 L. T., N. S. 787—C.

And the payment by the inspectors of a dividend upon the debt is not a sufficient part payment for that purpose. Ib.

An entry in a bankrupt's examination, of a certain sum being due to A., is evidence of an account stated between them, and is a sufficient acknowledgment to take the case out of the statute. Eicke v. Noakes, 1 M. & Rob. 359—Tindal.

Promises of payment.—A., having become bankrupt in August, 1819, wrote, in November, 1826, a letter in which he alluded to a debt of 98l. 15s. due from him to B., and stated as follows:—"By the end of next month I shall have my bankers' account here, and I shall remit the sum due to you in a draft on them:"—Held, that the letter contained a sufficient promise in answer to a plea of the statute. Lang v. Mackenzie, 4 C. & P. 463—Tindal.

In a letter written to the creditor within six years, the debtor says, "I can never be happy until I have not only paid you everything, but all to whom I owe money;" and "your account is quite correct; and, oh! that I were now going to inclose you the amount of it:"—Held, that this was evidence to go to the jury of an acknowledgment. Dodson v. Mackey, 4 N. & M. 327; 8 A. & E. 225, n.

Held, that such promise, accompanied by this expression—"It is impossible to state to you what will be done in my affairs at present; it is difficult to know what will be best, but, immediately it is settled, you shall be informed"—is an absolute unconditional promise, and not a qualified or a conditional promise. Ib.

In an action against one of the makers of a note, it appeared that he had signed the note as surety for the other maker, and after the expiration of six years, having been applied to by letter for the amount, wrote to request that application might be made to the executrix of the other maker, adding, "and what she may be short, I will assist to make up." Application was accordingly made to the executrix, who did not pay the amount:—Held, that this acknowledgment was sufficient to take the case out of the statute as against him, and that it was not necessary to take legal proceedings against the executrix before proceeding against the surety. Humphreys v. Jones, 14 M. & W. 1; 9 Jur. 333; 14 L. J., Exch. 254.

A debtor, on application for payment of a debt, handed over to the creditor certain book debts due to himself, with the following acknowledgment in writing:—"I give the above accounts to you; so you must collect them, and you and I will be clear:"—Held, that this was no bar to the statute, for, though an acknowledgment of the debt, no general promise to pay could be inferred from it, but merely a promise to pay in one particular manner. Routledge v. Ramsey, 3 N. & P. 319; 8 A. & E. 221; 1 W., W. & H. 232; 3 Jur. 789.

In an action to recover 170l. with interest, the plaintiff proved the loan of between 150l. and 180l., and offered in evidence this document:—"170l., 16th March, 1841. Received from B. and T. 170l., for which I promise to pay her at the rate of 5l. per cent. from the above date."—Held, a sufficient acknowledgment. Taylor v. Steele, 16 M. & W. 605; 11 Jur. 806; 16 L. J., Exch. 177.

In an action for work, labor, and materials, it appeared that the work had been done more than six years before, but within the six years the debtor, in answer to a bill sent in to him by the creditor, wrote the following letter: "I have received your bill. It does not, I think, specify sufficiently to which cottages the work is done. For instance you say—" [The letter here repeated the first six items of the bill.] "I do not know where all this is done. I shall feel obliged if you will more particularly explain, and take your agreement to Mrs. H. It is my wish to settle your account immediately, but being at a distance, I wish everything very explicit and correct. I have asked Mrs. H. to mark the agreements, and send them to me, and I will return them by the first post, with instructions to pay if correct."—Held, a sufficient acknowledgment, within the 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, to take the case out of the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16. Sidwell v. Mason, 2 H. & N. 306; 3 Jur., N. S. 649; 26 L. J., Exch. 407.

A creditor having applied for payment of a debt, the debtor wrote in answer, "I shall repeat my assurance to you of the certainty of your being repaid your generous loan. Let matters remain as they are a short time, and all will be right. The works I have been appointed to, but they are not yet worked with the full complement of labor; this term will decide the matter."—Held, a sufficient acknowledgment. Collis v. Stack, 1 H. & N. 605; 26 L. J., Exch. 138.

The question in these cases is, whether the statement as to the time of payment is merely an excuse, or the condition on which payment is to be made. Id.

The following letter is an acknowledgment from which a promise to pay may be implied so as to rebut the statute:—"In reply to your statement of account received, I am ashamed the account has stood so long. I must beg to trespass on your kindness a short time longer till a turn in trade takes place, as for some time things have been very flat. Yours, J. J." Cornforth v. Smithard, 5 H. & N. 13; 29 L. J., Exch. 238; 8 W. R. 8.

A wife had lent the defendant 20l. (her own money) during her husband's lifetime, for which the defendant, shortly after the husband's death, viz., on the 10th of July, 1867, gave her an I O U. On the 12th of October, 1870, the defendant wrote to her agent,—"Yours of the 10th instant received, respecting Mrs. W.'s claim upon me. It is totally out of my power at the present time to liquidate the whole or even part of the same. I am in the anticipation of a better position, and, should I be successful, Mrs. W.'s claim shall have my first consideration. Meanwhile, I shall be pleased to pay a reasonable interest on the amount. Show this letter to Mrs. W., and tell her the claim has not been forgotten by me, and shall be liquidated at the earliest opportunity possible;" and on the 6th of March, 1871, he again wrote,—"At present it is utterly out of my power to do anything. I am willing to endeavor to pay it off by easy installments; or I am willing to pay you any reasonable interest to let the matter remain for the present." In an action for money lent, with a count upon a promise to pay in consideration of the plaintiff's forbearance to sue upon the I O U.—Held, that these letters amounted to a sufficient promise, founded upon a good consideration, to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. Wilby v. Elgee, 10 L. R., C. P. 497; 44 L. J., C. P. 254.

In an action for work done, the plaintiff, in answer to a plea of the statute, put in the two following letters written within six years of the commencement of the action by the defendant's testator, the person for whom the work was done, to the plaintiff:—"I shall be obliged to you to send in your account, made up to Christmas last. I shall have much work to be done this spring, but cannot give further orders till this be done." "You have not answered my note. I again beg of you to send in your account, as I particularly require it in the course of this week."—Held, that they amounted to a promise to pay the balance due on the account, and took the case out of the statute. Quincey v. Sharpe, 1 L. R., Exch. Div. 72; 45 L. J., Exch. Div. 347; 24 W. R. 373; 34 L. T., N. S. 495.

A debtor, whose debt to his creditor was barred by the Statute of Limitations, wrote to the creditor within six years before action the following letter:—"I return to Shepperton about Easter. If you send me there the particulars of your account, with vouchers, I shall have it examined and check sent to you for the amount due; but you must be under some great mistake in supposing that the amount due to you is anything like the sum you now claim."—Held, that the debt was revived, as the request to be furnished with an account with vouchers at a particular time and place did not negative the implied promise to pay arising from the admission of a balance due. Skeet v. Lindsay, 2 L. R., Exch. Div. 314; 46 L. J., Exch. Div. 249; 25 W. R. 322; 36 L. T., N. S. 98—Cleasby, B.

Conditional promises or propositions for payment.—A debtor writing, "I cannot pay the debt at present, but will pay it as soon as I can," is not sufficient to take it out of the statute, without proof of his ability to pay. Tanner v. Smart, 6 B. & C. 603; 9 D. & R. 549.

A debtor within six years from the time of contracting a debt, stated in a letter written to his creditor, "that he was incapable at that time to pay the money, but that he would pay as soon as he had it in his power to do so."—Held, that this was a conditional promise only, and therefore not sufficient, per se, to take the case out of the statute. Haydon v. Williams, 4 M. & P. 811; 7 Bing. 163.

In an action on a note payable with interest, the words in the letter acknowledging the debt were as follows:—"I shall be most happy to pay you both interest and principal as soon as convenient."—Held, that this was a conditional promise, and that the creditor was bound to give some evidence to show that the debtor was able to pay, or that it was convenient for him to do so. Edmunds v. Downes, 2 C. & M. 459; 4 Tyr. 173.

On a demand being made for payment of a debt barred by the statute, the debtor said he would be happy to pay it if he could, that a sum was due to him from one G., and that if the creditor could recover that debt he might pay himself thereof:—Held, that this was a mere conditional promise, and that the debtor's ability to pay must be shown to entitle the creditor to recover. Ayton v. Bowers, 12 Moore, 803; S. C., nom. Ayton v. Bolt, 4 Bing. 105. S. P., Gould v. Shirley, 2 M. & P. 581.

In a letter from a drawer to the holder of a bill of exchange, he said, "if in funds I would immediately pay the money, and take the bill out of your hands."—Held, insufficient. Richardson v. Barry, 20 Beav. 22.

A debtor wrote to his creditor, "I will pay you as soon as I get it in my power."—Held, that the statute did not commence running until the debtor became of ability to pay. Hammond v. Smith, 33 Beav. 452; 9 L. T. N. S. 746; 10 Jur., N. S. 117; 12 W. R. 328.

A letter was written by the debtor to his creditor as follows:—"I do not desire that you or any one of my creditors should lose what I owe them; on the contrary, it is very much my wish not only to pay my debts, but interest upon them if I can. As you have mentioned the Limitation Act, I answer at once that I am ready to put it out of my power to take advantage of that act, and will immediately give you my note for whatever sum is due to you. To pay you now or within the year I am utterly unable; I really have not, as you imagine, received 600*l*. It is of course indispensable that the exact sum I owe you should be fixed, whether you accept my note or not. I have clearly shown you, in a former letter, that your account is not in accordance with the estimate upon which you agreed. If you really cannot produce the original estimate, or the rough draft of it, it certainly is reasonable that some (and considerable) deduction should be made from your charges. You will perhaps say what deduction you are prepared to make, and I shall be glad if it be such as will allow me, with justice to my other creditors, to give you my note for the amount, or, if it be possible, to borrow it from a friend, which I have a hope of doing, and so wipe the account entirely from your books. I am fully sensible of and thankful for the forbearance you have shown, but I cannot move a step in the way to give you satisfaction, and do justice to my other creditors, until the sum actually due to you be ascertained."—Held, that the letter contained an unconditional promise to pay, and prevented the statute from operating. Gardner v. McMahon, 3 Q. B. 501; 2 G. & D. 593, 6 Jur. 713.

The statute is not barred by a letter in which the debtor states, "that family arrangements have been making to enable him to discharge the debt; that funds have been appointed for that purpose, of which A. is trustee, and that the debtor has handed the account to A.; that some time must elapse before payment, but that the debtor is authorized by A. to refer the creditor to him for any further information." For, by 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 1, the acknowledgment in writing to bar the statute must be signed by the party chargeable thereby, and such letter does not charge the debtor, as it is at most only a promise to pay as soon as the trustee is in cash. Whippy v. Hillary, 3 B. & Ad. 399, 5 C. & P. 209.

An agreement to refer certain accounts between the parties hereto, after reciting that disputes had arisen between them in respect of them, empowered the arbitrators to ascertain what was due and of right payable, and to order any sum which might be found due to be paid at such times and in such proportions as they should deem fit. The arbitration having proved abortive:—Held, that the agreement amounted to a conditional recognition of the debt only on the part of the debtor, and that the condition being unfulfilled, it did not amount to a sufficient acknowledgment of the debt to take it out of the operation of the statute. Hales v. Stevenson, 9 Jur., N. S. 800; 11 W. R. 33; 7 L. T. N. S. 317—Q. B.; affirmed on appeal, 11 W. R. 952; 8 L. T. N. S. 708—Exch. Cham.

Where a deed, executed by A. and B., recited that A. was indebted to B. in various sums, the amount of which was not yet ascertained, and a balance not yet struck; and that A. was willing to pay B. the amount which might appear to be due to B. in respect of such sums, such amount to be ascertained and paid, as thereafter mentioned, and the deed afterwards provided for taking the accounts by the arbitration of two persons named in the deed:—Held, that, notwithstanding the clause as to arbitration, the recitals amounted to an absolute promise to pay the amount when ascertained; and that, when coupled with extrinsic parol evidence as to the amount, they were sufficient to take the debt out of the statute. Cheeslyn v. Dalby, 4 Y. & C. 238.

A creditor, in order to take a debt, pleaded as a set-off, out of the operation of the statute, gave in evidence a letter written by the debtor to a third person, stating an account showing the existence of the debt, but also that a balance was due from the creditor to the debtor; and proposing to settle the matter upon payment by the creditor to the debtor of a sum named. The creditor had not acceded to the proposal:—Held, that the latter was not a sufficient acknowledgment of the debt to defeat the operation of the statute. Francis v. Hucksley, 1 El. & El. 1052; 5 Jur., N. S. 1391; 29 L. J. Q. B. 370.

A debtor, by a deed reciting that he was indebted to the plaintiff and others, assigned his property to the plaintiff, in trust to pay all such creditors as should sign the schedule of debts annexed, provided, that, if all did not sign, the deed should be void. The plaintiff never signed, nor was the amount of his debt stated:—Held, not a sufficient acknowledgment to take his debt out of the statute, although it was admitted orally that he had but one debt. Kennett v. Milbank, 8 Bing. 38; 1 M. & Scott, 102.

The following letter, addressed by the defendant to the plaintiffs, within six years, respecting a debt otherwise barred by the statute, is not a sufficient acknowledgment:—"I am surprised at receiving a letter from H. (the plaintiffs' attorney) this morning, for the recovery of your debt. I must candidly tell you once for all I never shall be able to pay you in cash, but you may have any of the goods we have at the Pantechnicon, by paying the expenses incurred thereon, without which they cannot be taken out as before agreed when Mr. F. (one of the plaintiffs) was in town." Cowley v. Furnell, 12 C. B. 291; 15 Jur. 908; 21 L. J., C. P. 197.

Expression of hopes for payment; apologies for non-payment, &c.]—T. owed P. & Co., before their bankruptcy, 275*l.* as surviving partner of T., Y. & Y., and 6,565*l.* due independently of such partnership. As part security for the latter debt, he had given P. & Co. a mortgage for 5,000*l.* The official assignee of P. & Co. wrote to T.: "By the books of these bankrupts, there is a balance of 275*l.* standing against you," and requested immediate payment. T. replied, "You have no occasion to blame yourself respecting any claim on me from the estate of P. & Co. The matter has been arranged with the assignees here; and at the last meeting it was arranged that I should pay 450*l.* on the 20th of May, 450*l.* on the 20th of August, 450*l.* on the 20th of November, and 450*l.* on the 20th of February next; after which I am in hopes that I shall be able to transfer the 5,000*l.* mortgage, to enable me to clear off the whole that may be standing against me." It was admitted that the installments of 450*l.* were to be paid in respect of the debt of 6,565*l.*; that the mortgage mentioned in the letter was the mortgage for 5,000*l.* given as part security for that debt; that the 275*l.* mentioned by the official assignee was the debt due to P. & Co. from T., as surviving partner of T., Y. & Y., and that T. had paid off the 6,565*l.*:—Held, that the judge was right in directing the jury that the two letters did not amount to a sufficient acknowledgment or promise to take the debt of 275*l.* out of the statute, the letters not containing any absolute acknowledgment of a debt, or unqualified promise to pay, but only expressing a hope that, in the transfer of the mortgage, T. might be able to clear off the whole that might be standing against him. Smith v. Thorne, 18 Q. B. 134; 16 Jur. 332; 21 L. J., Q. B. 199—Exch. Cham.

In answer to an application for payment of a debt, the debtor wrote, "I hope to be at H. soon, when I trust everything will be arranged with W. (the creditor) agreeably to her wishes."—Held, a sufficient promise. Edmonds v. Gouter, 15 Beav. 415; 21 L. J., Chanc. 290.

The following letter by a debtor to a clerk of the creditor, in answer to one applying for payment of a debt, is insufficient to defeat the statute:—"I will not fail to meet Mr. H. (the creditor) on fair terms, and have now a hope, that, before perhaps a week from this date, I shall have it in my power to pay him at all events a portion of the debt, when we shall settle about the liquidation of the balance." Hart v. Prendergast, 14 M. & W. 741; 15 L. J., Exch. 228.

The following letter from a debtor to the creditor's attorney is a sufficient acknowledgment:—"Since the receipt of your letter, and indeed for some time previously, I have been in almost daily expectation of being enabled to give a satisfactory reply to your application respecting the demand of Messrs. M. against me. I propose being in Oxford to-morrow, when I will call upon you on the matter." Morrell v. Frith, 8 M. & W. 402; 8 C. & P. 246; 1 H. & H. 100; 2 Jur. 619.

A letter containing the following passage: "I wish I could comply with your request, for I am very wretched, on account of your account not being paid; there is a prospect of an abundant harvest, which must turn into a goodly sum, and very considerably reduce your account; at all events, if it does not, the concern must be broken up to meet it at last," is a sufficient acknowledgment. Bird v. Gammon, 5 Scott, 213; 3 Bing. N. C. 883; 3 Hodges, 224.

A letter written by a debtor to his creditor before the debt was barred, in the following terms:—"It is quite true that I have not sent any money for years, but really I have none of my own. We just manage to exist on my wife's, at least, on what is left of hers. We have hard work to get on, but I will try to pay you a little at a time, if you will let me. I am sure that I am anxious to get out of your debt. I will endeavor to send you a little next week"—is a sufficient acknowledgment. Lee v. Wilmot, 1 L. R., Exch. 864; 12 Jur., N. S. 762; 35 L. J., Exch. 175; 4 H. & C. 469; 14 W. R. 993; 14 L. T., N. S. 627.

Allegation of payment or discharge.]—A letter in these terms:—"I have received a letter from Messrs. P. and L., solicitors, requesting me to pay you an account of 40*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.* I have no wish to have anything to do with lawyers, much less do I wish to deny a just debt. I cannot, however, get rid of the notion that my account with you was settled when I left the army. But as you declare it was not settled, I am willing to pay you 10*l.* per annum until it is liquidated. Should this proposal meet with your approbation, we can make arrangements accordingly," is not a sufficient acknowledgment to take the case out of the statute. Buckmaster v. Russell, 10 C. B., N. S. 745; 8 Jur., N. S. 155—Exch. Cham.

"I will see Davis, or write him; I have no doubt he has paid it; if, by chance, he has not paid it, it is very fit it should be," in a letter, is not a sufficient acknowledgment of the debt. Poynder v. Bluck, 5 D. P. C. 570; W. W. & D. 191.

Where, after the lapse of six years, a debtor being asked for the payment of a debt, said, "I owed the money, but I have a receipt in full of all demands; I shall search for it, and let you know in the event of my not being able to find it."—Held, that this was not sufficient to take the case out of the statute. Brydges v. Plumtree, 9 D. & R. 746. S. P., Berk v. Guy, 4 Esp. 184.

A debtor admitted a debt, but claimed to be discharged by a written instrument, which upon production did not amount to a legal discharge.—Held, that the acknowledgment was sufficient. Partington v. Butcher, 6 Esp. 66—Manfield.

Reliance on the statute.—In answer to an application for payment of a debt, the debtor wrote as follows:—"I do not wish to avail myself of the Statute of Limitations, to refuse payment of the debt. I have not the means of payment, and must crave a continuance of your indulgence. My situation as a clerk does not afford me the means of laying by a shilling; but in time I may reap the benefit of my services in an augmentation of salary that may enable me to propose some satisfactory arrangement. I am much obliged to you for your forbearance."—Held, that the letter contained no sufficient acknowledgment or promise to take the case out of the statute. Ruckham v. Marriott, 1 H. & N. 234; 2 Jur., N. S. 619; 25 L. J., Exch. 324; affirmed on appeal, 2 H. & N. 100; 2 Jur., N. S. 493; 26 L. J., Exch. 315—Exch. Cham.

Denial of the claim.—The following letter does not raise the implication of a promise to pay, and is not sufficient to take the case out of the statute:—"In reply to your application of the 10th inst, for the payment of 80*l.* 10*s.* 11*d.* to Mr. D. Brigstocke, I beg to say that it is a claim I am by no means prepared to admit to the full extent, and to make the following observation respecting it. Of that sum, 68*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.* is made up of items for business and materials, stated to have been done and furnished between 1817 and 1821, a period during which I was concerned in two successive partnerships, to one or other of whom the accounts Mr. B. was entitled to recover ought to have been charged. Having at different times wound up both those concerns, and quitted Carmarthen as long back as 1824, I was surprised to receive Mr. B.'s bill in 1829, five years afterwards; and it is certainly not a little strange that he should not send in a charge of so old a date, when, if any account was due, it could hardly be expected that the means would remain of ascertaining its correctness. I cannot, therefore, allow that I am liable to pay any part of the account previous to 1823; but as I anticipate being in Carmarthen shortly, I will then communicate with Mr. B. personally respecting it. The remainder of the account is for repairs ordered by an agent under the late firm of Robert Smith & Co., to be done at the works in Carmarthen, in 1827, together with a few items for glazing in 1825, making together 20*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.*, which I believe to be correctly charged, and for which I inclose a check, and will thank you to acknowledge the receipt of it." Brigstocke v. Smith, 1 C. & M. 483, 3 Tyr. 445.

On a debtor being arrested for a debt more than six years old, he said, "I know that I owe the money, but the bill I gave is on a threepenny receipt stamp, and I will never pay it."—Held, not such an acknowledgment as would revive the debt. A'Court v. Cross, 8 Bing. 329; 11 Moore, 198.

The defendant wrote to the plaintiff's attorney as follows:—"I have received yours respecting the plaintiff's demand; it is not a just one; I am ready to settle the account whenever the plaintiff thinks proper to meet on the business, I am not in his debt 90*l.*, nor anything like that sum; shall be happy to settle the difference by his meeting me."—Held, that the judge was justified in directing the jury, that after this letter the statute was out of the question. College v. House, 3 Bing. 119; S. C., nom. College v. Horn, 16 Moore, 431.

A letter written by a debtor to the creditor's attorney (pleading the statute), on being served with a writ, couched in ambiguous terms, neither expressly admitting nor denying the debt, should be left to the jury to consider whether it amounts to an acknowledgment of the debt, so as to take it out of the statute. Lloyd v. Maund, 2 T. R. 760.

In an action against an acceptor of a bill of exchange, evidence that he acknowledged his acceptance, and that he had been liable, but said that he was not liable then, because it was out of date, and that he could not pay it, it was not in his power to pay it, was sufficient to take the case out of the statute. Leaper v. Tutton, 16 East, 420.

Effect of devise for payment of debts.—A devise in trust for payment of debts does not revive a debt, upon which the statute had taken effect by the expiration of the time before the testator's death. Burke v. Jones, 3 Ves. & B. 275.

A direction for the payment of debts in a will of personal estate will not stop the running of the statute. Frenke v. Craneveldt, 3 Myles & C. 499, 4 Jur. 1080.

A debt which, at the death of a testator, is not barred by the statute, may become so afterwards as to the executors and legatees, notwithstanding a charge by the testator of his debts upon his personal estate; nor will the operation of the statute be prevented, though the testator, erroneously supposing part of his personal estate to be real estate, has so described it in his will, and charged his debts upon it. Scott v. Jones, 4 C. & P. 382.

A stale debt, bearing interest, is not taken out of the statute by an engagement, signed by the debtor, to charge his estate with a sum corresponding in amount with the debt, with interest from the date of the engagement. Martin v. Knowles, 1 N. & M. 421.

Acknowledgment made to creditor or to stranger.—An acknowledgment, to take a case out of the statute, must be made to the creditor, and, semble, that one to his agent is sufficient. Fuller v. Redman, 26 Beay. 614.

A deed made between the debtors and a third person, in which they acknowledged the existence of a debt, was sufficient to take the case out of the statute, although the creditors were wholly strangers to the deed. Mountstephen v. Brooke, 3 B. & A. 141. See Cheslyn v. Dalby, 4 Y. & C. 238.

An admission of a debt made to a person who, at the same time, signed a paper, purporting to be a discharge of the debt, is not a sufficient acknowledgment of the debt to prevent the operation of the statute, though the discharge was inoperative in itself, and was given upon a consideration which the debtor failed to observe. Goate v. Goate, 1 H. & N. 29.

Acknowledgment by agents.—[By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 13, in reference to the provisions of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, ss. 1, 8, and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 113 (Irish), ss. 24, 27, an acknowledgment or promise made or contained by or in a writing signed by an agent of the party chargeable thereby, duly authorized to make such acknowledgment or promise, shall have the same effect as if such writing had been signed by such party himself.]

Before this enactment, an acknowledgment by a wife, who had been accustomed to act as the agent of her husband, in purchasing the goods and managing the business generally, was sufficient. Anderson v. Sanderson, 2 Stark. 204; Holt, 591. S. P., Paletthorp v. Furnish, 2 Esp. 511, n.

So, in an action against a husband for goods supplied to his wife for her accommodation while he occasionally visited her, a letter written by the wife acknowledging the debt within six years was admissible to take the case out of the statute. Gregory v. Parker, 1 Camp. 394—Ellenborough.

But as the 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 1, directed that no acknowledgment or promise shall be sufficient to take a case out of the statute, unless in writing, "and signed by the party chargeable thereby," an acknowledgment contained in a letter which was written by the wife of the debtor, in his name, and at his request, was insufficient, because the statute gave no authority to an agent to make the acknowledgment. Hyde v. Johnson, 3 Scott, 289; 2 Bing. N. C. 776; 2 Hodges, 94.

Where an agent had been employed to pay money for work done, and the workmen were referred to him for payment, and he assented to it, an acknowledgment or a promise by him to pay was sufficient. Burt v. Palmer, 5 Esp. 145—Ellenborough.

So, a reference by a debtor for payment to a trustee, to whom he had assigned his effects, was sufficient. Baillie v. Inchiquin, 1 Esp. 495—Kenyon.

A debtor had written a letter to T., to make a proposition to the creditor respecting a debt he owed him; and in this letter he desired T. to arrange with the whole of his creditors. T. wrote a letter to the creditor, offering an acceptance for 7s. 6d. in the pound on the debt:—Held, not sufficient to take the case out of the statute. Gibbon v. Bagshott, 5 C. & P. 211—Parke.

—by bankrupts.]—An accountant employed by the assignees of a bankrupt, sent to the debtor an unsigned statement of the account between the bankrupt and the debtor, in which he stated a balance in favor of the debtor:—Held, that this was not a sufficient acknowledgment of a debt to take the case out of the statute, as against the assignees. Pott v. Cleg, 16 M. & W. 321; 11 Jur. 289; 16 L. J., Exch. 210.

An admission by a bankrupt in his balance-sheet will not take a debt out of the statute as against his assignees. Id.

—by infants.]—An acknowledgment in writing given by an infant of a debt due for necessities is effective for the purpose of taking the debt out of the statute. Willins or Williams v. Smith, 4 El. & Bl. 180; 3 C. L. R. 16; 1 Jur., N. S. 168; 24 L. J., Q. B. 62.

—by executors or administrators.]—In 1835, A. filed a creditor's bill against the administrator of his debtor, founded on a debt due on a note, but in respect of which no payment of either principal or interest had been made since 1823. In 1832, the administrator, on the citation of a third person, signed and exhibited, in the ecclesiastical court, an inventory and account of the debtor's assets and debts, in which A.'s debt was entered:—Held, that that entry was a sufficient acknowledgment. Smith v. Poole, 12 Sim. 17; 10 L. J., Chanc. 192.

Semble, per Parke, B., an acknowledgment in writing by one of two executors of a debt due from the testator is not sufficient to take the debt out of the statute as against his co-executors, even although made by him in his representative capacity. Scholey v. Walton, 12 M. & W. 510; 8 Jur. 319; 13 L. J., Exch. 122.

Where one of two joint executors was applied to for payment of a debt of his testator's, who had been dead twenty years, and as against whom the debt was barred, and said, "I believe the debt is a just one, and has never been paid; I should be happy to serve you in the matter if I could, but I cannot do anything without the consent of the testator's family:"—Held, in an action against both the executors, that there was no such acknowledgment of the debt as took the case out of the statute as against them, there being no promise, express or implied, to pay the debt. McCulloch v. Dawes, 9 D. & R. 40.

In an action against several executors:—

Held, that neither a mere acknowledgment of the debt by all the executors, nor an express promise by one of them, took the case out of the statute; there must be an express promise by all. Tullock v. Dunn, R. & M. 416—Abbott.

After an administration decree, an executor has no right, as against the parties interested in the estate, to give an acknowledgment to take a debt barred by the statute out of its operation. Phillips v. Beal, 83 Beav. 26.

Where the statute had run against a debt due from a testator before his death, and the executor wrote thus to the creditor, "The legatees object to my paying the claim, though I think it just," and "I not only do not dispute the claim, but admit it, thinking it just, but am compelled to refuse payment without an order of the court:"—Held, that the debt was not revived, and that the real estate could not be subjected to it by any act of the devisees in trust, though they were also executors. Briggs v. Wilson, 5 De G., M. & G. 12.

A debt is not taken out of the statute by an advertisement published by the administrator, requesting all persons having claims on the estate, to send in statements of their demand, prior to their being laid before A., by whom the persons claiming to be creditors are to submit to be examined touching the same, if he shall see occasion, in order to their being approved and paid, or rejected, if such latter course be deemed expedient. Scott v. Jones, 4 C. & F. 832.

—by one of several joint debtors or contractors.—An acknowledgment of a debt, contained in a letter from one partner to another, undertaking to assign to the latter the debts and liabilities of the firm, upon his satisfying debts due to a person named in the letter, and others, or "obtaining a release of my liabilities in respect of such debts," does not amount to a promise to pay the debts, and therefore does not take the debts out of the statute. Hindmarsh, In re, 1 Drew. & Sm. 129.

An admission made by one of two partners after the dissolution of the partnership, concerning joint contracts that took place during the partnership, was sufficient to bar the statute. Wood v. Braddick, 1 Taunt. 104.

But the admission of one partner, to bind another, must be clear and explicit. Holmes v. Green, 1 Stark. 488—Ellenborough.

Where one of two partners, who was a certificated bankrupt, acknowledged a debt due to the plaintiff by his partner and himself:—Held, that it was not a sufficient acknowledgment to take the case out of the statute in an action against both, when the bankrupt pleaded his bankruptcy, and the other the statute. Marten v. Bridges, 3 C. & P. 83—Tenterden.

Signing.—A debtor being called upon by his creditor (the holder of two promissory notes for 510*l.*, more than six months overdue) for a statement of his affairs, made out an account in which the notes were inserted as a debt for which he was liable.—Held, a sufficient acknowledgment. Holmes v. Mackrell, 3 C. B., N. S. 789.

Held, also, that the whole document being in the handwriting of the debtor, his name written at the top was a sufficient signature to bind him. Id.

A defendant pleaded the Statute of Limitations. To prove the case on the part of the plaintiff a series of accounts for several years between himself and the house of A. & Co., in which the defendant was a partner, was put in evidence. In the last of those accounts the balance of the preceding account was carried over. The date of this item, as well as those of the other items, with three exceptions, were beyond six years from action brought. The exceptions were, that, on the credit side, there was one item within the six years—"Balance of interest to this day at 8*l.* per cent.;" and on the debit side there were two items within that period, viz., "postage, petty charges, and commission on disbursements." The balance of account, for which the action was brought, was then struck at a date also within the six years. The signature to the account was A. & Co., in the same handwriting as that affixed to the accounts of other customers with the firm, but there was no evidence that such signature was in the handwriting of the defendant or in that of any of the partners.—Held, first, that the signature to the account was not "an acknowledgment in writing, signed by the parties chargeable thereby," within 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 1. Clark v. Alexander, 8 Scott, N. R. 147; 8 Jur. 496; 13 L. J., C. P. 139.

Held, secondly, that the account was not evidence of any payment of principal or interest admitted to be due within the six years, so as to take the debt out of the statute. Id.

Held, thirdly, that there was no evidence of an account stated between the parties, so as to be a new transaction, and to give a new right of suit, independent of and distinct from the original debt. Id.

The following letter:—"Mr. S. begs to inform Messrs L & Co that he will take an early opportunity of settling their account," was a ratification, to render a certificated bankrupt liable for a debt incurred before his bankruptcy, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 181, of a debt otherwise barred; and the letter is sufficiently signed by the party sending it. Lobb v. Stenley, D. & M. 635; 5 Q. B. 574; 8 Jur. 462; 13 L. J., Q. B. 117. See Kirkpatrick v. Tattersall, 1 C. & K. 577—Cresswell.

Stamping.—The following memorandum—"I acknowledge to owe M. 36*l.*, which I agree to pay him as soon as my circumstances will permit"—is exempt from stamp duty under 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 3, as a writing made necessary by that statute, provided it is put in for the mere purpose of barring the statute, the debt itself being proved by other evidence.

Morris v. Dixon, 6 N. & M. 438; 4 A. & E. 845; 2 H. & W. 57.

A note improperly stamped is not admissible as a memorandum; the 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 8, applies only to instruments which might be stamped with an agreement stamp. Jones v. Eyder, 4 M. & W. 33; 1 H. & H. 256.

P. being indebted to the executors of C. in 11,000*l.*, to which A. was beneficially entitled, sent a letter to A. as follows:—"I have sent you a note for the money due to you which your mother left for you." Inclosed in this letter was a promissory note, on a receipt stamp, for 11,000*l.*, and 4*l.* per cent. interest. At the time of this letter and note being sent, the debt was barred by the statute:—Held, that there was not a sufficient acknowledgment by P., without referring to the note, to see what was the promise made, and this could not be done for the want of a proper stamp. Parmiter v. Parmiter, 30 L. J., Chanc. 508; 3 De G., F. & J. 401.

Effect of revival of debt by acknowledgment.—The legal effect of acknowledging a debt barred by the statute is that of a promise to pay the old debt, which promise the law implies from the acknowledgment, and for which the old debt is a consideration in law; but if the promise is limited to payment of the old debt in a certain time, or in a particular manner, or out of a specific fund, the creditor can claim nothing more than the promise gives him; for the old debt is revived no further than as a consideration for the new promise. Philips v. Philips, 3 Hare, 399.

An acknowledgment of a debt bars the statute, because it amounts to a new promise; and, therefore, if made after action, it is no bar. Bateman v. Pinder, 3 Q. B. 574; 2 G. & D. 790.

As to acknowledgment of debts secured by mortgage or other charge on lands or rents,—see this title, II., 4.

As to proof of acknowledgment, and explanation by parol of acknowledgment in writing,—see this title, IV.

(b) Payment on Account of Simple Contract Debts.

Payment of part of debt, in general.—The mere fact of the payment of a sum by a debtor to his creditor, is not enough to take a case out of the statute without some evidence to satisfy a jury, first, that it was a payment of a debt, and next, that it was not the discharge of a balance due, but a payment intended to be applied to the part in discharge of the particular debt. Tippett v. Hoane, 1 C., M. & R. 252; 4 Tyr. 772.

Semble, that part payment will not bar the statute, where the debt to which it is applied consists of several items. Bristock v. Smith, 2 Tyr. 445; 1 C. & M. 483.

Where a specific sum of money is due, as upon a note, the mere fact of a payment of a smaller sum by the debtor to the creditor, is some evidence of a part payment to take the case out of the statute. Burn v. Boulton, 2 C. B. 476; 15 L. J., C. P. 97.

In an action on a note, dated 7th December, 1845, for payment of 500*l.* and interest, on demand, to C., the plaintiff's testator, and on a similar note for 500*l.*, dated 20th January, 1846, at the trial it appeared from the defendant's answer to a bill of discovery, that in 1835 and in 1842, C. lent to the defendant two sums of 500*l.*, upon the security of his notes payable on demand, with interest. The interest was duly paid, and memoranda thereof indorsed by C. on the backs of the notes. At length, the backs of the notes being covered with these memoranda, it was arranged between C. and the defendant that new notes should be substituted, and accordingly the defendant gave C. the notes on which the action was brought. In February, 1846, C. told the defendant that he intended to give him the 1,000*l.* secured by the notes, and he wished to give the defendant a release and a discharge for the same and interest due thereon, and he directed the defendant to write out a receipt for 1,000*l.* and interest, for him, C., to sign, as a release and a discharge; and thereupon the defendant purchased a 10*s.* receipt stamp, and wrote thereon the receipt as follows:—"Hull, 16 February, 1846. Received of R. D. (the defendant) 1,000*l.*, being the interest and principal on the notes, dated December, 1845, and January, 1846, and in full of all demands," which C. signed and delivered to the defendant. C. subsequently died, having previously bequeathed the notes to his executors, with directions as to the investment of the proceeds:—Held, that the giving of the receipt was not a part payment or an acknowledgment of the debt, so as to take the case out of the statute; and that the renewal of the two notes in January, 1846, could not be considered as a promise so as to render the defendant liable, by a new promise, to pay the original notes. Foster v. Dauder, 6 Exch. 889; 20 L. J., Exch. 885.

The application by a trustee of the income of trust property received by him, to the partial liquidation of a debt due to him by his cestui qui trust, will, if made by the authority of the latter, prevent the residue of the debt from being affected by the Statute of Limitations, in respect of the lapse of time preceding the last application. Stewart v. Connick, 5 Ir. R., C. L. 502—Exch.

Payment of interest.—A payment made within six years, of interest which has become due upon a note more than six years before, is sufficient, where the note remains in the hands of the payee. Baley v. Gromslade, 2 Tyr. 121; 2 C. & J. 61.

To constitute a payment of interest sufficient to take a debt out of the statute, it is not essential that money should actually pass between the debtor and creditor. Maber v. Maber, 2 L. R., Exch. 103; 36 L. J., Exch. 70; 16 L. T., N. S. 26.

After a debt due to a father from his son had been barred by the statute, the father, his son, and his son's wife, had an interview, at which the interest due was calculated. The son then put his hand into his pocket, as if to get out the money to pay it. The father stopped him, and, writing a receipt for the interest, gave it to his son's wife, saying that he would make her a present of the money. No money actually passed between the parties:—Held, that this transaction was a sufficient payment to take the debt out of the statute. Id.

Part payment of a debt will not take the case out of the statute, unless the payment is made under circumstances which warrant a jury in inferring a promise to pay the residue; therefore, where a party, on being applied to for interest, paid a sovereign, and said he owed the money, but would not pay it:—Held, that it was a question for the jury to say, whether he intended to refuse payment or merely spoke in jest. Wassman v. Kynman, 1 Exch. 118; 16 L. J., Exch. 232.

In an action for money lent, at the trial the plaintiff proved the transmission of the money to the defendant, and the payment by him of a half yearly sum for interest up to a certain time, and produced an answer to a bill in Chancery, in which the defendant admitted having paid the same half-yearly sum within six years, but asserted that it was paid by way of annuity and not of interest:—Held, that the evidence for the plaintiff was sufficient to go to the jury; that the construction of the admission in the answer was for the court; and that the whole of it should have been left to the jury, but that they might believe the fact of the payments having been made half yearly, but reject the residue, and infer from the other evidence that the payments were really made in respect of interest. Baillon v. Wiltou, 1 Exch. 617; 17 L. J., Exch. 337;—Exch. Chanc.

Words used at the time of making a payment qualify it, but it is for the jury to judge of the truth of a statement accompanying the admission of a previous payment. Id.

Payment of interest upon a note payable on demand is sufficient to take the case out of the statute, although there is no independent evidence that any demand of payment of the note has been made. Damfield v. Tupper, 7 Exch. 27; 21 L. J., Exch. 6.

Appropriation of payments.—Where there are two debts, one of which is barred by the statute, and there is a part payment not specially appropriated by the debtor, it is a question for the jury whether the payment was made generally on account of whatever might be due from the debtor at the time, or on a particular account. Walker v. Butler, 6 El. & Bl. 503; 2 Jur., N. S. 687; 25 L. J., Q. B. 377.

A. being indebted to B. on three promissory notes, was applied to by B., for payment on account of interest, but without referring to any debt in particular; in consequence of this application A. paid 5*l.*; at the time of this payment two of the notes were barred.—Held, that the payment must be attributed as made exclusively in respect of the note not barred, and that the effect was as to it to prevent the operation of the statute. Nash v. Hodgson, 6 De G., M. & G. 474; 1 Jur., N. S. 946, 25 L. J., Chanc. 186.

Between Midsummer, 1845, and Lady-day, 1854, the guardians of the Wycombe Union made payments by way of relief to non-settled paupers of the Eton Union. The only authority for these payments were letters written in 1847, 1849 and 1850, in which the guardians of the Eton Union requested the guardians of the Wycombe Union to make weekly payments to certain paupers. One of these letters stated that "the money would be repaid quarterly," and another stated that "if they would furnish an account at the end of each quarter they would be repaid." In July, 1850, the guardians of the Wycombe Union sent to the guardians of the Eton Union an account, in which they claimed a balance (after giving credit for a payment made in November, 1849), for relief of non-settled paupers of the Eton Union, from Lady-day, 1845, to Lady-day 1847, and from Lady-day, 1849, to Lady-day, 1850. No previous account had been sent in or claim made in respect thereof:—Held, that the payment not being generally on account, did not take the case out of the statute. Wycombe Union (Guardians) v. Eton Union (Guardians), 1 H. & N. 887; 20 L. J., M. C. 97.

Where a debtor owes his creditor some debts from a period longer than six years, and others from a period within six years, and pays a sum without appropriating it to any particular debt, such payment is not a payment on account, to take out of the statute the debts due longer than six years. Mills v. Fookes, 7 Scott, 414; 5 Bing. N. C. 466; 2 Arn. 62; 3 Jur. 406.

But the creditor may, at any time, apply such payment to the debts due longer than six years. Id.

And may manifest his election to make such application by bringing an action within a reasonable time after such payment. Id.

Where there are two clear and undisputed debts, the case is not taken out of the statute, as to either debt, by evidence of a part payment within six years, not specifically appropriated to the one debt or the other. Burn v. Boulton, 2 C. B. 476; 13 L. J., C. P. 97.—Per Tindal, C. J.

By giving bills of exchange or promissory notes.—Where a debtor draws a bill of exchange, to be applied in part payment of the debt, and the bill is paid, when due, by the drawee to the creditor, it operates as a part payment, to defeat the statute, only from the time of the delivery of the bill by the debtor, not from the time of its payment. Ireing v. Veitch, 3 M. & W. 90; Mur. & H. 313. See Gowan v. Forster, 3 B. & Ad. 597.

Giving a bill of exchange in payment on account of a debt, under circumstances which raise an implication of a promise to pay the balance, is a payment within the promise of 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 1, and therefore takes the debt out of the statute, notwithstanding the bill is afterwards dishonored. Turney v. Dodsell, 3 El. & Bl. 186; 2 C. L. R. 666; 18 Jur. 187; 23 L. J., Q. B. 137.

A creditor, who had, more than six years before, supplied ships' stores on seven separate occasions to the debtor, amounting in the aggregate to more than 300*l.*, within six years, asked his debtor for money. The debtor answered that he had not looked into his accounts, but supposed the balance due to be between 90*l.* and 100*l.*, but he had not cash. Being pressed, he accepted a draft at four months for 60*l.*, taking an acknowledgment that he had given the acceptance on account. It was proved by other evidence that the amount unpaid for the ships' stores was 95*l.*; but the different accounts were never balanced or ascertained between the creditor and the debtor:—Held, that evidence of the giving of the acceptance under these circumstances was evidence to go to the jury of a payment on account of all the debts, so as to be evidence of a fresh promise to pay what was due, sufficient to take the whole out of the statute. Walker v. Butler, 6 El. & Bl. 506; 2 Jur., N. S. 687; 25 L. J., Q. B. 377.

A person died in 1830; part of his assets consisted of a note for 100*l.* of five persons. All interest on it was paid down to 1837, but by whom did not appear. In 1837, the executor took the note of one of the five for the 100*l.*, and interest was paid until 1842. Subsequently nothing was done, and the debt became barred by the statute:—Held, that the taking the second note was equivalent to payment of the first, and the executor was charged with the 100*l.* Sparkes v. Heston, 22 Beav. 587.

By delivery of goods.—A delivery of goods by a debtor to his creditor in liquidation of a previous debt, is a sufficient part payment. Hooper v. Stevens, 4 A. & E. 71; 1 H. & W. 480; 5 N. & M. 635; 7 C. & P. 260. S. P., Hart v. Naish or Nash, 2 C., M. & R. 337; 1 Gale, 171; 5 Tyr. 935.

By allowing or setting off cross or mutual claims.—A, having authority to collect the debts of a firm, agreed with B, who was indebted to the firm, to purchase goods from him, and to allow him the amount of the purchase-money in his account with the firm, and drew a check including that amount, and delivered the same to the bankers of the firm. The greater part of B's debt to the firm was incurred beyond the period of the statute:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence of a part payment to prevent the operation of the statute. Parce v. Selby, 6 Jur. 806—Q. B.

Where A. has an account against B., some of the items of which are more than six years old, and B. has a cross account against A., and they meet and go through both accounts, and a balance is struck in A.'s favor, this amounts to an agreement to set off B.'s claim against the earlier items of A.'s, out of which arises a new consideration for the payment of the balance, and takes the case out of the operation of the statute. Ashby v. James, 11 M. & W. 543; 13 L. J., Exch. 295.

The setting off a sum of money in an account stated and settled is a payment within the 9 Geo. 4, c. 14. Scholey v. Walton, 12 M. & W. 510; 8 Jur. 319; 13 L. J., Exch. 123.

In January, 1833, A. gave B., then a feme sole, his note for 246*l.* B., after having received part of the amount, died in 1834, leaving her husband, the plaintiff, surviving, and one child. The plaintiff did not then take out letters of administration, but arranged with A. that the interest of the note should go towards the maintenance of B.'s child, then under the care of A. In September, 1839, A. and the plaintiff settled their accounts, and A. indorsed on the note a memorandum that all the interest upon the note was paid up to that date, but no money passed. In 1843 the child died. In 1853 the plaintiff took out letters of administration, and brought an action as administrator against A., to recover the amount of the note:—Held, that there was a payment sufficient to take the case out of the statute, the maintenance of the child being treated by the parties as a money payment equivalent to the interest. Bodger v. Arch, 10 Exch. 823; 2 C. L. R. 1491; 24 L. J., Exch. 19.

One of two persons who had dealings together, and were mutually indebted to one another, had supplied some bricks on the credit of the other, in 1834, but no account had been delivered or made out on either side. In 1845 they signed, in duplicate, a memorandum, thus expressed: "It is agreed that Mr. R., in his general account, shall give credit to Dr. H. for 174*l.*, being for bricks delivered in 1834:"—Held, that this was insufficient to exclude the mutual debts from the operation of the statute. Hughes v. Paramore, 7 De G., M. & G. 239; 1 Jur., N. S. 1101; 24 L. J., Chanc. 681.

By agents.—To show a part payment within six years, the creditor proved a payment of a portion of his demand by the trustee under a deed of composition, who was expressly instructed to make the payment as a full satisfaction, instead of which he handed the money over as a part payment, and took a receipt accordingly. This payment so made was expressly repudiated by the debtor:—Held, that this was not a payment within the exception. Linley or Linsell v. Benson, 3 Scott, 399; 2 Bing. N. C. 241; 1 Hodges, 305.

A parish vestry having agreed to borrow money for building almshouses, the defendants, being two of the parish officers, in 1830 gave to the testator, who advanced the money, a promissory note, signed thus:—

| | | |
|---------|------------------|-------------------------------------|
| "J. H., | } Churchwardens. | } Or others for the time being." |
| "G. R., | | |
| "J. E., | } Overseers. | |
| "W. G., | | |

Interest on this note had been regularly paid by the overseers for the time being up to 1847, and had been by them debited to the parish. An action having been brought upon the note, and the statute pleaded:—Held, that the very form of the note made the existing parish officers the agents of the defendants for the payment of the interest on the note, and therefore that the judge was wrong in withdrawing the form of the note from the consideration of the jury, and stating that the question was, whether the interest had been paid with the authority or knowledge of the defendants. Jones v. Hughes or Evans, 5 Exch. 104; 19 L. J., Exch. 200.

Accounts between G. and D., drawn up by G., more than six years old, showed sums due from him for interest and payments made by him of rent for D. The first payment of rent appeared to be without express authority. In subsequent accounts the rent was treated as deductions from the sum due for interest, and as having been paid for D., and were classed with cash payments on account. Afterwards the direct interest account disappeared, but G. stated accounts on one side only, in which he charged the rents as paid for D. In the early periods the interest and rent nearly balanced each other in amount; in later periods, by a lowering of the rent, the interest exceeded. The payments of rent were proved to have been continued down to 1841. In an action by D. for money lent:—Held, that the jury might infer that the payments of rent were made by G., as agent for D., out of the interest due to D., in which case they were payments of interest, and would take the case out of the statute. Worthington v. Grimesditch, 7 Q. B. 479; 10 Jur. 26; 15 L. J., Q. B. 52.

Where money is paid by a debtor on behalf of a creditor, the character of such payments is matter rather of evidence than of law. Id.

The payment of interest on a note given by churchwardens on the parish account from time to time by the vestry, is a sufficient acknowledgment of the debt, as against the makers: & fortiori, where one of them has audited the parish accounts, in which payments of interest on the note are entered. Crow v. Pettit, 3 N. & M. 456; 8 C., nom. Rees v. Pettit, 1 A. & E. 196.

The defendant, in order to obtain an advance of money, gave a note to H., a customer of the plaintiffs, who were bankers. H. indorsed the note to the plaintiffs on obtaining the money, with which he was debited by them. The defendant was debited by H. with the amount, and H. had paid interest on the note to the plaintiffs within six years:—Held, that these payments did not take the note out of the statute as against the defendant, H. not being his agent for that purpose. Harding v. Edgecombe, 28 L. J., Exch. 313.

A., B. and C. carried on business as copartners under articles containing a covenant by which the partnership effects were made a security for the repayment of the sum in which the concern might be indebted to any partner; and the other partners covenanted to make up the deficiency according to their equitable liability. After the death of A. and B. their respective personal representatives filed a bill against C. to take the accounts of the partnership, and a receiver was appointed, who got in the assets and, without the sanction of the court, but with the approbation of the parties, paid them to the executors of A., to whom the partnership was largely indebted, and the suit was not further prosecuted. These payments were insufficient to discharge the debt due to A.'s estate, and the estate of B. remained liable to the estate of A. to a considerable amount in respect of that debt.—Held, that it not being proved that the receiver made the payments with the sanction of the personal representative of B. for the purpose of discharging the liability of C.'s estate, those payments did not take the demand against B.'s estate out of the statute. Whitley v. Lowe, 2 De G. & J. 704; 4 Jur., N. S. 815.

B. deposited 110*l.* with Messrs. H. B. L., C. F., E. L. and C. S. F., bankers, upon a deposit note, payable twenty days after sight. In June, 1833, H. B. L. died, having devised his real and personal estate to trustees, one of whom was his son, upon trust to raise money to pay his debts, and subject thereto upon trust for his son, whom he appointed sole executor. The son was admitted a partner in the bank. Subsequently E. L. and C. F. died. C. S. F. and the son continued the business, but became bankrupts in 1847. B., from the death of H. B. L., received interest at the bank upon his deposit note until the bankruptcy, when he proved his debt against the bankrupts' estate; and on a bill filed to make the real and personal estate of H. B. L. liable to the payment of the 110*l.*—Held, that the interest was not paid by the continuing partners, as agents of H. B. L.; that no agency could be implied; that the interest was paid on account of the firm; that all claim against the real and personal estate was barred by the statute in six years, that B. had accepted the surviving partners as his debtors, and the devise made by H. B. L. for payment of debts was satisfied. Brown v. Gordon, 23 L. J., Chanc. 65; 10 Beav. 303.

By or to executors and administrators.]—The payment of interest upon a note by the makers to the personal representatives of the payee within six years of the commencement of the action, is a sufficient acknowledgment, although the letters of administration under which the party claimed to whom the payments were made were not obtained in the diocese in which the note was bonum note.

Bile. Clarke v. Hooper, 4 M. & Scott, 353; 10 Bing. 430.

To an action by the payee of a note for 500*l.*, against the surviving executors of W. P., the maker, the plaintiff proved that he had been supplied by J. P., the deceased executor, with malt and other articles, and he put in evidence an account between them, signed as follows:—"Settled, J. P.;" on one side of which the plaintiff was charged with various quantities of malt, and on the other side had credit for payments, there being amongst others the following item:—"To one year's interest, 15*l.*;"—Held, that this settlement of account was evidence of payment of the 15*l.* by J. P., but not in his representative character. Scholey v. Walton, 12 M. & W. 510; 8 Jur. 810; 13 L. J., Exch. 122.

Semble, per Parke, B., payment by one of several executors, of a debt due from the testator, is not sufficient to take the case out of the statute as against his co-executors, even though made by him in his executive capacity. Id.

Where the action is by an executor, who has also claims due to himself in his own right, it will be for the jury to consider whether the payments were upon account of the debt due to the testator, or to the executor in his own right. Collinson v. Mergeson, 27 L. J., Exch. 803.

A father bequeathed to his two daughters 250*l.* each, to be paid when they arrived at the age of twenty-one, and, till that period, the expenses of board, clothes, and education to be borne and paid by his executors. He appointed executors, and also trustees, with all necessary powers to fulfill the will. At a meeting of the trustees and executors, for the purpose of settling the testator's affairs, the executors paid over to the trustees 500*l.*, to be set apart for the payment of the legacies to the daughters, when they attained their majority. This sum was afterwards lent by the trustees to the defendant on a note, which described them as "trustees acting under the will of the late Mr. W. B.;"—Held, that a payment of principal and interest to one of the legatees within six years was sufficient to take the case out of the statute, and that the trustees had a right to maintain an action on the note. Meggison v. Harper, 2 C. & M. 329; 4 Tyr. 24.

By or to husband and wife.—A feme sole being a payee of a note payable with interest, married, and her husband survived her:—Held, that the note did not become the property of the husband, but passed to her administrator, though the husband had received the interest during her life; for that he did not thereby reduce the chose in action into possession; and that the payment of such interest in the wife's lifetime, to the husband, within six years before action, must be considered as made to him in the character of an agent to the wife, and was an answer to a plea of the statute. Hart v. Stephens, 6 Q. B. 337; 9 Jur. 225; 14 L. J., Q. B. 148.

In an action by payee against a maker of a note, he pleaded the statute. Replication, that when the cause of action accrued, the plaintiff was the wife of B., and that she continued to be so until B. died, and the plaintiff became discover, and that she sued within six years after the death:—Held, good. Scarpellini v. Atcheson, 7 Q. B. 804; 14 L. J., Q. B. 333.

A declaration against husband and wife, upon a joint and several note made by the wife, before coverture, and A., alleged a promise by the wife, dum sola. The plaintiffs proved a payment of interest within six years, made by the wife after marriage, with money sent by A., but without the privity or subsequent ratification of the husband:—Held, that such payment raised no promise, either by the husband or the wife, so as to take the case out of the statute; inasmuch as, the wife being incapable of making any promise in law, expressed or implied, payment by her or the other joint maker of the note could create no promise on her part; and, as such payment was not made by the husband, or for any consideration affecting him, or with his sanction, it raised no implied promise on his part. Nees v. Holland, 18 Q. B. 203; 16 Jur., N. B. 333; 21 L. J., Q. B. 289.

Where an action was brought on a joint note, made by A. and B. while B. was sole, against A., B. and C., the husband of the latter, who was joined for conformity; and they pleaded actio non accrevit infra sex annos; to which the plaintiff replied, that the cause of action arose within six years:—Held, that an acknowledgment by A., within six years, that the debt was due, would not take the case out of the statute, such acknowledgment being made after the intermarriage of B. and C. Pittam v. Foster, 3 D. & R. 363; 1 B. & B. 248.

By one or more of several joint contractors or their executors, before the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856.—A payment of interest by A., on the joint and several note of A. and B., was evidence of a promise by B., and took the note out of the statute, though B. was a mere surety, and the payment was made without his knowledge. Burleigh v. Stott, 2 M. & R. 93; 8 B. & C. 20.

Under 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, a payment of interest within six years by one of several joint contractors took the debt out of the statute as against all. Wyatt v. Hodson, 8 Bing. 209; 1 M. & Scott, 442. S. P., Chippendale v. Thurston, 4 C. & P. 98; M. & M. 411; Pease v. Hirst, 10 B. & C. 122; 5 M. & R. 88.

Payment of interest by one of the makers of a joint and several note, though made more than six years after it became due, was sufficient as against the other maker. Channell v. Ditchburn, 5 M. & W. 424; 3 Jur. 1107.

One of two makers of a joint and several note having become a bankrupt, the payee received a dividend under the commission on account of the note:—Held, that this would prevent the other maker from availing himself of the statute for the remainder of the money due on the note; the dividend having been received within six years before the action brought. Jackson v. Fairbank, 2 H. Bl. 340.

But where one of two joint drawers of a bill of exchange became bankrupt, and under his commission the indorsees proved a debt (beyond the amount of the bill) for goods sold, and exhibited the bill as a security they then held for their debt, and afterwards received a dividend:—Held, in an action by the indorsees of the bill against the solvent partner, that the statute was a good defense, although the dividend had been paid by the assignees of the bankrupt partner within six years. Grandram v. Wharton, 1 B. & A. 463.

An acknowledgment of one of several makers of a joint and several note took it out of the statute as against the others, and might be given in evidence in a separate action against any of the others. Whitcomb v. Whiting, 2 Dougl. 628.

So, in the case of a joint note, even though one of the makers had never made any acknowledgment, and had signed the note as a surety only. Perham v. Raynal, 9 Moore, 566; 2 Bing. 306.

A. having applied to B. for a loan of 300*l.* on mortgage, B., doubting the sufficiency of the security, refused to advance it without having, in addition, a joint and several note for 50*l.* from A. and C., payable on demand. The note and mortgage were accordingly given, the latter containing a covenant by A. to pay the 300*l.*, and interest at 5*l.* per cent. Several half-yearly payments of 7*l.* 10*s.* each for interest having been made by A.:—Held, in an action against C. upon the note, that such payments by A. kept all the securities alive, and prevented the operation of the statute as to the note. Dowling v. Ford, 11 M. & W. 329; 13 L. J., Exch. 342.

A payment made by one partner, after the dissolution of partnership, on account of a partnership debt, and after six years had elapsed without any acknowledgment of the debt, was sufficient to take the case out of the operation of the statute, as against the other partner, though the jury found that the payment was fraudulently made, against his consent, and in concert with the creditor to revive the debt. Goddard v. Ingram, 3 Q. B. 639; 8 G. & D. 46; 6 Jur. 1040; 12 L. J., Q. B. 9.

In 1832 A. employed B. and C., then in partnership as attorneys, to lay out 500*l.* on mortgage. It was invested accordingly on a mortgage to D. D. subsequently sold the property, subject to the mortgage, and the purchaser shortly afterwards paid 500*l.* to C., who, however, did not inform either D., his partner, or A. of such receipt; and again lent the purchaser 300*l.*, and continued to receive the interest thereon. The partnership was dissolved in 1833; but both before and after the dissolution, and after the death of A., which took place in 1840, interest was paid as upon a mortgage of 500*l.* to A. and his representatives, up to 1843, by C. In 1846 the 300*l.* was paid to C., and the mortgage deed was given up by C., but no reconveyance was ever executed. Neither A. nor his representatives had any knowledge of these facts till 1848. Entries had been made by C. in the partnership books, of the receipts and payments; but B. had no knowledge of the transaction subsequent to the original advance of 500*l.*:—Held, in an action by the executors of A. against B. and C., that the statute was a bar to the action. Sims v. Brutton, 5 Exch. 802; 20 L. J., Exch. 41.

Where A., through misrepresentation, received from B. and several other persons, his tenants, sums of money, to which he was not entitled; and B. applied to him to have the money returned, stating that he and the other tenants had been induced to pay more than was due; and A. replied, "that, if there was any mistake, it should be rectified."—Held, that this obviated the statute as to payments made by the other tenants, as well as by B. Clark v. Hougham, 3 D. & R. 322; 2 B. & C. 140.

A. and B. made a joint and several note, and, after the lapse of six years, A. died, leaving B. one of his executors, who, ten years after his death, paid interest on the note, but not in his character of executor, but personally, as a maker of the note. In an action on the note by the executors of the payee, against the executors of A.:—Held, that the payment of interest by B. (who suffered judgment by default) within six years from the commencement of the action, was not sufficient, so as to make A.'s executors liable. Atkins v. Tredgold, 3 D. & R. 200; 2 B. & C. 23.

After the death of one maker of a joint and several note, signed by two, a payment upon it by the executor of the deceased party, did not take the debt out of the statute as against the survivor. Slater v. Lawson, 1 B. & Ad. 896.

By co-contractors or co-debtors, their executors or administrators, under the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856.—[By 10 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 14, in reference to the provisions of the 21 Jac. 1, c. 10, s. 3, and of the 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3, and the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 113, s. 20 (Irish), when there shall be two or more co-contractors or co-debtors, whether bound or liable jointly only, or jointly and severally, or executors or administrators of any contractor, no such co-contractor or co-debtor, executor or administrator, shall lose the benefit of the said enactments or any of them, so as to be chargeable in respect of or by reason only of payment of any principal, interest, or other money, by any other or others of such co-contractors or co-debtors, executors or administrators.]

By s. 10, in citing the act it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856."

The statute does not apply to a payment made before the act. Jackson v. Woolley, 8 El. & Bl. 778; 4 Jur., N. S. 656; 27 L. J.,

Q. B. 418—Exch. Cham.; reversing the judgment of the Queen's Bench, 4 Jur., N. S. 409; 27 L. J., Q. B. 181.

When a payment by one co-debtor is made with the mere knowledge and consent of the other, the latter does not lose the benefit of the statute. S. C., 4 Jur., N. S. 409; 27 L. J., Q. B. 181.

To a plea of the statute on a note, the plaintiff replied that the note was made by the defendant jointly with P., and that within six years before action P. paid the plaintiff interest on the note:—Held, that, assuming the payment to have been made before the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, the replication was bad on general demurrer. Ridd v. Moggridge, 2 H. & N. 567.

A. and B., partners, gave a note in the name of the firm; A. died, leaving B. his sole executor, and no proceedings were taken against his estate for more than six years; but B., who continued the business, made payments of interest, and then became bankrupt:—Held, that the payments were made in his character of surviving partner, and not as executor of A., and that, having regard to the above statute, the debt was barred as against the estate of A. Thompson v. Waithman, 8 Drew. 628; 2 Jur., N. S. 1080; 26 L. J., Chanc. 1080.

In 1853, H., as principal, and the defendant as a surety, gave a joint and several note to the plaintiff, payable on demand. In 1861, H. made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and the defendant signed and gave the following letter to the plaintiff: "I consent to your receiving the dividend under H.'s assignment, and agree that your so doing shall not prejudice your claim upon me for the same debt." The plaintiff accordingly received a dividend on the note, and afterwards brought an action on it against the defendant for the balance:—Held, that the payment of the dividend, coupled with the letter, did not amount to more than a payment only by one co-debtor under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 14, and that therefore the other co-debtor was entitled to the benefit of the statute by virtue of that section. Cockrill v. Sparke, 1 H. & C. 699; 33 L. J., Exch. 118.

The Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 14, applies to a case of dissolution of partnership where agency has not been expressly or necessarily or otherwise impliedly created between the persons who were formerly partners. Watson v. Woodman, 24 W. R. 47; 20 L. R., Eq. 721; 45 L. J., Chanc. Div. 57—V. C. II.

Effect of payment after action; or payment into court.—Part payment after action, will not take a debt out of the statute. Bateman v. Pinder, 2 G. & D. 790; 3 Q. B. 574.

Paying money into court for goods sold and delivered, does not deprive a defendant of the benefit of the statute as to the residue of the demand. Long v. Greville, 4 D. & R. 432; 3 B. & C. 10.

And payment of the principal into court, the claim for which is barred by the statute, will not take the claim of interest out of the statute. Collyer v. Willock, 12 Moore, 557; 4 Bing. 313. See Lechmere v. Fletcher, 1 C. & M. 628; 3 Tyr. 450.

Upon a plea brought in the county court within six years before an action, to recover two years' interest due upon a promissory note, made for the payment of a principal sum and interest, against the representatives of the deceased maker of the note, they, in the plea, being also the defendants in the action, pleaded the Statute of Limitations, in answer to which plea an acknowledgment within six years was given in evidence and judgment was given for the plaintiff, and the defendants thereupon paid into court the amount of the judgment:—Held, that to this action, brought to recover the principal and further interest thereon two years after such payment into court and more than six years after the acknowledgment proved in such plea, such payment did not necessarily imply a promise to pay the principal, and therefore was no evidence of an acknowledgment to pay the debt within six years, so as to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations, 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, s. 8. Morgan v. Rowlands, 41 L. J., Q. B. 187; 7 L. R., Q. B. 493; 20 W. R. 726; 26 L. T., N. S. 855.

Part payment of a debt does not take it out of the operation of the 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, unless it is made under such circumstances that a promise to pay the remainder may be reasonably inferred from it. Id.

As to proof of payment on account,—see this title, IV.

(c) Bonds and other Specialties.

Statute.—[By 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 5, if any acknowledgment shall have been made, either by writing, signed by the party liable by virtue of such indenture, specialty, or recognisance, or his agent, or by part payment or part satisfaction on account of any principal or interest being then due thereon, it shall and may be lawful for the person or persons entitled to such actions to bring his or their action for the money remaining unpaid and so acknowledged to be due, within twenty years after such acknowledgment by writing, or part payment or part satisfaction as aforesaid, or in case the person or persons entitled to such action shall, at the time of such acknowledgment, be under such disability as aforesaid [or the party making such acknowledgment be at the time of making the same beyond the seas, then within twenty years after such disability shall have ceased as aforesaid, or the party shall have returned from beyond the seas, as the case may be, no longer a disability by virtue of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 10]; and the plaintiff or plaintiffs in any such action, or [on] any [such] indenture, specialty, or recogn'sauce, may by way of replication, state such acknowledgment, and that such action was brought within the time aforesaid, in answer to a plea of the statute.

What acknowledgment or payment sufficient; and its effect.—The acknowledgment provided for by the above section, in order to take a specialty debt out of the operation of that statute, need not be made by the person chargeable to the person entitled, or amount to a promise to pay. Mudie v. Bannister, 4 Drew. 433; 5 Jur., N. S. 402; 28 L. J., Chanc. 881.

A payment by a devise for life of interest on a specialty of his testator, in which the heirs were bound, is an acknowledgment made "by the party liable by virtue of such specialty," within this section, and as such, sufficient to keep the right of action alive in its integrity against all parties interested in remainder. Hodgson v. Morley, 1 De G. & J. 1; 3 Jur., N. S. 440; 28 L. J., Chanc. 439; reversing decision of Wood, V. C., 2 Kay & J. 330; 2 Jur., N. S. 805; 25 L. J., Chanc. 320. See Pears v. Laing, 12 L. R., Eq. 42, 55, 56; 40 L. J., Chanc. 225, 229; 24 L. T., N. S. 19, 21, 22.

Under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 5, where creditors of a testator had a claim against land as against mortgagees of an equitable life estate devised by the will, and interest on the debt had been regularly paid by the testator's legal personal representatives, who also had the legal estate in the land:—Held, that this payment did not operate to prevent the statute from running in favor of the mortgagees. Cooper v. Crewe, 15 W. R. 242; 2 L. R., Ch. 112; 36 L. J., Chanc. 114; 15 L. T., N. S. 427—C.

A mortgagor assigned the equity of redemption by a deed, which contained a recital that all the interest had been paid within twenty years of the commencement of the action, and a covenant by the assignee to pay the principal and future interest to the mortgagee, and to indemnify the mortgagor in case of default. The mortgagee was no party to the deed, but continued to receive the interest upon the mortgage from the assignee of the equity of redemption:—Held, that the recital in the deed was evidence of an acknowledgment by part payment of interest within twenty years. Forsyth v. Bristol, 8 Exch. 716; 17 Jur. 675; 23 L. J., Exch. 253.

Held, also, that the payment of interest by the assignee of the equity of redemption was a sufficient acknowledgment to take the case out of the statute as against the mortgagor. Ib.

More than twenty years after a mortgagee had entered into possession, the mortgagor's solicitor wrote to the mortgagee requesting to know when he could see the mortgagee upon the subject of the mortgage. The mortgagee replied by a letter, saying, "I do not see the use of a meeting, unless some one is ready with the money to pay me off."—Held, that this letter was a sufficient acknowledgment in writing to exclude the operation of the statute, although not written within twenty years after the mortgagee had entered into possession. Stansfield v. Hobson, 3 De G., M. & G. 620; 22 L. J., Chanc. 637.

In 1833, trustees of a marriage settlement lent to the husband, at interest, some of the money settled to the separate use of his wife, on the security of a joint bond of the husband and the defendant. No interest was paid, but on the 31st October, 1847, it was arranged between the trustees and the husband and wife that she should give the trustees her receipt for the interest up to that date, which she accordingly did. She afterwards from time to time gave receipts for each half year's interest up to November, 1860. No money ever passed: Held, that the transaction amounted to a payment or satisfaction of the interest, so as to take the case out of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 5. Amos v. Smith, 1 H. & C. 239; 31 L. J., Exch. 423; 10 W. R. 759; 7 L. T., N. S. 68.

In an action on a mortgage deed of houses, executed in 1824 by the defendant in favor of the plaintiff's testator, to secure payment of 400*l.* and interest the plaintiff gave in evidence a deed executed by the defendant within twenty years before action brought, but to which deed the testator was no party. The deed, after reciting that the defendant had executed a mortgage of the houses to the testator, for securing to him 320*l.* and interest, stated that he conveyed that and other property to trustees on trust to sell, and out of the proceeds to pay off all the mortgages and other incumbrances affecting the property, and then to pay the creditors, with an ultimate trust as to the surplus.—Held, that this was not an acknowledgment within s. 5, so as to take the case out of the operation of s. 8. Howcutt v. Bonner, 3 Exch. 491; 18 L. J., Exch. 262.

Where a tenant for life of a mortgaged estate by deed admitted the payment of interest of the mortgage:—Held, not a sufficient acknowledgment of the debt as against the remainder-man to prevent the statute from operating. Gregon v. Hindley, 10 Jur. 383—V. C. E.

As to acknowledgment in respect of rents reserved by indenture, and of moneys secured by mortgage or other charge on lands or rents,—see this title, II., 4.

IV. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

Declarations to avoid bar of the statute.—The plaintiff may declare on the original promise, although he relies on a subsequent promise, to take the case out of the statute. Leaper v. Tutton, 16 East, 420. S. P., Irving v. Veitch, 3 M. & W. 90.

A new promise infra sex annos need not be declared on specially, although made thirteen years after the accrual of the original cause of action. Upton v. Elze, 12 Moore, 303.

But a promise to pay a debt, barred by the statute, if conditional, must be declared on as conditional, notwithstanding it was given within six years from the time of the contraction of the debt. Haydon v. Williams, 7 Bing 163; 4 M. & P. 811.

A declaration, reciting a writ issued on the 28th of November, 1843, stated that heretofore, to wit, on the 29th day of December, A.D. 1830, the defendant contracted that he would, within twelve months from a certain day, to wit, the day and year aforesaid, supply the plaintiff with certain articles. Breach, that he did not nor would, within twelve months from the said day, to wit, the day and year aforesaid, supply the articles. Plea, that the cause of action did not accrue within six years next before suit. Replication, that the defendant, when the action accrued, was beyond the seas; and that the action was commenced within six years of his first return after such accruing:—Held, that the declaration was substantially good, the averments showing that twelve months had elapsed before the action; and, also, that the plea might be resorted to as showing that the twelve months had so elapsed. Pannin v. Anderson, 7 Q. B. 811; 9 Jur. 969; 14 L. J., Q. B. 282.

Necessity of pleading the statute.—Where a statute of limitations extinguishes the right, and does not merely bar the remedy, the defense under such statute need not be pleaded specially; and therefore, in replevin, evidence of the lapse of twenty years, under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, ss. 23, 24, since the last payment of rent, may be given under a plea in bar of non tenuit. De Beauvoir v. Owen (in error), 5 Exch. 166; 19 L. J., Exch. 177—Exch. Cham.

Where a writ, issued within six years after the cause of action accrued, had not been continued pursuant to 2 Will. 4, c. 39, s. 10, the defendant was not bound to plead such non-continuance specially, but might take advantage of it under the plea that the cause of action did not accrue within six years next before the suit; for this purpose the last writ which was served was the commencement of the suit. Pratt v. Hawkins, 15 M. & W. 899.

The 2 Will. 4, c. 39, having put all actions on the same footing and made the issuing of the writ of summons the commencement of the suit, the plea of the statute ought to be in the same form; and, if the plaintiff replied that the cause did accrue within the limited time, he must have shown by proper record all the formalities required by s. 10 to have been complied with, just as he must have done before the statute where there was a plea that the cause of action did not accrue within six years before the commencement of the suit. Higgs v. Mortimer, 1 Exch. 711; 5 D. & L. 757; 12 Jur. 249.

The Statute of Limitations must, under the new procedure, be pleaded, and cannot be raised by demurrer. Waklee v. Davis, 25 W. R. 60—Q. B. Div.

It is sufficient, on demurrer, to plead some special ground and "other grounds sufficient to sustain the demurrer" to enable a party demurring to raise the Statute of Limitations at the bar, which can be raised by demurrer in an action for the recovery of real estate. Dawkins v. Penrhyn, 20 W. R. 6; 37 L. T., N. S. 80; 6 L. R., Ch. Div. 318—C. A.

Form and sufficiency of pleas.—[In schedule (B.) to 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, the following form of plea, No. 30, is given: That the alleged cause of action did not accrue within six years, state the period of limitation applicable to the case] before this suit.

By s. 84, the plea may be pleaded with certain other pleas without leave of the court or a judge.]

In trover by an administrator, "not guilty of the premises within six years," is a bad plea, not being equivalent to an allegation that the cause of action did not accrue within six years. Pratt v. Swaine, 2 M. & R. 350; 8 B. & C. 285.

To a declaration in an action, founded on tort, a plea of not guilty of the supposed grievances in the declaration mentioned within six years before the exhibiting the plaintiff's bill, was bad on special demurrer. Dyster v. Battye, 8 B. & A. 448.

So a plea that "the supposed debt, if any such there be," did not accrue within six years, was bad on special demurrer, for not confessing the debt. Margett v. Bays, 4 A. & E. 489; 6 N. & M. 328.

But a plea that a debt accrued more than six years ago, without stating that it did not accrue within the six years, does not amount to an informal plea of the statute. Bush v. Martin, 2 H. & C. 311; 10 Jur., N. S. 347; 33 L. J., Exch. 17; 12 W. R. 203; 9 L. T., N. S. 510.

Action by an administratrix of A. for money received by the defendant, who was an attorney, to the use of A., in his lifetime. Plea, the statute. Replication, that A. was beyond the seas when the cause of action accrued, and did not return to England before his death, and that until the grant of administration there was no one to sue, and that the action was brought within three days after administration granted. Rejoinder, that before and at the time of his death, the plaintiff was his wife, and might, within a reasonable time after his death, have obtained administration of his effects; but that she suffered more than seven years to elapse after his death before she took out letters of administration:—Held, that if there were circumstances which, at law, prevented the defendant, being an attorney, from setting up the defense of the statute to a money demand at the suit of his client, the proper way for the plaintiff to avail herself of them was by a sur-rejoinder, and not by calling on the court to interpose its summary jurisdiction and prevent the defendant from pleading the statute. Tritton, In re, 1 L. M. & P. 74—B. C.—Wightman.

In an action for money due on a promissory note, payable with interest, the declaration stated, that the defendant had not paid the amount of the note and interest, "except interest on the note from its date up to a certain day within six years next before the commencement of the suit." The defendant pleaded the statute in the usual form:—Held, that the plea was good, because the interest was accessory to the principal; and the allegation of the payment of the interest was merely a statement of evidence, which might or might not take the case out of the statute. Hollis v. Palmer, 3 Scott, 265; 2 Bing. N. C. 713; 2 Hodges, 55.

To an action on a bond, a plea setting out the bond, which appeared to be conditioned for the payment of money, and the performance of covenants, and alleging that the cause of action in the declaration mentioned did not accrue within twenty years, is bad. Sanders v. Coward, 1 D. & L. 1012; 13 M. & W. 65; 13 L. J., Exch. 842.

In an action on a bond, which appeared to be conditioned for the performance of the covenants or conditions contained in a deed, a plea that no cause of action in respect of the bond, by reason of any breach of the condition of the bond, or of the covenants or conditions in the deed, had accrued at any time within twenty years next before the commencement of the suit, is bad; first, for not setting out the deed; and, secondly, because it did not clearly appear whether the plea meant that every condition or covenant was to be performed and was broken more than twenty years before the commencement of the suit, or that during such twenty years every condition or covenant had been duly performed; and if the latter was the meaning of the plea, it was incorrect in form, as the plea ought to have shown affirmatively that the condition was duly performed. Sanders v. Coward, 15 M. & W. 48; 3 D. & L. 281; 10 Jur. 186; 15 L. J., Exch. 97.

Seemingly, the proper form of plea would have been to set out the deed, to aver performance of all that was performed within twenty years, to admit the breaches beyond twenty years, and to those breaches to plead the Statute of Limitations. Id.

To a declaration on a bond, not setting out any condition, plea, that the debt and cause of action did not accrue within twenty years. At the trial the bond and condition were produced, when it appeared that the bond had been executed more than twenty years, but that the condition was for the payment of the money after the death of a party who was proved to have died within twenty years:—Held, that the plea was disproved. Tuckey v. Hawkins, 4 C. B. 655; 11 Jur. 919; 16 L. J., C. P. 209.

— of replications and subsequent pleadings.—The statute must be replied specially to a plea of set-off, and cannot be taken advantage of under a general replication of nil debet. Chappel v. Durston, 1 C. & J. 1.

If a plaintiff intends to rely on fraud committed by the defendant as an answer to a plea of the statute, it must be replied specially, and cannot be taken advantage of under the replication, that the latter did promise within six years. Clark v. Hougham, 3 D. & R. 322; 2 B. & C. 149.

A plea of set-off stated that the plaintiff made his promissory note payable to C., which was duly indorsed, and delivered to the defendant at C.'s death, by C.'s administrator, and was unpaid. Replication, that the supposed cause of set-off on the note did not accrue to the defendant within six years:—Held, that this replication admitted not only the making of the note, but the indorsement of it to the defendant by C.'s administrator, and that the defendant might, therefore, avail himself of memorandums of the payment of interest, written on the note by C. before 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, to bar the statute. Gale v. Tapern or Capron, 1 A. & E. 102; 3 N. & M. 868.

A plaintiff, under a replication of the statute, to a plea of set-off, could not, on the trial, reduce the amount of the set-off by showing payment of part, before 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 75; the payment of part ought to have been replied. Moore v. Wood, 2 M. & Rob. 407—Tindal.

In an action for the value of coal wrongfully taken out of the plaintiff's mine, a replication to a plea of the statute that the wrongful taking was fraudulently concealed from the plaintiff until within six years before action, was disallowed to be pleaded, on the ground that a court of equity would not restrain the defendant from setting up the defense, and that, if there was any right to equitable relief, it could only be by a bill for account in equity, in which the amount allowed would be different from the amount recoverable at law. Hunter v. Gibbons, 3 Jur., N. S. 1249; 26 L. J., Exch. 1; 1 H. & N. 459.

A replication to a plea of the statute to a declaration, containing several counts on promises, averred, that, before and at the time of the making of the several promises, the defendant was in parts beyond the sea, and afterwards returned, which was his first return after making the several promises:—Held, that the word "several" might be taken distributively, and considered to mean that it was the defendant's first return after "each and every" of the promises. Plummer v. Woodburne, 7 D. & R. 25; 4 B. & C. 625.

It is unnecessary, in a replication, under 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 19, to allege that the defendant has returned from beyond the seas, or that the action was brought within six years after his return from beyond the seas since the cause of action accrued. Forbes v. Smith, 1 Jur., N. S. 503; 11 Exch. 161; 24 L. J., Exch. 299.

In an action by payee against the maker of a note, he pleaded the statute. A replication, that when the cause of action accrued the plaintiff was the wife of B., and that she continued to be so until B. died, and the plaintiff became discover, and that she sued with-years after his death, is good. Scarsdale v. Atkinson, 7 Q. B. 864; 9 Jur. 837; 1 L. J., Q. B. 333.

rejoinder, that the plaintiff was a feme covert, and the wife of B. until the time of death; that the note was payable to her; and that, before it was due, B. authorized her to indorse it in blank in her own name, and deliver it to F., which she did for him; that, when the note became due, more than six years before action brought, the note was in the hands of another indorsee, who presented it for payment; and that afterwards, and before action brought, the note came to the possession of the plaintiff by delivery from the last-mentioned indorsee, who was then entitled to sue thereon, is bad, for her the matter alleged was a departure from pleading the statute, which plea admitted an original right of action, or if the rejoinder was confined to the matter stated in the replication, it was no answer for want of denial that the action was brought within six years after the husband's death. Id.

To a plea of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, in an action upon a mortgage deed, the plaintiff, in order to take the case out of such statute by an acknowledgment in writing, under s. 5, must reply such acknowledgment specially. Kempe or Kent v. Gibson or Gibbons, 9 Q. B. 609; 11 Jur. 299; 16 L. J., Q. B. 120.

But the plaintiff need not set out the acknowledgment in his replication. S. C., 12 Q. B. 662; 12 Jur. 607; 17 L. J., Q. B. 198.

To an action on a deed the defendant pleaded the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, to which the plaintiff replied, that the defendant before suit made an acknowledgment that the debt remained unpaid and due to the plaintiff, within the true intent and meaning of the statute, and that the action was brought within twenty years next after such acknowledgment. The court directed this replication to be amended, as being so framed as to prejudice the fair trial of the cause; but refused to give the defendant the costs of the application, or to compel the plaintiff to specify the date of the acknowledgment on which he relied. Horsyth v. Briarwood, 8 Exch. 847; 17 Jur. 46; 22 L. J., Exch. 70.

In trespass quare clausum fregit, the defendant, in his plea, deduced title by an inclosure act to an allotment of land, comprising the locus in quo, to T., a trustee for him. It stated the entry and possession of T., until just before the time of the trespasses, gave express color to the plaintiff, and stated his possession at the time of the trespass under a charter of demise, without livery, and justified the trespass as servant of T., and by his command. The plaintiff replied, that the defendant entered and committed the trespasses after the 1st December, 1833; and that the entry was made for the purpose of recovering the close, and that the supposed right to enter did not first come to T. or the defendant, or any person through whom he claimed the estate and interest in the close, at any time within twenty years before making that entry; and that by reason thereof the supposed right of T., and the defendant as his servant, was extinguished.—Held, that the replication was sufficient, and that it was not necessary that it should show what the defendant's title was, and how it was barred; and that, if the defendant wished to avail himself of the right of entry under 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 15, he ought to have rejoined it. Jones v. Jones, 4 D. & L. 494; 16 M. & W. 699; 11 Jur. 335; 16 L. J., Exch. 299.

To an action for seizing two beasts of the plaintiff the defendant pleaded that they were taken as customary heriots, and the plaintiff replied a discontinuance of taking heriots for more than twenty years, and that the right to heriots then accrued to the lord within the meaning of the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42.—Held, that the replication was bad. Zouche v. Dalbiac, 44 L. J., Exch. 109; 10 L. R., Exch. 172; 23 W. R. 564; 33 L. T., N. S. 221.

Proof of time when statute begins to run.—In an action for goods sold and delivered, the general issue and the statute were pleaded. The replication traversed the latter plea. The plaintiff's evidence consisted of such an admission by the defendant as would have been evidence to go to a jury, on the general issue, that a debt was owing from him to the plaintiff, but he did not prove when the debt was contracted. No evidence was given for the defendant in support of his plea.—Held, that it was incumbent on the plaintiff to support the affirmative terms of his replication, by showing that the debt was contracted within six years, or that the acknowledgment or promise was made in some writing signed by the defendant, so as to take the case out of the statute, pursuant to 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, and a nonsuit was entered accordingly. Wilby v. Henman, 4 Tyr. 557; 2 C. & M. 658.

A promissory note given by a defendant to the plaintiff, payable five years after date, for value received, is evidence of an account stated, against which the statute does not commence running until the maturity of the note. Fryer v. Roe, 12 C. B. 437.

Proof of issue and renewal of summons to avoid the bar of the statute.—[By 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 12, the production of a writ of summons purporting to be marked with the seal of the court, showing the sums to have been renewed according to that act, shall be sufficient evidence of its having been so renewed, and of the commencement of the action as of the first date of such renewed writ for all purposes.]

Before this provision the nisi prims record, showing that the writ of summons issued within six years of the accrual of the cause of action, was not conclusive evidence to prevent the operation of the statute. Pritchard v. Dagshaw, 11 C. B. 459; 2 L., M. & P. 323; 15 Jur. 730; 20 L. J., C. P. 161.

In order to save the statute, a second or a subsequent writ of summons must, at the time a copy was served, have contained the indorsement required by 2 Will. 4, c. 39, s. 10, and such indorsements must have been made by the plaintiff or his attorney, and the roll was no evidence of these facts. Walker v. Collick, 4 Exch. 171; 7 D. & L. 225; 18 L. J., Exch. 387.

Parol evidence to explain acknowledgment in writing.—When a written promise to pay a debt barred by the statute has been lost, oral evidence of the contents of the writing may be given. Huydon v. Williams, 4 M. & P. 811; 7 Bing. 163.

When a letter, acknowledging the existence of a debt, which was produced for the purpose of taking the case out of the statute, did not contain any date:—Held, that the time when the letter was written might be supplied by parol evidence. Edmunds v. Downes, 3 C. & M. 459; 4 Tyr. 173. And see Hartley v. Wharton, 3 P. & D. 529; 11 A. & E. 934.

A promise in writing, signed by the party chargeable thereby, to pay his proportion of a joint debt more than six years old, is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 1, to take the case out of the statute, though no amount is specified in the promise; and a creditor suing on such promise is not confined to nominal damages, but may recover the whole of such proportion, upon proving the amount by extrinsic evidence. Lechmere v. Fletcher, 1 C. & M. 623; 8 Tyr. 450.

A. gave to B. a note, dated October, 1834, for 837l. 1s. 6d., payable on demand. In December, 1834, a demand was made, and A. then promised to pay interest, and signed an unstamped memorandum, dated the 2d December, 1844, as follows:—"I promise to pay to B. 837l., with 4l per cent. interest thereon." Neither principal nor interest was paid, but in January, 1848, A. wrote to B. a letter referring to a note for a debt, which he acknowledged, and promised thereby to pay:—Held, that the memorandum of December, 1834, and a letter accompanying it, showed that interest was running; and that, though in form a note and unstamped, it could be looked at to see to what debt this interest was to be referred; and that as no other debt was proved to exist, the 837l. there mentioned was to be assumed to be part of the 837l. 1s. 6d. secured by the former note. Spickernell v. Hotham, 1 Kny. 660.

Held, also, that in the absence of proof of the existence of any other note to which it could relate, the letter of 1848 must be taken to refer to the note of October, 1834, and thus to take it out of the statute. Id.

The plaintiffs and S. sold a library of books for the defendant, some of which were returned by the purchasers as imperfect. The defendant thereupon wrote to the plaintiffs the following letter, dated the 18th December, 1827:—"I have received the imperfect books, which, together with the cash overpaid on the settlement of your account, amounts to 80l. 7s., which sum I will pay in two years."—Held, evidence of an account stated of debts which would become due in two years, so as to defeat a plea of the statute. Wheatley v. Williams, 1 M. & W. 535; Tyr. & G. 1042.

Proof of payment on account.—Indorsements, on a promissory note, admitting the receipt of interest, are presumed to have been written at the time they bear date. Smith v. Batters, 1 M. & Rob. 341—Taunton.

In an action on a note bearing interest, proof that the defendant, being sent to by the plaintiff for money, paid it, and said, "This puts us straight for last year's interest, all but 18s., some day next week I will bring that up," is sufficient answer to a plea of the statute, no evidence being given of any other debt being due. Evans v. Davies, 4 A. & E. 840; 2 H. & W. 15.

A witness, who said he settled all kinds of accounts for the defendant, admitted that an account containing a memorandum of a payment on the part of the defendant, was in his own handwriting, but said he could not recollect the fact. Held, sufficient evidence of payment to go to a jury. Trentham v. Deserill, 4 Scott, 128, 3 Bing. N. C. 397.

The plaintiff, an attorney, had done professional business of various kinds for the defendant in 1827, and several subsequent years. In July, 1832, the defendant having been a witness on a lunacy inquiry, in which the plaintiff was concerned as solicitor, the defendant wrote to him to ask what were his expenses on that occasion. The defendant, in reply, requested the plaintiff to allow what was usual, and place the same to his (the defendant's) account. In March, 1833, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant, informing him that the sums allowed were 2l 2s. and 10s. 6d., enclosing receipts for those sums for the defendant's signature, and concluding, "I will give you credit for the sums in my account against you, agreeably to your note of the 21st July last." The defendant returned the receipts signed by him, and the 2l 2s. and 10s. 6d. were paid to the plaintiff on the production of those receipts. In 1831, the plaintiff delivered to the defendant a bill of costs, amounting to 230l., the first item being in 1827, and the two last in 1830 and 1831. These two were charges for 3s. and 5l. cash lent; the rest of the bill was for professional business. In an action on this bill, commenced in June, 1839:—Held, that the letters given in evidence did not sufficiently show that the 2l 2s. and 10s. 6d. were paid in the discharge of the debt for which the action was brought, so as to take the case out of the statute as to any part of the demand. Wagh v. Cape, 6 M. & W. 824. See Waller v. Jacey, 1 Scott, N. R. 186; 1 M. & G. 54; 8 D. P. C. 592; 4 Jur. 425.

An acknowledgment of payment, in writing, although unsigned, is sufficient to take a debt out of the statute. Cleave v. Jones, 6 Exch. 573; 15 Jur. 515; 20 L. J., Exch. 276—Exch. Cham.

Part payment of principal or payment of interest on account of a debt is not affected by 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 3, and therefore a parol acknowledgment of payment within six years before action will take the case out of the statute. Ib.

To a note for 350*l.*, with interest, the debtor pleaded the statute. At the trial the only evidence given by the creditor was the following unsigned entry in a book of the debtor, and in her handwriting:—"1843. Cleave's Int. on 350*l.*—17*l.* 10*s.*."—Held, sufficient evidence of payment of interest to the creditor to take the case out of the statute. Ib.

In an action by payee against maker of a note, to rebut a plea of the statute, the plaintiff proved the fact of a payment on account of the note within six years, and he further proved a parol admission by the party paying that he had made this payment:—Held, that this admission was rightly received to corroborate the direct proof of the fact of payment, as 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 3, merely excludes the acknowledgment "by words only." Bevan or Bevan v. Gething or Gethin, 3 Q. B. 740; 3 G. & D. 59; 6 Jur. 971; 12 L. J., Q. B. 37.

In an action by the executor of a payee of a note against the maker, in order to take the case out of the statute, he produced a book in which he had made memorandums by the direction of the testatrix, of payments of interest by the defendant to the testatrix within six years:—Held, admissible, and not excluded by 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 3. Bradley v. James, 13 C. B. 822; 23 L. J., C. P. 193.

A debtor sent to one of the persons beneficially interested, under the will of his creditor, a note insufficiently stamped, for the amount of the debt, with a letter referring to the note as being for the money due:—Held, that the letter was not of itself a sufficient promise or acknowledgment to exclude the operation of the statute, and that the note, being unstamped, could not be received in evidence to show what the promise was, that being a direct and not a collateral purpose. Parmiter v. Parmiter, 3 De G., F. & J. 461; 30 L. J., Chanc. 508; 3 L. T., N. S. 799.

Evidence of verbal admissions, in 1850, by A., since deceased, that he owed a debt of 2,300*l.* to B.'s estate, the interest of which he had arranged to discharge, and was discharging, by paying two annuities by B.'s will, together with a statement in an affidavit by B.'s executor in 1850, which was inserted in a draft affidavit from A.'s dictation, to the effect that B.'s executor had received in August, 1850, from A., a half-year's interest on 2,300*l.*, and had paid the annuities the same half year, is sufficient to take the debt of 2,300*l.* out of the statute. Edwards v. James, 1 Kay & J. 534.

When an indorsement on a note of payment of interest made by the authority of a deceased holder, appears to have been made, after the statute had run, it is not evidence to exclude the operation of the statute Briggs v. Wilson, 5 De G., M. & G. 12.

Lis Pendens.

Effect.—The doctrine as to the effect of lis pendens on the title of an alienee, is not founded on any principles of courts of equity with regard to notice, but on the ground that it is necessary to the administration of justice that the decision of the court in a suit should be binding, not only on the litigant parties, but on those who derive title from them pendente lite, whether with notice of the suit or not. Bellamy v. Sabine, 1 De G. & J. 566; 3 Jur., N. S. 943; 20 L. J., Chanc. 797.

A person who, without notice of a suit, purchases from one of the defendants property which is the subject of it, is not, in consequence of the pendency of the suit, affected by an equitable title of another defendant, which appears on the face of the proceedings, but of which he has no notice, and to which it is not necessary, for any of the purposes of the suit, to give effect. Ib.

A registered lis pendens does not create a charge or a lien on the property, nor does it excuse a purchaser from completing his contract; it merely puts him upon an inquiry into the validity of the claim. Bull v. Hutchens, 32 Beav. 615; 9 Jur., N. S. 954.

A petition to wind up a company does not constitute a lis pendens as against a contributory. Thornton, Ex parte, 36 L. J., Chanc. 190; 2 L. R., Ch. 171; 15 W. R. 292; 15 L. T., N. S. 523—L. J.

When a suit has been instituted in order to obtain a specific property, and the object of the suit may be wholly baffled by a sale by the defendant if the suit is not registered, that is a case of lis pendens. Plant v. Pearson, 20 W. R. 314; 41 L. J., Q. B. 169; 26 L. T., N. S. 313.

In a suit which had been registered as a lis pendens, a decree was made for administration of a testator's estate. The executrix subsequently deposited an asset of the testator with a bank as security for advances. The bank had no notice of the suit:—Held, that the bank had a good lien on the property deposited. Berry v. Gibbons, 20 L. T., N. S. 68—L. J.

Vacating registration.—[Whereas a registered lis pendens cannot be vacated without the consent of the person by whom it was registered, and such consent is sometimes withheld, although the suit or proceeding is at an end, or is not being bona fide prosecuted; for remedy whereof be it enacted, that the court before whom the property sought to be bound is in litigation may, upon the determination of the lis pendens, or during the pendency thereof, where the court shall be satisfied that the litigation is not prosecuted bona fide, make an order, if it shall see fit, for the vacating of the registration without the consent of the party who registered it, and may, in the discretion of the court, direct the party on whose behalf the registration was made, to pay all the costs and expenses occasioned by the registration or the vacating thereof;]

The application to the court pending the litigation may be in a summary way, by petition or motion in the court, or by summons at chambers, and if an order shall be made for vacating any such registration, the senior master of the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster shall, upon the filing with him of an office copy of such order, enter a discharge of such lis pendens on the register, and shall be entitled for every such entry of discharge to the sum of 2s. 6d., and no more, and may charge for every such certificate the sum of 1s., to be paid and collected by stamps, as under 28 & 29 Vict. c. 45. (30 & 31 Vict. c. 47, s. 2.)]

When an official liquidator of a company registered the winding up as a lis pendens against a contributory, the Court of Chancery ordered him to vacate the registry. Thornton, Ex parte, 36 L. J., Chanc. 100; 2 L. R., Ch. 171; 15 L. T., N. S. 523; 15 W. R. 202—L. J.

On an application, under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 47, s. 2, by a defendant in a suit which had been registered as a lis pendens, and subsequently by consent dismissed for want of prosecution, the court ordered the registration to be vacated upon production of an affidavit of service of the notice of motion, upon the solicitor of one of two plaintiffs who could not be found, and upon the solicitor of the trustee in bankruptcy of the other plaintiff. Jervis v. Berridge, 44 L. J., Chanc. 164; 31 L. T., N. S. 426; 23 W. R. 43—V. C. M.

An application, under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 47, s. 2, for vacating the registration of a lis pendens after the determination of the litigation, should be made by motion or otherwise in the matter of the act, and in the action, suit or proceeding; but an independent action is not improper. Clutton v. Lee, 45 L. J., Chanc. Div. 684; 24 W. R. 607—R.

[Statutes.] '21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, is "The Local Government Act, 1858," amended by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61, 26 Vict. c. 17, and 26 & 27 Vict. c. 70.

23 & 24 Vict. c. 51, requires an annual return to be made to a secretary of state, of the rates, taxes, tithes, and dues levied for local purposes in England.

By 30 & 31 Vict. c. 22, any local authority may, with the approval of a secretary of state, contract with a neighboring local authority for lock-up houses, and for the custody and maintenance of persons therein committed for trial.

By 34 & 35 Vict. c. 70, a local government board is constituted, vesting therein the functions of the secretary of state and privy council, con-ing the public health and local government, either with the expanded powers and duties of the Poor Law Board.

35 & 36 Vict. c. 79, amends the law relating to public health and the constitution of local government boards.

35 & 36 Vict. c. 69, constitutes a local government board in Ireland.

37 & 38 Vict. c. 89, amends and extends the sanitary laws.

38 & 39 Vict. c. 83, amends the law relating to securities for loans contracted by local authorities.]

Interpretation and effect of Local Government Acts.—A stable in a yard at the rear of the proprietor's premises was pulled down and re-erected, of smaller superficial dimensions, but somewhat higher, in another part of the same yard, the old materials, with some addition, and the boundary walls of the yard being made use of in such re-erection:—Held, that this was a "new building" within the Local Government Act, 1858, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, s. 34, and the by-laws of the local board. Hobbs v. Dancer, 9 L. R., C. P. 30; 43 L. J., M. C. 21; 29 L. T., N. S. 687.

Held, also, that the question was properly raised as a question of law for the opinion of the court. Id.

The words, "so as to deteriorate or affect the purity or quality of the water in such natural stream" in the Local Government Act Amendment Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61, s. 4, mean the water at the point of discharge of any outfall drain, and not the water in the stream generally. Att. Gen. v. Cokermouth Local Board, 23 W. R. 619; 30 L. T., N. S. 590—R.

The Local Government Act, 1858, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, s. 24, which enacts, that in corporate boroughs the local boards "shall be the mayor, aldermen and burgesses acting by the council" does not make the local board a new and separate body, but in substance enacts that in corporate boroughs the corporation shall be the local board; and if in making contracts the name and style of the corporation "acting as the local board" is used, the corporation is the essential body and contracting party and may be sued as such on the contracts. Andrews v. Ryde (Mayor, &c.), 43 L. J., Exch. 174; 9 L. R., Exch. 302; 23 W. R. 58.

Adoption of Local Government Acts.—The 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, s. 18, empowers any ratepayer who disputes the validity of a vote for the adoption of the act, to appeal to a secretary of state, who may, after inquiry, issue such order thereon as he may deem requisite to determine the questions arising on such appeal, and as to the validity or invalidity of such vote. By s. 81, all orders made by a secretary of state in pursuance of the act shall be binding and conclusive, in respect of the matters to which they refer:—Held, that an order issued by the secretary of state, upon an appeal to him by rate-payers, whereby he determined the validity of the vote appealed against, was binding and conclusive, by reason of s. 81, although it was doubtful, on the face of the order, whether his ratio decidendi was good. And therefore the court refused to issue a mandamus to the summoning officer of the district in which the vote had been taken, to summon a meeting of the ratepayers, and ascertain by a poll whether the act should be adopted. Bird, Ex parte, 1 El. & El. 931; 5 Jur., N. S. 1009; 28 L. J., Q. B. 223.

A district not having any ascertained or defined boundary, and a portion of a parish, obtained from the secretary of state for the Home Department an order under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, s. 18, settling its boundaries for the purposes of that act, and subsequently adopted the act within the district. Afterwards the parish adopted the act. The court refused a mandamus to the secretary of state to publish the notice of the adoption of the act by the district, under s. 19, holding that s. 14 applied to places the boundaries of which were settled by an order of the secretary of state, and therefore that the district could not adopt the act unless the parish had refused to do so. Mullock Bath District, In re, 3 B. & S. 543; 31 L. J., Q. B. 177; 10 W. R. 537; 6 L. T., N. S. 248.

A district for spiritual purposes, formed under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37, s. 9, is entitled, by resolution of its owners and ratepayers (without reference to the proceedings of townships out of which it is formed), to adopt the Local Government Act, 1858, as being a place with "a known or definite boundary" according to the provisions of the act. Reg. v. Northoram and Clayton, 35 L. J., Q. B. 90; 7 B. & S. 110.

The rate-payers of a district petitioned the secretary of state to settle the boundaries with a view to the adoption of the act. An order was made, setting out the boundaries, and a resolution was duly carried for the adoption of the act. An appeal was presented to the secretary of state by a ratepayer, on the ground that the boundaries, as set out, comprised land not included within the limits from which the petition proceeded. After inquiry into the circumstances, the secretary of state dismissed the petition, and ordered that the act should, after the expiration of one month from the date of the order, have the force of law within the district:—Held, that the court would not, after all this had been done, issue a certiorari to bring up the order for settling the boundaries of the district. Todmorden (District), In re, 30 L. J., Q. B. 805; 4 L. T., N. S. 509; S. C., nom. Smith, Ex parte, 1 B. & S. 412.

A parish of L., containing 1400 acres, comprised within its area the corporate borough of L., which was in extent 100 acres. The parliamentary borough of L. comprised the whole of the parish of L., and part of another parish. The majority of rate-payers of the parish of L. adopted the Local Government Act, 1858, and an appeal by some of the rate-payers was made to the secretary of state, who dismissed the appeal, and confirmed the appeal of the act throughout the parish:—Held, that the parliamentary borough, including within its limits a less place, viz., the place, was not a place authorized to adopt the act; that the parish was a place authorized to adopt the act, including within its limits a less place, viz., the corporate borough, which, if not so included, would of itself be authorized to adopt the act; and, therefore, the action by the parish and the order of the secretary of state were valid. Reg. v. Hardy, 11 L. R. Q. B. 117; 9 B. & S. 926; 38 L. J., Q. B. 9, 19 L. T., N. S. 352; 17 W. R. 178.

When a meeting of rate-payers and owners of a place having a known and defined boundary is called for the purpose of adopting the provisions of the act, the chairman is the person to take the sense of such meeting, unless a poll is demanded. But if a poll is demanded, the functions of the chairman will thereupon cease, and such poll should be taken, and all things connected therewith be carried out by the summoning officer. Littleborough Local Board, Ex parte, 22 L. T., N. S. 457—Q. B.

By the Local Government Act, 1858, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, the act may be adopted in corporate boroughs and places under the jurisdiction of a board of competent commissioners, and in all other places having a known or defined boundary, by a resolution of the owners and rate-payers, subject to appeal to the local government board:—Held, that interpreting the words "place having a known or defined boundary" in the statute, the word "place" is to be received with the widest possible signification, and is not restricted to the accustomed legal divisions of the country, such as manors, hamlets, townships or parishes, and may, therefore, consist of portions of different townships or parishes, and a place so composed has a "known or defined boundary," which has a physical, visible and notorious boundary, so that there can be no mistake as to its limits. Reg. v. Grassmere Local Board, 42 L. J., Q. B. 131; 8 C., nom. Reg. v. Local Government Board, 8 L. R., Q. B. 227.

Therefore, where the township of Grassmere contained certain small detached portions of the neighboring townships of Rydal and Loughrigg, wholly surrounded by portions of the township of Grassmere, and included within the boundary of that township, the district so composed was held to be a place having a known or defined boundary within the statute, and an order of the local government board made under s. 17 of that act, and 34 & 35 Vict. c. 70, s. 2, for the adoption of the first-mentioned act by such district, was valid. Id.

Rates and expenses.—By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, s. 53, the district rate shall be made and levied upon the occupier of all such kinds of property as by the laws in force for the time being are or may be assessable to any rate for the relief of the poor. The guardians of the poor of an extra-parochial place maintaining its own poor, and situated partly within and partly without a borough, occupied a work-house in the part without the borough, which part was a separate district for the purpose of levying district rates. Held, that they were liable to a district rate for works in the part without the borough, as occupying a kind of property assessable to the poor rate within section 55. Torteth Park (Guardians v. Torteth Park Local Board of Health, 7 Jur., N. S. 880; 30 L. J., M. C. 154; 9 W. R. 691; 4 L. T., N. S. 283; 1 B. & S. 167.

By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, s. 65, memorials under s. 120 of the Public Health Act, 1848, shall be addressed to one of her Majesty's principal secretaries of state, and by s. 81, all orders made by such secretary shall be binding and conclusive:—Held, that the interest upon expenses incurred by a local board of health ran from the time the amount due was ascertained, and not from the time of the first demanding, and that the decision of the secretary of state as to the amount of the claim for the expenses and interest thereon was final. Wallington v. Willes, 16 C. B., N. S. 797; 10 Jur., N. S. 906; 33 L. J., C. P. 233; 13 W. R. 917; 10 L. T., N. S. 584.

By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, s. 55, the occupier of any land covered with water, or used only as a railway constructed under the powers of any act of parliament for public conveyance, is to be assessed to the district rate at one-fourth only of the net annual value, as ascertained by the last poor rate:—Held, that a wet dock was "land covered with water" within the provision; and that a railway, which had been constructed by a dock company in connection with their dock and joining a public railway and canal, under the powers of their private act, by which the company was bound to complete the railway for the use of the public on the payment of tolls, was a railway within the provision, although it was not constructed to carry passengers. Reg. v. Newport Dock Company, 31 L. J., M. C. 266; 6 L. T., N. S. 456; 9 Jur., N. S. 73—Q. B.

Notice to one who receives the rent of land de facto, without right thereto, satisfies the provision requiring notice to the owner, contained in 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, s. 62. Peck v. Waterloo with Senforth Local Board of Health, 9 Jur., N. S. 1344; 33 L. J., M. C. 11; 2 H. & C. 700; 11 W. R. 252; 9 L. T., N. S. 338.

General district rates, made under the Local Government Act, are not required within the Union Assessment Act, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 103, s. 29, to be based on the poor rate by reason of the option given to the local board by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, s. 50; and, therefore, they may still be based on a valuation made by order of the local board, if in their judgment the poor law valuation list under the Union Assessment Act is an unfit criterion for making them. North Eastern Railway Company v. Scarborough Local Board, 4 L. R., Q. B. 163; 38 L. J., M. C. 65; 17 W. R. 574.

A railway constructed without any parishes

mentary powers, eventually sold, enlarged and used, by act of parliament, for public conveyance, does not come within s. 55, as a railway constructed under the powers of any act of parliament, and is therefore ratable in the full net annual value. North Eastern Railway Company v. Leulgate Local Board, 18 W. R. 691; 5 L. R. Q. B. 157; 39 L. J., M. C. 65; 23 L. T. N. S. 63.

Provisional orders.—By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, which incorporates the Lands Clauses Act of 1845, powers are given whereby local boards of health may compulsorily purchase lands for certain purposes; but such powers can only be acquired by certain notices being given, and obtaining a provisional order from the secretary of state, which order, however, is not to be of any validity unless confirmed by an act of parliament, and which act parties aggrieved are to be at liberty to petition against and oppose:—Held, that such provisional order of the secretary of state is not one that can be removed for the purpose of being quashed. Frewen v. Hastings Local Board of Health, 13 L. T., N. S. 346; 13 W. R. 678; 11 Jur., N. S. 670; 34 L. J., Q. B. 159; 6 B. & S. 401.

Statutes.—14 & 15 Vict. c. 28, extended by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 41, and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 66, regulate common lodging-houses; and 14 & 15 Vict. c. 34, amended by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 28, and 30 & 31 Vict. c. 28, the laboring classes lodging-houses.

Registration.—A lodging-house, where hawkers and persons of a similar class are received, staying for various periods, having their meals in one room, and paying sixpence a night, is a common lodging-house within the meaning of the Public Health Act, 1875, and therefore requires registration. *Langdon v. Freemen.—[19 & 20 Vict. c. 81, s. 4, exempts from stamp duty the admission of persons to the freedom of the city of London by redemption.]

19 & 20 Vict. c. 81, s. 94, repeals the city custom as to the distribution of the property of freemen dying intestate on and after the 1st of January, 1857, and distribution of their personal estate is to be as if no such custom had ever existed. See Chappell v. Haynes, 4 Kay & J. 168; 27 L. J., Chanc. 336; Blunt v. Luck, 3 Jur., N. S. 195; 26 L. J., Chanc. 148, as to previous law.]

Attorney.—No municipal corporation but that of London can appoint an attorney, except under the corporate seal. Arnold v. Poole, 4 M. & G. 860; 5 Scott, N. R. 761; 2 D., N. S. 574; 7 Jur. 653; 12 L. J., C. P. 97.

Water-bailiff.—There is no custom in London giving the water-bailiff power to cut unlawful nets or seize fish. Bulbroke v. Goodson, 1 W. Bl. 569.

Sale of hay and straw.—[19 & 20 Vict. c. 114, prohibits mixing hay or straw with foreign matters fraudulently, to increase the weight, within the city of London, or thirty miles thereof.]

Coal and wine duties.—[By 31 & 32 Vict. c. 17, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 42, and 26 & 27 Vict. c. 46, are continued, and the London coal and wine duties are continued and appropriated for a further period of seven years from 1872.]

Porterage, pilotage, &c.—The rights of the city of London, and of the parties appointed by them, to the unshipping and porterage of aliens' goods imported into London, are wholly abolished by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 66, whether these goods are consigned to British merchants or to aliens resident there. Collyer v. Stennet, 5 Scott, N. R. 34; 4 M. & G. 676; 12 L. J., C. P. 73.

The port of London, for the purposes of pilotage, extends to Yantlet creek. General Steam Navigation Company v. British Colonial Steam Ship Company, 19 L. T., N. S. 357; 37 L. J., Exch. 194; 3 L. R., Exch. 330; affirmed, 38 L. J., Exch. 97; 4 L. R., Exch. 238—Exch. Cham.

Oyster-meters.—The deputy day-meters of the city of London are entitled, by immemorial custom, to the exclusive right, by themselves and their servants, of measuring, shoveling, unloading and delivering all oysters brought in any boat or vessel for sale, along the river Thames, to any place within the limits of the port of London, and to receive a reasonable compensation for so doing; and a jury found that 8s. for every score for the first 100 bushels, and 4s. for every score of bushels of the remainder of a cargo, was a reasonable recompense to them for the labor of shoveling, unloading and delivering out the oysters, exclusive of the sums paid to the corporation of London for metage, under 11 Will. 3, c. 24, s. 7. The meters are not therefore bound to perform in their own persons the manual labor of shoveling, &c., but are bound to provide sufficient men for the purpose, and are liable to an action in default of doing so. Laybourn v. Crisp, 4 M. & W. 320; 8 C. & P. 397.

Upon a bill by some against the others of the deputy day oyster-meters having the exclusive right of shoveling, unloading, and delivering oysters within the port of London, for an account and equal apportionment among the meters of the scorage dues received by them, a decree was made, founded on the immemorial existence of the body of meters, which was held to be proved, notwithstanding the meters were originally laborers, and that they habitually described themselves as servants of the corporation of London. Thompson v. Daniel, 10 Hare, 296; 17 Jur. 773; 22 L. J., Chanc. 507.

Lord Chancellor.

Statutes.—[By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 83, s. 17, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 16, net yearly salary is 10,000l.

By 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, s. 60, retiring Lord Chancellor may deliver written judgments within six weeks after resigning the Great Seal.

Lottery.

Statutes.—[5 & 7 Will. 4, c. 66, prohibits the advertising foreign and other illegal lotteries in England.

By 9 & 10 Vict. c. 48, associations for the distribution of works of art by lot are legalised if charters are obtained]

What lotteries illegal within the statute.—A horse-race being about to be run, the plaintiff and one hundred and fifty-four other persons subscribed 12. apiece, which was deposited with the defendant on the terms that the name of each subscriber should be written on a card, and the name of each of the horses written on another, and then the two sets of cards placed in a box, and the cards should be drawn by chance from each of the boxes, and the person whose name should be drawn next after the name of the winning horse, should be entitled to receive 100*l.* from the entire fund:—Held, an illegal lottery within 10 & 11 Will. 3, c. 17, and 42 Geo. 3, c. 119. Allport v. Nutt, 3 D. & L. 233; 1 C. B. 974; 9 Jur. 909, 14 L. J., C. P. 272. S. P., Gatty v. Field 9 Q. B. 431; 10 Jur. 980; 15 L. J., Q. B. 403.

A company consisting of a number of persons subscribing small sums was formed for the purpose of buying land, erecting dwellings thereon, and allotting the same to the subscribers. The allotment depended on the result of a ballot. Quære, whether was illegal as being contrary to the Lottery Acts, or whether it fell within 12 Geo. 2. c. 3. s. 11? O'Connor v. Bradshaw, 5 Exch. 3; 20 L. J., Exch. 26.

The programme of an entertainment stated at its conclusion the proprietor "would distribute among his audience a shower of gold and silver treasures on a scale utterly without parallel, besides a shower of smaller presents, all of which would be impartially divided among the audience and given away." The public was admitted on purchasing tickets, which were not numbered. The seats of the audience were numbered. At the conclusion of the entertainment the proprietor called out a number on a seat, and delivered one of the articles to the person occupying that seat, and in that way distributed all the articles among the audience:—Held, a lottery, within 42 Geo. 3. c. 119, s. 13. Morris v. Blackman, 2 H. & C. 912; 10 Jur., N. S. 520.

Effect upon validity of agreements.—An agreement to sell and convey land for the purpose of being resold by lottery is in contravention of the 12 Geo. 2. c. 28, and a deed afterwards executed to secure the payment of the price of the land so conveyed is void. Fisher v. Bridges (in error), 3 El. & Bl. 642; 1 Jur., N. S. 157; 24 L. J., Q. B. 165; 2 C. L. R. 928—Exch. Chanc.

In an action for money had and received, a plea that the money was the amount of a prize in an illegal lottery held by defendant, and that he paid over the amount to one whom he conceived to be the winner, and who was entitled to receive and retain the money, is bad for duplicity. Holmes v. Lock, 1 C. B. 524.

Indictment; evidence; conviction.—By 10 & 11 Will. 3. c. 17, s. 1, lotteries are declared to be common and public nuisances; s. 2, which came into operation on a subsequent day, rendered persons keeping lotteries liable to a penalty, to be sued for by information or action. The 42 Geo. 3. c. 119, contains similar enactments with regard to lotteries, called "Little Goes."—Held, on an indictment, containing counts for keeping a lottery, framed upon these statutes, that the counts were good and the offense indictable. Reg. v. Orasshaw, Bell C. C. 803; 8 Cox C. C. 375; 30 L. J., Mug. Cas. 58; 9 W. R. 68; 3 L. T., N. S. 510.

C. kept an eating house, and sold tickets for what was called the Great Eastern Money Club, in respect of which prizes were drawn; and the holders of the tickets, whose numbers were drawn for prizes, received the same, and C. delivered out the prizes to such ticket-holders:—Held, that this evidence was sufficient to support a conviction against him for keeping a lottery, but was not sufficient to support a conviction for keeping a room for betting upon horse-racing, under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119. Id.

Proceedings for penalties.—Proceedings for the recovery of penalties, relating to lotteries, contrary to 42 Geo. 3. c. 119, must, since the 46 Geo. 3. c. 48, s. 59, be sued for in the name of the attorney-general, and not before magistrates, whether the lotteries are private or state lotteries. Reg. v. Tuddenham, 9 D. P. C. 937; 5 Jur. 871—B. C.

The printer of a newspaper, publishing an illegal proposal for gambling in the lottery, incurred a penalty under 23 Geo. 3. c. 47, s. 13. King v. t. v. Smith, 4 T. R. 414.

I. INQUISITIONS; COMMISSIONS DE LUNATICO INQUIRENDO.

Statutes.—[16 & 17 Vict. c. 70 (The Lunacy Regulation Act, 1853, see s. 5), regulates the proceedings under a commission of lunacy, and consolidates and amends all acts respecting lunatics so found by inquisition, and their property.

By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 18, s. 2, amending 16 & 17 Vict. c. 70, the Lord Chancellor may empower the committee of the estate of any lunatic to grant leases binding on the issue in tail and remainder-man.

25 & 26 Vict. c. 86 (The Lunacy Regulation Act, 1862), further amends the law of commissions of lunacy, and for visiting lunatics, and charging their property with the costs and debts of their maintainances.]

Jurisdiction; and when commission may issue.—When a person had been tried upon a criminal charge, and acquitted on the ground of his insanity, and was thereupon confined in a lunatic asylum under 39 & 40 Geo. 3. c. 94, the Chancellor, upon the application of a creditor, issued a commission of lunacy, the party being entitled to property of the value of 800*l*. Pearce, In re, 8 Jur. 89—C.

A commission of lunacy may issue against an alien. Bariatinski, In re, 1 Ph. 375; 8 Jur. 137; 13 L. J., Chanc. 69.

A Portuguese gentleman whose domicile was in Portugal, whose property, with a very trifling exception, was in Portugal, and whose wife and only child were residing there, became lunatic in England, and had been so for some years. A petition was presented by his relations in England for an inquiry as to his state of mind. Proceedings in lunacy were at the same time taken in Portugal by his wife, and the Portuguese court issued a request to the English courts to inquire into his state of mind. The wife applied in England to have an inquiry as to the time when the lunacy commenced, it being desired by the Portuguese court that such inquiry should be made in England:—Held, that the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 80, s. 8, does not take away the power of the court to direct such an inquiry where special circumstances render it desirable. Sotomaior, In re, 9 L. R., Ch. 677.

Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, such an inquiry ought not to be directed, as it was not required for any purpose of the proceedings in England, and the finding might affect other parties who could not effectually intervene in the inquiry, and yet would probably be treated in Portugal as concluded by it. Ib.

Upon a petition for inquiry into the alleged lunacy of S., who was resident in Australia, but whose property was wholly situate in England, the court ordered an inquiry before a jury in Middlesex, and gave permission to the petitioners to take proper steps to bring him to England. Scott, In re, 22 W. R. 748—L. JJ.

The Chancery Division has jurisdiction to give directions as to the guardianship and maintenance of a person of unsound mind not so found, but will not exercise it unless the property is small and proceedings are not intended to be taken in lunacy. Vane v. Vane, 2 L. R., Ch. Div. 124; 45 L. J., Ch. Div. 381; 24 W. R. 603; 34 L. T., N. S. 619—R.

Proceedings.—On application to the Lord Chancellor for that purpose by a person found lunatic under a commission, leave to traverse the inquisition is a matter of right. Cumming, In re, 1 De G., M. & G. 537; 16 Jur. 493; 21 L. J., Chanc. 753, 758.

A stranger in blood to a lunatic, who is interested under a will made by the lunatic before the commencement of the lunacy, will not be allowed to attend the proceedings in the lunacy. Scarlett, In re, 29 L. T., N. S. 232; 21 W. R. 717; 8 L. R., Ch. 739.

According to the practice in lunacy no person except the parties and those claiming under them may as a right inspect the proceedings; other persons claiming the right to do so must make a case for the purpose. Wood, In re, 4 De G., J. & S. 134.

Between the presentation of a petition for an inquiry in the case of an alleged lunatic and the official finding, he may be restrained by the court from leaving the jurisdiction, and his property may be protected from any disposition or misase by which the purpose of the inquiry might be frustrated, but this interference, being provisional, and only allowed as subservient to the investigation, cannot co-exist with an order prohibiting the prosecution of the latter. Lavelle, In re, Walsh, Ex parte, 8 Ir. R., Eq. 506—Ch. App.

As to proof of insanity.—see this title, IV.

Costs.—Costs, properly taxed, of suing out a commission of lunacy, are a debt as against the assets left by a lunatic, although at the death of the lunatic a traverse of the lunacy, leave for which had been obtained upon the lunatic's own application, was pending. Cumming, In re, 18 Jur. 181; 23 L. J., Chanc. 261—L. J.

When an inquiry as to the lunacy of a supposed lunatic had been based upon the report of the commissioners in lunacy, and had resulted in his being declared of sound mind, the court ordered the costs of the proceedings in lunacy and of the inquiry to be paid out of the supposed lunatic's estate. C—, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 75; 23 W. R. 377.

On a petition for an inquiry in lunacy, the medical visitor was directed to visit the alleged lunatic, and on his report an inquiry was directed, on which the alleged lunatic was found sane. The petitioner was only a neighbor of the alleged lunatic, and it appeared that he was indemnified by his solicitor against costs. On an application by the petitioner for a payment of his costs out of the estate, and a cross application to charge the petitioner with all the costs:—Held, under the circumstances, that no order should be made as to costs. S., In re, 46 L. J., Chanc. Div. 233; 4 L. R., Ch. Div. 301; 35 L. T., N. S. 828; 25 W. R. 133—C. A.

As to allowance of costs out of estate of lunatic.—see this title, III.

Effect of inquisition; finding, in general.—Where, to an action against executors on the bond of their testator, they pleaded non est factum, and set up lunacy as a defense at the trial; an inquisition taken under the commission of lunacy against the testator, after the execution of the bond, finding that he had been a lunatic from a day antecedent to that, without any lucid interval, is admissible. Foulde v. Silk, 3 Camp. 126—Ellenborough.

On a bill in equity to set aside deeds and recoveries, on the ground of the lunacy of the party at the time he executed them:—Held, that the finding of the jury on an inquisition, which over-reached that period, afforded a presumption that he was then insane; but there being some evidence that, after the time when the lunacy was stated to have commenced, the party was not of unsound mind, an issue was directed to inquire whether he was of unsound mind at the time of executing the deeds. French v. Mainwaring, 2 Beav. 115.

Though the finding of a person's insanity, by an inquisition, upon a commission of lunacy, is not binding on third parties, still it destroys the natural presumption in favor of sanity, and casts the burden of proving the person's sanity on the party alleging it. Snook v. Wills, 11 Beav. 105; 13 Jur. 444.

A deed, though over-reached by the finding of an inquisition in lunacy, is not, therefore, necessarily primâ facie void. Jacobs v. Richards, 18 Beav. 300; 18 Jur. 537; 23 L. J. Chanc. 557.

On a claim by a vendor for specific performance by the vendee, found by inquisition to have been lunatic at the time of the contract, a court of equity declared the contract to have been null and void, and ordered the residue of the deposit, after deducting the vendor's costs, charges and expenses, to be repaid to the committee of the lunatic's estate. Fratt v. Bravan, 17 Jur. 369; 22 L. J., Chanc. 638—Wood, V. C.

An inquisition finding a person lunatic is primâ facie evidence of insanity, but where leave has been granted to traverse the same, this, in part, rebuts the evidence, and entitles a creditor to an issue to try the question of the party's sanity on a day on which a deed, subsequent to the finding, and objected to as invalid by reason of insanity, has been executed by the lunatic. Elliott v. Ince, 3 Jur., N. S. 597; 26 L. J., Chanc. 881; 7 De G., M. & G. 475.

— of foreign inquisitions.]—A person found a lunatic by a competent jurisdiction in a foreign country, may be considered a lunatic in England. Gillam, Ex parte, 3 Ves. jun. 588.

As to rights of curators appointed by foreign courts,—see this title, III.

Superseding commission.]—The Lord Chancellor will not in general supersede a commission of lunacy after verdict without seeing the lunatic. Gordon, In re, 3 Ph. 243.

The court never supersedes a commission without the clearest evidence of the lunatic's restoration to soundness of mind; and, ordinarily, it is the practice and the duty of the court to satisfy itself in this respect by a personal examination of him. Id.

II. CONFINEMENT AND RESTRAINT; ASYLUMS.

Right to restrain lunatics, when dangerous.]—Any man may justify an assault, when it is to restrain the fury of a lunatic and prevent mischief. Brookshaw v. Hopkins, Loft, 243.

At common law a medical man may justify measures necessary to restrain a dangerous lunatic. So also, if he is called in to attend a person suffering under delirium tremens, he may justify such measures as are reasonably necessary, either to cure him or to restrain him from doing mischief, so long as the fit lasts, or it is likely to return. Scott v. Wakem, 3 F. & F. 828—Bramwell.

In an action against two medical men, for having, with other persons, unlawfully entered the house of the plaintiff, and assaulted and imprisoned her therein, they pleading only not guilty, and leave and license; and the case being that she had called them both in as her medical attendants, and had asked them to send a nurse, and that they, at the desire of her friends, sent not only a female nurse, but also a male attendant, who were both engaged by the plaintiff's friends, but to whom the defendants give directions, and against whom the plaintiff alleged certain acts of violent restraint and coercion; the defense being that she was suffering under delirium tremens, and that there was no more restraint than necessary as a part of medical treatment:—Held, that if this was so, even assuming that the defendants were responsible for the acts of the attendants, there was a justification in law, had it been so pleaded. Synn v. Fraser, 3 F. & F. 859—Cockburn.

By an act regulating the relief and employment of the poor of a parish, and for other local purposes, it was enacted, that no action should be commenced against any person for anything done in pursuance of that act, until after twenty-one days' notice. In an action against parish officers appointed under the act, for imprisoning a party in the workhouse upon a supposition that he was in a dangerous state of insanity:—Held, that they, not having pursued the course pointed out to parish officers by 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, with regard to pauper lunatics, and therefore not being protected by that statute, were not entitled to notice of action under the local act. Eliot v. Allen, 1 C. B. 18.

— under medical certificates.]—A medical man is not warranted, merely on statements made by the relations of a person supposed to be insane, in sending men to take him into custody, and confine him, unless he is satisfied, from those statements, that such a step is necessary to prevent some immediate injury from being done by the individual, either to himself or to other persons. Anderton v. Burrows, 4 C. & P. 210—Tenterden. See 5 Vict. c. 4, s. 3.

To an action for imprisonment of the plaintiff, a plea, that he conducted himself as a person of unsound mind, and incompetent to take care of himself, and proper to be taken charge of and detained under due care and treatment; that two medical certificates had been given by persons authorized, according to the provisions of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 93, certifying that he was of unsound mind and proper to be taken charge of and detained; that the defendant had notice of the certificates, and had reasonable and probable grounds for believing, and did believe them to be true; and that the plaintiff was of unsound mind; and that the defendant, being his uncle, and a proper person to cause him to be taken in charge and detained, did for the causes aforesaid, cause him to be taken charge of and detained as a person of unsound mind, is a bad plea, inasmuch as, at common law, the defendant would be justified only if the plaintiff was actually insane at the time, which the plea did not allege, and the protection given by 8 & 9 Viet. c. 100, s. 99, to parties duly and bonâ fide acting under certificates and an order for confinement, does not extend to the party making the order. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 1 El. & El. 420; 5 Jur., N. S. 678; 28 L. J., Q. B. 184.

Even assuming that a person is of sound mind when conveyed, under proper authority, to a lunatic asylum, it would not be illegal on the part of the keepers of the asylum to detain him until they had proper authority for his discharge. Mackintosh v. Smith, 4 Macq. H. L. Cas. 918.

A medical man, who has merely signed a certificate, and has done nothing more towards causing the confinement of a lunatic, is not liable in trespass. Nor, if he has merely consulted another medical man who has signed the other certificate, and told him his own idea of the case, is he liable for causing the other to sign such certificate. But if he signs such a certificate without taking due care and making due inquiries, he is liable for the consequences which ensue. And if on his own personal examination he is not satisfied, he is bound to make due inquiries. Nor is he the less liable for the want of such due care and inquiries because he has acted bonâ fide. Hall v. Semple, 3 F. & F. 337—Crompton.

The prohibition in 8 & 9 Viet. c. 100, s. 45, as to receiving insane persons into licensed houses or hospitals without such medical certificate as the act requires, is not general, but relates only to the keepers of licensed houses; the confinement of lunatics in all other cases being left as it was at common law. Shuttleworth, In re, 9 Q. B. 651; 3 New Sess. Cas. 470; 11 Jur. 41; 16 L. J., M. C. 18.

An indictment charged that a surgeon, knowingly, and with intention to deceive, signed a certificate required by 9 Geo. 4, c. 41, s. 30, without having visited and personally examined the patient, contrary to the statute: the jury negatived the intention to deceive, and found him guilty:—Held, that in the description of the offense the averment of intention was surplusage, and that such unnecessary matter might be rejected, as well in an indictment on a penal statute as at common law. Ree v. Jones, 2 B. & Ad. 611.

The 16 & 17 Viet. c. 96, s. 4, which enacts that no person (not a pauper) is to be received as a lunatic into any licensed house or hospital without the medical certificate according to the form in schedule A, No. 2, of two persons, being physicians, surgeons or apothecaries, is not merely directory, but compulsory. Greenwood, Re parte, 1 Jur., N. S. 522; 24 L. J., Q. B. 148—B. C.—Coleridge.

It appeared upon return to a habeas corpus, that the certificates, under which a person had been received into a private asylum as a lunatic, omitted to state the name of the street and the number of the house where the examination took place, in accordance with the form in schedule A, No. 2; and it further appeared by affidavit that the examination did in fact take place in a house in a street, and that the alleged lunatic was not dangerous either to the public or himself:—Held, that the certificates were defective in a material particular, and the lunatic was ordered to be discharged from custody. Id.

—under orders of confinement.—In justification for the detention or recapture by the proprietor or superintendent of a licensed house or registered hospital, or other authorized person, of a person who has been received into such asylum under an order, and certificates required by 8 & 9 Viet. c. 100, it is not necessary to aver that such person is a lunatic, as s. 99 affords a complete defense for such detention or recapture. Norris v. Seal 3 Exch. 782; 13 Jur. 830; 18 L. J., Exch. 300.

Such order and certificates are equally a justification for taking a wife from her husband. Id.

The clergyman of a parish in which a lunatic is living, who has had opportunities of observing his conduct, is competent to issue an order under 8 & 9 Viet. c. 100, s. 45 for his admission into an asylum and detention there. Shuttleworth, In re, 2 New Sess. Cas. 470; 9 Q. B. 651; 11 Jur. 41; 16 L. J., M. C. 18.

In such an order, it is not imperative that all the particulars enumerated in the appendix, schedule B, to the form of the order for receiving a lunatic into an asylum, should be set out, if the act is substantially complied with. Id.

The form of a medical certificate given in schedule C is directory only, and an equivalent will suffice. Id.

A general statement in a certificate that a lunatic "labors under delusions of various kinds, and is dirty and indecent in the extreme," is a sufficient statement, within s. 10, of the fact from which a medical man forms his opinion of existing insanity; so also is his statement that he forms his opinions from conversations with the lunatic, without describing their purport. Id.

A return to a habeas corpus, directing a keeper of a lunatic asylum to bring up the body of R. F., certified that he was, on a certain day, received under 2 & 3 Will. 4 c. 107, and that, on the day and year aforesaid, the keeper received an order and medical certificates, in the form directed by that act (setting them out). It then further certified, that, on the 23d of November, 1845, an order and two medical certificates, under 8 & 9 Viet. c. 100 (setting them out), were delivered to the keeper, and concluded, "that R. F. is now detained under our custody, under and by virtue of the last-mentioned act of parliament."—Held, that the return was sufficient under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 107, as it ufficiently appeared that the order and certificates returned were received at the same time with the lunatic, and that they were those under which he was received. Fell, In re, 3 D. & L. 378; 15 L. J., M. C. 25—B. C. —Patteson.

The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 1, which repeals the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 107, leaves orders made under the latter act so far valid as to amount to a justification of a detainer in an asylum. Id.

Proceedings for release by habeas corpus.]

—A person may be discharged from a madhouse by habeas corpus. Re v. Turlington, 2 Burr. 1115.

But where it appeared that a person confined was a lunatic, and not fit to be produced in court, and that the relations were applying for a commission of lunacy, the court enlarged the time for making a return to a habeas corpus, directed to a keeper of a private madhouse. Re v. Clarke, 3 Burr. 1362.

If an alleged lunatic is detained under an improper or invalid certificate, he will be discharged on a writ of habeas corpus, on the ground that the detention is illegal, unless it is shown that it would be injurious to himself or others to set him at liberty. Greenwood, Ex parte, 1 Jur., N. S. 522; 24 L. J., Q. B. 148—B. C.—Coleridge.

A rule having been obtained for a habeas corpus to bring up a lunatic confined in an asylum in England under Irish medical certificates, the court discharged the rule with costs, there being no evidence to show that the party promoting the application was duly authorized by the lunatic. Child, Ex parte, 15 C. B. 238.

A lunatic might be brought up by habeas corpus from St. Luke's Hospital, to be surrendered in discharge of his bail. Pillop v. Sexton, 3 B. & P. 550.

Acts of persons under restraint.]—A deed was set aside as obtained by fraud and undue influence, by a keeper of a house for lunatics, from a person under his care, as within the general principle arising from the relation of guardian and ward, attorney and client. Wright v. Proud, 13 Ves. 138.

The jurat of an affidavit sworn by a person suffering from monomania, and confined in a lunatic asylum, should state the fact that it was sworn in an asylum, otherwise it is irregular, and will be taken off the file. Sprittle v. Walton, 40 L. J., Chanc. 368—V. C. B.

Before the evidence of a lunatic, subject to insane hallucinations, can be received, there must be an inquiry as to his mental condition. Id.

As to competency of insane person to testify,—see EVIDENCE.

Licensing and regulation of private asylums.]—[8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, amended by 10 & 17 Vict. c. 96, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 105, ss. 15, 16, 17, and by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 111, regulates the licensing and visiting houses for the reception, care, confinement and treatment of lunatics, not being paupers, in England.]

Before 14 Geo. 3, c. 40, s. 1, private madhouses were not authorized by law, but the keepers were excused in their conduct when it was exercised properly. Re v. Coate, Loft, 73, 78.

A person put to superintend an unlicensed house for the reception of lunatics was liable to the penalties of that statute, though he did not receive any of the profits of the establishment. Budd v. Foulks, 3 Camp. 404—Ellenborough.

The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, requires every person receiving a single lunatic into his or her care to obtain and transmit to the lunacy commissioners certain orders and certificates, which are upon receipt at their office entered and filed. In the books in which the receipt of such orders and certificates was entered, no notice was found of any such having been received from the defendant. Notice was given to him to produce any orders or certificates he might have received, entitling him to take charge of the alleged lunatic:—Held, that although, as a general rule, a defendant must have his guilt proved, and not be called upon to establish his innocence, yet, seeing that the proof was in the nature of a negative proof, and that, if he had received the documents and not transmitted them they would be in his possession, and that after notice to produce them had been given he had not produced them, there was a sufficient case to go to the jury. Reg. v. Harris, 10 Cox C. C. 541—Chunnell.

C. was placed in the house of a medical man as an invalid; the house not being licensed or registered for the reception of lunatic patients. C.'s mind was quite imbecile, and he allowed himself to be kept in a state of revolting filthiness; but it did not appear that he labored under any delusion or mental aberration, nor was he subject to fits of frenzy or violence:—Held, that he was a lunatic within the meaning of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 90, and that the medical man was liable to the charge of receiving C. to board and lodge in an unlicensed house. Reg. v. Shaw, 18 L. T., N. S. 583; 16 W. R. 913; 37 L. J., M. C. 112; 11 Cox, C. C. 109—C. C. R.

Regulation of public or pauper asylums.]—[16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, "The Lunatic Asylums Act, 1853" (s. 136), amended by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 105, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 87, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55, ss. 6 and 7, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 111, 26 & 27 Vict. c. 110, s. 1, and by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 80, "The Lunacy Amendment Act, 1865," consolidates the laws regulating the building of lunatic asylums for counties and boroughs, and the maintenance and care of pauper lunatics, in England, and repeals 8 & 9 Vict. c. 126, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 84, and 10 & 11 Vict. c. 43.]

In an action against the clerk to a committee of justices appointed to superintend the erecting of lunatic asylums, the declaration stated an agreement between the plaintiff

iff (an architect) and the committee, by which, in consideration that he would render his services as an architect in examining the site of a proposed pauper lunatic asylum, and preparing the requisite probationary drawings for the approval of the committee, and all other drawings required to be submitted to the commissioners in lunacy and afterwards to the secretary of state, according to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 123, and subsequently would prepare the whole of the working drawings, estimates and specifications for the asylum, the committee agreed with him that 4372 10s. should be paid to him. The declaration averred that he rendered his services, and prepared the requisite probationary drawings for the approval of the committee, and had always been ready to prepare all other drawings required to be submitted to the commissioners, and afterwards to the secretary of state; and alleged, as a breach, that the committee would not permit him to proceed to complete the agreement, and wrongfully discharged him from performance. The defendant pleaded that a reasonable time had elapsed within which the plaintiff might have prepared the requisite probationary drawings for the approval of the committee; that he prepared drawings for the approval of the committee, which were not approved of by them, but, on the contrary, were disapproved of and rejected by them:—Held, that the plea was an answer to the action, as the contract, construed with reference to the duty of the committee, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 123, meant that the plaintiff should prepare such probationary drawings as the committee should approve of, and that the plaintiff, having failed in obtaining such approval, had no cause of action. Moffatt v. Dickson, 18 C. B. 543; 17 Jur. 1009; 23 L. J., C. P. 295.

By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 123, s. 17, a select number of justices for a county or borough, called the committee of visitors, was empowered to contract for plans for the erection of a lunatic asylum for the county, and, by s. 16, they were enabled to sue and be sued in the name of their clerk:—Held, that an action might be maintained against the committee of visitors in the name of their clerk, in respect of a contract so entered into by them, although the plaintiff might have no means of enforcing his judgment when obtained. Kendall v. King, 17 C. B. 483; 25 L. J., C. P. 132.

The committee of a lunatic asylum appropriated for their chaplain a residence on ground purchased since the passing of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, but detached from the asylum buildings; and appropriated for their medical superintendent a house, reasonably fit for a person in his station of life, and his family, being on land purchased when the asylum was first erected, adjoining to it, but not being within the curtilage, and he discharged a portion of his official duties in that house:—Held, that the chaplain was rateable to the relief of the poor like any other occupant; but that, by force of s. 33, the medical superintendent was liable to be rated only according to the value or rent of the land at the time it was purchased. Congreve v. Upson (Deceased), 4 B. & S. 857; 10 Jur. N. S. 523; 13 W. R. 404.

A contract for the sale of land to the committee of visitors of a lunatic asylum, if approved of by the court of quarter sessions before being finally signed by the parties, if it can be identified as the contract which was afterwards entered into. Decemsh v. Bacon, 3 Jur. N. S. 1043, 26 L. J., Chanc. 24—V. C. W.

The 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, s. 36, incorporating the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, with respect to the purchase money or compensation coming to parties having limited interests, enables parties having limited interests to contract with the committee of visitors for the sale of land, although the committee of visitors has no compulsory powers of purchasing. Id.

A county lunatic asylum, built upon land acquired under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 123, and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, consisted of buildings and of land, twenty acres of which were laid out as a garden, and thirty acres were under cultivation as a farm. The farm and garden were cultivated by gardeners, who were part of the establishment, assisted by the patients, and the result was a source of profit arising from the sale of produce not required for the establishment. The committee of visitors, acting under the powers contained in 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, ss. 42, 43, admitted other pauper lunatics than those belonging to their county, and also private lunatics, thereby realizing considerable profit. —Held, first, that this was an asylum within 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, s. 35, and therefore rateable only at the value at which the land was assessed at the time of the purchase. Reg. v. Fulham (Overseers), 6 B. & S. 451; 11 Jur. N. S. 620; 34 L. J., M. C. 100; 13 W. R. 713; 12 L. T., N. S. 344.

Held, secondly, that the building and land were used for the purposes of an asylum within s. 35, the primary object of the farm and garden being the sanitary occupation of the patients with a view to their cure. Id.

Held, thirdly, that the committee of visitors was not rateable in respect of the profits. Id.

By 30 Geo. 4, c. 40, ss. 30 & 32, the visiting justices have the power of appointing and dismissing the chaplain of the asylum. Reg. v. Middlesex Lunatic Asylum (Justices), 2 Q. & D. 300; 2 Q. B. 433; 6 Jur. 682.

Punishment of ill-treatment or neglect.—[By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 90, s. 9, if any superintendent, officer, nurse, attendant, servant, or other person employed in any registered hospital or lunatic house, or any person having the care or charge of any single patient, or any attendant of any single patient, in any way abuse, or ill-treat, or wilfully neglect any patient in such hospital or house, or such single patient, or if any person detaining, or taking or having the care or charge, concerned or taking part in the custody, care, or treatment of any lunatic or person alleged to be a lunatic, in any way abuse, ill-treat, or wilfully neglect such lunatic or alleged

Lunatic, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be subject to indictment for every such offense, or to forfeit for every such offense, on a summary conviction thereof before two justices, any sum not exceeding 20l.]

A husband having the care and charge of his wife, is not a person having the care or charge of a lunatic within this statute, the provisions of which do not apply to persons whose care or charge of a lunatic is purely of a domestic nature. Reg. v. Rundle, Deans. C. C. 482; 1 Jur., N. S. 430; 24 L. J., M. C. 129.

But when a person took upon himself, and had the care and charge of a lunatic brother, and he was indicted and convicted of willfully neglecting the lunatic:—Held, that, notwithstanding the relationship between himself and the lunatic, he was a person having the care or charge of a lunatic within the meaning of the statute, and therefore might be convicted of the misdemeanor. Reg. v. Porter, L. & C. 394; 10 Jur., N. S. 547; 33 L. J., M. C. 126.

Malicious proceedings in lunacy.]—To sustain an action for a conspiracy in issuing a commission of lunacy, malice and a want of probable cause must be proved; but on proof of a total want of probable cause, malice may be implied; and although express malice is proved, some slight evidence of a want of probable cause must be given. Turner v. Turner, Gow, 50.

III. PROPERTY; MAINTENANCE.

Powers of committee to deal with property of lunatic; sales, leases, settlements and other dispositions of such property.]—The committee of a lunatic cannot, without statutory authority, make a lease of the lunatic's lands, and if he does, cannot bring an action of covenant on such lease. Knipe v. Palmer, 2 Wils. 130.

Where a committee of a lunatic, against whom judgment had been obtained but not duly docketed, paid over rents to a mortgagee of a date subsequent to the judgment:—Held, that he was not liable as for money had and received to the use of one who claimed as tenant by elegit under the judgment; for it was his first duty as committee to keep down the interest on the mortgage. Braithwaite v. Watts, 2 Tyr. 293; 2 C. & J. 818.

An action was brought by the agent of the committee of a lunatic against an auctioneer, for moneys come to his hands, part of the lunatic's estate; the auctioneer pleaded that he had paid some of these moneys, by the order of the committee's agent, for the use of the lunatic. The fact of such payment, in manner pleaded, was disputed:—Held, that the principal question was the question of fact, whether the plea could be proved or not; that without deciding whether the plea, if proved, afforded either a legal or an equitable defense, a court of equity would not (having regard to the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), restrain the action.

Farebrother v. Welchman, 3 Drew. 122; 24 L. J., Chanc. 410. See 1 Jur., N. S. 126.

A gentleman entered into an arrangement by letter with the land agent who acted for the committee of a lunatic's estate, to take a lease of part of the estate for a term of three years. No formal agreement was entered into, nor was the sanction of the master in lunacy applied for, but the tenant was let into possession, and expended a considerable sum in repairs and in improvements. After he had been nearly eighteen months in possession, the committee gave him six months' notice to quit, upon which he applied by petition to have the terms of his arrangement with the agent carried into effect:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to make an order giving effect to that arrangement. Wynne, In re, 7 L. R., Ch. 220; 20 W. R. 848; 26 L. T., N. S. 406.

The Lunacy Regulation Acts of 1853 and 1862 contain no machinery by means of which a conveyance of the legal estate of a married woman of unsound mind in freehold property can be obtained; and in a case where this was sought, an order was made simply directing a sale, and declaring all beneficial interest of the married woman bound by the order. Stables, In re, 4 De G., J. & S. 257.

Under the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 70, ss. 124 and 125, a married co-heiress of a deceased intestate lunatic can consent in court to the payment of her share of the proceeds of the lunatic's real estate to her husband, and an acknowledged deed is unnecessary. Wheeler, In re, 4 De G., F. & J. 540.

A gentleman made a settlement of nearly the whole of his property in trust for himself for life, and then for four of his five children and their issue. About two years afterwards he was found lunatic. A son who took no benefit under the settlement desired to have it impeached, and adduced evidence showing that there was reasonable ground for contending that the settlor was of unsound mind when he executed it. The income of the lunatic was amply sufficient for his wants:—Held, that no proceedings ought to be directed at the expense of the lunatic's estate, but that the excluded son ought to be allowed to file a bill, as next friend of the lunatic, without giving security for costs, to impeach the settlement. Gordon, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 192; 44 L. J., Chanc. 208; 23 W. R. 760; 32 L. T., N. S. 348.

A., B. and C. were tenants in common in fee of land. C. became of unsound mind. A. and B. sold part of the land, and conveyed their shares to a purchaser. They also granted a lease of the minerals under other parts, and demised their shares to the lessee, in consideration of a gross sum of money payable by installments, called in the lease rent, within a limited time. In both deeds they covenanted that C. should concur, and that they would hold her share of the moneys payable in trust for her. B. afterwards became also of unsound mind, and A. sold other parts of the land, and granted leases of minerals under other parts for a like consideration, covenanting in like manner that B. and C. should concur, and that he would hold their shares of the moneys payable in trust for them. B. and C. were both found lunatic by inquisition; and the court confirmed the sales and leases, and ordered the committee to execute the deeds. C. died, leaving B. her heir-at-law and sole next of kin. Afterwards B. died also:—Held, that the leases were in the nature of absolute sales of portions of the real estate; that the confirmation of the sales and leases were sales under the Lunacy Regulation Act, 1853, s. 124, and that as between the real and personal representatives of B. the proceeds both of the sales and the leases effected after B. became of unsound mind belonged to her heir-at-law as real estate. Smith, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 79; 23 W. R. 297.

Held, also, that as to the shares both of B. and C. in the proceeds of the sale and lease in which B. concurred, they were converted into personalty, and belonged to B.'s next of kin. Ib.

A lunatic was tenant for life of real estates, including the advowson of a rectory. A lease of this property had been granted by order of the court for ninety-nine years, if the lunatic should so long live. This lease had become vested in a person who was also first tenant in tail in remainder expectant on the death of the lunatic without issue male. The lunatic was over eighty years of age, and had never had any issue. The first tenant in tail in remainder, wishing to sell the next presentation to the rectory, presented a petition praying the court, as protector of the settlement, to consent to the barring of the entail of the advowson:—Held, that the court ought not to interfere, as the application was not made for the benefit of the lunatic's estate. Thorp or Tharp, In re, 35 L. T., N. S. 298; 8 L. R., Ch. Div. 59—C. A.

When land belonging to a lunatic has been taken by a railway company under its statutory powers, the court will, on the petition of the committee and next of kin of the lunatic, order the purchase-money to be invested and carried to the account of the lunatic and the company, without its first being paid into court under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 69. Milnes, In re, 34 L. T., N. S. 46; 1 L. R., Ch. Div. 38—C. A.

Such a petition should be entitled not only in the Lunacy, but also in the Chancery Division of the High Court. Ib.

A lunatic was tenant in tail of an estate, subject to a charge for portions. In a suit in the Court of Chancery a decree had been made ordering the charge to be raised by a sale or mortgage of the estate. On a petition by the committee, asking that he might execute a disentailing deed on behalf of the lunatic for the purpose of raising the charge by a mortgage:—Held, that the interest of the remainder-man ought not to be barred further than was necessary, and that the mortgage should be made for a term of years, and without a power of sale. Pares, In re, 2 L. R., Ch. Div. 61—C. A.

The court will not make an order in the nature of a stop-order on the estate of a lunatic in favor of an assignee of the next of kin. Wilkinson, In re, 10 L. R., Ch. 73; 44 L. J., Chanc. 328; 23 W. R. 51.

Allowance for maintenance out of property of lunatic.—The word "property" in the Lunacy Regulation Act, 1862, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 80, s. 12, which empowers the lord chancellor to make a summary order for rendering the property of an alleged lunatic available for maintenance, where such property does not exceed 1,000*l.*, means beneficial property, or property clear of debt, and where it did not satisfactorily appear to be a case, a reference was directed to the master in lunacy to inquire whether the fact was as stated, and also whether a proposed compromise affecting part of the property was proper to be carried into effect. Adams, In re, 4 De G. J. & S. 182.

When a person of unsound mind, not found lunatic by inquisition, had been maintained in a lunatic asylum by his parish, the whole of the capital of a fund belonging to him, which had been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, was ordered to be applied, so far as it would extend, in discharge of the past charges of the parish for maintenance. Phelps, In re, 28 L. T., N. S. 350—V. C. M.

Payment of a sum of money for the maintenance of a lunatic in the asylum where he was lodged was ordered, although it had been ascertained since the date of the master's report that his estate would be insolvent. Loose, In re, 19 W. R. 963 C.

A person of unsound mind, not found so by inquisition, was kept by her brothers in a private asylum from 1838 to 1859, at a total expense of more than 700*l.* The brothers having suffered losses in trade, and being unable further to support her, she was kept in a county asylum, at the expense of the county, from 1859 to 1871, the total expense exceeding 300*l.* In 1871, a legacy was paid to her brothers, which by a will was directed to be paid to them to be applied for her benefit. This legacy was ordered to be retained by the brothers for her past maintenance in preference to the claims of the county, the brothers undertaking to maintain her in future. Gibson, In re, 7 L. R., Ch. 52; 25 L. T., N. S. 551; 20 W. R. 107.

Accrued and future dividends of a fund settled on a married woman for her life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, were ordered to be paid to the officer charged with the care of lunatics in the colony of Victoria, to provide for her past and future maintenance as a pauper lunatic in a colony. Baker, In re, 41 L. J., Chanc. 162; 13 L. R., Eq. 108; 20 W. R. 325; 25 L. T., N. S. 783—V. C. W.

A person died lunatic and intestate, having been maintained since 1862 in the county lunatic asylum at the cost of the Tames Union; he was nevertheless entitled to 440*l.* His only next of kin was a lunatic sister:—

The court granted administration to the nominee of the guardians of the Totnes Union, as being creditors under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, s. 10, the grant to be for the use and benefit of the lunatic sister during her lunacy. Windent v. Sharland, Sharland, In goods of, 20 W. R. 211—P.

On the petition of a person of weak mind, by his mother as next friend, who was entitled to 838*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.* consols, the court ordered the dividends to be paid to the next friend, to be applied in his maintenance. Perry, In re, 31 L. T., N. S. 775—V. C. B.

Where there are two funds, both of them applicable to the maintenance of a lunatic, under the management of the Court of Chancery, to one of which the lunatic would be absolutely entitled as her own property, the other of which, so far as she might not benefit by it, would pass away to different persons, the court might direct her maintenance to be provided for out of the latter fund. But where such latter fund is provided by a will which vests the fund in trustees, and gives them an absolute discretion and "uncontrollable authority" over its application, the court will not exercise its ordinary power. The fund so specially provided will be left to the exercise, bona fide, of the discretion of the trustees. Gisborne v. Gisborne, 2 L. R., App. Cas. 300—H. L.; affirming S. C., 32 L. T., N. S. 46; 23 W. R. 410; which reversed the decision of Hall, V. C., 31 L. T., N. S. 472; 23 W. R. 151.

A testator (whose wife had, in her own right, property which was not referred to in his will) devised his real and personal estates to trustees upon various trusts, one of which was that "my trustees in their discretion, and of their uncontrollable authority, pay and apply the whole, or such portion only, of the annual income of my real and personal estate and investments, as they shall think expedient, to or for the clothing, board, &c., for the personal and peculiar benefit and comfort of my dear wife." One of the trustees was the testator's brother, and he was made the residuary legatee:—Held, that the trustees were entitled to exercise an absolute discretion in the application of the fund thus provided by the will. Id.

Improvements of lunatic's estate.]—Repairs and permanent improvements to a large amount upon an estate of which a lunatic was tenant in tail in possession were found to be expedient. There was in court a sufficient fund of personality to which the lunatic was absolutely entitled, and his income was much more than sufficient for his requirements. The amount required for repairs and improvements was ordered to be raised by mortgage or charge of the settled estate. Gist, In re, 5 L. R., Ch. Div. 881; 26 W. R. 22—C. A.

Payment of costs of legal proceedings regarding the estate.]—A lunatic, so found by inquisition, had made two wills before the finding. Upon the petition of the committee of the estate, it was ordered that such costs as the master should think proper, of a suit to perpetuate testimony as to the wills, should be paid out of the lunatic's estate, the suit being instituted with the approbation of the master. Tayleur, In re, 19 W. R. 462—L. J.

A trustee having advanced money on mortgage became lunatic. Upon redemption of the estate and a petition to appoint a person to reconvey, it appearing that the mortgagor had no knowledge that the money was trust money, the costs of the application were ordered to be paid out of the trust estate. Jones, In re, 45 L. J., Chanc. Div. 688; 24 W. R. 377; 34 L. T., N. S. 470; 1 L. R., Ch. Div. 70—C. A.

Gifts, subscriptions to charities, &c.]—

Weekly allowances were ordered out of the surplus income of a wealthy lunatic to needy collateral relatives who were supposed to be her next of kin, though their title as such had not been established, and for whom the lunatic, while sane, had expressed an intention to make some provision. Frost, In re, 5 L. R., Ch. 699; 39 L. J., Chanc. 808; 18 W. R. 986; 23 L. T., N. S. 233.

A lunatic was tenant for life of seventy houses in London, situate in the same neighborhood, and producing a gross rental of 2,410*l.* His surplus income, after providing him with every comfort, was about 900*l.* a year. Three of the houses were sold to a church building committee as a site for a church to a new district parish, and the incumbent and the church committee solicited subscriptions for building the church and parochial schools in connection with it. Leave was given to the committee of the estate, who was also heiress-at-law and sole next of kin, to contribute out of the lunatic's income 250*l.* towards building the church, and a like sum for the schools. Strickland, In re, 6 L. R., Ch. 226; 24 L. T., N. S. 530; 19 W. R. 515.

Appointment of new trustees in place of trustees become insane.]—The lords justices sitting in lunacy have jurisdiction, under the trustee acts, to appoint a new trustee of a creditors' deed registered under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, in the place of a trustee who has become of unsound mind. Donisthorpe, In re, Thompson, In re, 44 L. J., Chanc. 536.

A petition for the appointment of new trustees, and a vesting order, where the trust estate has become vested in a lunatic who has not been properly appointed a trustee, should be presented in lunacy as well as in chancery. Mason, In re, 44 L. J., Chanc. 678.

Where a new trustee of a settlement had been appointed in the place of a trustee who had become of unsound mind, a petition for an order appointing the new trustee by the court and vesting the real estate, and the right to call for a transfer of the personal property in the new trustee, together with the continuing trustee, was directed by the court to be entitled in Chancery as well as in Lunacy. Pearson, In re, 46 L. J., Chanc. Div. 670; 37 L. T., N. S. 290—C. A.

The surviving trustee of property, consisting partly of land in Ireland, having become lunatic, an order was made, upon a petition instituted both in Lunacy and in the Chancery division, appointing new trustees and vesting the Irish land in them. Lamotte, In re, 4 L. R., Ch. Div. 325; 25 W. R. 149; 36 L. T., N. S. 231—C. A.

Rights and powers of curator appointed by foreign court.—Where a creditor had been found lunatic in Scotland, and a curator bonorum appointed there:—Held, that such curator bonorum had alone a right to sue and give discharges for personal estate of the lunatic in England. Scott v. Denley, 1 Kay & J. 281; 1 Jur., N. S. 304; 24 L. J., Chanc. 244.

An Englishman while resident in France was found a lunatic by the law of that country, and a curator bonis was appointed by the French court. The fund in England to which the lunatic became entitled was paid into court under the Trustees Relief Act:—Held, upon petition by the curator bonis for payment of the fund to him as a matter of right, that the court could exercise a discretion, and it appearing that the lunatic was sufficiently provided for, an order was made for retaining the corpus of the fund in court, and the payment of the dividends only to the curator. Gurnier, In re, 13 L. R., Eq. 532; 41 L. J., Chanc. 419; 20 W. R. 238—V. C. M.

On the petition of a curator ad bona, appointed by a foreign court to administer the estate of a lunatic, to have transferred to him as such curator the share of the lunatic in the proceeds of real estate in England sold in a partition suit by direction of the court:—Held, that, as the fund retained its character of realty, the curator was not entitled to call for a transfer thereof. Grimwood v. Bartels, 25 W. R. 843; 46 L. J., Chanc. Div. 788—V. C. H.

IV. CONTRACTS AND DEALINGS.

Validity, in general.—Unsoundness of mind will not vacate a contract if unknown to the other contracting party, and no advantage was taken of the lunatic, especially where the contract is executed in whole or in part, so that the parties cannot be restored to their original position. Molton v. Camroux (in error), 4 Exch. 17; 18 L. J., Exch. 856—Exch. Chanc.; S. C. in court below, 2 Exch. 487; 12 Jur. 800; 18 L. J., Exch. 68, affirmed.

Therefore, where a lunatic purchased annuities for his life of a society which, at the time, had no knowledge of his unsoundness of mind, the transaction being in the ordinary course of human affairs, and fair and bona fide on the part of the society:—Held, that, after the death of the lunatic, his personal representatives could not recover from the society the premiums paid for the annuities. Id.

A kept cash with B., a banker, and the balances to his credit were stated from time to time in a passbook. A became a lunatic, but the account continued to be kept with his family, and in the passbook, the entries in which were in B's handwriting, a balance was stated to the credit of A:—Held, that this was not evidence to support an account stated with A, in an action brought by his representative against B, to recover the amount of such balance. Turbuck v. Bispham, 2 M. & W. 2.

The plaintiff contracted to purchase an estate from the defendant, and paid a deposit, on the terms that unless he objected to the title within a certain time, the same would be considered as accepted. No objection was made by him to the title. The plaintiff, at the time of the contract and of the payment of the deposit, was a lunatic incapable of understanding the meaning of a contract or of managing his affairs, and derived no benefit from the contract, but these facts were unknown to the defendant, who made the contract with him fairly and bona fide, believing him capable of understanding the same. Held, that as the contract was entered into by the defendant, and the money received fairly and in good faith and without knowledge of the lunacy and, so far as concerned the deposit, the transaction was completely executed, the plaintiff was not entitled to a return of the money so deposited. Bray v. McDonnell, 9 Exch. 309; 24 L. J., Exch. 94; 2 C. L. R. 474.

The insanity of a mortgagor at the date of the mortgage will not annul the right of a mortgagee to a foreclosure decree in equity, unless the mortgagee knew of the mortgagor's insanity, and took advantage of it. Campbell v. Hopper, 3 Sm. & G. 153; 3 Eq. R. 727; 1 Jur., N. S. 670; 24 L. J., Chanc. 644.

To constitute a defense to an action for use and occupation of a house, taken by a defendant under a written agreement at a stipulated sum per annum, it is not enough to show that she was a lunatic, and that the house was unnecessary for her; but it must also be shown that the plaintiff knew this and took advantage of her situation, and if that is shown the jury should find for her; and they cannot on these facts find a verdict for the plaintiff for any smaller sum than that specified in the agreement. Dance v. Kirkwall, 8 C. & P. 670—Patteson.

Dealings of sale and purchase by a person apparently sane, though subsequently found to be insane, will not be set aside against those who have dealt with him on the faith of his being a person of competent understanding, but this doctrine is inapplicable to a case where the question is whether the deed of a lunatic, altering the provisions of a settlement, is void. Elliott v. Ince, 7 De G., M. & G. 475; 3 Jur., N. S. 597; 26 L. J., Chanc. 821.

A previous covenant by a person of sound mind, must prevail against any subsequent mental incapacity. Affleck v. Affleck, 3 Sm. & G. 394.

In an action for work by an attorney, for a defendant, who pleaded lunacy:—Held, that this was no defense unless the plaintiff knew it; and it appearing that the defendant had been duly placed in an asylum while he suffered under delirium tremens, and was mad from time to time when under the influence of drink, but that the plaintiff did not do business with him at those times, it was for the jury, whether, when he took his instructions, the defendant was insane to his knowledge. Moss v. Tribe, 3 F. & F. 297—Martin.

No person can, in defending an action, be allowed to stultify himself; and therefore a defendant cannot, in an action for work and labor, set up his own insanity as a defense, unless he has been imposed upon by the plaintiff in consequence of his mental imbecility. Brown v. Jodrell, 3 C. & P. 30; M. & M. 105. S. P., Levy v. Baker, M. & M. 106, n.—Teunterlen.

After a promise of marriage the man discovered that the woman had, before the promise, been a lunatic, and confined as such, and on that ground he refused to marry:—Held, that these facts formed no answer to an action for breach of the promise. Baker v. Cartwright, 7 Jur., N. S. 1247; 30 L. J., C. P. 864; 10 C. B., N. S. 124.

A policy of insurance is not rendered void by the suicide of the assured, while in a state of insanity. Horn v. Anglo-Australian and Universal Family Life Insurance Company, 7 Jur., N. S. 673; 30 L. J., Chanc. 511; 9 W. R. 359; 4 L. T., N. S. 142—V. C. W.

The rule both of law and of equity, as to a contract entered into by a person apparently of sound mind, and not known by the other contracting party to be insane, is, that such a contract, if fair, bona fide, and completely executed, is valid; and, even though such a contract might be void at law, it will only be set aside in equity for fraud. Hassard v. Smith, 6 Ir. R., Eq. 420—V. C.

The ordinary presumption of sanity is removed by an inquisition finding a person to be of unsound mind; and, in the case of a contract subsequently entered into by him, the burden of proof is shifted; but the finding, being usually ex parte, is not conclusive, and the court has jurisdiction (which, however, it will be slow in exercising) to arrive at a contrary conclusion without the aid of another party. Ib.

To vitiate a contract, the knowledge of the lunacy or incapacity must be, not merely actual, but presumably sufficient—from circumstances known to the other contracting party—to lead him to a reasonable conclusion that the person with whom he is dealing is of unsound mind. Ib.

As to effect of inquisition and finding, in general,—see this title, I.

As to effect of insanity in cases of life insurance,—see INSURANCE.

Liability for necessaries.—A lunatic may contract for necessaries suitable to his degree, and an action will lie against him, notwithstanding an inquisition of lunacy, for the amount. Dagster v. Portsmouth, 7 D. & R. 614; 5 B. & C. 170; 2 C. & P. 178.

Therefore, where a person of rank ordered carriages suitable to his condition, and the coachmaker supplied them bona fide and without fraud, and they were actually used by the party:—Held, that an action would lie upon the contract, notwithstanding an inquisition of lunacy finding the party to be of unsound mind at the time the carriages were ordered. Ib.

An action of debt for necessaries supplied will lie against a lunatic: Stedman v. Hart, 1 Kay, 607; 18 Jur. 744; 23 L. J., Chanc. 908.

A husband is liable for necessaries supplied to his wife during the period of his lunacy. Reul v. Legard, 6 Exch. 637; 15 Jur. 494; 20 L. J., Exch. 309.

The law will raise an implied contract, and give a valid demand or debt against the lunatic or his estate, for moneys expended for the necessary protection of his person and estate. Williams v. Wentworth, 5 Beav. 325.

Proof was allowed in equity against the estate of a testator, for money advanced to his wife during his lunacy, and applied by her in payment of her necessary expenses, though she had a separate income. Wood, In re, 1 De G., J. & S. 465; 9 Jur., N. S. 589.

A person who was a lunatic, but had not been found to be so by inquisition, died seized of a small freehold estate, but not possessed of any personal property. His stepfather had received the rents of the estate, and had expended more than the amount of them in maintaining the lunatic; he also paid the lunatic's funeral expenses:—Held, that he was not entitled under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, to be paid either the surplus expenditure, or the amount of the funeral expenses, out of the lunatic's freehold estate. Carter v. Beard, 10 Sim. 7.

Pleading and proof of insanity, as affecting validity of contracts.—Evidence of the general reputation of the insanity of a person in the neighborhood in which he resides, is inadmissible to prove that a person was cognizant of that fact. Greenlade v. Dare, 20 Beav. 284; 1 Jur., N. S. 294; 24 L. J., Chanc. 490.

Fits of mania extending for twenty years anterior to, and down to the year in which deeds were executed by a man, found some years afterwards, by commission de lunatico, to have been all along insane, are not an answer to a prima facie case on an issue as to his sanity at the time of executing the deeds. Ferguson v. Borrett, 1 F. & F. 613—Erle.

On a plea of insanity, at the time of making a contract, the opinion of the medical men who gave certificates on which the defendant was confined as insane, at or about the time, is only evidence for the jury, who must judge of the grounds on which it was formed. Lowell v. Tribe, 8 F. & F. 9—Erie.

Where the plaintiff himself, according to his own evidence, was in personal communication with the defendant at the time, that, in itself, is some evidence that the plaintiff knew of the insanity, supposing the jury find the fact of insanity established. Id.

A contract having been made between the plaintiff, who was insane, and the defendant, which it was sought to set aside:—Held, upon an issue whether the defendant had notice of such insanity, that evidence was admissible of the plaintiff's conduct both before and after the signing of the contract, in order to show that the character of his disease was such that it must have developed itself to one having the opportunity of observation afforded to the defendant, though a stranger. Bouvan v. McDonnell, 10 Exch. 184; 23 L. J., Exch. 336; 2 C. L. R. 1292.

A party claiming under a deed is not bound to prove the sanity of the person executing it; the burden of proof lies on the other side. Jacobs v. Richards, 18 Beav. 300; 18 Jur. 527; 23 L. J., Chanc. 537.

The plaintiff being confined in a lunatic asylum, and an inquisition under a commission of lunacy being held upon her, and attended by her counsel, before any verdict was given an agreement was signed by her counsel, and counsel attending for the promoters of the commission, that she should be released from confinement, that certain arrangements should be made as to property which she claimed, that the title deeds relating thereto, which had been taken from her when she was confined, and now were in the hands of the promoters, should be given up and placed in the hands of H., and that the commission should be superseded. Accordingly, the plaintiff was released, and the deeds handed over to H. The plaintiff then brought detinue against H. for the deeds; an interpleader rule was obtained on the claim of the promoters, by which the proceedings were stayed, and a feigned issue brought by the plaintiff against the promoters, to try whether she was entitled to the deeds notwithstanding the arrangement:—Held, first, that on the trial of such issue it was not necessary that the plaintiff should prove her title to the deeds, the question being only whether the agreement prevented her from insisting on her title. Cumming v. Ince, 11 Q. B. 112; 12 Jur. 331; 17 L. J., Q. B. 105.

Held, secondly, that it was rightly left to the jury, on evidence of the state of the plaintiff's mind and health at the time of the agreement being made, to say whether the consent of her counsel was obtained by constraint, and without her free will, and the jury having so found, that the plaintiff was entitled to the verdict, and that the legality of the restraint, assuming it to have been legal, and the consent of counsel, furnished no conclusive proof that the agreement was not void by duress. Id.

V. ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST.

What actions and proceedings may be brought or maintained by or against lunatics, their committees or guardians. It seems that if a defendant in quare impedit is a lunatic, the action is properly brought against him and not against his committee. Tyrrrell v. Jones, 8 M. & P. 618, 6 Bing. 283.

A suit instituted by a next friend on behalf of a person of unsound mind, not so found by inquisition, becomes absolutely paralyzed by a change in his status. Beall v. Smith, 43 L. J., Chanc. 245; 9 L. R. Ch. 83; 29 L. T. N. S. 825; 32 W. R. 121; reversing the decision of Wickens v. C., 28 L. T., N. S. 834, 31 W. R. 784.

If he becomes of sound mind there is no pretext for the continued intervention of the next friend; if he is found a lunatic by inquisition, and is thus placed under the protection of the crown, the suit should be continued only with the sanction of the court in lunacy. Id.

Every proceeding taken in the suit after the inquisition, whether or not a committee has been appointed, is irregular and void, and a contempt of the court in lunacy. Id.

It is irregular for a bill to be filed by a person of unsound mind, not so found by inquisition, by his next friend, for the purpose of dealing with the real estate of the person of unsound mind. Halfhide v. Robinson, 9 L. R. Ch. 373; 43 L. J., Chanc. 398; 22 W. R. 448; 80 L. T. N. S. 216.

A bill was filed by a person of unsound mind not so found, by his next friend, for a partition or sale of real estate, and a decree for sale was made. A petition was afterwards presented under the Trustee Act, 1852, for an order vesting the estate of the plaintiff in the purchaser. The court refused to make the order, considering that the suit was irregular, but as the plaintiff's estate was only 200*l.*, and she had no other property, the court directed an application to be made in lunacy, under the Lunacy Regulation Act, 1862, s. 13, for a sale, and permitted the petition to be amended for that purpose. Id.

A partner who has become incurably insane may obtain a decree for dissolution of the partnership on this ground, and although he has not been found lunatic by inquisition, may institute a suit for dissolution by his next friend, alleging that the lunatic is incurably insane, and that the dissolution is for the benefit of the lunatic, the court will entertain the suit, in order to protect the property of the lunatic. Jones v. Lloyd, 43 L. J., Chanc. 826; 18 L. R., Eq. 265, 30 L. T., N. S. 487—R.

When one of the defendants in a suit was alleged to be of unsound mind, but had not been found to be so by commission, on an application by the plaintiff to appoint a guardian ad litem:—Held, that an affidavit of the plaintiff was insufficient which only referred to a statement in the answer of the other defendants in the suit, alleging that the defendant to whom it was sought to appoint a guardian was "imbecile." Watson v. Knilans, 23 W. R. 639—Ir. R.

The defendant being of unsound mind, though not so found by inquisition, the court, on motion, ex parte, appointed his son guardian ad litem, upon an affidavit averring that there was no conflict of interest between the father and son. Dobbin v. Billing, 6 Ir. R., Eq. 623—V. C.

Service of process upon lunatics.—When a defendant is a lunatic the court has no power under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 17, to allow the plaintiff to proceed as if personal service of the writ of summons had been effected, unless it can be made to appear that the writ has come to his knowledge, and that he willfully evades service. Holmes v. Service, 15 C. B. 293; 1 Jur., N. S. 258; 24 L. J., C. P. 24.

When a lunatic cannot be served with a writ of summons, leave cannot be granted to proceed without service. Williamson v. Maggs, 28 L. J., Exch. 5.

But the court has power to allow a plaintiff to proceed in an action as if personal service of the writ of summons had been effected, although the defendant is a lunatic, and will so order, if satisfied that reasonable efforts have been made to effect personal service, and that the writ has come to his knowledge. Kimberley v. Alleyne, 2 H. & C. 223.

When the medical officer of an asylum refused to allow service of a bill in equity on a lunatic who was not so found by inquisition, the court allowed substituted service on the medical officer. Raine v. Wilson, 43 L. J., Chanc. 469—V. C. B.

Arrest and bail.—The court would not discharge a defendant out of custody on filing common bail, on the ground that he was insane at the time of the arrest. Nutt v. Verney, 4 T. R. 121.

Nor that he had since become so. Kernot v. Norman, 2 T. R. 390. S. P., Ibbotson v. Galway, 6 T. R. 133.

Even where there had been a commission of lunacy. Steel v. Alan, 2 B. & P. 362.

Payment of money out of court.—An action having been brought by a wife of a lunatic (not so declared by commission) in his name, for the recovery of a debt due to him, the defendant paid the amount into court. The court made absolute a rule for payment of the money out of court to the wife. Gleddon v. Trebble, 9 C. B., N. S. 367.

I. WHEN AN ACTION LIES; AND DEFENSES.

1. What Proceedings constitute Ground of Action, in General.

Merely bringing or aiding an action, claim, or recovery.—An action on the case to recover damages against the lessor of the plaintiff, in a vexatious ejectment, is not maintainable. Purton v. Honnor, 1 B. & P. 205.

If special damage results from a claim made to goods, an action against the claimant may be maintained, if he makes the claim maliciously, and without any reasonable or probable cause. Green v. Button, 1 Gale, 340; 2 C., M. & R. 707; 1 Tyr. & G. 118.

It is a sufficient special damage that the party with whom a contract has been made for the sale of the goods refuses to deliver them in consequence of the claim, he not being under a perfect obligation to deliver the goods. Ib.

A declaration stated that the defendant had been employed by the plaintiff to edit the Court Journal for reward, and that he had not performed the duties of editing the same in a proper manner; and, without the knowledge, leave, authority, or consent of the plaintiff, falsely, maliciously, and negligently inserted and published in the same a false and malicious libel; that an information was exhibited against the plaintiff for the same, and maliciously printing and publishing the libel, and such proceedings were taken, and had that the plaintiff was convicted of such offense and fined. After verdict for the plaintiff, the judgment was arrested, on the ground that the injury sustained was not connected with the breach of duty averred; and not appearing that the printing and publishing of which the plaintiff was convicted was the same act as that with which the defendant was charged, viz., the inserting and publishing. Colburn v. Patmore, 1 C., M. & R. 72; 4 Tyr. 677.

A declaration stated that the defendant was an attorney, that a writ of summons had been issued against the plaintiff at the suit of A., but no further proceedings had been had, nor would the plaintiff have defended the same, nor had the defendant been retained by the plaintiff to defend the action, or take any step therein or in relation thereto, yet the defendant wrongfully, and without the consent of the plaintiff, entered an appearance for the plaintiff in the action, and defended the same, and such proceedings were had thereupon that A. recovered judgment against the plaintiff for 83l. 9s., and thereupon execution issued against him, and he was forced to pay the sum recovered, and 9l. 8s. 6d. for costs of the execution:—Held, bad, in arrest of judgment. Westaway v. Frost, 12 Jur. 698, 11 L. J., Q. B. 698.

As to what parties are liable,—see this title, I., 4.

Arrest and execution, in actions, generally.—If a plaintiff maliciously takes a defendant in execution for a debt, in respect of which he has been discharged under the Irish Insolvent Act, he is liable to an action on the case. Exart v. Jones, 3 D. & L. 252; 14 M. & W. 774.

But trespass will not lie against a plaintiff or his attorney for suing out execution, and arresting thereon a defendant who has obtained an order for protection from process under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116. Yearsley v. Hunt, 5 D. & L. 265; 14 M. & W. 322.

No action lies against a sheriff or his officer for arresting a person attending court as a witness, although alleged that the defendant knew that he was privileged, and arrested him maliciously. Magnay v. Bart (in error), D. & M. 652; 5 Q. B. 381—Exch. Cham.

No action lies against an execution creditor or his attorney for issuing a f. f. c. indorsed to levy the whole sum recovered by a judgment, which, to the knowledge of both, has been partly satisfied by payments, unless malice and want of probable cause are alleged in the declaration, and proved. De Molins v. Grove, 10 Q. B. 152; 10 Jur. 426; 15 L. J., Q. B. 41; 8 C., affirmed, 10 Q. B. 152; 11 Jur. 45; 17 L. J., C. P. 321—Exch. Cham.

But an action lies at the suit of a debtor taken in execution under a ca. sa. upon a judgment, against an execution creditor who maliciously, and without any reasonable or probable cause, causes and procures a warrant to be issued upon such writ, indorsed to levy a larger sum than remains due upon the judgment, and the debtor to be taken to satisfy such sum, there being no difference between an arrest on mesne process and an arrest under a ca. sa. on a judgment. Churchill v. Siggers, 3 El. & Bl. 929; 2 C. L. R. 1509; 18 Jur. 773; 23 L. J., Q. B. 308.

A. having issued a writ of summons against B. specially indorsed for 28*l.*, B., without appearing to the writ, paid 10*l.* to A. on account of the debt. A. afterwards signed judgment, for default of appearance, for the full amount of 28*l.* and costs, and issued a ca. sa. indorsed for that amount, under which B. was arrested, and paid the sum demanded. B. having brought an action against A. for maliciously, and without probable cause, signing judgment and issuing execution:—Held, that while the judgment stood for the whole amount, it estopped the plaintiff from denying the correctness of the judgment or of the execution. Huffer v. Allen, 2 L. R., Exch. 15; 12 Jur., N. S. 930; 33 L. J., Exch. 17; 15 L. T., N. S. 225; 4 H. & C. 634.

By a cognovit A. confessed the action, and that B. had sustained damage to the amount of 3,000*l.*, and agreed, that, in case A. should make default in payment of 259*l.* on the 7th of May, B. should be at liberty to enter up judgment for 3,000*l.*, and sue out execution for 259*l.* and costs, which would have left a principal sum of 1,650*l.* due to B. A. not having paid the 259*l.* on the 7th of May, B. entered up judgment, and sued out execution for 3,011*l.* indorsed with a direction to the sheriff, requiring him to levy 1,967*l.*, and A. was arrested and detained in prison for that sum:—Held, that A. might maintain an action against B. for having caused him to be arrested for a larger sum than he ought. Wentworth v. Bullen, 9 B. & C. 840.

An officer, who had a writ against a man, sent to him to say so, and asked him to appoint a time to come to his office and execute a bail-bond, which he did!—Held, not to constitute an arrest, so as to support an action for a malicious arrest, although the original plaintiff had no cause of action. Berry v. Adumson, 6 B. & C. 528; 9 D. & R. 558; 2 C. & P. 503.

Arrest under a judge's order.—An action for maliciously arresting on a capias issued by a judge under 1 & 2 Viet. c. 110, s. 3, lies only where the party obtaining the order for the capias has imposed on the judge by some false statement or suggestio falsi, and thereby satisfied him of the existence of the debt to the requisite amount, and that there was reasonable ground for supposing that the debtor was about to quit the country. Daniels v. Fiedling, 16 M. & W. 200; 4 D. & L. 329; 10 Jur. 1061; 16 L. J., Exch. 153.

In an action for maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause obtaining a judge's order to hold the plaintiff to bail, and, without reasonable or probable cause for believing, and not believing, that the plaintiff was about to quit England, suing out a capias, and wrongfully and maliciously causing the plaintiff to be arrested under such writ, and to be thereupon imprisoned, the evidence was, that the defendants obtained the order, and caused a capias to be issued thereupon; that the plaintiff was afterwards found in the custody of the sheriff; that one of the defendants being informed (in the presence of the other) that the plaintiff was in custody at their suit, observed that they had got him fast and meant to keep him; that an application by the plaintiff to a judge for his discharge from custody was opposed by the defendants; and that, on the order for his discharge as to that writ being left with the officer in whose custody he was, he was released:—Held, that this was sufficient to sustain the action without proof of any warrant. Petrie v. Lamont, 4 Scott, N. R. 335; 3 M. & G. 702.

It will be evidence of malice in an arrest on mesne process that the plaintiff has taken a bill for the debt, and it will also negative reasonable and probable cause. And though the party has been discharged on the condition of bringing no action for trespass, that does not preclude an action on the case. Macfarlane v. Ellis, 1 F. & F. 288—Campbell.

Arrest in inferior courts.—An action was held to lie for holding to bail in an inferior court, when no more than 30*s.* was due. Smith v. Cuttel, 2 Wils. 376.

So, when an inferior court had no jurisdiction over the cause. Goslin v. Wilcock, 2 Wils. 302.

In actions commenced in any of the superior courts the plaintiff may, since the R. H. T. 2 Will. 4, l. 35, declare at any time before the end of the year from the return of the writ, unless the defendant shall have signed judgment of non pros. for want of the plaintiff's declaring before the end of the second term; and this, whether the action be commenced by serviceable or bailable process. This applies also to causes removed by the defendant from inferior courts by habeas corpus (though the case was commenced below, and removed before the rule came into operation), except that, as judgment of non pros. cannot be signed in such causes, the plaintiff cannot be out of court till the expiration of the year; and consequently, an action for malicious arrest cannot be commenced in any of the above cases till a year has elapsed from the return of the writ. Norrish v. Richards, 3 A. & E. 733; 5 N. & M. 269; 1 H. & W. 137.

Procuring or executing warrants.—Though a person may be the subject of a trespass in the magistrate to grant an illegal warrant, yet an action on the case may be supported against the person who causes and procures such warrant to issue, if it is done maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause. Eldon v. Smith (in error), 1 D. & R. 97; 2 Chit. 304.

Where a person, having lost a bill of exchange which he supposes to have been stolen, goes before a magistrate, and relates the circumstances of the loss, and the magistrate grants his warrant to apprehend A. on a charge of having "feloniously stolen, taken, and carried away" the bill of exchange (language which the complainant did not use when he laid his information), and upon subsequent investigation of the case it turns out to be no felony:—Held, that an action would not lie for maliciously procuring the magistrate to grant his warrant; to sustain the averment of malice, the charge must be willfully false. Cohen v. Morgan, 6 D. & R. 8. S. P., Carroll v. Morley, 1 G. & D. 45; 1 Q. B. 18.

An action lies for maliciously obtaining or executing a warrant to search a house for smuggled goods, though none are found. Boat v. Cooper, 1 T. R. 535.

Proceedings in equity.—Where, in a suit in equity, an order was made that G. should pay in to the name of the accountant-general, in trust in the cause, a certain sum admitted by his answer to have been the amount of the sale of a trust fund; and the solicitor for the plaintiff in the suit registered it under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 10, and G. was in consequence prevented from disposing of his lands:—Held, that the registering of the order was not of itself a wrongful act, and that no action could be maintained for it without proof of malice. Gibbs v. Pike, 9 M. & W. 351, 1 D., N. S. 409; 6 Jur. 465; 12 L. J., Exch. 237.

The plaintiff was in custody under an attachment from the Court of Chancery, for non payment of costs to the plaintiff in a suit in equity, the defendant in this action. After the costs were paid, the solicitor of the plaintiff in equity (the now defendant) refused to give an order to the sheriff to discharge the plaintiff, saying, "Let him go to the court to purge his contempt." The judge in equity discharged him on motion:—Held, that no action was maintainable for refusing to give the order to the sheriff, and thereby prolonging plaintiff's imprisonment, except on proof

Moore v. Gardner, 16 M.

A count for distraining for is due is bad, although it has been done maliciously, for it does not amount to a legal injury, because it is done without intent. Stevenson v. Newnham, 13 Q. B. 600; 22 L. J., C. P. 110—Exch. Cham.

Proceedings in bankruptcy.—An action for maliciously suing out a commission in bankruptcy, notwithstanding the specific authority given by 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, s. 23. Brown v. Chapman, 3 Burr. 1418; 1 W. Bl. 427.

Although the commission was afterwards superseded. Chapman v. Pickeregill, 2 Wils. 145.

A declaration alleged that the defendant falsely and maliciously, and without any reasonable or probable cause, filed a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy against the plaintiff, and falsely and maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, caused and procured him to be declared a bankrupt:—Held, that this charge was established by proof that the defendant petitioned for the adjudication, and, by depositions, false in fact, and maliciously made, induced the commissioner to adjudicate the bankruptcy, although it appeared that, even if the depositions had been true, the adjudication could not have been supported in law. Furley v. Danks, 4 El. & Bl. 493; 1 Jur., N. S. 331; 24 L. J., Q. B. 244.

An action is maintainable for maliciously presenting a petition in bankruptcy and procuring the plaintiff to be adjudicated bankrupt for non-payment of a debt under a debtor's summons. Johnson v. Emerson, 25 L. T., N. S. 837. See BANKRUPTCY.

Proceedings in lunacy.—An action lies for a conspiracy in issuing a commission of lunacy. Turner v. Turner, Gow, 50—Dallas.

Prosecution before court martial.—An action will not lie for a malicious prosecution of a court martial by a captain in the navy against his commander-in-chief. Sutton v. Johnstone, 1 Bro. P. C. 76; 1 T. R. 493, 784.

Rejecting elector's vote.—Action for maliciously rejecting the plaintiff's vote at an election of vestrymen and auditors, under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120. Plea, that the plaintiff was rated to a church rate more than six months before the election, and at the time of the election the rate was due and unpaid. Replication, that the rate was void in this, that it was made for defraying expenses for which a rate could not be made. Rejoinder, that the rate was good on the face of it, and had never been quashed:—Held, that the plaintiff having no means of questioning the rate, the rejoinder was not good. But that the replication was good, as it showed that the rate was not due, therefore that the plaintiff was entitled to vote; and that the action lay, malice being admitted on these pleadings. Tozer v. Child, 6 El. & Bl. 289; 2 Jur., N. S. 928; 25 L. J., Q. B. 337.

On the trial of the action for maliciously rejecting his vote, it appeared that the defendants, who presided at the election as churchwardens, rejected it on the ground of the plaintiff not having paid a church rate due more than six months prior to the election. The legality of the rate was disputed, but the vestry clerk had advised the defendants that the church rate was valid, and that they would be justified in rejecting the votes of those who had not paid it:—Held, that it was incumbent on the plaintiff to make out that the defendants acted maliciously in rejecting his vote, and that if they acted bona fide upon advice which they believed sound, they were not liable. Tozer v. Child (in error), 7 El. & Bl. 377; 3 Jur., N. S. 409; 26 L. J., Q. B. 151—Exch. Cham.

Preventing issue of letters patent.—A count alleged that the plaintiff was the first and true inventor of "improvements in the manufacture of fire-arms, also of cartridges, of priming, and of wads or wadding for fire-arms," and had petitioned for a patent; that his petition had been referred to the solicitor-general, who had required and allowed the title of his invention to be amended as an invention for "improvements in the manufacture of cartridges and of wads or wadding for fire-arms," and given a certificate of allowance; yet the defendant, well knowing the premises, but maliciously intending to injure the plaintiff, and to prevent him from obtaining letters patent for his invention, falsely, fraudulently, maliciously and wrongfully, and without any reasonable or probable cause, represented to the solicitor-general that he had an interest in opposing a grant of letters patent to the plaintiff, and gave notice that he had applied for a patent, and obtained provisional protection for an invention for "improvements in cartridges," and that in consequence of the alteration in the title of the plaintiff's patent, he had reason to apprehend that such alteration in the title might admit of his invention being embraced in the plaintiff's patent; whereas, in truth, the alleged invention for which the defendant had obtained provisional protection was not his invention, but a fraudulent imitation of the plaintiff's invention, and the defendant had no interest in opposing a grant of letters patent to the plaintiff; and the count concluded with an allegation of special damage, that, by means of the premises, the solicitor-general refused to allow the plaintiff's application for letters patent to proceed, and he was thereby prevented from obtaining, and failed to obtain, a patent for his invention, and was put to expense in opposing a grant of letters patent to the defendant:—Held, that the special damage alleged did not naturally flow from the grievances charged, and that, without it, the count disclosed no cause of action. Hadden v. Lott, 15 C. B. 411; 24 L. J., C. P. 49; 3 C. L. R. 144.

2. Existence of Malice, and Want of Probable and Reasonable Cause.

(a) In Respect of Civil Actions and Proceedings.

When an element of the cause of action.]—Malice must be proved in an action for a malicious arrest. George v. Radford, 3 C. & P. 464—Tenterden.

An action will not lie against a party suing out a writ if he neglects to countermand it after payment of the debt, at least, unless malice is averred. Scheibel v. Fairbairn, 1 B. & P. 388.

And if the costs are paid as well as the debt. Payne v. Wipke, 3 East, 814.

An action for maliciously arresting on a capias issued by a judge under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 3, cannot be supported on the mere fact, that the defendant, when he procured the order and arrest, had no reasonable or probable cause for believing that the plaintiff was going abroad. Daniels v. Fielding, 13 M. & W. 200; 4 D. & L. 829; 10 Jur. 1001; 16 L. J., Exch. 153.

In an act on for maliciously and without the authority of the bail causing the defendant to be rendered in discharge of his bail, it is necessary to prove express malice as well as want of authority. Porter v. Weston, 5 Bing. N. C. 715; 8 Scott, 25; 3 Jur. 507.

To sustain an action for a conspiracy in issuing a commission of lunacy, malice and a want of probable cause must be proved; but on proof of a total want of probable cause, malice may be implied; and although express malice is proved, some slight evidence of a want of probable cause must be given. Turner v. Turner, Gow, 50.

What constitutes malice, and want of reasonable or probable cause.]—In an action against an attorney for a malicious arrest, the jury must be satisfied of the absence of any just demand on the part of his client, and also, that the attorney knew that there was not any such demand; and, applying the law for some purpose of his own, or for some other ill purpose, which the law calls malicious, committed the injury complained of by the plaintiff. In such case it is not necessary to prove malice in the ordinary sense of the word; any improper or sinister motive will be sufficient. Stokely v. Harnidge, 3 C. & P. 11—Tindal.

E. having obtained a judgment against F. and T., he, by H., his attorney, sued out concurrent writs of ca. sa. into London and Surrey. F. was taken on the former writ, and on giving to H. a promissory note jointly with B., as his surety, was discharged. No notice of this was given to the sheriff of Surrey, and he took T. on the other writ of ca. sa. In an action against H., for maliciously omitting to give notice to the sheriff of Surrey, that the judgment had been satisfied by the arrangement with F.:—Held, that, to support this action, the jury must be satisfied that there was malice; but that, to constitute malice, it was not necessary that H. should have acted from any spite or ill will, or like, but that if he acted as he did from an indirect motive, such as to get the debt paid by his client from T., or to get more costs himself, that would be malice for this purpose. Tebbutt v. Holt, 1 C. & K. 29—Parke.

Held, also, that the mere fact of H. giving notice to the sheriff of Surrey, that the judgment had been satisfied, was one fact which alone the jury might infer malice, and that, if they thought H. had been defrauded when he received the promissory note, or had taken it on a representation that the parties were solvent when they were not so, that would go to negative the malice. Id.

A creditor receiving information from a person that his debtor is going abroad, and obtaining an order to arrest him on an affidavit, which is afterwards held to be insubstantiated to some extent untrue, is not therefore liable to an action for maliciously obtaining an arrest without reasonable cause, there being enough to justify the belief that the debtor was going abroad, and the payment in court of a sum over 20*l.* is a sufficient admission of a debt to justify the application. Neave v. Loadman, 2 F. & F. 313—Pollock.

In an action against a builder, his attorney and the attorney's clerk, for maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause procuring an order for the arrest of the plaintiff in an action of debt, it appeared that he, being a Roman Catholic priest, had entered into a contract with the builder for the erection of a church, the contract containing a condition for payment only on an architect's certificate, and all the money originally due upon it having been paid, and a further claim made by the builder for extras, which the architect refused to allow, thereupon the builder consulted his attorney, who sent his clerk to serve the plaintiff, and see what he would say; and on the clerk's statement as to what he said, the attorney (viz., that the plaintiff had said he was going abroad at some time, the precise words being in dispute), caused his clerk to make an affidavit thereof, and his client to make an affidavit of debt, and of belief that the plaintiff was going abroad, upon which a judge made the order, the affidavit not making mention of the contract and its condition, or of the architect's refusal to certify, or of the plaintiff's permanent office.—Held, first, that there was no reasonable or probable cause for the proceeding, as there was no reason to suppose that the plaintiff was going abroad for any lengthened time, or to avoid the action. Melns v. Neate, 3 F. & F. 757.

Held, secondly, that if the proceeding was for any improper purpose, as to coerce the plaintiff into more speedy payment, it would be malicious. Id.

Held, thirdly, that in such case the attorney would be liable, but that its merely being an improper proceeding, and without reason-ble cause, was not per se evidence of malice, assuming bona fides. Id.

G., who had advertised his farming stock and effects for sale, was arrested, at the suit of B., on a judge's order to hold to bail, made upon an affidavit of C., that G. had stated his intention to go to Jersey to avoid his creditors, but he was at once discharged upon paying the amount to the officer. On the following day he was arrested at the suit of the defendants, upon a like order made upon the affidavit of their London agent, that he had read and believed the statement in the affidavit of C. to be true. It eventually appeared that C.'s statement was untrue, and G. was discharged by a judge's order. At the trial of the action against the defendants for arresting him maliciously, and without reasonable and probable cause, the agent was called on their part, and he swore that he believed, without further inquiry, the statement in C.'s affidavit to be true at the time that he applied for and obtained the order to hold to bail, and thereupon the judge directed the verdict to be entered for the defendants on the ground that there was reasonable and probable cause for the arrest, and that the action could only be maintained on proof, first, of malice on the part of the defendants, and secondly, of want of reasonable and probable cause:—Held, that there was reasonable and probable cause for the arrest, and that there was no duty on the defendants or their agent to make inquiry into the truth of the facts stated in C.'s affidavit before making an application based thereon for an order to hold the plaintiff to bail. Gibson v. Veasey, 15 L. T., N. S. 586—Exch.

A trader gave B. a judge's order for payment of debt and costs to be taxed; the costs were duly taxed, and the amount of debt and costs paid; and afterwards, and within twenty-one days from the order, B. caused it to be filed:—Held, that, whether the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 187, made the filing of the order, under the circumstances, imperative or not, no action would lie against B. for filing it, inasmuch as it could not be said to have been done without reasonable or probable cause. Dimmack v. Bowley, 2 C. B., N. S. 542; 8 Jur., N. S. 1050; 20 L. J., C. P. 281.

In an action for maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, procuring the plaintiff to be outlawed, the declaration stated that he was not in anywise subject or liable to be outlawed at the suit of the defendant; that the defendant made an affidavit of debt, whereby he deposed that the plaintiff was indebted to him in 8,550*l.*, and that the plaintiff, upon the prosecution of the defendant, under color and pretense of owing that sum, was declared an outlaw; assigning for special damage, that the plaintiff was put to costs in and about reversing the outlawry. The existence of the alleged debt (the non-existence of which was the only gravamen charged in the declaration) being admitted:—Held, that there was reasonable and probable cause for proceeding to outlawry, notwithstanding the defendant was aware at the time of issuing the exigent that the plaintiff was abroad, and had an agent in London. Drummond v. Pigou, 7 C. & P. 228; 2 Bing. N. C. 114; 1 Hodges, 100.

As to evidence of malice, and of absence of probable cause,—see this title, II., 2.

(b) In Respect of Criminal Prosecutions.

When malice and absence of probable cause necessary to sustain action.—If an indictment has not been found, an action cannot be supported without evidence of express malice, as well as the want of probable cause. Byne v. Moore, 1 Marsh. 12; 5 Taunt. 187.

An action for a malicious prosecution cannot be maintained, though the accusation turns out to be unfounded, if the prosecutor can show probable cause for the prosecution. Arbuckle v. Taylor, 8 Dow. 160.

Malice and the want of probable cause must both concur. Farmer v. Darling, 4 Burr. 1071.

There is a material distinction, as to the liability for a malicious prosecution, between the institution of the prosecution and its continuance after it has been already instituted, without authority, by an agent. Weston v. Beeman, 27 L. J., Exch. 57.

In an action against a magistrate for a malicious conviction, it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to show that he was innocent of the offense of which he was convicted; but he must also prove, from what passed before the magistrate, that there was a want of probable cause. Burley v. Bothune, 1 Marsh. 220; 5 Taunt. 580.

What constitutes malice, and want of probable and reasonable cause.—If C. is intrusted to receive money for A., with a written direction for its application, and C. writes a letter to A., stating that he has not received it, when in fact he has, this is sufficient evidence of probable cause to render a prosecution of C. under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 49, not malicious. Eagar v. Dyott, 5 C. & P. 4—Tenterden.

In an action for maliciously indicting the plaintiff for an assault on the defendant, the following facts were proved: The defendant came to the plaintiff's house, which was let out as chambers, to inquire for a Mr. S., and on being informed that no such person lived there, uttered abusive language, and, on the plaintiff requesting him to go away, laid hands on him, whereupon he forced him out. There was conflicting testimony as to the degree of violence used by plaintiff. The plaintiff was indicted by the defendant for the assault, and acquitted. On the trial the judge directed the jury, that, if the defendant preferred the indictment with a consciousness that he was in the wrong, there was no reasonable or probable cause for the indictment:—Held, that the mere fact of the plaintiff having assaulted the defendant did not of itself constitute reasonable and probable cause without reference to the other circumstances of the case, and that the direction of the judge was substantially correct. Hinton v. Heather, 14 M. & W. 181; 15 L. J., Exch. 89.

The plaintiff, having become tenant to the defendant, who resided in Wiltshire, of a house and lands in Carmarthenshire, together with the exclusive right of sporting over lands adjacent, belonging to the defendant, fished one of the ponds by cutting down the dam, and, but few fish having been caught, D., who was the defendant's local agent, suggested to the plaintiff that he might fish a certain pond on the estate by cutting down the bank and placing a net to catch the fish, which the plaintiff accordingly afterwards did during the tenancy, and a few fish were taken. Disputes having afterwards arisen between the plaintiff and defendant, D. laid an information before magistrates against the plaintiff for unlawfully and maliciously breaking down the dam and destroying the fish, under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 80, s. 15; and D. having been examined, the magistrates required the plaintiff to find bail to appear to an indictment for that offense at the assizes, where a bill was preferred, but ignored. The defendant was not present at the hearing of the information, nor was there any evidence to show that he knew that D. had given the plaintiff permission. At the trial, the judge asked the jury whether, in their opinion, D. had given permission, and they found that he had; they also found that D. acted under the defendant's authority in instituting the proceedings, and the judge having expressed his opinion that there was absence of reasonable and probable cause:—Held, that he was correct in so deciding, and that, independently of the permission given by D., there was no reasonable or probable cause for instituting the proceedings. Mitchell v. Williams, 11 M. & W. 205; 12 L. J., Exch. 193.

In an action for a malicious prosecution for sheep-stealing, it appeared at the trial that the plaintiff was possessed of a sheep which the defendant claimed as one of a lot stolen from him. The plaintiff gave an account of the way he became possessed of it, which, if the sheep was the defendant's, must have been willfully false. The defendant took away the sheep. The plaintiff sued him for so doing in the county court. To stop the action, the defendant indicted the plaintiff, who was acquitted. There was evidence both ways, but it appeared that the sheep really never was the defendant's, though he bona fide believed it was. The judge, assuming these facts to be true, asked the jury if the defendant had reasonable grounds for his belief. On their finding that he had, he ruled that there was reasonable and probable cause for the indictment:—Held, by Coleridge and Crompton, JJ., that the finding of the jury on that one point, in addition to the facts beyond dispute, made out a complete case of reasonable and probable cause, and therefore, that the judge was right. Erle, J. dissen- tiente. Douglas v. Corbett, 6 El. & Bl. 52 Jur., N. S. 1247

In an action for maliciously causing a plaintiff to be arrested, it appeared that he was employed to work up some timber and spars, under a contract with H., by which he was to be paid 48l., by weekly instalments during the progress of the work, and the balance on the completion of it. Before the work was completed H. assigned all his goods to the defendant and others, for the benefit of his creditors generally. At a time about 10l. remained due to the plaintiff as the value of the work done up to that time. The plaintiff went to the defendant's yard where the spars were, and asked for them, and on the defendant's foreman refusing to give them up, he took them the next morning at four o'clock a. m. His attorney then wrote to the defendant's attorney to say that he claimed a lien on the spars. The defendant demanded them back, but the plaintiff refused to give them up. The plaintiff was then taken into custody for stealing the spars on the information and complaint of the defendant. He asked the defendant why he gave him into custody; to which the defendant replied, "You had no right to take the spars away; I think you merely fetched the away to get what was your due."—Held, that there was evidence of the absence of reasonable and probable cause for the charge. Huntly v. Simon, 2 H. & N. 600; 27 L. J., Exch. 14.

A defendant in an action for maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause procuring the plaintiff to be apprehended on charge of felony, cannot rely on circumstances of mere suspicion as evidence of reasonable and probable cause for a defense to the action. Bussat v. Gibbons, 30 L. J., Exch. 75.

A robbery had been committed by A., who immediately absconded. The plaintiff, who had been a fellow-workman with A., had been heard to say that he (the plaintiff) had heard, a few hours after the robbery, that A. had absconded, and that A. had previously told him (the plaintiff) that he intended to go to Australia. A. had also been seen early in the morning after the robbery, coming down a public entry leading to the back door of the plaintiff's house. The defendant, the plaintiff's master, having been informed of these circumstances, caused the plaintiff to be apprehended and charged before magistrates with the robbery:—Held, no evidence of reasonable or probable cause, justifying the plaintiff in making the charge. Id.

Reasonable and probable cause may be shown by evidence which would make a prima facie case such as would justify a criminal charge, although it might be insufficient to convict, and although it might require confirmation by further evidence, not disclosed or discovered by the prosecutor until after he had given the plaintiff into custody. Dawson v. Vansandau, 11 W. R. 516—Q. B.

Evidence of an accomplice, that he had been tampered with by the attorney for the defense, coupled with a letter found on the erson of the attorney, after his arrest on the criminal charge, is evidence of reasonable cause for its prosecution. Ib.

Similarity of handwriting is not, per se, and without other circumstances, probable cause for preferring a charge of forgery against a person whose handwriting is like that of a forged instrument. Clements v. Ohrlly, 2 C. & K. 686—Denman.

Information received from persons apparently respectable, and believed to be credible, is sufficient evidence of reasonable and probable cause for a prosecution. Chatfield v. Comeford, 4 F. & F. 1008—Cockburn.

In an action for malicious prosecution, the charge having been for stealing a horse left with a servant to show with a view to a sale, and the horse having been bought honestly and openly:—Held, that there was no reasonable cause. Stewart v. Beaumont, 4 F. & F. 1034—Erle.

Held, also, that the facts not having been fully and fairly stated, and there being apparently some anger on the part of the prosecutor, there was evidence of malice. Ib.

The defendant, a miller, saw a number of sacks, partly covered with a tarpaulin, lying on a quay alongside a vessel: seeing his mark on one of the sacks, he cut it open, and found it contained pieces of sacks, some new and some old. He removed the tarpaulin, and saw some sacks on which was his mark, and on others it was cut away. Being informed that the sacks were about to be shipped by the plaintiff for the manufacture of paper, he laid an information before a magistrate that he had reason to suspect and did suspect, that some sacks, his property, had been stolen, and were then in the possession of the plaintiff. Thereupon the magistrate issued a warrant to search for the goods, and if they should be found, to bring them and the plaintiff before him, to be dealt with according to law. The plaintiff was accordingly apprehended, and taken before the magistrate, who dismissed the charge. In an action for maliciously causing the search warrant to be issued, and the plaintiff apprehended:—Held, first, that the magistrate was justified in issuing a warrant in that form, since the application for a search warrant involved an application to arrest. Wyatt v. White, 5 H. & N. 371; 29 L. J., Exch. 193; 8 W. R. 307.

Held, secondly, that there was no absence of reasonable and probable cause for the information, and consequently the defendant was not liable either in respect of the search warrant or arrest. Ib.

In an action for maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, charging the plaintiff with, and causing him to be apprehended on a warrant for unlawfully running away, and leaving his wife and children chargeable to a parish, it appeared that the plaintiff had left his wife and children with her father, and went, as he alleged, in search of work. The defendant, the brother of the plaintiff's wife, at her request, and with the consent of the father, who was unable to support his daughter, applied to the magistrate's clerk, and by his advice a warrant was issued, and the plaintiff apprehended, by the defendant's instructions. Before the hearing, the defendant took the plaintiff's wife to the overseer and obtained some relief, and she was taken to the workhouse, but there was some evidence that this was a colorable chargeability, and was done with a view to support the information. The justices dismissed the case, and thereupon the action was brought:—Held, that the judge was right in telling the jury that there was no reasonable or probable cause for the arrest, and that, although the defendant acted under a mistake, the jury might infer malice from his subsequently endeavoring to set up a colorable chargeability. Heath v. Heape, 1 H. & N. 478; 26 L. J., M. C. 49.

A bankrupt (who had obtained an order for protection under 12 & 18 Vict. c. 106, s. 112), at the time of his bankruptcy, was in arrear for two poor-rates, and had been assessed to a third rate, which, however, was not allowed or published until after his bankruptcy. The overseers, pending the protection, summoned him for the non-payment of the three rates; he did not attend before the justices, but returned the summons to the assistant overseer, stating in writing on it, the fact of his having a protection order, and the assistant overseer saw the messenger of the Court of Bankruptcy in possession of his goods, which were afterwards sold. The justices, on the application of the overseers, then issued a distress warrant on his goods for the amount of the three rates, which warrant was returned nulla bona, and a warrant of commitment issued, under which he was arrested and imprisoned, until released by an order of a commissioner in bankruptcy. The bankrupt then brought an action against the overseers, for maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, procuring and obtaining from the justices a warrant of commitment against him, and under that arresting and imprisoning him, and also for assaulting him, and giving him into custody:—Held, first, that there was no absence of reasonable or probable cause for assuming the Court of Bankruptcy not to have the power of protecting the bankrupt from arrest in respect of the rate made before, but not allowed till after the bankruptcy. Phillips v. Naylor, 4 H. & N. 565; 5 Jur., N. S. 966; 28 L. J., Exch. 225—Exch. Cham.

Held, secondly, that there was no absence of reasonable or probable cause for supposing that the protection order was not good against the warrant of commitment in respect of the aggregate of all the rates. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that there was no evidence of malice. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that trespass would not lie against the overseers for causing the bankrupt to be arrested under the warrant of commitment. Ib.

In an action for malicious prosecution, it appeared that the defendant's traveler applied to P. for payment, that P. showed him a receipt of the plaintiff (who had formerly been the defendant's traveler) for 20*l*., which he never accounted for; that the defendant on learning this communicated with P., who sent the receipt and re-affirmed the payment; that the defendant then consulted his attorney, and charged the plaintiff with embezzlement before a magistrate, who dismissed the charge; it also appeared that there were other cases which, if known to the defendant, would clearly have justified him in making the charge, but it was not shown whether he knew of them when he made it:—Held, that the plaintiff had failed to show the absence of reasonable and probable cause, because (per Bovill, C. J.) the facts of P.'s case showed reasonable and probable cause, or because, at all events (per Byles, J., and Brett, J.), as the plaintiff did not show the contrary, the defendant was to be assumed to have known of the other matters. Brooks v. Blain, 39 L. J., C. P. 1.

The mere fact that a report and balance-sheet prepared and published by the secretary of a public company, contain errors or misstatements, does not afford reasonable and probable cause for charging him criminally under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 84, and will be no defense to an action for malicious prosecution brought by him if he has been so charged, unless some proof be given that he made and circulated the report and balance-sheet as a willful falsehood and with a fraudulent intent. Ayres v. Elborough, 22 L. T., N. S. 106.—Blackburn.

In notions against a railway company for malicious prosecution, it appeared that there had been a disturbance and struggle at one of the company's stations, between their servants and some passengers, and that after the struggle was over and W., who had been one of such passengers, had left the station and was walking away, A., one of the company's servants, who had been engaged in such struggle, and who was a sworn constable, took W. into custody on the charge, first, of being drunk, and on the sergeant at the police station refusing to take that charge, then for assaulting A. in the discharge of his duty. During the struggle and before it was over, the plaintiff B., another of such passengers who had taken part in the struggle, was given into custody by A., and removed to the police station and there charged, in the first instance, with being drunk and refusing to quit the company's premises, and afterwards with assaulting the company's officers in the execution of their duty. The instructions issued by the company to their servants, who were sworn constables, were that they might, when on duty, take into custody any one whom they might see commit an assault at any of the stations, "and for the purpose of putting an end to any fight or affray," but that such power was to be used with extreme caution, and not if the fight or affray was at an end before they interfered. The attorney for the company appeared before the magistrates to prosecute, and both plaintiffs were committed for trial, and afterwards prosecuted by the company at the sessions, and acquitted. In order to show the absence of reasonable and probable cause, the depositions of the servants of the company before the magistrate were put in evidence, but they contained evidence of assaults upon such servants, and particularly of an assault on A. in the execution of his duty as constable. It was held, that inasmuch as, if the facts stated in the depositions of the company's servants had been communicated to the company's attorney before appearing to prosecute, and there was no evidence that they had not been so communicated, the attorney might reasonably have considered there was probable cause for the prosecution, there was no evidence of the absence of probable cause, and the onus being with the plaintiffs to show such absence, it was not for the company to show that they undertook the prosecution with a knowledge of the testimony their servants were prepared to give. Walker v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 39 L. J., C. P. 346, 5 L. R., C. P. 640; 18 W. IR. 105; 23 L. T., N. S. 14.

In an action for a malicious prosecution, although the question of reasonable and probable cause is an inference to be drawn by the judge from facts undisputed or found, yet the test is, not what impression the circumstances would make on the mind of a lawyer, but whether the circumstances warranted a discreet man in instituting and following up the proceedings. Kelly v. Midland Great Western Railway of Ireland Company, 7 Ir. R., C. L. 1.—Q. B.

The evidence in support of the plaintiff's case was, that he had been a foreman porter in the employment of a railway company, his duty being to charge for extra luggage and to give receipts for the sums received by him on that account; that he was informed by the manager of the company, in the presence of the chairman, one of the directors and the solicitor, that a passenger had accused him of having charged and received double the amount for which he had given a receipt, and was coming up from the country to swear informations against him; that he was subsequently arrested on informations sworn against him by the passenger; that he was afterwards tried, and the passenger and his wife swore to the truth of their accusation notwithstanding which, the jury acquitted him:—Held, that the plaintiff failed to show want of reasonable and probable cause, and that the judge ought to have nonsuited him or directed a verdict against him. Id.

The railway company produced the solicitor, who deposed that the passenger wrote a letter to the manager making the accusation; that the matter was put into his (the solicitor's) hands; that he had the passenger brought up from the country, took down his statement in writing, and closed it with a statement that he believed the statements were satisfactory; that he (the solicitor) believed the statement, and then directed informations to be prepared and the criminal prosecution to be proceeded with. This evi-lence having been in nowise impeached:—Held, that the judge ought to have inferred from it reasonable and probable cause, and directed a verdict for the company. Ib.

L., being entitled to the possession of premises, entered upon them, but was afterwards ejected by T. and W. He then indicted them for a forcible entry, but they were acquitted. They then brought an action against him for malicious prosecution:—Held, that the action could not be maintained, as the facts showed that L. had a right to the possession, and had actually obtained possession, and there was, therefore, reasonable and probable cause for the indictment. Lous v. Telford, 35 L. T., N. S. 69; 45 L. J., Exch. Div. 613; 1 L. R., App. Cas. 414—H. L.; reversing the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber, 31 L. T., N. S. 90.

Semle, that T. and W. had not a joint cause of action. Ib.

As to proof of malice, and of want of probable cause, and when and how the question should be left to the jury,—see this title, II., 2.

3. Termination of Suit, Prosecution or Proceedings favorably to Plaintiff.

When necessary to sustain action for malicious proceedings in actions generally.]—

An action for a malicious arrest cannot be maintained where the former cause was terminated by a stet processus, by the consent of the parties. Wilkinson v. Howel, M. & M. 495—Tenterden.

An action may be brought to recover damages for a malicious arrest, where the suit is terminated by a rule of court; and that rule is evidence of the termination of the suit. Brook v. Carpenter, 3 Bing. 297; 11 Moore, 59.

Where a cause (in which the defendant has been arrested) is referred to arbitration, and the award is given in favor of the defendant, he cannot, on that ground, maintain an action against the plaintiff for a malicious arrest. Habershon v. Crosby, Peake Add. Cus. 181; 3 Esp. 33—Kenyon.

In an action for abusing the process of the court, in order illegally to compel a party to give up his property, it is not necessary to prove that the action in which the process was improperly employed has been determined, or to aver that the process was sued out without reasonable or proper cause. Granger v. Hill, 3 Scott, 561; 4 Bing. N. C. 212; 2 Jur. 235; 1 Arn. 43.

An action lies for maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, arresting the plaintiff, and detaining him until discharged by a judge's order, pending a former suit by the defendant for the same cause of action, in which the plaintiff had been arrested and discharged out of custody by reason of the defendant's delay in declaring. Heywood v. Collinge, 9 A. & E. 268; 1 P. & D. 202; 1 W. & H. 703; 2 Jur. 1033.

To such action it is no defense that the second suit is still pending. Ib.

A declaration stated that the defendants (the one, A., acting as attorney for B., the other) recovered a judgment against the plaintiff for 30*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.*, that the plaintiff paid and satisfied to B. the debt recovered by such judgment, except 15*s.* 8*d.*, and that they sued out a ca. sa. upon the judgment, and wrongfully and maliciously, and without any reasonable or probable cause, indorsed the writ with directions to levy 5*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.*, and interest, and 1*l.* 7*s.* for the costs of execution; that the plaintiff tendered and offered to pay to the defendants 3*l.* 8*s.*, which was sufficient to pay and discharge all that was recoverable against the plaintiff upon the judgment and writ, together with the costs of the writ of execution, and all other legal and incidental expenses; and that they wrongfully and maliciously, and without any reasonable or probable cause, procured the sheriff to arrest the plaintiff, and detain him until he paid 7*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*, whereas the sum of 3*l.* 8*s.* and no more was due and owing from and recoverable against the plaintiff upon the judgment:—Held, that the declaration disclosed a good cause of action, and that it was not necessary to allege that the plaintiff had obtained his discharge by order of the court, or a judge, so as to show that the proceedings had terminated in his favor. Gilding v. Eyre, 10 C. B., N. S. 592; 9 W. R. 946; 5 L. T., N. S. 136; 31 L. J., C. P. 174.

A declaration stated that A. issued against B. a writ of summons, specially indorsed, for 28*l.*; that B. paid A. 10*l.* on account; that A. afterwards, maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, signed judgment for default of appearance, for 28*l.*, and arrested B. under a ca. sa. for that amount, and compelled him, in order to obtain his discharge, to pay 30*l.*:—Held, that the action was not maintainable, inasmuch as the judgment operated as an estoppel, and precluded the plaintiff from averring that the sum of 28*l.* was not due. Huffer v. Allen, 4 H. & C. 634; 36 L. J., Exch. 17.

The proper course would have been to apply to the court or a judge to reduce the judgment to the amount actually due. Ib.

In a declaration for maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause issuing out of the mayor's court, London, an attachment of a debt owing from third persons to the plaintiff, it must appear that the action in which the attachment issued was terminated. Parton v. Hill, 12 W. R. 753; 10 L. T., N. S. 414—Q. B.

A plaintiff, to recover in an action for the malicious issue of process, must have had judgment in his favor in that process. Taylor v. Ford, 23 W. R. 47; 29 L. T., N. S. 392—Q. B.

—for malicious criminal prosecution.]—An action for malicious prosecution cannot be maintained till the prosecution is terminated, which must appear upon the declaration. Fisher v. Bristol, 1 Dougl. 215.

A declaration in an action for a malicious prosecution for felony, must state that the prosecution is at an end; and alleging that the plaintiff was discharged from his imprisonment is not sufficient. Morgan v. Hughes, 2 T. R. 235.

If it alleges that he was discharged by the grand jury not finding the bill, it will show a legal end to the prosecution. Id.

An action lies for a malicious prosecution, though the plaintiff is acquitted on a defect in the indictment. Wicks v. Fentham, 4 T. R. 247.

So, for the malicious prosecution of a bad indictment for perjury. Pippet v. Hearn, 1 D. & R. 266; 5 B. & A. 634.

If a party is indicted for a felony, though he is acquitted without calling witnesses, he cannot maintain an action for a malicious prosecution, if his acquittal was the result of deliberation, and the evidence was sufficient to cause the jury to pause. Smith v. MacDonald, 3 Esp. 7—Kenyon.

The principle that in an action for maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause setting the law in motion to the damage of the plaintiff, it is essential to show that the proceeding alleged to be instituted maliciously, and without reasonable and probable cause, has terminated in favor of the plaintiff, if from its nature it is capable of such a termination, applies where an action is brought for falsely and fraudulently causing a proceeding to be taken in a foreign court to the damage of the plaintiff. Castrique v. Behrens, 3 El. & El. 709; 30 L. J., Q. B. 163; 7 Jur., N. S. 1028.

The rule, that in an action for a malicious prosecution the plaintiff is bound to show a termination of the proceedings in his favor, does not apply where the proceedings, in respect of which the action is brought, are ex parte, and must of necessity terminate unfavorably to the plaintiff; as where the defendant maliciously exhibits articles or demands sureties of the peace against the plaintiff, in which cases the latter has no opportunity of controverting the oath of the defendant. Stewart v. Gromett, 29 L. J., C. P. 170; 7 C. B., N. S. 101; 6 Jur., N. S. 776.

A person convicted of a trespass under the Game Act, 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, underwent the sentence of imprisonment under that conviction, and did not appeal against it:—Held, that that conviction was an answer to an action against the informer for a malicious prosecution. Mellor v. Bauldeley, 2 C. & M. 675; 4 Tyr. 902; 6 C. & P. 374.

Quære, whether an action is maintainable against a justice of the peace for willfully and maliciously, and without reasonable and probable cause, convicting a person in a penalty in a matter in which the justice has jurisdiction, and which penalty is paid, but the conviction has been subsequently quashed? Gelen or Gelen v. Hall, 2 H. & N. 379; 27 L. J., M. C. 78.

An action for a malicious prosecution will not lie if the proceeding complained of terminated in the conviction of the plaintiff, which has not been quashed; and it makes no difference that there is no appeal from such conviction. Daniels v. Matthews, 36 L. J., M. C. 93; 2 L. R., C. P. 684; 15 W. R. 839; 1 L. T., N. S. 417.

—for malicious proceedings in bankruptcy.

—It must be averred and proved, if traversed, that the commission was superseded before the commencement of the action; and if the fact is not proved, the plaintiff ought to be nonsuited, though it was not averred in the declaration, and though the defendant might have demurred for the omission, but not done so. Whitworth v. Hall, 2 D. & A. 695.

It is not sufficient to prove merely that the commission was superseded, as a superseded commission may proceed upon strict legal grounds, and does not, therefore, furnish evidence of its want of probable cause. Huy v. Weakley, C. & P. 261—Tindal.

A declaration, for maliciously suing out a fiat in bankruptcy, contained an allegation that it was ordered by the Court of Review "that the fiat should be annulled, and the same was accordingly annulled, and the proceedings on the fiat were thereupon ended and determined." The order of the Court of Review was, that the fiat "be annulled, if the Right Hon. the Lord Chancellor shall think fit;" and at the foot of it was a confirmation of it, signed by the Lord Chancellor—Held, that the allegation was substantially proved. Kemp v. King, Car. & M. 396—Denman.

As to evidence of termination of the former proceedings,—see this title, II, 3.

4. Parties Liable.

Against whom action lies, generally.] In an action for malicious prosecution against A. and B., if it appears that both A. and B. entered into a joint recognizance to prosecute and give evidence; but that A. only employed the attorney, and that B. attended before the magistrate and the grand jury at the request of the attorney, the judge will direct the acquittal of B. Eagar v. Dyott, 5 C. & P. 1—Tenterden.

A declaration for maliciously indicting, and procuring the plaintiff to be indicted, is sustained, although it appears that the defendant preferred the indictment unwillingly, and solely because he was bound over to do so, if it appears that he was himself the cause of his being bound over by originally making a malicious charge before the magistrate. Dubois v. Keates, 3 P. & D. 303; 4 Jur. 148; 11 A. & E. 329.

A rule for a criminal information obtained by the plaintiff in an action for the malicious prosecution of an indictment, and made absolute, is no bar to such action, although the indictment was against the plaintiff and another person. Caddy v. Barlow, 1 M. & R. 275.

In an action against parish officers, for maliciously taking the plaintiff before a magistrate, and procuring him to be convicted of in act of vagrancy, and imprisoned and kept to hard labor, the conviction being afterwards quashed, it is not necessary that the convicting magistrate should be made a defendant. Simpkin v. French, 12 Price, 394.

If A., in the name of B., prosecutes an action against C. maliciously, and without reasonable and probable cause, C. has no action against A. unless he has thereby sustained legal damage. Cotterell v. Jones, 11 C. B. 713; 16 Jur. 88; 21 L. J., C. P. 2.

If C. has thereby sustained legal damage, an action lies. Ib.

In an action in a county court, A., by means of perjured evidence, led the judge to believe that B., also a witness in the court on the same decision, had committed perjury; whereupon the judge directed that B. should be indicted, and bound over A. to prosecute him at the assizes, where B. was acquitted:—Held, that an action for malicious prosecution lay against A., at the suit of B. Fitzjohn v. Mackinder, 9 C. B., N. S. 505; 7 Jur., N. S. 1283; 30 L. J., C. P. 257; 9 W. R. 477; 4 L. T., N. S. 149—Exch. Cham.

In an action for malicious prosecution, a person is liable who gives evidence in support of the charge, and who represents himself as preferring it, although it is preferred at some other persons' expense, and such other persons have told him that he shall be a witness only, and they employ the counsel and solicitor; and if it is shown, that, during the examination on the charge, such person is, in his hearing, repeatedly alluded to as prosecutor, and does not deny that character, that is evidence from which a jury may infer that he represented himself as the person preferring the charge. Clements v. Ohrlly, 2 C. & K. 686—Denman.

An action cannot be maintained against a third person on the ground that he was a mover of and had an interest in a suit, in the absence of malice and want of probable cause. Ram Coomar Coondoo v. Chander Canto Mookerjee, 2 L. R., App. Cas. 186—P. C.

Married women.]—A married woman is liable to be taken in execution under a ca. sa. issued upon a judgment for the defendant in an action for libel brought by her husband, in which she is joined; and therefore an action will not lie by husband and wife against the defendant for maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause suing out a ca. sa. against the wife upon the judgment in the action of libel. Newton v. Boodle, 9 Q. B. 948; 11 Jur. 628.

Corporations; public companies.]—An incorporated railway company is not liable for a malicious prosecution, in respect of a criminal proceeding instituted by their servant without their knowledge or direction. Stevens v. Midland Counties Railway Company, 2 C. L. R. 1300; 10 Exch. 352; 18 Jur. 932; 23 L. J., Exch. 328.

A man was arrested on a warrant issued on the sworn information of an officer employed by a railway company on a charge of theft; he was taken before a magistrate and remanded for a week at the request of an attorney employed by the company, and was ultimately discharged. At the trial of an action for malicious prosecution against the railway company, he denied that he was guilty of the theft, and the judge nonsuited:—Held (per Kelly, C. B., and Cleasby, B.), that the nonsuit was wrong; but per Bramwell, B., that the nonsuit was right; and that no action for malicious prosecution will lie against a railway company, for a corporation aggregate is in law incapable of acting maliciously. Henderson v. Midland Railway Company, 20 W. R. 23; 25 L. T., N. S. 881—Exch.

II. PROCEDURE.

1. Pleading.

Declarations in actions for malicious civil proceedings.]—In an action for malicious arrest, the declaration is bad after verdict, for stating that the defendant "wrongfully and injuriously" procured the writ to issue, and caused the plaintiff to be arrested, without the addition of the word "maliciously." Saxon v. Castle, 1 N. & P. 661; 6 A. & E. 652; W. W. & D. 305.

A declaration alleged that the defendant arrested the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff had been detained in custody until he was discharged by reason of the defendant's not having declared against him; that the defendant might have procured judgment in that suit if he had thought fit, but that he afterwards, without any reasonable or probable cause, maliciously arrested him a second time for the same cause of action, without the leave of any judge of the court:—Held, that the declaration was good, as it must be taken that the second arrest was maliciously made by the defendant without the contemplation of any benefit to himself. Heywood v. Collinge, 1 P. & D. 202; 9 A. & E. 268; 1 W., W. & H. 702; 2 Jur. 1038.

A declaration stated that plaintiff being indebted to H. L., in 36l., H. L., by the defendant, as his attorney, for the recovery thereof, sued out a writ of summons, and declared against the plaintiff; that afterwards the plaintiff presented a petition to the court of Bankruptcy, and obtained an order for protection from process, whereof the defendant had notice; yet the defendant, well knowing that he was protected from process, but willfully and maliciously intending to injure him, procured a judgment to be signed against him in the action, and willfully and maliciously sued out a testatum ca. sa., under which the sheriff arrested the plaintiff:—Held, that the declaration was bad, in omitting to state that the defendant arrested the plaintiff without reasonable or probable cause. Rout or Roret v. Lewis, 5 D. & L. 371; 17 L. J., Exch. 98.

A count, alleging that the defendant caused the plaintiff to be arrested and imprisoned without reasonable or probable cause, on a false and malicious charge of felony, is a count in trespass for an assault and false imprisonment, and not an informal count for a malicious prosecution; and therefore requires no evidence of malice, or want of reasonable and probable cause. Brundt v. Craddock, 27 L. J., Exch. 315.

A declaration alleged, that defendant, not having reasonable or probable cause to believe that the plaintiff was about to quit England, falsely and maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, caused and procured a judge to make an order for a capias against the plaintiff, indorsed to hold him to bail for a sum exceeding 20*l*.; and that the defendant, by color of that order, sued out a capias, and caused the plaintiff to be arrested and kept in custody until he gave bail to procure his release. The declaration averred that defendant never had, nor was there at any time any reasonable or probable cause for believing that the plaintiff was about to quit England, nor had he any such intention; and that the order for the capias was afterwards rescinded, and the capias set aside:—Held, that, although this declaration would have been bad on special demurrer, for not setting out what the false evidence was on which the order had been obtained, it was good after verdict, as the allegation that the defendant falsely procured an order must be understood with reference to the context, as meaning that he procured an order by false evidence or by means of falsehood; and the allegation as to the defendant not having had reasonable or probable cause for supposing that plaintiff was about to quit the country might be rejected as surplusage. Daniels v. Fielding, 16 M. & W. 200; 4 D. & L. 329; 10 Jur. 1061; 16 L. J., Exch. 153.

A declaration alleging that the defendant, not having any reasonable or probable cause of action against the plaintiff, or for causing him to be arrested, wrongfully, falsely, maliciously, and vexatiously procured an order for the arrest of the plaintiff, and caused him to be arrested on a capias issued thereupon, was bad on special demurrer, before 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, for not showing the false charge or statement by which the judge was induced to make the order. Bryant v. Bobbett, 11 Jur. 1020—Exch.

A declaration stated that the defendant, not having any reasonable or probable cause of action against the plaintiff, to the amount for which he maliciously caused the plaintiff to be arrested, falsely, maliciously, and unjustly procured from a judge an order for a capias, by falsely and maliciously representing to the judge that the plaintiff was justly and truly indebted to the defendant in a certain sum, by means of a false affidavit shown and uttered by the defendant before the judge, thereupon maliciously caused a capias to be issued, and without any reasonable or probable cause of action, caused the plaintiff to be arrested:—Held, that the declaration was sufficient, and that it need not more particularly set out the false statement, by which the judge was induced to make the order, or show that the facts were false within the defendant's knowledge, or that he had not reasonable or probable cause for believing them to be true. Boss v. Noonan, 5 Exch. 359; 1 L. M. & P. 409, 19 L. J., Exch. 22.

A declaration, in an action by an executor debtor against his creditor for maliciously, without reasonable or probable cause, arresting the plaintiff for more than was due on the judgment, alleged as damage that the plaintiff was always, during his detention, able and willing, and offered, to pay, and was finally discharged from imprisonment by paying the smaller sum, and that by reason of the premises he was put to costs and expenses in and about his maintenance during his detention, and in and about obtaining his discharge:—Held, that the declaration sufficiently showed special damage resulting to the plaintiff from the arrest inasmuch as to entitle him to a verdict he must show, not merely that he was arrested and detained for a greater amount than was due, however improperly indorsed, but also that, by reason of the arrest and detention for the larger sum, his imprisonment was prolonged, or the expense of obtaining his discharge increased. Jennings v. Florence, 3 C. B., N. S. 407; 3 Jur., N. S. 774, 28 L. J., C. P. 277.

An allegation that the defendant maliciously caused the plaintiff to be arrested, and to be detained in prison, until, in order to procure his release, he was forced to procure bail, is not a divisible allegation; and if there was a giving of bail proved, but no evidence of any arrest, it is not sufficient. Berry v. Adamson, 6 B. & C. 528, 9 D. & R. 558; 2 C. & P. 500.

But on an averment in an action for a malicious arrest, that the defendant detained the plaintiff until he found bail, if some detention is proved, it is sufficient to support the action, although no bail was put in. Bratton v. Heywood, 1 Stark. 48; 4 Camp. 213—Ellenborough.

A declaration for maliciously setting in motion a court of competent jurisdiction is not bad, because it does not aver that the proceedings terminated in favor of the plaintiff. Redway v. McAndrew, 9 L. R., Q. B. 74, 29 W. R. 60; 29 L. T., N. S. 421—Q. B.

A declaration alleged that the defendant maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause caused the plaintiff's ship to be arrested for necessaries supplied by H., under a warrant from a county court, and to be detained until the proceedings in the court were determined and the ship released. Held, that it appeared by reasonable intendment that the proceedings were determined in the plaintiff's favor, and that the declaration was therefore good. Id.

A declaration stated that the defendant, maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause, caused to be issued out of the court of Exchequer a writ, on which an inquisition was held, and the debt deposited to by the defendant was found to be due from the plaintiff to the crown; that afterwards the defendant, maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause, caused to be sued out a writ of extent against the plaintiff, directed to the sheriff, who levied thereupon and held the goods until the writ of extent was superseded by the court. Plea, that the writ of superseas was issued as matter of grace and favor of the crown:—Held, first, that the causing the writ of extent to be sued out was the gist of the action, and that the declaration was sufficient, inasmuch as it showed the discharge of that writ; and, secondly, that the plea was bad. Craig v. Hasel, 3 G. & D. 200; 4 Q. B. 481; 7 Jur. 368; 12 L. J., Q. B. 181.

— for malicious indictments and other criminal proceedings.—It is necessary to state in a declaration every allegation proper to support the action; namely, that the defendant falsely, maliciously, and without any reasonable or probable cause, caused the plaintiff to be indicted, and to state the trial and acquittal. Carman v. Truman, 1 Bro. P. C. 101.

A declaration for maliciously indicting at the general quarter sessions, instead of general sessions, is good; the word "quarter" being only surplusage. Bushby v. Watson, 2 W. Bl. 1050.

After verdict, in an action for a malicious prosecution for perjury, it is no objection to the description of the court in which the indictment was found, that the names of the justices before whom the session of oyer and terminer was held, are not set out; and it will be sufficient to allege, that at such a session the defendant maliciously indicted the plaintiff for willful and corrupt perjury, without describing more particularly the circumstances under which the alleged perjury was supposed to have been committed. Pippet v. Hearn, 1 D. & R. 266; 5 B. & A. 634.

In an action against parish officers, for maliciously taking the plaintiff before a magistrate, and procuring him to be convicted of an act of vagrancy, and imprisoned and kept to hard labor, the conviction being afterwards quashed, it was averred in the declaration, that the conviction was quashed on the 22d day of April, at the general quarter sessions of the peace; and the proof by the order for quashing the conviction showed that it was not a general but an adjourned session: the variance was held not to be such as to furnish a ground for setting aside the verdict. Simpkin v. French, 12 Price, 394.

In a declaration for a malicious prosecution, it is not necessary to state that there was an information. It is sufficient to state that the defendant procured a warrant to be issued; but if the declaration states that the defendant made information on oath, and that upon that information the magistrate granted the warrant, the information must be proved, and a recital of it in the warrant is not sufficient. Gregory v. Derby, 8 C. & P. 749—Patteson v. Stevens, 8 C. & P. 749—Stevens v. Clark, Car. & M. 500—Cresswell.

In an action for a malicious prosecution, in which the plaintiff charges the defendant with having imposed on him the crime of felony, by reason of which he was imprisoned; and on production of the information before the justice there is no charge of felony, though the warrant was to arrest the plaintiff for felony; the evidence does not support the declaration. Leigh v. Webb, 3 Esp. 165—Eldon.

A count was for causing and procuring a false and malicious charge to be made against the plaintiff before a magistrate, and proceedings to be taken thereon without any reasonable or probable cause. The defendant pleaded, that he caused and procured, &c., "upon and with a reasonable and probable cause," and alleged the several facts attending the transaction out of which the charge before the magistrate arose. To this plaintiff demurred specially, on the ground that the plea contained no allegation that the defendant, at the time he caused the charge to be made, had been informed of, or knew, or in any manner acted upon those facts and circumstances:—Held, bad, it being consistent with this plea that the charge was made upon some ground altogether independent of the facts stated; and that the knowledge of what was sufficient to induce any reasonable person to believe the truth of the charge before he put the law in motion, did not exist in the defendant's mind at the time the charge was made. Delegat v. Hingley, 3 Bing. N. C. 950; 5 Scott, 154; 3 Hodges, 158.

To an action for falsely, maliciously, and without any reasonable or probable cause, charging the plaintiff with larceny, before a justice of the peace, indicting the plaintiff, and causing him to be tried on such charge, on which he was afterwards acquitted; the defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff brought a former action against the defendant for assaulting and imprisoning him on a false assertion that he had committed felony; that to that action the defendant pleaded not guilty, and a justification of the assertion, and imprisonment in consequence thereof; on trial of which action, the judge directed the jury to take into their consideration the question whether the defendant had charged and accused the plaintiff with having stolen the goods mentioned in the declaration, and falsely and maliciously, and without any reasonable or probable cause, committed the grievances complained of in the present action; that the jury found for the plaintiff, and assessed damages accordingly, and that the plaintiff recovered judgment for the same, with costs; averring the identity of the imprisonments in the two actions, and that the grievances complained of were the same with those in respect of which damages had been given on the former occasion:—Held, first, that this plea was no answer to the action. Guest v. Warren, 9 Exch. 379; 2 C. L. R. 979; 18 Jur. 133; 23 L. J., Exch. 121.

Held, secondly, that the judge misdirected

the jury on the trial of the former action. Ib.

A count alleged that the defendant, a justice of the peace, unlawfully and maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, took the information of A. against the plaintiff, and wrongfully, willfully, maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, as the defendant well knew, convicted the plaintiff, and he was thereby compelled to pay a sum of money, and that upon appeal to the quarter sessions the conviction was afterwards quashed. A verdict having been found for the plaintiff, the court refused to arrest the judgment. Gelen v. Hall, 2 H. & N. 870.

A declaration stated, that the defendant, intending to injure the plaintiff in his good name, and to cause his dwelling-house to be searched for stolen goods, and to procure him to be imprisoned, went before a magistrate, and falsely, maliciously, and without probable cause, charged that certain goods of his had been feloniously stolen, and that he suspected that the goods were concealed in the plaintiff's dwelling-house; and, upon such charge, the defendant procured the magistrate to grant a warrant, authorizing a constable, with necessary assistance, to enter the plaintiff's house, to search for the goods; and the defendant, with other persons, caused and procured the dwelling-house to be searched and rummaged for the goods by such persons, and the door of such house, and a pantry there, to be broken to pieces, and the plaintiff and his family to be disturbed in the possession, and his goods to be carried away:—Held, that the acts of violence alleged to have been committed in the house appeared sufficiently by the declaration to have been acts done in pursuance of the warrant, and in consequence of the charge made by the defendant, and that they were stated as mere matter of aggravation; and, consequently, that the whole count containing this statement was in case. Hensworth v. Fowler, 4 B. & Ad. 449.

Plea.—In actions for torts the plea of not guilty shall operate as a denial only of the breach of duty or wrongful act alleged to have been committed by the defendant, and not of the facts stated in the indictment, and no other defense than such denial shall be admissible under that plea; all other pleas in denial shall take issue on some particular matter of fact alleged in the declaration: e.g., in an action for a nuisance to the occupation of a house by carrying on an offensive trade, the plea of not guilty will operate as a denial only that the defendant carried on the alleged trade in such a way as to be a nuisance to the occupation of the house, and will not operate as a denial of the plaintiff's occupation of the house. Reg. Gen., Q. B., C. P. and Exch., T. T., 16 Vict. r. 61; 1 El. & Bl., App. lxxxi.

In an action for a malicious prosecution, the court will not permit a defendant to plead that he had probable cause in indict. together with not guilty. Cotton v. Brown, 4 N. & M. 831; 3 A. & E. 312.

The plea of not guilty to an action for a malicious prosecution, puts in issue the fact of prosecution, and the want of probable cause. Ib.

In an action for maliciously, and without probable cause, refusing to accept debt and costs from a prisoner, evidence of probable cause may be given under not guilty. Hounsfield v. Drury, 3 P. & D. 127; 11 A. & E. 95; 4 Jur. 24.

In an action for maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, procuring the plaintiff to be outlawed, assigning for special damage that the plaintiff was put to costs, and about reversing the outlawry, under the plea of not guilty, the reversal of the outlawry is not put in issue. Drummond v. Phipps, 7 C. & P. 228; 2 Bing. N. C. 114; 1 Hodges, 190.

In an action for a malicious arrest, the declaration averred that the defendant did not prosecute his suit, but voluntarily suffered the same to be discontinued for want of prosecution, and that it was discontinued:—Held, that the plea of not guilty in such a case merely put in issue the wrongful act, viz., the malicious arrest, without probable cause, and not the discontinuance. Watkins v. Lee, 5 M. & W. 270; 7 D. P. C. 498; 3 Jur. 484.

On the trial of an action for a malicious prosecution for perjury, not guilty does not put in issue the determination of the prosecution. Wren v. Heatop, 12 Q. B. 267; 12 Jur. 600; 17 L. J., Q. B. 818.

In an action for maliciously suing out a fiat in bankruptcy, the allegation in the declaration, as to the annulling of the fiat, is not put in issue by not guilty. Atkinson v. Raleigh, 2 G. & D. 611; 3 Q. B. 79; 6 Jur. 731. See Kemp v. King, Car. & M. 396.

In an action by assignees of C., a bankrupt, the declaration stated, that before the bankruptcy C. executed to the defendant a warrant of attorney, subject to a defeasance stating that it was given to secure the payment to the defendant of 25*l.* 17*s.*, balance of account, and of any other sums which he might be called on to pay under guaranty for C.; and alleged, that, although at the time of executing the warrant of attorney, the defendant had not entered into any guaranty for C.; nor ever became liable to any sum of money on his behalf, and although, at the time of executing the warrant of attorney, a small sum of money, and no more, was due from C. to the defendant on the warrant of attorney and defeasance, and it was the defendant's duty to issue execution for that sum only, being such balance as aforesaid, with interest, and no more, yet, he wrongfully caused a fiat to be issued, founded upon the judgment entered upon the warrant of attorney, indorsed to levy 103*l.* 10*s.* for debt, costs, &c., under which the goods of C. of value sufficient to satisfy that sum were seized and sold, before the bankruptcy, and thereby wholly lost to his assignees. The defendant pleaded not guilty, and that, after the time of executing the warrant of attorney, and before the execution, 100*l.* was due from C. to the defendant upon the warrant of attorney and defence, in addition to the balance of account in the declaration mentioned, on which issues were joined:—Held, that, on these pleadings, it was incumbent on the plaintiffs, in order to recover in the action, to prove that no more was due to the defendant than 23*l.* 17*s.*, the balance of account mentioned in the declaration. Gough v. Cribb, 11 M. & W. 497.

A plaintiff gave the defendants a warrant of attorney to enter up judgment, if certain costs should be unpaid within four days after the master should have taxed the same; the defendants procured a taxation ex parte, and by an incorrect representation to the master, obtained from him an allocatur for more costs than they were entitled to. By order of a judge, a new taxation was directed, pending which the defendants arrested the plaintiff; afterwards the new taxation was had, and the costs were reduced. The plaintiff declared for a wrongful arrest, and the defendants pleaded that the costs had been taxed, and a sum found due, for which they arrested:—Held, first, that the plaintiff might properly sue for a malicious arrest, and was not bound to declare for a deceitful representation to the master; secondly, that the plea was not supported, there having been, in effect, no taxation when the defendants arrested; and that the plaintiff was not bound to reply the facts specially which rendered the first taxation invalid. Saxton v. Castle, 6 A. & E. 652; 1 N. & P. 661.

When, in an action for maliciously giving the plaintiff into custody and for slander, the defendant pleaded to the latter cause of action a plea in justification, which would have been no answer to the former, and at the trial the plaintiff failed to prove the slander:—Held, that the jury ought to disregard this plea in considering the former cause of action. Brooke v. Avrillon, 42 L. J., C. P. 126; 21 W. R. 594.

2. Proof of Malice, and of Want of Probable and Reasonable Cause; when the Question is one of Law or of Fact; and how determined.

Burden of proof; and admissibility and sufficiency of evidence, generally.—The first action being non-prossed, is not of itself evidence of malice. Sinclair v. Eldred, 4 Taunt. 7.

It lies on the plaintiff to give evidence of malice in the defendant, either express, or to be collected from circumstances, showing plainly the want of probable cause; and the malice is not to be implied from the mere proof of the plaintiff's acquittal for want of the prosecutor's appearing when called. Purcell v. Macnamara, 9 East, 361; 1 Camp. 199.

In an action by A. for the malicious prosecution by C. of an indictment against A. and B., evidence of the misconduct of C. towards B., after his apprehension, tending to show the bad motives of C., is admissible. Cuddy v. Barlow, 1 M. & R. 275.

Where the defendant gives evidence of probable cause, a witness may be asked whether the plaintiff was not a man of notoriously bad character. Rodriguez v. Tadmire, 2 Esp. 721—Kenyon.

In an action for maliciously procuring the plaintiff to be arrested on a charge of larceny, the defendant cannot give evidence to show that the plaintiff's character was suspicious, and that his house had been searched on former occasions. Newsam v. Carr, 2 Stark. 69—Wood.

The opinion of the jury on a former trial is not material. Libbert v. Charles, 2 F. & F. 126—Keating.

A declaration, alleging that the defendant maliciously and without probable cause preferred an indictment against the plaintiff for perjury, is supported by proof that some of the assignments of perjury in the indictment, which was set out at length in the declaration, were preferred without probable cause. Ellis v. Abraham, 8 Q. B. 709; 10 Jur. 593; 15 L. J., Q. B. 221.

The plaintiff's counsel stated, that he should offer no evidence as to the transactions to which the other assignments of perjury related:—Held, that the defendant was not at liberty to give evidence to show that there was probable cause for those other assignments of perjury. Id.

On the trial of an action for a malicious prosecution for perjury, in making a charge against the defendant before a magistrate, evidence of what the magistrate said in his hearing on disposing of the charge is admissible, for the purpose of showing the existence of reasonable and probable cause. Edden v. Thorniloe, 6 Jur. 265—N. P. C.—Patteson.

In an action for maliciously indicting the plaintiff, the observations made by the judge on the trial of the indictment are not evidence for him. Barker v. Angell, 2 M. & Rob. 371—Denman. See contra, Warne v. Terry, Rosc. Evid. 409, 7th edit.—Littledale.

The plaintiff cannot give in evidence what the magistrate said on his discharge, as, if unfavorable to the plaintiff, he had no power of replying to it. Wetzlar v. Zachariah, 16 L. T., N. S. 432—Mellor.

The plaintiff is to give prima facie evidence of want of probable cause, which the defendant may rebut, if he can, by showing the existence of probable cause. The defendant presented two bills for perjury against the plaintiff, but did not appear himself before the grand jury, and the bills were ignored. He presented a third, and on his own testimony the bill was found. This prosecution he kept suspended for three years, till the plaintiff taking the record down to trial, the defendant declining to appear as a witness, although in court, and called on, plaintiff was acquitted:—Held, sufficient prima facie evidence of want of probable cause. Taylor v.

Willans, 2 B. & Ad. 845; S. C. nom Willans v. Taylor, 6 Bing. 183; 3 M. & P. 250, affirmed.

The disbelief of the party making a charge before a magistrate is some evidence of want of probable cause, notwithstanding other evidence may have shown that there was prima facie probable cause for making the charge. Broad v. Ham or Howe, 5 Bing. N. C. 722; 8 Scott, 40.

Evidence of facts upon which the act of bankruptcy was probably proved, but which facts do not amount to an act of bankruptcy, is sufficient to call upon the defendant to prove the affirmative of probable cause. Cotton v. James, 1 B. & Ad. 128.

The adjudication of the commissioners does not in itself negative the want of probable cause. Id.

As to what constitutes malice, and what facts show absence of probable and reasonable cause,—see this title, L, 2.

When malice may be inferred from absence of probable cause.—In an action for a malicious arrest, the jury may imply malice from the absence of reasonable or probable cause. But this is an inference not of law but of fact, which the jury is not bound to draw. Mitchell v. Jenkins, 2 N. & M. 301; 5 B. & Ad. 588.

Presenting to the jury the absence of such cause as conclusive evidence of legal malice is a misdirection. Id.

A. having by his laches lost all right of action on a note indorsed by B., arrested D., and afterwards discontinued the action;—Held, that these circumstances did not of themselves so exclude all probable cause as to afford a presumption of malice. Bristow v. Heywood, 1 Stark 49; 4 Camp. 213—Ellenborough.

There is a material distinction, as to the liability for a malicious prosecution, between the institution of the prosecution and its continuance after it has been already instituted, without authority by an agent. And the absence of reasonable and probable cause, which might be evidence of malice in the one case, will not be so in the other. Weston v. Beeman, 27 L. J., Exch. 57.

Where the party put in possession under a bill of sale issued a summons against the assignor for feloniously stealing some of the chattels assigned, and the assignees attended the hearing, and allowed the case to be opened on their behalf as prosecutors;—Held, that the absence of reasonable and probable cause would not be evidence of malice as against them. Id.

Questions of law and of fact; and functions of the judge and the jury, in general.—The question of probable cause is a mixed proposition of law and fact; whether the circumstances alleged are true or not, is a question of fact for the jury; whether they amount to probable cause, is a question of law. Johnstone v. Sutton, 1 T. R. 545; 1 Bro. P. C. 70. And see Crawell v. London, 1 T. R. 520, n.

The existence of reasonable or probable cause is to be decided by the judge, and is a question for him and not for the jury. Bast v. Gibbons, 80 L. J., Exch. 75.

In an action for a malicious prosecution, the question, whether there is or is not reasonable or probable cause, may be entirely for the judge or for the jury, according to the evidence in each particular case. James v. Phelps, 11 A. & E. 483.

In an action for a malicious prosecution, though in it the question of reasonable or probable cause depends not upon few and simple facts, but upon facts which are numerous and complicated, and upon numerous and complicated inferences to be drawn therefrom, it is the duty of the judge to inform the jury, if they find the facts to be proved, and the inferences to be warranted by such facts, that the same do or do not amount to reasonable or probable cause, so as thereby to leave the question of fact to the jury, and the abstract question of law to the judge. Panton v. Williams, 1 G. & D. 504; 2 Q. B. 169—Exch. Cham.

Though the question of reasonable and probable cause is to be determined on facts, the existence of which, in cases of doubt, can only be properly decided by the jury, yet it is not necessary for the judge, where there is a variety of facts, to leave each fact specifically to the jury, but to decide, on a general view of the circumstances, whether there is or is not reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution. Rowlands v. Simuel, 11 Q. B. 39, 17 L. J., Q. B. 65.

The facts material to the question of probable cause must be found by the jury, and the judge is then to decide, as a point of law, whether the facts so found establish probable cause or want of it. Turner v. Ambler, 10 Q. B. 252; 6 Jur. 246, 11 L. J., Q. B. 158.

Among these facts are the defendant's knowledge of the alleged ground of accusation at the time when he prosecuted, and his belief at the time that the conduct forming such ground of accusation amounted to the offense charged. Id.

If the defendant did not so believe, the want of reasonable and probable cause is established, though the imputed offense appear prima facie to have been committed by the plaintiff, and the fact to have been known to the defendant before the charge was made. Id.

The absence of belief must be proved by the plaintiff; and if it be not proved, the defect is not supplied (for the purpose of showing probable cause) by evidence that the defendant made use of the charge as a means of obtaining an unfair advantage over the plaintiff. Id.

In an action for a malicious prosecution, the question of reasonable and probable cause is for the judge to determine; but before he can determine such question, the jury must find the facts. Chapman v. Hudson (an error), 2 C. L. R. 149; 18 Jur. 248, 23 L. J., Q. B. 40—Exch. Cham., affirming judgment of Queen's Bench, nom. Haddrick v. Heslop, 12 Q. B. 267; 12 Jur. 600; 17 L. J., Q. B. 313.

It is a rule of law that the jury must find the facts on which the question of reasonable and probable cause depends, but that the judge must then determine whether the facts found do constitute reasonable and probable cause. No definite rule can be laid down for the exercise of the judge's judgment. Lister v. Perryman, 39 L. J., Exch. 177; 4 L. R., H. L. Cas. 521; 19 W. R. 9; 23 L. T., N. S. 269; reversing judgments of Exchequer and Exchequer Chamber, nom. Perryman v. Lister, 3 L. R., Exch. 197; 37 L. J., Exch. 166; 18 L. T., N. S. 574.

Instructions to jury, in particular cases of malicious arrests in actions.—In an action for maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause causing the plaintiff to be arrested on a capias, the order for which had been obtained upon an affidavit not fairly disclosing the nature of the contract, for the alleged breach of which the defendant was suing, the judge having stated that, in his opinion, the plaintiff had failed to make out a want of reasonable and probable cause, told the jury that, to entitle the plaintiff to a verdict, they must be satisfied that there was a total want of reasonable and probable cause, and that the defendant had acted with malice:—Held, a misdirection. Gibbons v. Allison, 3 C. B. 181.

Where A. arrested B. upon the advice of his special pleader that he had a good cause of action, but afterwards, upon being ruled to declare, discontinued proceedings, and B. brought an action for a malicious arrest, without any reasonable or probable cause:—Held, that the reasonableness or probability of the cause was a mixed question of law and fact for the jury to decide; and that they were rightly told by the judge that if they believed the defendant to have acted bonâ fide upon the advice he had received, he was entitled to a verdict; but if otherwise, they ought to find for the plaintiff. Ravenga v. Macintosh, 4 D. & R. 107; 2 B. & C. 693; 1 C. & P. 204.

To an action against the defendant, as the official assignee of a bankrupt, for a malicious arrest, the defendant pleaded not guilty, and traversed an averment in the declaration, that there was a difference between the plaintiff and the defendant, whether, in point of law, the plaintiff was liable to pay interest on a certain sum, but not as to the facts. The plaintiff had borrowed 60*l.* of the bankrupt; and the only question in dispute between him and the official assignee was, whether he was liable to pay interest on the sum borrowed. The plaintiff having refused to pay such interest, the defendant issued a summons for his appearance on the 24th April, in these terms:—"If your debt of 5*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*, together with the expenses of this summons, be paid to the official assignee, on or before the 15th April instant, your appearance to the summons will not be enforced; but if you do not attend, a warrant will issue." This summons was not served by the messenger until the 18th April; and the plaintiff, not having appeared thereto, was apprehended under a warrant issued by the defendant. The judge told the jury that there was reasonable and probable cause for the arrest, but he did not call their attention distinctly to the second issue, no request to that effect having been made to him by the plaintiff's counsel:—Held, first, that the question of reasonable and probable cause was matter of law for the judge, and that he had not misdirected the jury, as it was the plaintiff's duty to appear in pursuance of the summons. Watson v. Whitmore, 8 Jur. 764; 14 L. J., Exch. 41.

Held, secondly, that the omission of the judge to direct the jury specifically as to the second issue, which was an immaterial one, was no ground for a new trial. Id.

—cases of malicious criminal proceedings.]

—A defendant, having reasonable and probable cause for suspecting that A. had made an assault upon him with intent to rob, gave him in charge to a constable. The constable stated that A. was a very respectable man, and not likely to have committed the offense. The defendant, however, persisted in his charge, and he was taken before a magistrate. In an action for a malicious arrest:—Held, that it was a misdirection to tell the jury, that if the defendant believed the good character given by the constable, and persisted in his charge merely from obstinacy, it put an end to the reasonable or probable cause for taking A. into custody. Musgrave v. Newell, 1 M. & W. 582; 2 Gale, 91.

Upon the trial of an action for maliciously indicting the plaintiff, he proved a case, which in the opinion of the judge showed that there was no reasonable or probable cause for preferring the indictment. The defendant then called a witness to prove an additional fact, and that being proved, the judge was of opinion that there was:—Held, that there being no contradictory testimony as to that fact, and there being nothing in the demeanor of the witness who proved it to impeach his credit, the judge was not bound to leave it to the jury to find the fact, but that he might act upon it as a fact proved, and nonsuit the plaintiff. Davis v. Hardy, 6 B. & C. 225; 9 D. & R. 380.

The defendant had indicted the plaintiff for felony, for maliciously obstructing the air-way of a mine, but which it appeared the plaintiff did bonâ fide under a claim of right. In an action by the plaintiff for a malicious prosecution:—Held, that it ought to have been left to the jury to say, whether the defendant knew that the obstruction had been done under a claim of right; for that, if so, there was no probable cause for the indictment. James v. Phelps, 3 P. & D. 231; 11 A. & E. 493.

In an action for a malicious prosecution, the question of malice was never in terms left to the jury. The court made a rule absolute for a new trial, although a rule nisi was not obtained on the ground of misdirection. Payne v. Reeves, 10 W. R. 693—Q. B. See S. C. at nisi prius, 2 F. & F. 867.

In an action for charging the plaintiff with a felony maliciously, and without reason or probable cause:—Held, that the judge was warranted in leaving to the jury, instead of deciding himself, the existence of probable cause, upon the following state of facts:—The plaintiff, a servant, being discharged from service on a Friday, took away with her from her master's house a trunk and bag, the property of her master. The master wrote to her the next day, demanding his property, and threatening to proceed criminally on the Monday following if it was not restored: the servant being absent from home when the letter was delivered no answer was returned; whereupon the master, the same day, Saturday, had her taken into custody, but when she was brought before the magistrates on Monday, declined to make any charge. McDonald or McDonnell v. Rooke or Brooke, 2 Bing. N. C. 217; 2 Scott, 359; 1 Hodges, 314.

In an action against a defendant for taking the plaintiff to a police-office, and causing him to be imprisoned without reasonable or probable cause, on a charge that he uttered menaces against the defendant's life:—Held, that it was not for the judge alone to determine whether the menaces justified the charge, but that it should have been left to the jury to determine whether the defendant believed the menaces, before the judge decided whether or not there was reasonable and probable cause for the charge. Venafra v. Johnson, 3 M. & Scott, 847; 10 Bing. 301; 6 C. & P. 50.

In an action by an attorney for maliciously, and without probable cause, indicting him for sending a threatening letter, it appeared that his clients having inquired of the defendants as to the truth of a representation made by a person who had offered to buy goods of them, the defendants replied, that they would not be responsible for the price of the goods, but believed the person had the employment he represented. The goods were then supplied to him. His representation turned out to be false, and the attorney, by direction of his clients, wrote a letter to the defendants, demanding payment of them for the price of the goods obtained from his clients through the defendants' representation, and stating that the circumstances made it incumbent on his clients to bring the matter under the notice of the public, if the defendants did not immediately discharge the amount; and that he had instructions to adopt proceedings, if the matter was not arranged in the course of the morrow; and that, as those measures would be of serious consequence to the defendants, he hoped they would prevent them by attention to his letter. The defendants were then summoned before a magistrate to answer a charge of obtaining goods under false pretences. The attorney served the summons, and attended for his clients, and the complaint was dismissed. The defendants afterwards indicted the attorney for sending a threatening letter, contrary to 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29, s. 8, and he was acquitted. On the trial in this action, the judge, without leaving any question to the jury, decided that there was reasonable and probable cause for preferring the indictment.—Held, that the decision was correct, and that the evidence did not raise a question of fact for the jury, whether the defendants bona fide believed that they had a reasonable cause for indicting; but a pure question of law for the judge, whether the defendants had such reasonable cause. Blackford v. Dod, 2 B. & Ad. 179.

Action for maliciously, and without probable cause, indicting the plaintiff for perjury, averment, that he was tried and acquitted, and judgment given that he should depart without day, as by the record appeared. The evidence on which perjury was assigned was given against the defendant in an action in which he was the defendant, and in which the evidence for him contradicted that of the then plaintiff. The defendant, on being told of the now plaintiff's evidence, said he would indict him for perjury. The defendant's informant said, he thought there was no ground for such indictment, but the defendant replied that he should move for a new trial (on the then action), and the indictment would stop the mouths of the now plaintiff and the opposite party for a time.—Held, first that the jury was properly asked whether the defendant believed there was reasonable and probable cause for the prosecution, and they having found that he did not, that the judge was right in ruling that there was no such cause. Hadrick v. Heslop, 12 Q. B. 267, 12 Jur. 600, 17 L. J., Q. B. 313; affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber, 8 C., nom. Heslop v. Chapman, 18 Jur. 343; 23 L. J., Q. B. 49, 3 C. L. R. 130.

Held, secondly, that the jury was rightly told that, if upon the above evidence they believed that the defendant acted from an improper motive, they might infer malice. Id.

In an action for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution, to which the defense was a justification on the ground of embezzlement, it appeared that the plaintiff had been servant to the defendant, and was by him given into custody on a charge of embezzlement, and taken before magistrates, when a day-book kept by him was produced by the prosecution, and no entry found of the sum in question. The plaintiff was remanded, but bailed, and on a further hearing the book was again produced, and found to contain the entry, whereupon the charge was dismissed. At the trial of the action the defendant's counsel charged the plaintiff with having, when on bail, surreptitiously made that entry in the book. The judge, observing in court a barrister who had been counsel for the plaintiff on both occasions when he was before the magistrates, said he ought to be examined as to whether the entry was in the book at the first examination. He was socordingly examined by the defendant's counsel, and deposed that in his belief it was not. The judge then summed up, telling the jury that if the plaintiff made that entry surreptitiously it was the strongest evidence of his guilt; adding, that he was ashamed to put it as matter of doubt, because they had the evidence of the counsel whose duty it was to make the investigation. The jury having found for the defendant:—Held, first, that the evidence was rightly received, as the fact deposed to by the counsel was not a privileged communication. Brown v. Foster, 1 H. & N. 736; 8 Jur., N. S. 245; 26 L. J., Exch. 249.

Held, secondly, that the judge had not improperly interfered with the conduct of the cause by calling him as a witness. Id.

Held, thirdly, that the observations of the judge to the jury on his evidence were not a misdirection, or a ground for a new trial. Id.

A trustworthy servant informed his master, whose gun had been stolen, that a credible person (one Robinson) had told him that he had seen the gun with a young man in the village; and went on to inform the master, as the fact was, that he had brought Robinson and the accused together, and had heard the accusation repeated in the presence of the accused; that they had then, at the proposal of the accused, gone together to the place where Robinson stated he had seen the gun, namely, a barn of the father of the accused; and that they there had found a gun which Robinson said was not the gun he had seen there on the former occasion. The master thereupon gave the accused into custody, and the latter having been tried and acquitted, brought an action for false imprisonment. The judge directed the jury that if the master had acted on the information of his servant without making inquiry of Robinson he must be taken to have acted on hearsay evidence, and without reasonable and probable cause. The jury found for the plaintiff:—Held, that the latter part of the information given by the servant was an original account and not merely a confirmation of the hearsay evidence contained in the first part of his information, and that it was a misdirection by the judge to direct the jury that there was no reasonable and probable cause for the arrest of the suspected person on the assumption that the information on which the arrest had been ordered was derived from hearsay evidence only. Lister v. Perryman, 4 L. R., II. L. Cas. 521; 39 L. J., Exch. 177; 23 L. T., N. S. 269; 19 W. R. 9; reversing judgments of Exchequer and Exchequer Chamber, nom. Perryman v. Lister, 3 L. R., Exch. 197; 37 L. J., Exch. 166; 18 L. T., N. S. 574.

3. Proof of the former Proceedings; and their Termination.

Defendant's acts in procuring or prosecuting the proceedings.]—In an action against A. for maliciously causing an indictment for a riot to be preferred against B., it was proved, on the part of A., by a solicitor, that he preferred the indictment by order of a city alderman:—Held, that A.'s counsel might ask the solicitor whether A. had desired him not to prosecute on his behalf, but could not ask him generally what A. had said to him on the subject of the prosecution. Osterman v. Batesman, 2 C. & K. 728—Erie.

A declaration which alleges that the defendant charged the plaintiff with felony, is supported by evidence that the defendant stated to the magistrate that he had been robbed of specific articles, and that he suspected and believed, and had good reason to suspect and believe, that the plaintiff had stolen them. Davis v. Noake, 6 M. & S. 20; 1 Stark. 317.

In an action against a party for causing the arrest of a person privileged from arrest (e. g., a witness attending on his subpoena, or a practicing attorney), thereby putting him to the expense of finding bail and procuring his discharge by order of a judge, the plaintiff must show that his imprisonment at the particular time in question took place by some act of the defendant, and that he knew or recognized the circumstances accompanying it, and also knew that the party arrested was privileged at that time. Stokes v. White, 4 Tyr. 786; 1 C., M. & R. 223.

In an action for a malicious indictment, the plaintiff may call one of the grand jury to prove that the defendant was the prosecutor of the indictment. Freeman v. Arkell, 3 D. & R. 669; 1 C. & P. 137.

The former proceedings as evidence.]—Where, in an action for a malicious charge of felony, the plaintiff put in, to prove a formal part of his case, the defendant's and another person's depositions before the magistrate, the defendant has a right to use his own deposition as evidence in the cause, but not that of the other deponent. Jackson v. Bull, 2 M. & Rob. 176—Tindal.

In an action for a malicious arrest on a charge of felony, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to give in evidence the whole of the proceedings before the magistrates. Biggs v. Clay, 3 N. & M. 464.

In an action against a judgment creditor for maliciously suing out an alias fi. fa., after a sufficient execution levied upon the plaintiff's goods under the first fi. fa.:—Held, that the sheriff's returns indorsed upon the two writs (which writs had been produced in evidence by the plaintiff as part of his case), wherein the sheriff stated that he had forborne to sell under the first, and had sold under the second writ, by the request and with the consent of the now plaintiff, were prima facie evidence of the facts so returned; credence being due to the official acts of the sheriff between third persons. Gyfford v. Woodgate, 11 East, 297; 2 Camp. 117.

A., the servant of B., stated before a magistrate that C. came into the yard of his employer, and took from a stable there two geldings, the property of B., and rode them away, though he was told that he must not:—Held, that this information did not support a count in an action for malicious prosecution, which alleged that the information charged C. with having feloniously stolen and ridden away with two geldings. Milton v. Elmore, 4 C. & P. 456—Tindal.

Termination of former proceedings.]—Where, in an action for a malicious arrest, the declaration alleges certain facts "whereupon and whereby the suit was ended and determined," the plaintiff cannot show any other determination of the suit than the mode stated. Combs v. Capron, 1 M. & Rob. 398—Putteson.

The acceptance of the debt and costs, in satisfaction of the action, under a judge's order or rule of reference, is a sufficient determination of the suit. Ib.

Proof that no declaration was filed or delivered within a year after the return of the writ, is sufficient to show a termination of the suit. Pierce v. Street, 3 B. & Ad. 807.

An averment that the suit is wholly ended and determined, is evidenced by proof of the rule to discontinue upon payment of costs, and that the costs were taxed and paid. Bristow v. Heywood, 1 Stark. 48; 4 Camp. 219—Ellenborough.

In an action for a malicious arrest, the declaration averred that the defendant did not prosecute his suit, but voluntarily suffered the same to be discontinued for want of prosecution, and thereupon it was considered by the court, that the defendant should take nothing by his writ. The defendant pleaded not guilty:—Held, that the averment of the discontinuance of the suit was a material allegation, which the defendant should have taken issue upon by his plea, and that, not having done so, the discontinuance was admitted on the record. Watkins v. Lee, 5 M. & W. 270; 7 D. P. C. 498; 3 Jur. 484.

Proof that a plaintiff had not declared in an action removed by habeas corpus within two terms, is not sufficient evidence of a determination of the suit to support an action for malicious arrest. Norriah v. Richards, 3 N. & M. 209; 1 H. & W. 437; 3 A. & E. 733.

4. Proof of Damages; Measure of Damages.

Evidence of injury sustained by defendant.]

—A count for maliciously indicting the plaintiff for an assault, cannot be supported without proof of some consequential injury sustained by him. Freeman v. Arkell, 3 D. & R. 669; 1 C. & P. 187.

If in a declaration for a malicious arrest it is averred that the plaintiff was arrested, that allegation is satisfied by proof of a detainer. Whalley v. Pepper, 7 C. & P. 506—Littledale.

Recovery of costs of former suit or prosecution, as damages.]—In the calculation of damages, in an action for maliciously holding to bail, the plaintiff is entitled to recover not merely the taxed costs, but the costs as between attorney and client. Sandback v. Thomas, 1 Stark. 306—Ellenborough.

In an action for a malicious arrest the plaintiff is entitled to recover costs incurred in the former suit beyond the taxed costs in that suit. Gould v. Barratt, 2 M. & R. 171—Abinger.

The plaintiff can recover no damages for extra costs, nor any damages, unless malice is proved. Sinclair v. Eldred, 4 Taunt. 7; S. P., Webber v. Nicholas, R. & M. 419; 4 Bing. 16.

In an action for a malicious distress, the plaintiff cannot recover his extra costs as between attorney and client, incurred in an action of replevin which the plaintiff had brought to recover the goods distrained. Grace v. Morgan, 1 Hodges, 398.

Semble, that if one of two parties indicted, having a defense common to both, retains an attorney to defend them, and pays him the whole costs of defense, and they are acquitted, such party, in an action for malicious prosecution, may demand the costs so paid as part of his damages:—Held, that at all events he may so recover, if the costs of defense, being divisible, it has been expressly left to the jury to deduct any part of such costs which they thought not fairly incurred by the plaintiff and they have found for him as to the whole. Rowlands v. Samuel, 11 Q. B. 39; 17 L. J., Q. B. 65.

Commercial laws.]—Semble, that there is no difference between the law of Malta and the English law, regulating the construction of mercantile contracts and the remedies for breach of them. Dimech v. Corlett, 12 Moore P. C. C. 199.

Distribution of estate.]—According to the law of Malta, the real estate of an intestate is equally divisible among the co-heirs. Dugga v. Camilleri, 3 L. R., P. C. 258; 23 L. T., N. S. 422.

By the ordinances and code in force in the island, where property possessed in common cannot be "conveniently divided, and without disadvantage," the same must be sold by auction. Ib.

Husband and wife; judicial separation.]—By Article 46 of Ordinance No. 5, of 1867, of Malta, "grievous wrongs" (injurie gravi) done to the complaining consort, or to his or her children, may give cause for a judicial separation, even if they do not amount to cruelty, as interpreted by the law of England. Sant v. Sant, 80 L. T., N. S. 415; 48 L. J., P. C. 73; 5 L. R., P. C. 542; 23 W. R. 718.

Where it was proved that the husband, a man of high rank, had for some years treated his wife with harshness and unkindness, and frequently insulted her in the grossest manner before her servants and children, and thereby kept her in a constant state of excitement and fear, and on one occasion had struck her grown-up daughter in her presence:—Held, that this treatment amounted to "grievous wrongs" within the meaning of Article 46. Ib.

Seizure of property by way of pledge.]—By the law of Malta a plaintiff may "secure his rights by the precautionary act" of seizing property of the defendant by way of pledge. Nicosia v. Vallone, 37 L. T., N. S. 106—P. C.

I. WHEN GRANTED.

1. Nature of the Remedy; for what Purposes and in what Cases it is allowed, generally.

Existence of specific legal right without other legal remedy.]—A mandamus is always granted when there is no other specific legal remedy. Rez v. Wyndham, Cowp. 378.

But not where a party has a specific legal remedy. Rez v. Chester (Bishop), 1 T. R. 390.

It is not a writ grantable of right, but by prerogative; and it is the absence or want of a specific legal remedy which gives the court jurisdiction. Rez v. Bristol Dock Company, 12 East, 420.

Two circumstances must concur to authorize the issuing of a mandamus—a specific legal right and the absence of an effectual remedy. If it is doubtful whether there is a remedy, the court will issue a mandamus. Rez v. Nottingham Waterworks Company, 1 N. & P. 48e; 6 A. & E. 355; W., W. & D. 166.

What other remedies sufficient to prevent granting mandamus.]—It is no objection to granting a mandamus to do a particular act, that an indictment will also lie for the omission to do that act. Rez v. Severn and Wye Railway Company, 2 B. & A. 646.

A mandamus will not be granted to enforce the general law of the land, if an action will lie, although in some cases it will be granted, even where an indictment may be preferred. Robins, Ex parte, 7 D. P. C. 566; 1 W., W. & H. 578; 3 Jur. 103.

A railway act enacted, that the company established by it should, in a given event, pay another company a sum not exceeding a given amount, by way of compensation for the loss of tolls by the latter company. The given event having happened:—Held, that a mandamus was not the proper mode of compelling the payment of the compensation money, as an action would lie on the statutory obligation. Reg. v. Hull and Selby Railway Company, 3 Railw. Cas. 705; 6 Q. B. 70; 8 Jur. 491; 13 L. J., Q. B. 257.

A rule nisi having been obtained for a mandamus to a railway company to summon a jury to assess compensation for damage, the following agreement was entered into by their agent and the claimant:—"We hereby agree to accept of the company, in discharge of our claim against them for injury, &c., 425*l.*, and 8*l.* per week for the future so long as the present damages continue. (Signed) W. E., T. E." This was also signed by the agent of the company. Upon this agreement the proceedings for the mandamus were discontinued. The company paid the 425*l.*, and also the 8*l.* per week for several weeks, and then ceased, whereupon an application was made for a mandamus to them to pay the money according to the agreement, or to summon a jury to assess compensation, or to revive the former rule:—Held, that, as the agreement was not under the seal of the company, it could not be enforced by action, and the court granted the mandamus. Reg. v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 3 Railw. Cas. 777—Q. B.

A dock company was required to make and maintain a new channel, with equal depth and breadth at the bottom, and with equal inclination of the sides to the former channel:—Held, first, that a duty was cast upon the company to repair generally the banks of the new course. Reg. v. Bristol Dock Company, 1 G. & D. 286; 2 Q. B. 64.

Held, secondly, that a mandamus would lie to compel the company to repair, although there might be another remedy by indictment. Id.

Where a party-wall had been pulled down and rebuilt under the Building Act, but the paper and decorations had not been replaced by the defendant:—Held, that a mandamus, at the instance of the tenant of the adjoining house, would not lie to replace the paper and decorations, but that the remedy must be by action. Reg. v. Ponsford, 1 D. & L. 116; 7 Jur. 767; 13 L. J., Q. B. 813—B. C.—Wightman.

The court will not grant a mandamus to compel the repair of a turnpike-road. Reg. v. Oxford and Witney Turnpike Road (Trustees), 13 A. & E. 427; 4 P. & D. 154; 6 Jur. 216, n.

Interest of parties; consent.—Where by agreement between parties, an application was made for a mandamus merely with a view to obtain the opinion of the court, whether, on the construction of a private act, the proceeding by mandamus was proper; the court stopped the argument, and declined to give any decision. Reg. v. Blackwall Railway, 9 D. P. C. 558—Q. B.

The court is not justified in extending the remedy by mandamus to cases to which it does not by law extend, though the parties waive the objection. Reg. v. Treasury, 16 Q. B. 857; 15 Jur. 767; 20 L. J., Q. B. 305.

When a special case is stated for the opinion of the court, and the parties agree that, in the event of the court giving judgment for the plaintiff, a mandamus may issue against the defendant:—Held, that this must be understood to mean, if the court thinks fit that it shall do so. Nicholl v. Allen, 1 B. & S. 916.

So if the agreement had been that a mandamus shall issue. Id.

The court in the exercise of its discretion as to issuing of a mandamus requires that the application should be made by one who has a real interest in requiring the duties to be performed. Reg. v. Peterborough (Mayor), 44 L. J., Q. B. 85; 28 W. R. 343.

Possibility of doing the act required.—The court will not grant a mandamus, where issuing the writ would necessarily be inoperative, and could not be followed by any beneficial result, although it appears that the parties against whom it is sought had, upon the facts and circumstances before them, wrongfully refused to do the act required; but, in order to induce the court to withhold assistance on this ground, it must be satisfied that no benefit could possibly result from issuing the writ. Reg. v. Bridgeman, 2 New Sess. Cas. 232; 10 Jur. 159; 15 L. J., M. C. 44—B. C.—Williams.

The writ supposes the required act to be possible, and if it is shown that the party has not the power to do the act commanded, the writ is bad. Reg. v. London and North Western Railway Company, 6 Railw. Cas. 634—Q. B.

Demand of performance, and refusal.—A mandamus will not be granted, unless it is clear that there has been a direct refusal to do that which it is the object of the mandamus to enforce, either in terms or by circumstances which distinctly show an intention in the party to withhold from doing the act required. Reg. v. Brocknock and Abergateeny Canal Company, 4 N. & M. 871, 3 A. & E. 217; 1 H. & W. 279.

The court will not grant a mandamus unless it has been preceded by a distinct demand of the specific thing the performance of which is the object of the mandamus, and by a refusal of performance, or conduct equivalent thereto. Reg. v. Bristol Company, 4 Q. B. 102; 3 G. & D. 384, 3 Railw. Cas. 432, 7 Jur. 223; 12 L. J., Q. B. 100.

When no demand has been made on the officer of a corporation to do an act, the performance of which is sought to be enforced by mandamus, the court will not allow the writ to issue, as a previous demand and refusal are necessary. Reg. v. Sealey, 8 Jur. 496—B. C.—Coleridge.

A rule for a mandamus was discharged, upon a preliminary objection that there had been no demand upon and refusal by the party against whom it was prayed, to do that which the mandamus directed; the court refused a second rule for the mandamus, founded on affidavits showing a demand and a refusal subsequently to the discharge of the former rule. Thompson, Ex parte, 6 Q. B. 721; 14 L. J., Q. B. 176.

If a local board of health, upon a claim being made against them for compensation, denies all liability, the claimant will be immediately entitled to a mandamus to enjoin them in general terms to cause compensation to be made; and it will not be necessary for him to claim any specific amount before applying for the writ. Reg. v. Burslem Board of Health, 6 Jur., N. S. 696, 29 L. J., Q. B. 242; 6 W. R. 584; 1 El. & El. 1077—Exch. Cham.

When granted, to enforce performance of acts required by act of parliament.—When a new right has been created by act of parliament, the proper method of enforcing it is by mandamus at common law. Simpson v. Scottish Union Fire and Life Insurance Company, 9 Jur., N. S. 711; 1 Hem. & M. 618; 32 L. J., Chanc. 329; 11 W. R. 459; 8 L. T. N. S. 112.

Under 14 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 83, a landlord may apply, by mandamus, to a court of common law, before the insurers have settled with the tenant, to have the money secured by a policy of insurance on a house within the bills of mortality, destroyed by fire, applied to the rebuilding of such house. Id.

Mandamus lies to two arbitrators to appoint an umpire under a canal act. Reg. v. Goodrich, 2 Smith, 388.

But not to execute first one particular part of a power granted by act of parliament. Rez v. Birmingham Canal Company, 2 W. Bl. 708.

An act for repairing and amending a turnpike-road recited that the trustees under former acts had amended and repaired, and had expended and borrowed money for that purpose, but that the road could not be sufficiently amended and repaired, nor the debt paid, unless further powers were granted; it recited, also, that the public road would be benefited if powers were given to make new diversions from the former road; it (after repealing the prior acts) enacted that this statute should for an enlarged term be put in execution for repairing and amending the road, and for making and maintaining the new lines it authorized the trustees to continue the existing tollgates, and to take increased tolls, and required them to apply the tolls and the money already in their hands in amending the roads, paying off the debt, and otherwise putting this act into execution, as to them should seem expedient. It then authorized and required them to form the new lines, and for that purpose to enter upon and take lands and buildings, making compensation, but the compulsory power in this respect was to cease in five years from the passing of the act. The trustees entered into receipt of the increased tolls, but did not make the new lines. Seven years after the compulsory powers had expired, a person moved for a mandamus to the trustees to make the new lines, stating on an affidavit that he was an inhabitant of the neighborhood, and the making of them would be an advantage to him and other neighbors, and to the public, but he did not explain his delay in making the application. Affidavits, in answer, stated, that soon after the statute in question, another act passed for making a railway, which had accordingly been formed, running parallel to the turnpike road, greatly injuring the receipt by tolls, occupying part of the space intended for the new lines, making it impracticable to complete them, except at a very great expense, and rendered the construction of them unimportant. They also ascribed to the prosecutor a merely personal motive for making his application:—Held, that laying out of consideration the affidavits in answer (which might have been controverted on a return), the court, in its discretion, ought to refuse a mandamus. Reg. v. Lockdale and Hatfield Turnpike Road (Trustees), 12 Q. B. 448.

It is no ground of objection to a mandamus that a requisition is made on parties in the alternative to do one of three things, if the duty enjoined by act of parliament forms one of them, and there has been a general refusal to comply with such requisition. Reg. v. St. Margaret's, Leicester (Select Vestry), 1 P. & D. 116; 8 A. & E. 889; 1 W., W. & H. 673.

Where an act of parliament directs that, under certain circumstances, one or other of two things shall be done, the party to do the act has the option of doing which act he pleases; and a mandamus not giving such option, or not stating a sufficient reason why such option no longer exists, is bad in law. Reg. v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 4 H. L. Cas. 471; 17 Jur. 901.

— to enforce performance of duties by ministerial officers.]—The guardians of the poor under an act of parliament ordered the treasurer to pay a sum of money for a purpose different from that mentioned in the act, against which an appeal was entered at the sessions, where that sum was disallowed in the account, and the treasurer who had paid it was ordered to repay it to the succeeding treasurer. The court refused to grant a mandamus to compel the late treasurer to pay over the money according to the order of sessions, because he was a ministerial officer, and bound to obey the order of the guardians. Rez v. Shaw, 5 T. R. 549.

A mandamus will not lie to a ministerial officer, as the treasurer of a county, to obey an order of the court of quarter sessions; the proper remedy in case of his refusal to obey such order is by indictment. Rez v. Bristol, 6 T. R. 168. S. P., Rez v. Surrey (Treasurer), 1 Chit. 650. And see Rez v. Johnson, 4 M. & S. 515.

A mandamus will not lie to a treasurer of a borough to compel him to pay costs to witnesses under the order of a judge, founded on 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, the treasurer being a ministerial officer, and subject for his refusal to an indictment. Rez v. Jeyes, 5 N. & M. 101; 3 A. & E. 416; 1 H. & W. 325.

The general rule, that an indictment, and not a mandamus, is the proper mode of enforcing obedience by a ministerial officer to an order of sessions, does not prevail where the court sees that the ministerial officer is put forward merely as a nominal party, and that other persons are those who are to be compelled to perform the duty. Reg. v. Wood Ditton (Highway Surveyors), 18 L. J., M. C. 218—Q. B.

The court will issue a mandamus to a treasurer of a county, to deposit with the clerk of the peace, in pursuance of 12 Geo. 2, c. 29, ss. 7, 8, books containing entries of the county expenditure, although the receipts, tradesmen's bills, the jailer's accounts, and copies of the county rate, had been already deposited with the clerk of the peace, and the books contain the discharges of the treasurer, and the discharges of the former treasurer by the justices in session. Rez v. Payn, 1 N. & P. 524; W., W. & D. 142; 1 Jur. 54; 6 A. & E. 392.

The rule, that the court will not grant a mandamus to a ministerial officer to obey an order of quarter sessions, does not apply where the ministerial officer is a nominal party. Bottom, Ex parte, 13 Jur. 680—Q. B.

As to mandamus to particular officers,—see this title, I., 2.

— to compel the exercise of discretionary or judicial functions.]—Under 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, s. 5, after an election of a bishop by the dean and chapter of a cathedral church, by virtue of a congé d'élire and letters missive, the person so elected is to be reputed and taken by the name of the lord elected of the see, and the king is thereupon to issue letters patent to the archbishop, commanding him to confirm the election, and to invest and consecrate him, and if he fails to do so for twenty days, he is to incur the penalties of a præmunire:—Held, by Lord Denman, C. J., and Erle, J., that the archbishop acting merely ministerially, is bound to confirm the bishop elect, and that he has no authority to hear any opposition advanced against the person so elected. Per Patteson, J., and Coleridge, J., that confirmation is a judicial act, which the archbishop is to conduct according to the principles of the canon law, and that parties opposing are entitled to appear in his court and enter their objections. Reg. v. Canterbury (Archbishop), Hampden, In re, 11 Q. B. 483; 12 Jur. 862; 17 L. J. Q. B. 252.

Held, also, per Patteson, J., and Coleridge, J., that the opposers not having been allowed to appear and be heard, there was a declining of jurisdiction by the archbishop, for which a mandamus would lie. Ib.

By 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, s. 3, in every case of a clerk in holy orders who may be charged with any offense against the laws ecclesiastical, or concerning whom there may exist scandal or evil report, as having offended against the said laws, it shall be lawful for the bishop of the diocese, on the application of any party complaining thereof, or, if he shall so think fit, of his own mere motion, to issue a commission of inquiry as to the grounds of such charge or report. A bishop having refused to issue a commission to inquire into certain charges against a rector in his diocese, upon an application by a clerk in holy orders, who was a stranger to the parish and diocese, and he having obtained a rule for a mandamus to the bishop commanding him to issue a commission:—Held, by Wightman, J., that under s. 3 the power of the bishop to issue a commission was discretionary; Lord Campbell, C. J., and Erle, J., concurring; Hill, J., doubting as to the construction of s. 3, but holding that the court ought not to issue a mandamus upon the application of a party who was not shown to be aggrieved, or to have some connection with the parish or diocese. Reg. v. Chichester (Bishop), 6 Jur., N. S. 120; 29 L. J., Q. B. 23; 2 El. & El. 209.

A party applied to the Insolvent Debtors' Court, for an order to vest such a surplus in him, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 92, claiming under an alleged assignment to him by the insolvent. That court held that the assignment was invalid as against other claimants of the surplus, and refused to make the order. The Court of Queen's Bench, holding that the functions of the Insolvent Debtors' Court were judicial and not merely ministerial, refused to issue a mandamus commanding that court to make the order. The applicant then took proceedings in Chancery, which resulted in a decree in his favor, that the assignment to him by the insolvent was valid. The Court of Chancery further pressed an opinion that this decree made the duty of the Insolvent Debtors' Court the matter more simply ministerial. The latter court, however, refused, on a new application to it, to act upon that opinion and make the order. On a subsequent application by the claimant for a mandamus to the Insolvent Debtors' Court to make the order. He held, that, after as before the proceedings in Chancery, and notwithstanding the opinion there expressed to the contrary, the Insolvent Debtors' Court retained a judicial discretion whether or not to make the order; and therefore the mandamus could not be granted. Cook, Ex parte, 2 El. & El. 586; 6 Jur., N. S. 224; 29 L. J., Q. B. 68.

A statute provided that if the election of certain deputies should be objected to, notice in writing should be given or delivered to the party objected to four days before the first meeting; it should be lawful for the deputies assembled at such meeting (exclusive of those objected to), and they were required to inquire into and determine the validity of such disputed election. When proof was given, that notice of objection had been in due time served on the wife of the party objected to at his dwelling-house, and the meeting decided that personal service was essential, and refused to inquire into the election:—Held, that there had been a mistake of the law, and a declining of jurisdiction, and that, consequently, a mandamus to inquire should be issued. Reg. v. Gwinne, 14 Jur. 914; 19 L. J., Q. B. 413; or Reg. v. Leicester (Freemen), 15 Q. B. 671.

But where evidence was given of personal service of a notice upon the party objected to in due time, but the meeting disbelieved the witness, and decided that the disputed election was valid:—Held, that the deputies having decided upon a question of fact on which they had jurisdiction, their decision was final, and that the court could not interfere. Ib.

As to mandamus to particular courts or judicial officers,—see this title. I., 2.

—to compel the exercise of visitatorial powers.]—The court refused to grant a mandamus requiring the visitors named in the charter of the College of Doctors' Commons to inquire into the mode in which the college under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, ss. 116, 117, had exercised their discretion as to the surrender of their charter and the disposition of the property. Lee, Ex parte, El. Bl. & El. 86.

If the visitor of a college refuses to exercise his visitatorial power by hearing an appeal, the court will grant a mandamus to set him in motion, but cannot afterwards review his decision. Buller, Ex parte, 1 Jur., N. S. 7.

—B. C.—Coleridge.

—to admit or restore to offices.]—Upon application for a mandamus to restore to office, a prima facie title must be shown, the party having, if properly admitted, another remedy: secus on a mandamus to admit. Rez v. Jotham, 3 T. R. 577.

Where an office is full by the appointment of the person who prima facie has the right of appointment, and where there are means of trying the title by action, the court will not grant a mandamus against the party filling the office, in order to try the title. Rez v. Stokes Damerel (Minister, &c.), 1 N. & P. 56; 5 A. & E. 584; 2 H. & W. 346.

A mandamus lies to restore a man to the office of master of a free school. Anon., Loft, 148.

The office of surgeon of the district prison of St. Catherine, in Jamaica, created by local acts of the legislature of that island, is a public office, and on a mandamus to question the title of an occupant:—Held, that the office being full, a mandamus did not lie. Hill v. Reg., 8 Moore P. C. C. 139.

The remedy was by quo warranto against the occupant of the office. Ib.

The office of clerk to the guardians of a union, appointed under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 46, is a public office created by statute, and where such office is full a quo warranto, and not a mandamus, is the proper remedy to try the validity of the election. Reg. v. St. Martin in the Fields (Guardians), 15 Jur. 800; 20 L. J. Q. B. 423; 17 Q. B. 149.

But when the office is full by a void election, and the right to appoint to it cannot be tried in any other way, the court will grant a mandamus to try the right. Ib.

A magistrate's clerk has no permanent interest in his office, and if he is dismissed without cause no mandamus lies to restore him. Sandys, Ex parte, 1 N. & M. 591; 4 B. & Ad. 863.

When a corporate office is full, the title thereto cannot be tried by mandamus, but it must be questioned by quo warranto. Reg. v. Chester (Mayor, &c.), 5 El. & Bl. 531; 2 Jur., N. S. 114; 25 L. J., Q. B. 61.

As a mandamus to reinstate a person in an office only lies where the office, and its tenure, are of a permanent nature, it is not an available remedy for the secretary of a benefit society, who has been dismissed by a resolution of a meeting of the society. Evans v. Hart of Oak Benefit Society, 12 Jur., N. S. 163—Q. B.

A mandamus lies to admit a clerk of trustees under the General Turnpike Act. Rez v. Cheshunt Roads (Trustees), 5 B. & Ad. 439.

When no application has been made to the trustees of a local turnpike act, as a body, to appoint a gentleman appearing to be duly elected as their clerk, and there has been consequently no refusal by them as a body, the court will not grant a mandamus commanding them to make such appointment. Reg. v. Cheadle Highway (Trustees), 7 Jur. 373—B. C.

A fellow of King's College, Cambridge, had been expelled the college and deprived of his fellowship, by the provost and fellows, upon a charge of fraud and perjury, the proceedings being conducted partly in the absence of the accused, and the charge being alone supported by a comparison of his letters with an answer which he had filed in a suit in Chancery. Upon appeal to the visitor, the decision of the provost and fellows was affirmed:—Held, that the court had no power to grant a mandamus to restore to the fellowship. Buller, Ex parte, 1 Jur., N. S. 709—B. C.—Coleridge.

A mandamus will not lie to the vicar, churchwardens, and inhabitants of a parish to elect an organist to the parish church, though there has always been such an office beyond the time of living memory, and a yearly salary has been invariably paid him out of the church rates, as it is optional with the parishioners whether the organ shall be played. Reg. v. St. Stephen's, Coleman street (Vicar, &c.), 2 D. & L. 571; 9 Jur. 255; 14 L. J., Q. B. 34—B. C.—Patteson.

Where the founder of an eleemosynary corporation directed that the bishop, dean and archdeacon of Worcester should be visitors, and should correct, punish, and reform all abuses and offenses to be committed by the master and brethren, and see that his ordinance was truly executed according to its meaning; and afterwards the heir of the founder, upon a vacancy of one of the brethren, appointed a person to succeed, who was a soldier, not belonging to either of the towns or lordships, to the inhabitants of which a preference was to be given, against which appointment three persons appealed to the visitors, on the ground that the appointee was ineligible, and that there were others besides themselves, who were eligible:—Held, that such an appeal lay, and therefore the court granted a mandamus to the visitors, who had heard the evidence in such appeal, but declined to act therein, to proceed and determine the appeal. Rez v. Worcester (Bishop), 4 M. & S. 415.

The registrars of a diocese were authorized by their patent of office (under the bishop's hand and seal) to appoint a deputy, to be "approved of and allowed by the bishop;" who, if he should not approve of and allow the deputy named and proposed to him, was empowered to nominate another, with a salary payable out of the profits of the registrarship. The registrars appointed a deputy, subject to the approbation and consent of the bishop, who, on being informed of it, answered that "for good and sufficient reasons" he disapproved of the party nominated, but declined specifying his reasons. The court refused a rule nisi for a mandamus to the bishop to admit the deputy. Rez v. Gloucester (Bishop), 2 B. & Ad. 158.

A mandamus commanding the dean and chapter of a cathedral to restore a chorister, alleged that the office was a freehold in their gift, paid by salary out of their land revenues, and conferring a right to vote on the election of members of parliament, and that the chorister had been wrongfully removed. Return, that by ordinances of the founder for the government of the cathedral, it was provided that if any of the officers of the cathedral, including choristers, commit a small fault, he may be punished by the dean, but that "if his crime be of a blacker dye (if it be judged equitable), he may be expelled by whom he was admitted;" and that the bishop of the diocese should be the visitor of the cathedral, to take special care that all its ordinances should be inviolably preserved, to punish and correct all offenses committed by officers of the cathedral, and to do all things that are judged lawfully to appertain to the office of visitor; and that the chorister had not appealed to the bishop:—Held, that a mandamus did not lie, as the remedy for the wrongful amotion complained of, was by application to the visitor, who had sufficient exclusive jurisdiction, although the foundation was spiritual and not eleemosynary, and the office was a freehold office; and that it was not necessary to return the cause of amotion. Reg. v. Chester (Dean and Chapter), 15 Q. B. 513; 15 Jur. 10; 19 L. J., Q. B. 485. S. P., Reg. v. Rochester (Dean and Chapter) 17 Q. B. 1.

By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, s. 20, if a medical practitioner shall, after due inquiry, be judged by the General Council of Medical Education and Registration of the United Kingdom to have been guilty of infamous conduct in any professional respect, they may, if they see fit, erase his name from the register; and where a medical officer has been so adjudged guilty by the general council, and his name erased from the register, a mandamus will not lie to restore it. La Merit, Ex parte, 4 B. & S. 582; 33 L. J., Q. B. 69.

As to mandamus to corporations to admit or restore to office or membership,—see this title, I., 2.

— to compel corporations, officers, trustees, and others to levy or pay over moneys.—A mandamus directed to a corporation, commanding them to pay a poor's-rate to the overseers, omitted to state that the corporation had no effects on which a distress could be levied:—Held, a fatal objection in substance to the writ, which might be taken after the return, or at any time before a peremptory mandamus issued. Re v. Margate Pier Company, 3 B. & A. 220; 2 Chit. 258.

A duty having been imposed upon a party by statute to levy certain moneys from other parties, and pay over to another a portion of the sums levied, a mandamus was issued directing him "to take the necessary and legal measures and proceedings for obtaining and recovering payment."—Held, per Crompton, J., and Blackburn, J. (Cockburn, C. J., dissentiente), that the words legal measures, did not necessarily mean instituting legal proceedings. Reg. v. Port of Southampton (Commissioners), 1 B. & S. 5; 7 Jur., N. S. 990; 30 L. J., Q. B. 244; 9 W. R. 630.

Where B. paid a special rate, erroneously and illegally imposed by a board of health, and five years afterwards, having discovered the mistake, commenced an action against the board, for the recovery of the money so paid, obtained judgment, and afterwards sued the board upon the judgment, demanding a mandamus to them, to make and levy a rate under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, for the purpose of satisfying the judgment.—Held, that issuing the sum recovered to be a charge on the rate, s. 89) B was not entitled to a mandamus, inasmuch as the action upon which the judgment proceeded was not commenced within six months from the date of the charge. Burland v. Kingston-upon-Hull Board of Health, 3 B. & S. 271; 9 Jur., N. S. 255. L. J., Q. B. 17.

A company was incorporated by act of parliament, which directed that all actions against the company should be prosecuted against the treasurer or a director for the time being; but that the body or goods, lands, &c. of such treasurer or director should not be a reason of his being defendant in such action be liable to execution. An action having been brought by C. against the treasurer, in the name of the treasurer, against C., all matters in difference were referred to an arbitrator who awarded that C. had cause of action against the defendant as such treasurer, for a certain sum, and directed that the treasurer should pay to C. that sum on demand, as to the other suit, he awarded that the treasurer, as such, had no cause of action, and ordered him, as such treasurer, to pay the costs on demand:—Held, that a mandamus would lie to the treasurer and directors commanding them to pay the sums awarded. Re v. St. Katharine Dock Company, 4 B. & A. 800; 1 N. & M. 121.

Mandamus refused to the trustees of the Rugby charity to compel the payment of increased alms to claimants on the funds, although the applicants were at an advanced age, and would probably be dead before relief could be had in chancery. Rugby Charity Trustees, Ex parte, 9 D. & R. 214.

A controversy existing in a corporation, between the freemen under an old charter, and the town council, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 75, as to the exclusive right of the former to some corporation property to their own private use, a public meeting of the freemen was held, and a resolution was carried at the instance of A., a freeman, that the rents should be paid into the hands of the defendant, to wait until the claim of the freemen should be decided. The rents having been so paid, and a rule nisi having been obtained by A., as a freeman and a burgess and an inhabitant of the borough, liable to contribute to the borough rate, for a mandamus to the defendant to pay the money over into the hands of the treasurer of the borough, the court discharged the rule. Raj v. Frost, 1 P. & D. 75; 8 A. & E. 822; 1 W. W. & H. 664; 2 Jur. 966.

The court will not grant a mandamus to commissioners appointed under a local act, either on the application of a company ordering them to perform a contract made with the company, or on the application of certain ratepayers, ordering them to provide for the execution of the powers under the act, where no inconvenience is being suffered by the inhabitants. Reg. v. Cheltenham (Commissioners of Paving), 4 Jur. 1060—Q. B.

— to enforce other private rights.]—A mortgagee of tolls and toll-houses of a turnpike road has only an equitable right to enforce payment of principal and interest, and is therefore not entitled to a mandamus for that purpose. Reg. v. Balby and Worksop Turnpike Road (Trustees), 1 B. C. C. 184; 17 Jur. 784; 22 L. J., Q. B. 164—Crompton.

Semble, that a mandamus may be issued against a party for a matter in respect of which he is liable to an action, or to a suit in equity. Reg. v. Port of Southampton (Commissioners), 1 B. & S. 5; 7 Jur., N. S. 990; 30 L. J., Q. B. 244; 9 W. R. 630.

Mandamus to churchwardens, to raise a rate to pay principal and interest of money borrowed on the credit of parish and church-rates, under the 58 Geo. 3, c. 45, and 59 Geo. 3, c. 184. A return, that since the security was given, the lender, who was the prosecutor, had become bankrupt. Plen, that the prosecutor had lent the money, as a trustee for a party named, out of the money vested in him as trustee, in which he had no interest except as trustee. On demurrer, assigning for cause that the nature of the trust did not appear:—Held, good. Reg. v. Brancaster (Churchwardens), 7 A. & E. 458; 2 N. & P. 580.

In pursuance of the will of a private person, his executor, by deed, conveyed lands to trustees for the benefit of the poor of a parish. The deed provided that a chest, of which there should be three locks and three keys, should remain in the parish church, for keeping all writings, accounts, &c., and the trust moneys remaining unexpended. One of such keys to be kept by the receiver, the second by the parson, the third by the churchwardens:—Held, that a mandamus lay to the trustees to compel the delivery of one key to the churchwardens, although the application concerned a trust and a mere private endowment. Reg. v. Ottery St. Mary, Devon, 8 G. & D. 382; 4 Q. B. 157; 7 Jur. 129; 12 L. J., Q. B. 118.

The advowson of a vicarage had been purchased by certain land-owners, and conveyed to feoffees, in trust, upon every avoidance, to present such person as should be nominated by the majority of the land-owners. At a meeting of the land-owners for the purpose of nominating a successor to a deceased vicar, a dispute arose as to which of two candidates, A. and S., had the legal majority of votes, and thereupon the trustees refused to concur in presenting. Upon an application for a mandamus to the trustees to present A.:—Held, first, that it could not be made by the land-owners, because their right, if legal, and not equitable, could be enforced by quare im-pedit. Orton Vicarage, In re, 14 Q. B. 189; 18 Jur. 1049; 18 L. J., Q. B. 321.

Held, secondly, that it could not be made by A., because he had no legal right. Id.

When granted, in actions, to enforce payment of money or performance of duties, under the provisions of The Common Law Procedure Acts.]—[By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 68, the plaintiff, in any action in any of the superior courts, except replevin and ejectment, may indorse upon the writ and copy to be served, a notice that the plaintiff intends to claim a writ of mandamus, and the plaintiff may thereupon claim in the declaration either together with any other demand which may now be enforced in such action, or separately, a writ of mandamus, commanding the defendant to fulfill any duty in the fulfillment of which the plaintiff is personally interested.

By s. 69, the declaration in such action shall set forth sufficient ground upon which such claim is founded, and shall set forth that the plaintiff is personally interested therein, and that he sustains, or may sustain, damage by the non-performance of such duty, and that performance thereof has been demanded by him, and refused or neglected.

By s. 70, the pleadings and other proceedings in any action, in which a writ of mandamus is claimed, shall be the same in all respects, as nearly as may be, and costs shall be recoverable by either party, as in ordinary actions for the recovery of damages.

By s. 71, in case judgment shall be given to the plaintiff, that a mandamus do issue, it shall be lawful for the court in which such judgment is given, if it shall see fit, besides issuing execution in the ordinary way for the costs and damages, also to issue a peremptory writ of mandamus to the defendant, commanding him forthwith to perform the duty to be enforced.

By s. 72, the writ need not recite the declaration or other proceedings, or the matter therein stated, but shall simply command the performance of the duty, and in other respects shall be in the form of an ordinary writ of execution, except that it shall be directed to the party and not to the sheriff, and may be issued in term or vacation, and returnable forthwith; and no return thereto, except that of compliance, shall be allowed, but time to return it may, upon sufficient grounds, be allowed by the court or a judge, either with or without terms.

By s. 73, the writ of mandamus so issued as aforesaid shall have the same force and effect as a peremptory writ of mandamus issued out of the Court of Queen's Bench, and, in case of disobedience, may be enforced by attachment.

By s. 74, the court may, upon application by the plaintiff, besides or instead of proceeding against the disobedient party by attachment, direct that the act required to be done by the plaintiff, or some other person appointed by the court, at the expense of the defendant; and upon the act being done, the amount of such expenses may be ascertained by the court, either by writ of inquiry or reference to a master, as the court or a judge may order; and the court may order payment of the amount of such expenses and costs, and enforce payment thereof by execution.

By s. 75, nothing herein contained shall take away the jurisdiction of the Court of Queen's Bench to grant writs of mandamus; nor shall any writ of mandamus issued out of that court be invalid by reason of the right of the prosecutor to proceed by action for mandamus under this act.

By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, s. 32, in all cases in which a writ of mandamus is issued under the provisions of "The Common Law Procedure Act, 1854," such writs shall, unless otherwise ordered by the court or judge, in addition to the matter directed to be inserted therein, command the defendant to pay to the plaintiff the costs of preparing, issuing, and serving such writ, and payment of such costs may be enforced in the same manner as costs payable under a rule of court are now by law recoverable.

The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 68, applies only to the fulfillment of such duties as might be enforced by the prerogative writ of mandamus, and not to the specific performance of contracts. Benson v. Paul or Paull, 6 El. & Bl. 278; 2 Jur., N. S. 425; 25 L. J., Q. B. 274.

But a mandamus may be claimed under the above provisions to enforce the fulfillment of a duty in which the plaintiff is personally interested, where such duty does not arise out of a mere personal contract. Norris v. Irish Land Company, 8 El. & Bl. 512; 4 Jur., N. S. 235; 27 L. J., Q. B. 115.

An action for a mandamus may lie even when no actual damage has been sustained. Fotherby v. Metropolitan Railway Company, 3 L. R., C. P. 188; 36 L. J., C. P. 88; 12 Jur., N. S. 1005; 15 W. R. 112; 15 L. T., N. S. 243.

The neglect by a railway company to issue a warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury to assess the value of land which the company has given notice of requiring for the purposes of its act, within a reasonable time after such notice, is an actionable wrong, and the issue of the warrant may be enforced by an action for a mandamus. Id.

When a debt is of such a nature that a mandamus will be granted to enforce its payment, it is not necessary that the amount of the debt should have been previously ascertained, but such amount may be ascertained by the verdict of the jury in the action in which the writ of mandamus is claimed. Ward v. Lowndes, 3 Jur., N. S. 1124; 28 L. J., Q. B. 263; 7 W. R. 499; affirmed in error, 6 Jur., N. S. 247; 29 L. J., Q. B. 40; 1 El. & Bl. 240; 1 L. T., N. S. 268—Exch. Cham.

A plea that the causes of action did not accrue within six years, is a bad plea to a declaration for a mandamus, as the Statute of Limitations does not bar an application for such a writ. Id.

A claim to a writ of mandamus cannot be sustained if there is any other equally effectual remedy. Bush v. Benson, 1 H. & C. 500; 33 L. J., Exch. 54; 8 Jur., N. S. 1015; 10 W. R. 845; 7 L. T., N. S. 100.

In an action by executors against the clerk of commissioners for putting into execution a town improvement act, and in which act they claimed a writ of mandamus, the declaration stated that the commissioners were indebted to the testator for the agreed salary payable by them to him for services rendered by him as clerk to the commissioners.

also for other work by him, as the attorney and otherwise for the commissioners in and about their business; that the debts became due and were a charge on any moneys which might be in the hands of the commissioners, and which should have been collected by them under and by virtue of the act; and that if the commissioners should not pay the debts, then such debts became a charge on the moneys in their hands sufficient to pay the debts, and were chargeable on a rate leviable and to be levied by the commissioners under the act. They pleaded to so much of the debts as became due on simple contract, the Statute of Limitations, and to the debts, except the agreed salary, that no signed bill was delivered, also, that the commissioners had no funds whereout they could pay the debts. Held, first, that the declaration was bad, inasmuch as, assuming that the services in respect of which the "agreed salary" was claimed were payable out of the rates, the others might be services for which the commissioners were personally liable, and consequently the remedy might be by action, not by a claim of mandamus. Id.

Held, secondly, that on the same principle the two first pleas were good. Id.

—under the Judicature Acts.]—A writ of mandamus under the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 8, can only be obtained in a pending cause or matter; the prerogative writ being preserved to the Queen's Bench Division by s. 34. Paris Skating Rink Company, Ltd. v. R. C. H. Div. 731; 46 L. J., Chanc. Div. 831; 25 W. R. 767—V. C. H.

While a petition for winding up a company was pending, notice of motion in the winding up was given to the company and the directors for a mandamus to direct them to convene an ordinary meeting. An order was made for winding up the company, which was reversed on appeal. The motion for a mandamus was then brought on. Held, that the court had jurisdiction to direct the issue of a writ of mandamus in every cause or matter pending before it, but inasmuch as the petition had been dismissed there was no longer any matter pending before it, in which it could make the order. Id.

When an action has been commenced in which a mandamus is claimed, an interlocutory application for a mandamus will not be granted unless it can be shown that the plaintiff will suffer some injury by waiting for the result of the action. Widnes Alkali Company v. Sheffield and Miffand Railway Company's Committee, 37 L. T., N. S. 131—C. P. Div.

As to proceedings by mandamus, generally, —see this title, II.

1. To Particular Courts, Officers, Corporations and other Persons.

To the privy council.—A mandamus will not lie to the lords of the privy council, commanding them to receive a petition praying them to re-hear a decision upon a case heard before and determined by them, upon an appeal from an ecclesiastical court to the judicial committee, instead of a court of delegates. Smith, Ex parte, 4 N. & M. 582; 1 H. & W. 282.

Where a case has been brought before the judicial committee of the privy council, on appeal from the Court of Arches, and the judicial committee has decided in favor of the appeal, at the same time retaining the principal cause, and ordering the unsuccessful party to appear absolutely, subject to the approbation of the king in council, which approbation has been afterwards given, the court cannot, on a suggestion of error in the decision, issue a mandamus to a privy council to receive a petition for a re-hearing of the appeal. Smyth, Ex parte, 3 A. & E. 719; 5 N. & M. 145; 1 H. & W. 417.

To inferior courts, generally.—Where a statute does not allow a removal of proceedings by certiorari, the court will not indirectly bring them under review by a mandamus. Reg. v. Yorkshire, W. R. (Justices), 1 A. & E. 563; 3 N. & M. 802.

A mandamus will go to a lord to hold a court baron, and to the homage to present conveyances of burgage tenures, whether those conveyances are legal or not. Reg. v. Montacute, 1 W. Bl. 60. S. P., Reg. v. Mithurnal, 1 Wils. 288.

So, to permit a court-leet and a court-baron to be held in the accustomed place. Reg. v. Grantham, 2 W. Bl. 716; Reg. v. Colebrooke, 2 Ld. Ken. 163.

But a mandamus to the mayor of Wigan to give the key of the town-hall to the lord of the manor to hold his leet there was refused, although the leet had been usually held in that place. Reg. v. Wigan (Mayor, &c.), 1 Wils. 76. And see Reg. v. Ilchester, 2 D. & R. 724; 4 D. & R. 324; 2 B. & C. 704.

A mandamus was granted commanding the lord of a manor to hold a court leet for the purpose of appointing a high constable of a hundred, though the day on which the court had been usually held for sixty years past had gone by, it not being distinctly sworn, that the court was held on that particular day by prescription. Reg. v. Milverton, 3 A. & E. 284; 1 H. & W. 282.

A mandamus to summon specific jurors upon a court leet was refused. Reg. v. Bunkes, 1 W. Bl. 452; 3 Burr. 1452.

The court will never grant a mandamus commanding the enrollment in an inferior court of an instrument, which, though in part valid, would, in its terms, give power to commit unlawful acts. Nor will the court by mandamus enforce the process of an inferior court, the judge of which has power to compel obedience to its process. Reg. v. Conyers, 8 Q. B. 981; 10 Jur. 899; 15 L. J., Q. B. 300.

Where an inferior court declines to exercise a jurisdiction imposed on it by law, the court will, by mandamus, enforce its proceeding; but, when it has acted, its judgment can only be reversed in that court on a case stated for its opinion. Reg. v. W. R. (Justices), 1 New Sess. Cas. 247—Q. B.

To justices, in general.—The court will not grant a mandamus commanding justices of the peace to do an act which may render them liable to an action. Reg. v. Buckinghamshire (Justices), 2 D. & R. 689; 5 B. & C. 485. S. P., Reg. v. Buckinghamshire (Justices), 3 N. & M. 68.

Therefore the court refused a mandamus to compel a magistrate to enforce a conviction, where it was doubtful whether such conviction was good for want of setting out the evidence on which it was grounded. Reg. v. Broderip, 7 D. & R. 861; 5 B. & C. 239.

Also, to summon a person for not paying poor-rates. Anon., 2 Chit. 257; 3 B. & P. 220.

Also, to make a warrant of distress for the poor's rate. St. Luke's Parish v. Middlessex (Justices), 1 Wils. 183.

The court, if it doubts whether the writ should or should not be granted, will not direct it to issue merely in order that the justices may make a return, and be protected by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 67, s. 3, if a peremptory mandamus should issue and be obeyed. Reg. v. Dartmouth, 5 Q. B. 878.

Where a mandamus is directed to justices, they ought not to make a return instead of obeying the writ, merely to gain the protection of the statute. Ib.

As to the protection conferred by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 67, s. 3, in respect of acts done in obedience to peremptory writs of mandamus, —see this title, II., 3.

A railway act enacted that the company shall not be obliged, nor any justice allowed to receive or take notice of any complaint for any loss or injury sustained in consequence of the execution of the powers of the act, unless notice in writing shall have been given by the complainant to the company within six months after the time of such loss or injury. And that, in case of differences between the company and owners of property, as to the amount of damage done thereto by the company, the same shall (when the claim does not exceed 20*l.*) be determined by two justices. A subsequent act, in all cases of land occupied by the company for temporary purposes, enacted that the compensation for the same shall be ascertained in like manner by the justices, whatever may be the amount claimed:—Held, that the notice required by the first act did not apply to cases before the justices. And, therefore, where a justice had dismissed a complaint for want of proof of such notice, the court granted a mandamus, calling upon him to hear and determine the complaint. Reg. v. Bingham, 4 Q. B. 877; 3 Railw. Cas. 390.

Mandamus commanding justices to hear and adjudicate on a complaint by overseers, that a pauper was chargeable to and ought to be removed from their township. The return showed that the justices had received and began to hear the complaint, and that in the course of the investigation it appeared that the pauper was chargeable to the township, and resided continuously in the township for ten years before the application, and during six of these ten years (before the passing of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66), had received parochial relief, and the justices thereupon decided that the pauper was irremovable:—Held, that the return was a sufficient answer, as it showed that the justices had not declined to exercise their jurisdiction, but had exercised it, though erroneously. Reg. v. Blanchard, 18 Q. B. 818; 18 L. J., M. C. 110.

— to compel issue of warrants of distress.] —It is the constant practice to call upon magistrates by mandamus to grant a distress warrant for levying a poor-rate. Reg. v. Cheek, 11 Jur. 86, n.—Q. B.

The court will not grant a mandamus to magistrates to order them to issue warrants of distress to levy a poor-rate on certain persons who have refused to pay, unless those persons have been previously summoned by the justices. Reg. v. Benn, 6 T. R. 198.

It is no objection to a rule for a mandamus to justices, to issue their warrant of distress for the levy of poor rates, that it includes two separate and distinct rates. Reg. v. Ellis, 2 D., N. S. 361; 7 Jur. 108; 12 L. J., M. C. 20.—B. C.—Patteson.

Although there are more than two magistrates at petty sessions, all of whom take part in a decision, by which the issuing of a distress warrant to levy poor rates is refused, it is not necessary that upon an application for a mandamus, all who were present and took part in the decision should be included in the rule; but that, if the court saw that any two had been selected, or that any of the justices so acting had been omitted for any improper purpose, all would be required to be joined. Ib.

Where upon an application for a mandamus to justices, to issue their warrant of distress to levy a poor rate, it appeared that the property, in respect of which the rate was sought to be obtained, was trust property, left by a testator for the purpose of a free school, and that one of the justices refusing to grant his warrant was a trustee of the estate:—Held, that, notwithstanding his character as such trustee, he was liable to the mandamus. Ib.

Where, in an answer to an application for a mandamus against magistrates, commanding them to issue distress warrants to levy a poor-rate, it was suggested that the warrants were to be executed within Hampton Court Palace, and that the officers of the crown claimed that the property was exempt from the operation of such warrants, and threatened proceedings if they were executed; the court nevertheless granted the writ, and refused to call upon the applicant parish to give the magistrates an indemnity against the consequences of any proceedings which might be taken. Reg. v. Middlesex (Justices), 2 D. N. S. 385 B. C.—Wightman.

So, where the court had decided that certain property was rateable, and the justices nevertheless refused to issue a warrant of distress unless an indemnity was offered, the court granted a mandamus. Reg. v. Mordue (Justices), 7 Jur. 259; 12 L. J., M. C. 36.—B. C.—Wightman.

The court has a discretion as to granting a mandamus to justices to issue a warrant of distress or commitment against a person summarily convicted by them. Thomas & parts, 9 Q. B. 976; 11 Jur. 107; 16 L. J., M. C. 57; 2 New Sess. Cas. 570.

On motion for a mandamus to justices to issue a warrant to distrain for a poor-rate, it must appear clearly to the court that the warrant would be legal, and that the parties applying have no other remedy to enforce the rate. Reg. v. Hall, 1 H. & W. 83.

Where there is no appeal given against an order of justices for expenses of a pauper, the justices are bound to enforce it, and in the event of their refusing, the court will grant a mandamus for a distress warrant. Reg. v. North Riding of Yorkshire (Justices), 6 L. T. N. S. 351 Q. B.

To sessions.] Where, on an appeal against a poor-rate to the sessions, the justices allowed the appellant to act upon a practice which then prevailed, but by which the appeal was put off till the next sessions, and the justices at those sessions, on an objection made to such practice, refused to hear the appeal, the court will issue a mandamus to them to do so. Reg. v. Wiltshire (Justices), 2 M. & R. 401, 8 B. & C. 380.

Where the sessions on determining an appeal have granted a case, but none has been stated, the court will, under some circumstances, direct a mandamus to the justices who heard the appeal to state a case, but not where it is clear that such a proceeding could lead to no result, as where the chairman, in consequence of his own opinion and that of the court upon the facts, refused to sign any statement but one which would have excluded the point of law relied upon by the party demanding a case. Reg. v. Pembrokeshire (Justices), 2 B. & Ad. 391. S. P., Jarvis v. Jarvis, 9 D. P. C. 120.

The court will issue a mandamus to hear an appeal, if the sessions have refused to hear upon an erroneous decision as to the sufficiency of the grounds of appeal. Reg. v. Carnarvon (Justices), 1 G. & D. 423.

The court will not issue a mandamus to compel the quarter sessions to give their reasons for their judgments, or make special entries thereof on their records. Reg. v. Devon (Justices), 1 Chit. 34.

Or grant a mandamus to the justices at sessions to re-hear an appeal against an order of removal, after judgment given by them, and entered by the clerk of the peace, for quashing the order: upon the ground that the justices at sessions were divided in opinion, and that the judgment was entered by mistake, instead of an adjournment of the appeal. Reg. v. Leicestershire (Justices), 1 M. & S. 442.

So, where the justices were divided, and the sessions, thinking it lay on the respondent parish to establish their case to the satisfaction of a majority of the court, quashed the order of removal, a mandamus was refused. Reg. v. Monmouthshire (Justices), 7 D. & R. 334; 4 B. & C. 844.

Where justices at sessions had heard witnesses in an appeal on the one side, and refused to hear those on the other, on the ground that their testimony had been prefaced by observations on the part of the advocate, contrary to their usual practice, the court refused to grant a mandamus to re-hear the appeal. Reg. v. Carnarvon (Justices), 4 B. & A. 86.

A party having been convicted of forcibly passing a turnpike gate without paying toll, the sessions, on appeal, rejected evidence to show that the gate had been unlawfully erected; and the court refused a mandamus to compel the sessions to receive such evidence, the admissibility of it being exclusively a question for the justices. Reg. v. Cambridge-shire (Justices), 1 D. & R. 325.

A mandamus to the justices in sessions, to allow an item of charge in a coroner's account, refused; because the justices were of opinion, under the circumstances, that there was no ground to suppose that the deceased had died any other than a natural, though a sudden death; and therefore that the inquisition had not been duly taken; and the court saw no reason for interfering with that judgment. Reg. v. Kent (Justices), 11 East, 220.

On appeal against a poor-rate on the ground that the appellant was over rated, the practice at the sessions requiring the appellant to begin by proving his case, which the appellant refusing to do, the appeal was dismissed; the court refused a mandamus to the sessions to re-hear the appeal on this objection. Reg. v. Suffolk (Justices), 6 M. & S. 57.

On an appeal against a rate under the Middlesex County Act, 3 Geo. 4. c. 107, the justices confirmed the rate, subject to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench on a case. The certiorari directed the justices to send up an order of sessions, "with all things touching the same;" and the court quashed the order of sessions. The sessions, after such order, were applied to to quash the rate, but refused, as the rate had not been removed into the court, and there was no longer any appeal against it. The court refused to grant a mandamus to compel them to enter continuances, and quash the rate: first, because, by so doing, the parties who had been engaged in collecting the rate might be exposed to an action; secondly, because the court could not compel the sessions to decide in a particular way. Reg. v. Middlesex (Justices), 1 P. & D. 402; 9 A. & E. 540; 2 W., W. & H. 100.

An appellant against an order of affiliation moved the court of quarter sessions for a postponement of the appeal, on account of the absence of material witnesses. They rejected the application; upon which the appellant declined going into his case, and the order was confirmed. On motion for a mandamus to the justices to hear the appeal, and affidavits tending to show that they had acted unjustly in not granting the postponement, the court refused to interfere, the matter being one peculiarly within the discretion of the sessions. Becke, Ex parte, 3 B. & Ad. 704.

Where the sessions decide, on a point preliminary to the whole case or to the reception of a particular piece of evidence, that they will not hear the case further, this is conclusive of the point involving matter of fact only; otherwise, if it raises a point of practice which the court can perceive to be matter of law. In the latter case the court will grant a mandamus to enter continuances and hear the appeal. Reg. v. Kesteven (Justices), D. & M. 113; 3 Q. B. 810; 1 New Sess. Cas. 151. S. P., Reg. v. Flintshire (Justices), 1 B. C. Rep. 331; 2 New Sess. Cas. 572; 11 Jur. 185; 16 L. J., M. C. 55.

The court of quarter sessions has no power of its own authority to erase an entry from the records of a past sessions. Reg. v. West Riding of Yorkshire (Justices), 3 G. & D. 170; 12 L. J., M. C. 148.

But a mandamus will issue directing it to be so, where an entry has been made which is manifestly false, and made without jurisdiction. Id.

Where the quarter sessions, having jurisdiction over an appeal, have directed an entry to be made, that an order of removal has been "quashed, not on the merits," the court will not grant a mandamus commanding an erasure of that entry, although it appears that the order, in point of fact, was quashed on the merits. Ackworth, Ex parte, 1 D. & L. 718; 1 New Sess. Cas. 64; 3 Q. B. 397; 8 Jur. 291; 13 L. J., M. C. 88.

Three persons, who had been summoned before a magistrate, for unlawful fishing, had been convicted, after a joint hearing, each in a separate penalty, and gave a joint notice of appeal to the sessions, describing the conviction as a joint conviction. Separate convictions were returned to the sessions:—Held, that the variance between the notice of appeal and the conviction was immaterial, because it could not mislead, and the court made a rule absolute for a mandamus to the sessions to hear the appeal. Reg. v. Oxfordshire (Justices), 3 G. & D. 348; 4 Q. B. 177.

The court refused to grant a mandamus to the chairman of the Middlesex sessions, requiring him to issue process for the apprehension of two persons against whom a bill of indictment had been found at those sessions a year previously for keeping a common gaming-house, upon the ground that an application for such process had been rejected at sessions. Reg. v. Russell, 1 D., N. S. 544; 6 Jur. 231—B. C.

A mandamus to enter continuances and hear an appeal will not be granted if it clearly appears that the sessions preceding those at which the appeal is entered were the next practicable sessions. Reg. v. Derbyshire (Justices), 19 W. R. 876—B. C.—Hannen.

The general rule that an application for a writ of mandamus to the quarter sessions to enter continuances and hear an appeal must be made not later than the term following the sessions at which the refusal was made, does not apply to an application to remove an order of sessions for the purpose of getting it quashed. Reg. v. Brecknockshire (Justices), 43 L. J., M. C. 135—Q. B.

When, on an appeal against a conviction coming on for hearing at the sessions, objection was taken to the conviction, by reason of the omission of certain words alleged to be material, and the justices, after discussion, quashed such conviction, declining either to amend or hear the evidence, the court has no power to interfere by mandamus, there having been a decision on the legal merits. Reg. v. Middlesex (Justices), Slade's case, 46 L. J., M. C. 225; 2 L. R., Q. B. Div. 610; 23 W. R. 610.

To county court judges and officers.—[By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 103, s. 43, no writ of mandamus shall issue to a judge or an officer of the county court for refusing to do any act relating to the duties of his office, but a party requiring such act to be done may apply to a superior court, or, by 21 & 23 Vict. c. 74, s. 4, to a judge thereof, upon affidavits of the facts, for a rule or summons calling upon such judge or officer of a county court, and also the party to be affected by such act, to show cause why such acts should not be done. See title COUNTRY COURTS.]

Where, before this enactment, the judge of a county court, upon an interpleader summons, erroneously decided against a claimant, on the ground that the notice of claim was insufficient, the court issued a mandamus to him to adjudicate upon the claim. Reg. v. Richards, 2 L. M. & P. 208; 20 L. J., Q. B. 351—B. C.—Coleridge.

But when a judge of a county court entered upon the hearing of a plaintiff, and from the evidence adduced before him decided that he had no jurisdiction to adjudicate between the parties, a mandamus would not lie commanding him to hear and determine it, even although he might be wrong in point of law. Milner, Ex parte, 15 Jur. 1037—Q. B.

To lords and stewards of manors.—A mandamus will not be granted, commanding the steward of a manor to accept a surrender into the hands of the lord according to the custom, unless the lord is made party to the rule. Reg. v. Evans, 1 Q. B. 855; S. C., nom. Reg. v. Wichford, 7 D. P. C. 709.

A mandamus will not lie to compel the admission of a customary tenant to a royal manor. Reg. v. Powell, 4 P. & D. 719; 1 Q. B. 352.

A mandamus to admit to a copyhold tenement must not be directed to the steward only; the lord must be joined. Id.

A mandamus was granted to the steward of the manor of Midhurst and to the homage to hold a court, and present certain conveyances to purchasers of burgage tenements, whereby they were entitled to be sworn burgesses of the corporation, and to vote for members of parliament. Reg. v. Midhurst, 1 Wils. 283.

In applying for a mandamus to the steward of a manor to enroll a deed of disposition, pursuant to 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 53, it is not necessary to annex a copy of the deed itself, if the contents are stated in an affidavit. Crosby v. Fortescue, 5 D. P. C. 273. S. P., Reg. v. Lunn, 2 H. & W. 314.

To government officers, public commissioners and others.—A mandamus will not lie to the crown, or its servants, strictly as such, commanding it or them to pay over money, in its or their possession, in liquidation of claims on the crown. De Bole, In re, 6 D. P. C. 778; 1 W., W. & H. 342.

Nor will a mandamus lie to the more public depositaries of money, commanding the payment by them of a sum in gross. Id.

The lords of the treasury recommended a retired allowance to a public officer, and obtained a vote of parliament for a particular sum, which was received from time to time under the appropriation act, by the proper officer. In several letters written by their secretary, these facts were stated, and directions given as to the mode of obtaining payment. The lords of the treasury refused to give an authority to him to pay it over to the individual to whom it was granted, unless upon conditions to which he would not agree:—Held, first, that he had a legal right to the amount so recommended. Reg. v. Treasury (Lord), 5 N. & M. 589; 4 A. & E. 286; 1 H. & W. 533.

Held, secondly, that the court would enforce payment by mandamus, inasmuch as the claimant had no other remedy, and as the writ was demanded, not against the king, but against officers into whose hands money had been paid under an act of parliament for the use of an individual. Id.

A party to whom a superannuation allowance has been granted in pursuance of a treasury minute, according to 5 Geo. 3, c. 117, in respect of an office held during pleasure, has no vested interest in such allowance; but the minute may be revoked at will by the lords of the treasury. Reg. v. Treasury (Lords), 4 A. & E. 976; 6 N. & M. 505.

The lords of the treasury granted, under 3 Geo. 4, c. 113, a pension for life to a person whose office had been abolished. They afterwards, thinking they had no power to grant such a pension, revoked their warrant. The amount once appeared in the parliamentary estimates, because the item could not be withdrawn in time. It was afterwards withdrawn, and no money was ever received from parliament on account of the pension, the sum which had been once in the estimates having been applied to the ways and means:—Held, that no mandamus could issue to the lords of the treasury to enforce payment of the pension. Reg. v. Treasury (Lords Commissioners), 4 A. & E. 984; 6 N. & M. 508; 2 H. & W. 67.

Deductions having been made from a naval officer's half-pay, in pursuance of a general order from the Admiralty, application was made on his behalf to have the amount of such deductions restored; and the Lords of the Admiralty stated, in answer, that they had given direction for restoring it. Afterwards they retracted their consent, giving, as a reason, that it would subject them to many similar applications. After the officer's death, his administratrix moved for a mandamus to the Lords of the Admiralty to restore the deducted sums, on the ground that they had admitted the right to them, and the possession of applicable funds:—Held, that there was no vested right in the half-pay entitling the administratrix to a mandamus. Ricketts, Ex parte, 6 N. & M. 523; 4 A. & E. 990.

By 9 & 10 Vict. c. 38, the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, on behalf of her Majesty, were empowered to take lands for the purpose of forming Battersea Park, which were to be conveyed to the Queen, or to trustees on her behalf, and to form a royal park. The commissioners had given notice of their intention to take lands of the prosecutor, but had not taken them:—Held, that mandamus would lie to the commissioners, commanding them to issue their warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury for assessing compensation to the prosecutor for the lands. Reg. v. Woods and Forests Commissioners, 12 Jur. 915; 17 L. J., Q. B. 341—Q. B.

The Commissioners of Woods and Forests gave notice under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 38, s. 15, that they intended to take lands specified in the schedule to that act for the purpose of forming Battersea Park. One of the landowners obtained a mandamus to the commissioners to cause a jury to be summoned, to assess compensation for his land. On return (stating the proceedings at length and showing that the commissioners, in pursuance of the act, and on behalf of the crown, gave the notices, in order to ascertain whether the lands could be purchased for a sum limited by section 1, which, by the claims sent in, it appeared they could not):—Held, that the commissioners under the statute were acting in a public capacity, and that the notice given by them did not constitute a quasi contract enforceable by a mandamus. Bulge, Ex parte, 15 Q. B. 761; 19 L. J., Q. B. 497.

The court will not grant a rule for a mandamus to the commissioners of excise, commanding them to assent to the appropriation of a part of an excise officer's pension, under

1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 56. Reg. v. Excise Commissioners, Hayward, In re, 9 Jur. 257; 14 L. J., Q. B. 113—B. C.—Williams.

The court will not grant a mandamus commanding the Commissioners of Woods and Forests to pay a poor rate in respect of lands held by them under the crown. Reeve, Ex parte, 5 D. P. C. 668; W., W. & D. 304.

The commissioners of customs refused to deliver up certain tobacco claimed as wrecked goods, and upon which a duty of 5l. per cent. had been tendered; the court refused to grant a mandamus to compel them to do so, as there was another remedy. Reg. v. Customs (Commissioners), 1 N. & P. 536; 5 A. & E. 380; 2 H. & W. 247.

Nor will it lie to commissioners of customs to compel the delivery up of goods wrongfully detained by them after payment of the duty. Reg. v. Customs (Commissioners), 6 N. & M. 828.

William the Fourth, in pursuance of the 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 11, granted, to trustees for his consort Queen Adelaide an annuity of 100,000l., to commence on the decease of his Majesty, and continue during the natural life of her Majesty, payable out of the Consolidated Fund, on the 13th March, 30th June, 30th September, and 31st December, by even and equal portions, the first payment to be made at such of those days as shall first and next happen after the decease of his Majesty, in case her Majesty should survive him. His Majesty died on the 20th June, 1837. On 30th June the trustees received a full quarter's payment. This payment was made after consulting the law officers of the crown, who advised that the entire sum was due; and her Majesty was informed of their advice. The quarterly payments were made up to and on 30th September, 1849. Her Majesty died on 2d December, 1849. Her trustees applied for a proportionate part of the quarterly payment which would have become due on 31st December, 1849, if she had so long lived. On a rule nisi for a mandamus to the Lords of the Treasury to issue a warrant for this payment:—Held, that if the annuity had been apportionable and the sum due, mandamus was the proper remedy; and that the court would not, in the exercise of its discretion, make the refunding of what on that supposition would have been the overpayment on 30th June, 1837, a condition to the issuing of the writ, there being no equity to require her Majesty's representatives to restore a sum received under the bonâ fide belief that it was her own. Reg. v. Treasury (Lords), 16 Q. B. 357; 15 Jur. 767; 20 L. J., Q. B. 305.

The court will not grant a mandamus calling upon the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury to pay a debt or claim unless they have admitted that they have received money granted by parliament for that specific purpose. Walmesley, Ex parte, 1 B. & S. 81; 7 Jur., N. S. 1010; 9 W. R. 590; 4 L. T., N. S. 242.

In the half-year ending the 31st of December, 1870, certain prosecutions took place at the assizes and quarter sessions of a county, and the costs were taxed by the proper officers under the orders of the respective courts, and the treasurer of the county paid the bills, and returned the bills, with the usual vouchers, to the treasury. The lords of the treasury had appointed officers called the examiners of criminal law accounts, and these officers disallowed or reduced in amount fifty-one of the items in the bills returned; and a rule nisi was then obtained for a mandamus to the lords of the treasury, commanding them to issue a treasury minute authorizing the paymaster of civil contingencies to pay to the treasurer of the county the sums disallowed:—Held, that a mandamus would not lie, inasmuch as the lords of the treasury received the money, which was granted to her majesty, as servants of the crown, and no duty was imposed upon them as between them and the persons to whom the money was payable. Reg. v. Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, 41 L. J., Q. B. 178; 7 L. R., Q. B. 887; 20 W. R. 836; 26 L. T., N. S. 64.

Held, also, that the course which the lords of the treasury had pursued was erroneous, as they had no authority whatever to have the bills retaxed, and ought to have paid over to the treasurer of the county the full sum which he had expended as costs of prosecutions. Id.

An officer commanding forces of the Queen and of the East India Company in India has no such legal right, by statute or otherwise, to his pay, as entitles him (in the absence of any specific undertaking or acknowledgment) to a mandamus calling upon the company to discharge arrears; though he has always received his pay from the company, and their practice has been to discharge it monthly. Napier, Ex parte, 18 Q. B. 692; 31 L. J., Q. B. 832; 17 Jur., N. S. 880.

Three persons were indicted, at the assizes for a county, for forging the will of D. D. died in a borough, and one of the prisoners took away the deeds, &c., of the deceased to his own house, which was in the county, but not in the borough; the forged signatures of the testator and of one of the witnesses were written in the borough; and the offense was completed in another county, where the forged signature of the second witness was written. The borough did not contribute to the county rate, but had a borough-fund of its own:—Held, that the order for payment of all costs and expenses of the prosecution was properly made on the treasurer of the borough, and a mandamus would lie to the treasurer to compel payment. Reg. v. Haycard, 17 L. J., Q. B. 223; 8 C., nom. Reg. v. Ousebury (Borough Treasurer), 12 Q. B. 239; 12 Jur. 744.

A bill being introduced into parliament for the purpose of more effectually draining a particular district of level through another district, entirely within the jurisdiction of the commissioners of sewers for the county of Norfolk, acting under 8 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, the commissioners apprehending that the bill would, if passed, occasion an injury to the land within their jurisdiction, bonâ fide, and with discretion and prudence, caused their clerk to take all reasonable and necessary steps for opposing the bill in parliament, and to prevent its passing or to obtain the adoption of certain clauses, and thereby a considerable amount for costs and expenses had been incurred, and remained due to the clerk, who had since died. Held, that the legal representatives were entitled to a mandamus, directing the commissioners to levy a rate on the land within their jurisdiction, under the 4 & 5 Viet. c. 45, and to pay off the amount due for such costs and expenses. Reg. v. Sewers of Norfolk (Commissioners), 20 L. J., Q. B. 121.

Commissioners appointed under a local act, were empowered to appoint officers at such salaries as they should think reasonable and to remove such officers, and appoint others. In some sections of the act the officers were spoken of as employed by the commissioners. The commissioners were empowered to make rates, which were vested in them, and they were directed to apply the moneys which should come to their hands under the act, in paving, lighting, &c., the parish, and carrying the several purposes of the act into execution:—Held, that an action did not lie against them by one of their officers for arrears of salary. Bong v. Pearce, 2 L., M. & P. 21; 10 C. B. 534, 20 L. J., C. P. 99.

To parish officers generally.]—A mandamus does not lie to admit a vestry clerk. Reg. v. Croydon (Churchwardens), 5 T. R. 713.

Nor to restore the clerk and treasurer of the guardians of the poor of St. Nicholas, Rochester. Reg. v. St. Nicholas, Rochester, 4 M. & S. 324.

Nor to overseers of the poor, to make a rate without first appealing to the sessions. Reg. v. Canterbury, 4 Burr. 2290; 1 W. Bl. 667.

Nor to collect a rate. Reg. v. Norwich (Overseers), Nolan, 28.

The court refused a mandamus to a board of guardians to admit a person as their clerk, who complained that the person filling the office had been unduly elected by the votes of guardians who were themselves not properly elected. Reg. v. Dolgelly Union (Guardians), 8 N. & P. 542, 8 A. & E. 501; 1 W. W. & H. 513.

When a person was appointed sexton of a parish by the minister, in whom the right to appoint primâ facie was, and the churchwardens refused to call a vestry meeting of the parishioners (who also claimed the appointment) to elect one, and it appeared that there was another method of trying the right; the court refused to grant a mandamus to the minister and churchwardens to call the vestry meeting. Reg. v. Stoke Damerel (Minister), 1 N. & P. 56; 5 A. & E. 584, 2 H. & W. 346.

A mandamus will lie against the old overseers to compel them to deliver their public books and papers to their successors. Puse v. Clapham, 1 Wils. 805.

But not to churchwardens to deliver a vestry book to the vestry clerk. Anon., 2 Chit. 255.

An assistant overseer, after the expiration of his office, having refused to deliver up the parochial books to the existing overseers, they applied to two justices under the statute; but the justices refused to interfere. The court granted a mandamus to compel the assistant overseer to deliver up the books. Reg. v. Fox, 1 W., W. & H. 4.

A local act required a select vestry from time to time to make rates for the relief of the poor, and also for the support and repair of the churches, and rate-payers were empowered to appeal to the vestry and also to the quarter sessions. It was also provided, that nothing in the act contained should avoid any ecclesiastical law, or in any manner interfere with persons having ecclesiastical jurisdiction over the parish:—Held, 1, that notwithstanding this saving of ecclesiastical rights, the court had jurisdiction to issue a mandamus to compel the vestry to make such a rate for the repair of the churches. 2. That a general refusal to do either of two things, one of which the vestry was required to do by act of parliament, was sufficient to entitle the churchwardens to a mandamus. 3. That a colorable adjournment of the question, under the pretense of waiting until the churchwardens had furnished estimates of the sum of money which would be required for the repair of the churches, was equivalent to a positive refusal to make a rate. Reg. v. St. Margaret's, Leicester (Select Vestry), 1 P. & D. 116; 8 A. & E. 889; 1 W., W. & H. 673.

Where a party applies for a mandamus to compel churchwardens to allow him to inspect their accounts, according to the directions of the 17 Geo. 2, c. 38, he must state some special reason for which he wishes to see the accounts. Rez v. Olear, 7 D. & R. 398; 4 B. & C. 809.

The court will grant a mandamus to commissioners, intrusted by act of parliament with the regulation of the expenditure of a parish, to compel them to levy a rate for the purpose of paying off a sum borrowed on the rates by former commissioners, without pledging their personal responsibility. Rez v. St. Paul, Shadwell (Commissioners), 1 M. & R. 591.

At an election of churchwardens the votes of tenants of small tenements, the owners of which were rated to the poor and highway rates, by virtue of 13 & 14 Vict. c. 99, tendered on behalf of one of the candidates, were rejected:—Held, that a mandamus to convene a vestry for the election of churchwardens would not lie to try the question whether such tenants were entitled to vote, it not being shown that the result of the election would have been different if their votes had been received. Mawby or Joyce, Ex parte, 8 El. & Bl. 718; 18 Jur. 906; 23 L. J., M. C. 153.

The court will not grant a mandamus, requiring parish officers to receive a pauper, in obedience to an order of removal. The proper course is by indictment. Downton (Overseers), Ex parte, 8 El. & Bl. 856; 27 L. J., M. C. 28.

There is no general unqualified right on the part of rate payers to inspect and take extracts from the churchwardens' books of accounts. To entitle a rate-payer to a mandamus to compel such inspection, some special and public ground must be shown. Briggs, Ex parte, 28 L. J., Q. B. 272.

By 10 Geo. 4, c. 59 (Metropolis Roads Act), s. 86, all annuities chargeable upon the tolls taken on any of the roads which shall cease to be under the management of the commissioners, are to be payable and paid by the respective parties by whom the roads, on the tolls of which the same were chargeable, are to be thenceforth maintained. By s. 11, the roads within the parish of St. Pancras shall be repaired from the same funds (except as to limitation of expenditure) as are by law chargeable with the repair of the highways within the parish. By a local act the rates made by the vestrymen of this parish are vested in directors, and to be applied (among other purposes) in making appropriations for the expenses of keeping highways in repair, with a limitation as to the amount of the appropriations; and the making of any rate, other than is thereby directed, is prohibited:—Held, that a mandamus to pay an annuity charged on the roads in the parish of St. Pancras, mentioned in the 10 Geo. 4, c. 59, s. 86, was wrongly directed to the churchwardens, overseers and inhabitants of St. Pancras, and should have been directed to the directors mentioned in the local act. Reg. v. St. Pancras (Churchwardens, &c.), 6 Jur. 391—Q. B.

Where by a custom of a parish one churchwarden was elected annually by the parishioners, and the other annually by the rector, and the latter appointed as his churchwarden a person who was not a parishioner, or an inhabitant of or occupier of property in the parish:—Held, that a mandamus to the rector to appoint a churchwarden was the proper process by which to question the validity of the appointment. Barlow, In re, 30 L. J., Q. B. 271; 5 L. T., N. S. 289.

To guardians and vestries.]—A local statute, after providing for the appointment of governors and guardians of the poor of a parish, and for the filling up of vacancies by the remaining governors and guardians, enacted, that after the first year "the inhabitants of the parish in vestry assembled" are to nominate and choose twelve persons in lieu of those retiring each year:—Held, that the meeting was to be called by the governors and guardians, and, therefore, the writ should be directed to them, notwithstanding 58 Geo. 3, c. 69, s. 1, and 1 Vict. c. 45, s. 3. Reg. v. St. Mary, Newington (Governors, &c.), 6 D. & L. 162; 2 B. C. Rep. 303; 12 Jur. 918; 17 L. J., Q. B. 220—Coleridge.

A vestry of a parish comprised within the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, having obtained the necessary approval of the Metropolitan Board of Works to the construction by them of such sewers as may be requisite for the drainage of the parish, has, under that section, a discretion with respect to the exigencies of one portion of the parish as compared with others, and is entitled to a reasonable time for the beginning and completion of the works; and a mandamus ordering the immediate construction of sewers in a particular part of the parish is defective, unless it shows on the part of the vestry a present duty, and a non-compliance therewith. Reg. v. St. Luke's, Chelsea (Ventry), 9 Jur., N. S. 308; 31 L. J., Q. B. 50; 10 W. R. 293; 5 L. T., N. S. 744.

As to mandamus to overseers,—see POOR LAW.

To corporations; to compel elections, generally.—A mandamus lies after an election merely colorable and clearly void. Res v. Cambridge (Mayor), 4 Burr. 2008.

The claim of cognizance as to the election of aldermen by the court of mayor and aldermen of London, does not exclude the jurisdiction of the court to issue a mandamus. Res v. London (Mayor), 4 M. & R. 36.

To a mandamus to a mayor to convene a meeting to proceed to an election, in order to fill up five vacancies in a select body, consisting of fifteen chief burgesses, he returned (after stating objections to the title of several of the remaining burgesses), that there were not then within the borough eight legally elected chief burgesses, by whom the election of others could be made, and that, for the several reasons before mentioned, he could not proceed to such election:—Held, an insufficient return. Res v. Monmouth (Mayor), 4 B. & A. 496.

A mandamus was granted to compel a mayor and the capital burgesses of a corporation to fill up two vacancies occasioned by the death of two capital burgesses, though there was a quo warranto information depending against the mayor, questioning his title. Res v. Grampound (Corporation), 6 T. R. 301.

The court will not in general grant a mandamus to elect another upon non-residence, unless the non-resident party has been previously removed. Res v. Truro (Mayor, &c.), 8 B. & A. 590; 3 Chit. 257.

By an act it was enacted, that the mayor, sheriffs, citizens, and commonalty of the city of Norwich, at an assembly to be held within three calendar months before the 4th of June in each succeeding year, should elect twenty persons to be guardians of the poor of the city, and that on the Monday in Easter week in every succeeding year there should be elected for each parish, hamlet, &c., of the city and county an additional number of persons to be guardians of the poor, amounting in the whole to forty-eight, and that the several persons so elected should enter upon the office of guardians on the 4th day of May next ensuing their election. There was then a proviso, that, in case default should be made in the election of a guardian or guardians, the other guardians might proceed in the execution of the act as fully and effectually as if the election of the guardian had actually taken place:—Held, that a clause fixing the time of election was directory, and the mayor, sheriffs, citizens, and commonalty having neglected to elect twenty persons to be guardians within three calendar months next before the 4th day of May, 1854, the court granted a mandamus to compel them so to do. Res v. Norwich (Mayor, &c.), 1 B. & Ad. 310.

The court refused to grant a mandamus to compel a corporation to elect members of an indefinite body. Res v. Fouey (Mayor), 4 D. & R. 132; 2 B. & C. 594; 5 D. & R. 614.

Where a charter of Hen. 7 granted to the citizens and commonalty in these words:—"Quod ipsi, et successores sui, in perpetuum singulis annis successivis, 24 concives civitatis in aldermannos, necnon 40 alios concives et justices civitatis pro communi concilio civitatis habeant eligere, facere, et creare possint," and it appeared that, in 1693, and the two following years, successive elections of the forty common councilmen had been made, since which time the usage had been not to elect the aldermen or common councilmen annually, the court refused a mandamus, which was applied for in order to raise the question against the usage, whether the election of these officers ought to be annual, there being no other remedy open to the parties making the application. Res v. Chester (Mayor, &c.), 1 M. & S. 101.

Where a charter, after ordaining who should be entitled to be burgesses, directed that they should make application for that purpose to the mayor and commonalty on a day certain in each year, and at no other time, and then make due and legal proof of their qualifications; and A. and B., claiming to be admitted burgesses, made application to the mayor and commonalty on the charter day, and offered to make due and legal proof of their qualifications, but their applications were not heard, nor their proofs received, on account of the time having been spent in other business; the court granted a mandamus to the mayor and commonalty to enter an adjournment to a subsequent day, and then to hold a meeting, and receive and examine such proofs. Res v. Carmarthen (Mayor, &c.), 1 M. & S. 697.

Mandamus to a corporation stating that, on 1st November, 1854, C. and S., two councillors of a ward, being a third part of the number assigned for the ward, were in turn to go out of office, and an election ought to have been held for the election of two councillors for the ward, but that an election was held on the 1st November for one councillor only, whereby the office of one councillor was vacant, and the writ commanded the mayor to proceed to the election of a councillor. Return that, on the 9th November, 1853, S. being a councillor for the ward, was elected mayor for a year, and until his successor should have accepted office, and S. then accepted the office of mayor, and held it till 9th November, 1854, when his successor was elected mayor and accepted the office, and S. ceased to hold the office of mayor, and by reason thereof S. was not, on the 1st November, 1854, in turn to go out of office as councilor, and the election ought not then to have been held for two councilors, and that on the 30th November, 1854, S. was duly elected councilor, and afterwards accepted that office, made and subscribed the declaration, and thence, continually, held and continued to hold, and did still hold and continue in that office, and the same during all the time had been and still was filled by S.:—Held, that the election of S. as councilor on 9th November, 1854, was, at any rate, not colorable, and there was therefore a plenary, and mandamus did not lie, the proper mode of questioning the election being by quo warranto. Frost v. Chester (Mayor, &c.), 5 El. & Bl. 531; 2 Jur., N. S. 114; 25 L. J., Q. B. 61.

— to compel new election. — [By 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 26, powers given to the Court of Queen's Bench under 11 Geo. 1, c. 4, were extended to municipal elections under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76.]

If it appeared with sufficient certainty to the court, that a person had been elected mayor of a borough on the day appointed by the usage, who was not qualified to accept the office, by reason of his not having previously taken the sacrament within the time limited by law, they would grant a mandamus to the electors to proceed to a new election, under 11 Geo. 1, c. 4, s. 2, as if no election had in fact been made. Rez v. Bedford (Corporation), 1 Enst, 79.

The court, however, expressed great doubt whether they could with propriety grant the writ in this case. Ib.

When a town councilor has been struck off the burgess roll, for non-payment of poor-rates, but continues to exercise the duties of the office, the court will not grant a mandamus to the mayor or aldermen to proceed to a new election, but will leave the parties to their remedy by quo warranto. Reg. v. Ricketts, 2 Jur. 446; S. C., nom. Reg. v. Phippen, 7 A. & E. 960.

Where an election to the office of mayor becomes void within the year, the court has power, under 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 26, to issue a mandamus commanding a new election. Reg. v. Pembroke (Corporation), 8 D. P. C. 302; 4 Jur. 317—B. C.

When there is a statutable incapacity in a person being twice elected to the office of mayor, the court will consider the election as void ab initio, and will thereupon issue a mandamus commanding a new election; and such mandamus must be addressed to the mayor and burgesses, though there is legally no mayor. Ib.

The court will grant a mandamus for the election of a new mayor, under 11 Geo. 1, c. 4, although a quo warranto is depending against the new mayor. Rez v. Bridgewater (Corporation), 3 Dougl. 379.

A mandamus to go to election upon judgment of ouster cannot be moved for till judgment is actually signed. Rez v. West Looe (Corporation), 3 Burr. 1386.

When a defendant is ousted on a quo warranto, the prosecutor is entitled to a mandamus for a new election, if he applies in a reasonable time; if he does not, the defendant is entitled to move for the writ. Rez v. M'Kay, 6 D. & R. 432; 4 B. & C. 658.

A charter having granted, that, upon the death or amotion of a principal burgess (who was appointed to hold for life), it should be lawful for the mayor and the remaining principal burgesses, within eight days next following, to elect another; the eight days after a vacancy having elapsed without an election, a mandamus was granted under 11 Geo. 1, c. 4, s. 2, to make an election. Rez v. Thetford (Mayor, &c.), 8 East, 270.

— to compel admission to office. — Upon affidavit that one of two candidates for an office had a majority only by means of illegal votes, the court granted a mandamus to the corporation to admit and swear in the other, who appeared upon the affidavits to have had the greater number of legal votes; and this, although the first was admitted and sworn into the office; there being no other specific, or, at least, no other such convenient mode of trying the right. Rez v. Bedford Level (Corporation), 6 East, 356; 2 Smith, 535.

Where three extraordinary vacancies, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 47, have been filled up by persons who had a majority of votes, the court will not issue a mandamus commanding the mayor and town council to admit two other persons to the office of town councilors. The proper mode of trying the validity is by quo warranto. Rez v. Winchester (Mayor, &c.), 2 N. & P. 274; 7 A. & E. 215; W., W. & D. 525; 1 Jur. 738.

A party, while still a councilor of one ward of a borough, was elected a councilor in another ward, and was admitted into office:—Held, that a mandamus should not be issued to swear in the candidate who had the next largest number of votes, the office being full, and being one for which a quo warranto might be brought. Reg. v. Derby (Councilors), 2 N. & P. 589; 7 A. & E. 419; W., W. & D. 671.

A mandamus will not lie to admit an inhabitant of a borough by prescription to be a free burgess, unless it appears, first, that he had an inchonte right to be a free burgess; and, secondly, that such office is a corporate office by prescription. Rez v. West Looe (Mayor), 2 D. & R. 178; 5 D. & R. 590; 3 B. & C. 677.

A mandamus to admit a recorder was refused, because there was a recorder de facto, and the party had another remedy by quo warranto; though both of them claimed under the same election. Rez v. Colchester (Mayor), 2 T. R. 259

Where, on a disputed municipal election, two of the candidates obtain a rule nisi for a mandamus to admit, and afterwards a rule nisi for a quo warranto against the parties admitted, the rule for the mandamus will not be, as a matter of course, discharged. Reg. v. Winchester (Mayor, &c.), 2 N. & P. 274; 7 A. & E. 215; W., W. & D. 525; 1 Jur. 738.

If the name of A. was inserted in the list of persons elected town councilors, duly published in pursuance of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 85, and he duly made and subscribed the declaration prescribed by s. 50, and on a later hour of the day a new list was published, in which the name of another candidate was substituted for that of A.; a mandamus laid to the mayor to receive and count the votes of A., and to permit him to exercise the functions of town councilor. Reg. v. Leeds (Mayor, &c.), 11 A. & E. 512; 5 Jur. 548.

It is no ground for refusing a mandamus to admit a party to an office to which he has been elected, that to a similar mandamus granted in respect of a former election of the same party a return was made, showing an excuse, valid in point of law, for not admitting him. Reg. v. London (Mayor), 1 N. & M. 285; 3 B. & Ad. 255.

A mandamus to the mayor of London, to admit a person to the office of auditor of the chamberlain's and bridgemaster's accounts, who had served them three years successively, and been elected again the fourth by the livery, refused; because the custom of the city appeared to be, that no person should be elected to or serve the office for more than two years successively. Reg. v. London (Mayor), 1 T. R. 428.

A mandamus will not lie to compel the high steward of a corporation to admit a commoner, unless the person claiming to be so admitted shows that he has a good title in omnibus. Reg. v. Malmesbury (High Steward), 4 Jur. 222—B. C.

As to when mandamus will be granted to compel admission to office, generally,—see this title, I., 1.

— to compel insertion or restoration of names in burgess rolls. — [By 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 24, it shall be lawful for any person whose claim shall have been rejected or name expunged at the revision of the burgess roll of any of the boroughs to apply, before the end of the term then next following, to the Court of King's Bench for a mandamus to the mayor for the time being of that borough to insert his name upon the burgess roll, and thereupon for the court to inquire into the title of the applicant to be so enrolled; and if the court shall award such mandamus, the mayor shall be bound to insert the name upon the burgess roll, and shall add thereto the words, "By order of the Court of King's Bench," and shall subscribe his name to such words, and thereupon the person whose name shall be so added to the burgess roll shall be deemed a burgess, and entitled to vote and act as a burgess in all respects as if his name had been put upon the burgess roll by the mayor and assessors; and upon every such application the court shall have power to make such order with respect to the costs as to the court shall seem fit.]

A rule calling upon a mayor to show why a mandamus should not issue, commanding him to insert the name of a person on the burgess roll, is nisi only. Reg. v. Harwich (Mayor), 2 L. M. & P. 666, n.—B. C.

The court will make absolute a rule for mandamus to insert a name on the burgess roll, although the year for which such burgess roll was made has expired since the grant of the rule nisi, and the mayor is dead, whom the rule was directed, such a writ is not peremptory in the first instance. Reg. v. Eye (Mayor), 2 P. & D. 248; 9 A. & E. 67.

Where the overseers of one of several parishes in a borough omitted to make out a burgess list required by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 15, so that at the Revision Court of the borough there was no list in which the name of a claimant for that parish could be inserted—Held, that this intermediate defect in title to be on the general burgess roll, which was made up of the several parish lists, did not preclude the court from issuing a mandamus for the insertion of his name. Reg. v. Lichfield (Mayor, &c.), 1 G. & D. 29; 5 Jur. 889; 1 Q. B. 453.

Where a party, whose name has been expunged from the burgess roll by the mayor on revision, applies to the court for a mandamus to replace it, the court is bound to require into his title. It is not, therefore, sufficient for him to show that his name was inserted by the overseers, and was expunged by the mayor, on an objection which, for want of legal notice under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 78, s. 24 (as the party alleges), ought not to have been heard. Reg. v. Harwich (Mayor), 8 A. & E. 919; 1 P. & D. 134; 1 W., W. & H. 611.

A householder of a borough had his name inserted by the overseers of a parish, within the borough, on the burgess list of the parish, which was signed by the overseers. The mayor struck off his name, without any objection having been made to it, but did not reject the list. A mandamus having issued commanding the mayor to insert the name on the burgess roll, the return alleged that the burgess list was not signed by the churchwardens, or either of them.—Held, that the mayor having acted on the list, this was an answer to the writ. Reg. v. Dover (Mayor), 11 Jur. 710; 16 L. J., M. C. 97; affirmed on error, 11 Q. B. 260; 12 Jur. 834; 17 L. J. M. C. 95—Exch. Cham.

— to compel other restoration to membership or office.—The court will not grant a mandamus to restore a person to an office where it is confessed that he was rightly removed, although without notice. Reg. v. Ashbridge (Mayor, &c.), Cowp. 523.

A mandamus lies to restore a recorder. Reg. v. Wells (Corporation), 4 Burr. 1990.

If a councilor of a corporation is ousted and another elected in his stead, and such election is merely colorable, a mandamus will be granted to permit the ousted party to exercise his office, but not to restore him to his office. Rez v. Oxford (Mayor, &c.), 6 A. & E. 849; 1 N. & P. 474.

A mandamus was refused to restore to the office of clerk of the Bridge-house estates in London, though the party was irregularly suspended, it appearing, on his own showing, that there was good ground for the suspension, if the proceedings had been regular. Rez v. London (Mayor), 2 T. R. 177.

But granted to restore to office a clerk or a surveyor of the city works, which was an office for life, and on appointment, an oath administered. Rez v. London (Mayor), 2 T. R. 182, n.

Where a corporator, who was entitled to divide a certain share of the profits of a fishery, which the corporators worked and enjoyed in partnership, was suspended from the perception of his profits until he paid a certain fine imposed by a by-law, with the breach of which he was charged, the court refused a mandamus to restore him to his office; he being still an officer, and having a remedy by an action for the tort against any who disturbed him in the lawful perception of his profits (if the by-law was illegal, or he was not guilty of a breach of it, or had been unlawfully suspended), or, considering the corporators as partners in the fishery, he having a remedy in equity for his share of the partnership funds unjustly withheld from him. Rez v. Whitstable Fishery Company, 7 East, 353; 3 Smith, 319.

—In respect of other corporate acts and matters.]—The bailiffs of a borough had been from time immemorial lords of the manor and owners of the guildhall within the borough, and by a charter of Philip & Mary power was granted to them to hold manor courts in the guildhall twice in every year, as of ancient time, and, until 1810, such courts had been immemorially held. In that year commissioners under an inclosure act awarded to Lord H. all the manor, with the rights, courts, &c., excepting to the bailiffs and burgesses the guildhall:—Held, that this exception did not exclude the new lord's right to hold his manor courts in the guildhall. Rez v. Ilchester (Bailiffs, &c.), 4 D. & R. 324; 2 B. & C. 764.

If there are words of permission in a charter, to do an act which is clearly for the public benefit, they are obligatory; therefore, where a charter declared that the mayor and jurats of an ancient town might hold a court of record for the holding of pleas, but which had been long disused, the court granted a mandamus to compel such court to be held, at the instance of an inhabitant of the town, though he was not a corporator. Rez v. Hastings (Mayor, &c.), 1 D. & R. 148; 5 B. & A. 692, n. S. P., Rez v. Huxering-atto-Dower (Steward), 2 D. & R. 170, n.; 5 B. & A. 691.

Where a charter is granted to a corporation to hold a court for the trial of causes, the disuse of that court for 200 years, and the want of funds to hold it, are no answer to a rule for a mandamus commanding them to hold it. Rez v. Wells (Mayor), 4 D. P. C. 502.

A mandamus was granted to put the corporate seal to the certificate of the election of the recorder, on an affidavit that he had the majority of legal votes; though it was stated that the other candidate had the majority at the election, and that the corporation had already certified his election. Rez v. York (Mayor), 4 T. R. 690.

A mandamus will not lie to appoint a general deputy under a by-law, although it requires that the under-steward, or his sufficient deputy, shall be attendant at every court to discharge the duties of his office. Rez v. Gravesend (Mayor), 4 D. & R. 117; 2 B. & C. 602.

A serjeant of mace to a corporation, being discharged from his office, refused to deliver up the mace to his successor:—Held, that no mandamus would lie to compel him to do so. Reg. v. Todd, 2 Jur. 565—Q. B.

As to compelling inspection of corporate books, records, &c.,—see EVIDENCE.

As to mandamus to public companies, their directors and officers,—see PUBLIC COMPANY.

II. PROCEDURE.

1. Application for, and Issue and Service of the Writ.

Time of making application.]—Any application for a writ of mandamus to justices, to enter continuances, and hear an appeal, shall be made not later than in the term following the sessions at which the refusal was made, unless special circumstances appear by affidavit to account for the delay to the satisfaction of the court. Reg. Gen., Q. B., E. T., 21 Vict., 6 May, 1858, El., Bl. & El. 255. See Reg. v. Richmond (Recorder), El., Bl. & El. 253; 4 Jur., N. S. 456; 27 L. J., M. C. 197.

A mandamus to the sessions to hear an appeal must be applied for promptly. Reg. v. West Riding, 1 G. & D. 706; 6 Jur. 506.

Where, at a sessions, held in January, the court confirmed an order in bastardy, subject to a case for the opinion of the court, or to a mandamus to hear the appeal, at the option of the appellant, who decided upon not bringing up the case, but applied for a mandamus in Easter Term:—Held, that the application was not made too late. Reg. v. Cheshire (Justices), 1 B. C. Rep. 104; 2 New Seas. Cas. 420; 4 D. & L. 94; 10 Jur. 808; 15 L. J., M. C. 114—Wightman.

Parties.]—In a rule for a mandamus to elect a mayor, a subsisting mayor de facto must always be a party. Rez v. Barnes, 2 Burr. 1452; 1 W. Bl. 445.

It is not necessary to specify the particular person to whom a mandamus should be directed. Reg. v. Carmarthen (Corporation), 4 Jur. 865—B. C.

One writ cannot issue at the instance of two persons, for the enforcement of separate claims, although they have been successors in the same office in respect of which the claim arises. Scott, Ex parte, 8 D. P. C. 828; 4 Jur. 579—B. C.

A mandamus against churchwardens and overseers may be sued out by one of their own body. Reg. v. Edleston (Overseers), 1 N. & P. 20; W. W. & D. 168.

It is no objection to counsel being heard to show cause against a rule nisi for a mandamus, to compel justices to enter continuances, and hear an appeal against a conviction under the Turnpike Act, that they were instructed by the attorney of the trustees of the road, and not by the convicting justice or the informer. Reg. v. Middlesex (Justices), 2 D., N. S. 716; 7 Jur. 896—B. C.—Williams.

If certain magistrates, attending at special sessions, do not take part in a decision of the sessions, they ought not to be brought before the court on an application for a mandamus in respect of that decision. Reg. v. Wiltshire (Justices), 8 D. P. C. 717; 4 Jur. 460—B. C.

A motion for a mandamus cannot be made by an applicant in person unless he is a member of the bar. Wason, Ex parte, 10 B. & S. 580.

Notice of application.—[By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 80, s. 5, in all cases of intended application to the Court of Queen's Bench, for a mandamus to proceed to an election of any corporate officer or officers in boroughs, it shall be lawful for the party intending to make such application to give notice in writing thereof to the party to be affected thereby at any time not less than ten days before the day in the said notice specified for making such application, in which notice shall be set forth the name and description of the party by whom such application will be made, together with a statement of the grounds thereof, and at the same time to deliver with such notice a copy of the affidavits whereby the application will be supported; and thereupon it shall be lawful for the said last-mentioned party to show cause in the first instance against such application; and if no sufficient cause is shown, it shall be lawful for the Court of Queen's Bench, on proof of the due service of such notice and statement, and of the delivery of a copy of such affidavits as may be used for the purpose of supporting such application, to make the rule for such mandamus absolute, if the court shall so think fit in the first instance, and also, if they shall so think fit, to direct that any writ of mandamus thereby ordered to be issued shall be peremptory in the first instance.]

Affidavits on motion for a mandamus to sessions to hear an appeal should state all the material facts that occurred at the sessions. Reg. v. West Riding (Justices), 2 New Sess. Cas. 1.

When a rule for a mandamus, obtained by churchwardens, had been discharged, with costs, on the ground that their affidavits were imperfect, and a subsequent rule was obtained by the same parties, on the same ground, amended affidavits, the court refused to discharge the second application upon the merits, and discharged the second rule also, with costs. Reg. v. Pickles, 12 L. J., M. C. 40—Q. B.

Rule absolute in the first instance.—[17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 70, upon application by motion for any writ of mandamus in the Court of Queen's Bench, the rule may in all cases be absolute in the first instance, if the court shall think fit.]

A rule for a mandamus to an archdeacon to administer the oath of office to a churchwarden, was absolute in the first instance, where there was no rival candidate, and reason assigned for the refusal to administer the oath. Reg. v. Lichfield and Coventry (Archdeacon), 5 N. & M. 42; 1 H. & W. 403.

[By 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 62, s. 9, a declaration is substituted for an oath.]

The rule is absolute in the first instance for a mandamus to swear in a chapelwarden, where, on the vacancy of a living, there is a dispute between the curate and the sequestrator who should appoint, and each has appointed one. Penruddock, Ex parte, 1 H. & W. 44.

A rule for a mandamus to churchwardens to swear in overseers of the poor, was granted absolute in the first instance. Reg. v. Manchester (Churchwardens), 7 D. P. C. 707.

The rule for a mandamus to justices to hear a charge against a person brought before them is not a rule absolute in the first instance. Reg. v. 1 ghun, 3 New Sess. Cas. 689.

But a rule for a mandamus to justices to allow a poor rate is absolute in the first instance. Reg. v. Godolphin, 1 D. & L. 830; 3 Jur. 574; 13 L. J., M. C. 57—B. C.—Williams.

As to peremptory mandamus in the first instance,—see this title, II., 3.

Rule to show cause; and determination.—A rule to show cause why one or more writs of mandamus should not issue is an improper form of rule. Reg. v. Bridgnorth (Mayor), 1 P. & D. 317; 10 A. & E. 66; 3 Jur. 384.

The court will not grant a rule in the alternative for a mandamus or a quo warranto. Reg. v. Leeds (Mayor), 11 A. & E. 512; 5 Jur. 548.

When cause is shown against a rule for a mandamus, the objection, that no sufficient demand and refusal appear, must be taken before the merits are discussed. Reg. v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 10 A. & E. 581; 2 P. & D. 649; 1 Railw. Cas. 509.

After the determination of the court upon a rule nisi for a mandamus, the question decided cannot be again discussed, as a special case, until there is a return made to the writ. Reg. v. Leicester (Justices), 7 D. & R. 708. And see 7 D. & R. 370, 4 B. & C. 891.

The court will make a rule for a mandamus absolute, although the affidavits on which the rule nisi was obtained contain misrepresentations and suppress facts, if sufficient remain answered to warrant the court in issuing a writ. Rez v. Payn, 1 N. & P. 524; 0 A. E. 392; W., W. & D. 142.

Affidavits in answer to a rule for a mandamus sworn before a commissioner, must contain the place where sworn, otherwise they cannot be read. Rez v. W. R. Yorkshire Justices, 3 M. & S. 493.

A mandamus applied for by the Earl of Radnor was directed to the trustees of a turnpike road:—Held, that an affidavit entitled, “The trustees of the H. roads on the prosecution of the Earl of Radnor,” was improperly entitled, and could not be read. Reg. v. Harnham Roads (Trustees), 5 Jur. 408—Q. B.

Form and contents of writ.—Every writ of mandamus shall be tested and made returnable on a day certain before the Queen at Westminster; and there shall be eight days between the teste and return of every such writ of mandamus, where the act required to be done is in London, or within forty miles thereof, and fourteen days in all other cases. R. 8.

Where there were only six days between the teste and the return:—Held, insufficient. Rez v. Holborn Union (Guardians), 7 A. & E. 281; W., W. & D. 395; 1 Jur. 706.

By a regulation of the judges, made under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 20, s. 16, it was ordered that every mandamus should be tested and made returnable on a day certain before the Queen:—Held, that the words requiring the teste to be on a day certain, meant a day in term. Reg. v. Conyers, 8 Q. B. 981; 10 Jur. 899; 15 L. J., Q. B. 300.

If one parish officer applies for a mandamus against another to concur in a rate, the writ must be as well against the applicant as the other. Anon., 2 Chit. 254.

A mandamus commanded “the directors of the Bristol Dock Company to make such alterations and amendments in the sewers as were necessary in consequence of the floating of the harbor:”—Held, that this was in the proper form, and that it was neither requisite nor proper to call upon the company to make any specific alteration, the mode of remedying the evil being left to their discretion by the act of parliament. Rez v. Bristol Dock Company, 6 B. & C. 181; 9 D. & R. 309.

A mandamus recited that it was the duty of the church trustees of St. Pancras parish, who had been required to produce accounts (in the terms of the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 85), and that they had refused to do so, and then ordered them to produce the accounts which they were ordered to keep by the local acts:—Held, that the mandamus was bad, in ordering more than was warranted, either by the grievance recited or by the General Vestry Act. Rez v. St. Pancras (Church Trustees), 1 N. & P. 507; 6 A. & E. 314.

A mandamus to churchwardens and overseers to make a poor's rate, recited that no rate had been made for the necessary relief of the poor, pursuing the form given by the crown office:—Held, that the writ was good, and that it sufficiently appeared that a rate had become necessary. Rez v. Edlaston (Overseers), 1 N. & P. 20; W., W. & D. 168; 1 Jur. 53. S. P.; Rez v. Gadsby, 1 N. & P. 572.

A writ which is bad in respect of one of the matters commanded is bad in toto, and a peremptory mandamus cannot be awarded. Reg. v. Tithe Commissioners for England and Wales, 14 Jur. 200; 10 L. J., Q. B. 177.

Where a company had given notice of requiring a part of premises, and a mandamus had been obtained, commanding the company to issue a precept for summoning a jury to assess compensation for the whole, the writ cannot go for part. Reg. v. London and South-Western Railway Company, 13 Q. B. 775; 12 Jur. 973; 17 L. J., Q. B. 326.

A mandamus commanded a person to deliver up, to the clerk of a court of requests, papers relating to the office. The writ did not show any claim by the person detaining to hold them under any right:—Held, that the writ was therefore bad, and that the defect could not be supplied by the return, on which it appeared that he claimed to be the lawful clerk of the court, and to retain the papers as such. Reg. v. Hopkins, 4 P. & D. 550; 1 Q. B. 160.

A direction in a mandamus to take measures for “obtaining and recovering payment” does not necessarily mean to bring an action, and such a direction, therefore, though not accompanied by a tender of indemnity, does not make the mandamus invalid. Reg. v. Commissioners of Port of Southampton, 4 L. R., H. L. Cas. 449; 39 L. J., Q. B. 253; 18 W. R. 1171; 23 L. T., N. S. 111.

When commissioners are, by an act of parliament, authorized to receive certain moneys, and at the same time directed to pay a portion of those moneys to another body of persons, the gross sum received is to be deemed the income of the commissioners, and the persons to whom the payment is to be made have an interest in that portion, and are entitled to enforce payment. Id.

An incorporated body having raised money under statutory powers by debentures, issued some of these debentures to one of their own body in payment for goods supplied by him, such a transaction being illegal under the statute by which they were constituted a corporate body:—Held, that in an action by the executors of an innocent holder for value of such securities, the same having been transferred to him from the original mortgagee in the manner provided by the statute, they were estopped from setting up as a defense the original illegality of the transaction, and that, under the Common Law Procedure Act of 1854, s. 68, the writ was in the proper form in praying for a mandamus to compel them to apply the money in their hands in payment of the plaintiff's claim, it being shown that the defendants did hold money in their hands raised under the powers of the statute, and applicable to that purpose, and that it was not necessary that the mandamus should direct the defendants to levy a rate for the purpose of satisfying the plaintiff's demand. Webb v. Herne Bay Commissioners, 19 W. R. 241; 5 L. R., Q. B. 642; 39 L. J., Q. B. 221.

Service of writ.—Where a copy of the writ was served without showing the original, the court refused to set aside the service. Ilg. v. Birmingham and Oxford Junction Railway Company, 1 El. & Bl. 203; 17 Jur. 24; 22 L. J., Q. B. 195.

Service of a rule nisi for a mandamus to the sessions to hear an appeal against the determination of the petty sessions, need not be upon the clerk of the peace; it is sufficient if it is served on the justices whose decision is complained against. Rez v. Tucker, 5 D. & R. 434; 4 B. & C. 545.

When a mandamus has been granted for the election of a mayor, under 11 Geo. 1, c. 4, s. 2, and a rule made that public notice should be affixed in the market-place, which had been done accordingly, the court granted an attachment for disobedience of the mandamus, against a member of the corporation, who was served with a copy of the rule, notwithstanding neither the original mandamus nor the rule was shown him at the time; for the public notice directed by the act is prima facie sufficient. Rez v. Edyvean, 3 T. R. 352.

But the application for the attachment would be well answered, if the party could show that he had no notice of the mandamus. Id.

3. Return to the Writ; Pleadings and other Proceedings; Judgment.

Statutes.—[By 9 Anne, c. 20, s. 1, returns to writs of mandamus are to be made on the first writ.

By s. 2, as soon as the return is made, the prosecutor may plead or traverse all or any of the material facts contained in the return, to which the person making the return shall reply, take issue, or demur, and such further proceedings are to be had as would be the case in an action for a false return; and in case a verdict shall be found for the party suing out the writ, or judgment given for him upon demurrer, or hy nil dicit, or for want of a replication or other pleading, he shall recover his damages and costs, as in such action for a false return, to be levied by ca. sa., fi. fa., or elegit; and a peremptory mandamus shall be granted without delay for him for whom judgment shall be given; and if judgment shall be given for the person making the return, he shall recover his costs of suit, to be levied as aforesaid.

By s. 3, persons against whom damages shall be recovered are not to be liable to be sued in other actions.

By s. 6, the court may allow a convenient time to return a mandamus, or to plead, reply, rejoin, or demur.

By 1 Will. 4, c. 21, s. 3, these several enactments are extended to all writs of mandamus.

By 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 58, s. 8, the operation of the Interpleader Act is to extend to applications for writs of mandamus.

By 1 Will. 4, c. 21, s. 4, it shall be lawful for the Court of King's Bench, to which application may be made for any writ of mandamus (other than such as relates to the offices and franchises mentioned in or provided for by 9 Anne, c. 20), if such court shall see fit so to do, to make rules and orders, calling, not only upon the person to whom such writ may be required to issue, but also all and every other person having or claiming any right or interest in or to the matter of such writ, to show cause against the issuing of such writ and payment of costs of the application, and upon the appearance of such other person in compliance with such rules, or, in default of appearance after service thereof, to exercise all such powers and authorities, and make all such rules and orders, applicable to the case, as are or may be given or mentioned by or in any act passed or to be passed during this present session of parliament, for giving relief against adverse claims made upon persons having no interest in the subject of such claims:

Provided always, that the return to be made to any such writ, and issues joined in fact or in law upon any traverse thereof, or upon any demurrer, shall be made and joined by and in the name of the person to whom such writ shall be directed; but, nevertheless, the same shall and may, if the court shall think fit so to direct, be expressed to be made and joined on the behalf of such other person as may be mentioned in such rules, and in that case such other person shall be permitted to frame the return and to conduct the subsequent proceedings at his own expense; and in such case, if any judgment shall be given for or against the party suing such writ, such judgment shall be given for or against the person or persons on whose behalf the return shall be expressed to be made, and who shall have the like remedy for the recovery of costs and enforcing the judgment as the person to whom the writ shall have been directed might and would otherwise have had.

By s. 5, in case the return to any such writ shall, in pursuance of the authority given by this act, be expressed to be made on the behalf of any other person as aforesaid, the further proceedings on such writ shall not abate or be discontinued by the death or resignation of, or removal from office of the person having made such return, but the same shall and may be continued and carried on in the name of such person; and if a peremptory writ shall be awarded, the same shall and may be directed to any successor in office or right to such person.

By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 67, s. 1, in all cases in which the person prosecuting any such writ shall wish or intend to object to the validity of any return made to the same, he shall do so by way of demurrer to the same, in such and the like manner as is now practiced and used in the Court of Queen's Bench in personal actions; and the writ and return and the demurrer shall be entered upon record, and such and the like further proceedings shall be thereupon had and taken as upon a demurrer to pleadings in personal actions; and the court shall thereupon adjudge er that the return is valid in law, or that it is not valid in law, or that the writ of mandamus is not valid in law, and if they adjudge that the writ is valid in law, but that the return thereto is not valid in law, then and in every such case they shall also by their judgment award that a peremptory mandamus shall issue in that behalf, and thereupon such peremptory writ of mandamus may be sued out and issued accordingly, at any time after four days from the signing of the judgment; and it shall be lawful for the court, in and by their judgment, to award costs to be paid to the party in whose favor they shall thereby decide by the other party or parties.

By s. 2, whenever any such judgment shall be given, or whenever issue in fact or in law shall be joined upon any pleading in pursuance of 9 Anne, c. 20, and 1 Will. 4, c. 21, or either of them, and judgment shall be given thereon, it shall be lawful for any party to the record in any of such cases, who shall think himself aggrieved by such judgment, to sue out and prosecute a writ of error for the purpose of reversing the same, in such manner as a party to any personal action in the Court of Queen's Bench may now sue and prosecute a writ of error upon the judgment in such action; and such and the like proceedings shall thereupon be had and taken, and such costs awarded, as in ordinary cases of writs of error upon judgments in personal actions; and if the judgment be reversed by the court of error, the court of error shall thereupon by their judgment not only reverse the same, but shall also in addition thereto give the same judgment which the court, whose judgment is so reversed, ought to have given in that behalf; and if by their said judgment they shall award that a peremptory writ of mandamus shall issue, the same shall and may accordingly be issued by the proper officer in the office from which such writs issue, upon production to him of an office copy of the said judgment of the court of error, which shall be his authority and warrant for so doing:

Provided always, that the bail in error to the amount of fifty pounds, or such other sum as may by any rule of practice be appointed, shall be duly put in within four days after the allowance of the said writ of error, and the same shall afterwards be duly perfected according to the practice of the court wherein the original judgment was given, otherwise the plaintiff in error shall be deemed to have abandoned his writ of error, and the same shall not be further prosecuted.

Before this enactment, the Court of King's Bench having allowed the sufficiency of a return, and therefore refused to grant a peremptory writ, the party applying brought his writ of error into parliament:—Held, that no writ of error lay, it being merely an award of the court, and not strictly a formal judgment. Pender v. Herle, 3 Bro. P. C. 505.

The 9 & 10 Vict. c. 113, regulates the proceedings on writs of mandamus in Ireland.

By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 76, upon application by motion for any writ of mandamus in the Court of Queen's Bench, the rule may in all cases be absolute in the first instance, if the court shall think fit, and the writ may bear tests on the day of its issuing, and may be made returnable forthwith, whether in term or in vacation; but time may be allowed to return it, by the court or a judge, either with or without terms.

By s. 77, the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, and of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, so far as they are applicable, shall apply to the pleadings and proceedings upon a prerogative writ of mandamus issued by the Queen's Bench. See Reg. v. Saddlers' Company, 1 B. C. C. 133; 23 L. J., Q. B. 451.]

Parties to make return to writ.—The court has a discretion under 1 Will. 4, c. 21, s. 4, whether it will allow a return to a mandamus to be made and joined on behalf of a third person, claiming a right or an interest in or to the matter of the writ. Reg. v. Cheek, 9 Q. B. 943; 11 Jur. 86; 16 L. J., M. C. 65.

After a demurrer to a return by the party to whom it is delivered, the court will let in the party really interested to make a return. Reg. v. Pynnter, 9 Jur. 926; 14 L. J., M. C. 182—Q. B.

The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 70, s. 10, is to be read with reference to the power of the Court of Queen's Bench to compel the performance of a public duty by public officers, although the time prescribed by statute for the performance of it has passed; and if the public officer to whom belongs the performance of the duty has in the meantime quitted his office, and has been succeeded by another, it is the duty of the successor to obey the writ, and to do the acts, when required, which his predecessor omitted to perform. Rochester (Mayor) v. Reg. (in error), 4 Jur., N. S. 1227; 27 L. J., Q. B. 434; El., Bl. & El. 1024—Exch. Cham.

Sufficiency of return.—When several causes returned are inconsistent, the whole is bad. Reg. v. Cambridge (Mayor), 2 T. R. 456; 4 Burr. 2008.

That B. was not a burgess, that he was not eligible to the office of common councilman, and that he was not elected, are not inconsistent returns. Ib.

A return to a mandamus to admit, or show cause to the contrary, may show one or more, or any number of causes, provided they are consistent. Wright v. Faucett, 4 Burr. 2041.

It is inconsistent to state in a return to a mandamus (to certify the election of a recorder, supposed in the writ to be on the 15th of January), that the corporation was not then duly assembled; and afterwards to state the election of another corporate officer, to wit, on the 15th of January. The day in such a case is material; and being laid under a viz., does not make any difference. Reg. v. York (Mayor), 5 T. R. 60.

The mandatory part of the writ may be very general, but the return must be very minute in showing why the party did not do what he was commanded to do. Reg. v. Port of Southampton (Commissioners), 1 B. & S. 5;

7 Jur., N. E. 900; 30 L. J., Q. B. 244; 9 W. R. 680.

A return that C. was not duly elected sexton according to ancient custom, that there is a custom for the inhabitants to remove at pleasure, and that C. was removed pursuant to such custom, is good. Reg. v. Taunton (Churchwardens), Cowp. 118.

Mandamus to a lord and the steward of a manor to hear a plaint. Return, that, in 1835, the plaint was set aside, and annulled for certain errors; that afterwards (in 1838), in obedience to the writ, the defendants heard the plaint again, when, for the same errors and others, it was adjudged that the plaint had been rightly set aside in 1835 and that they could not take further cognizance of the plaint; that therefore they could not proceed in the plaint, as by the writ they were commanded:—Held, first, that the return was not contradictory, on the ground that it stated both that the plaint had been proceeded with in obedience to the writ, and that it could not be so proceeded with; and secondly, that the return showed that judgment had been given, and that the court could not review it. Reg. v. Old Hall (Lord of Manor), 2 P. & D. 515; 10 A. & E. 248; W., W. & D. 650; 8 Jur. 808.

To a mandamus requiring A., a waywarden, to deliver to the churchwardens certain books of account, assessments, &c., in his custody, power or possession, it is a good return to say, that on and since the teste of the writ, A. had not nor has had the books, &c., or any of them, in his custody, power or possession. Reg. v. Round, 5 N. & M. 427; 4 A. & E. 139; 1 H. & W. 546.

A statute directed that a sum of money should be paid to commissioners who were therewith to execute all such works as should from time to time be deemed necessary, proper or expedient, for putting certain banks and bridges in a permanent state of stability and security, and for constructing the fore-lands and slopes of the banks, as far as practicable, upon one uniform system. By a mandamus, reciting this clause, and that the money had been paid to the commissioners, they were ordered to proceed to put the banks forthwith in a permanent state of stability and security, and to construct the fore-lands and slopes of the banks, as far as practicable, upon one uniform system. Return, that the commissioners had from time to time, at all times from the passing of the act hitherto, proceeded to execute all such works as should be or were from time to time deemed necessary, proper or expedient for putting the banks in a permanent state of stability and security, and for constructing the fore-lands and slopes of the banks as far as practicable, upon one uniform system:—Held an insufficient return, and a peremptory mandamus was awarded. Reg. v. Ouse Bank Commissioners, 3 A. & E. 544.

Mandamus to the officers of a parish included in a union, reciting the due appointment of certain persons to be guardians of the poor of the union, and directing them to pay a sum, out of the poor-rates collected from them, to the treasurer of the union. Return, that the supposed guardians were not, and were any of them, duly appointed under the provisions of the act, and that at the issue of the writ guardians therein mentioned were not, nor were any of them, guardians of the poor of the union:—Held, that the return was insufficient for not distinctly setting forth any defect in the appointment. Reg. v. Andrews and St. George's (Governors, &c.), A. & E. 736.

A mandamus to admit A., an attorney, to the Lord Mayor's Court, alleged it to be an inferior court. The return, without traversing this allegation in terms, set out at length the peculiar customs and jurisdiction of the court, in order to show that it was not within the operation of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 2. —Held, on special demurrer, that the return was not bad in form, as an argument to traverse the allegation in the writ. Reg. v. London (Mayor, &c.), 13 Q. B. 1; 11 Jur. 807; 10 L. J., Q. B. 185.

By a dock act, persons were formed into a company for improving a port, and made proprietors of the works, and were authorized and required to make, complete and maintain a new course or channel for a river, the same to be of equal depth and breadth at the bottom, and with equal inclinations of the sides, as the then present river course had in those parts thereof which had not been excavated or embanked, or as near as circumstances would admit, except in such parts of the new course as should be cut through rock or stone. A mandamus issued to the company, stating in the inducement that the company had made and completed a new channel, but that parts of the south bank or side not cut through rock or stone had since become and were broken down and out of repair, and the inclination of the side was thereby greatly altered, to the danger of obstruction of the navigation. And the company was commanded to repair and maintain the parts of the south bank. Return, that the company was not required by the statute, nor otherwise liable, to repair and maintain the said parts, and that, as near as circumstances had admitted or did admit, they had maintained the new course of equal depth and breadth at the bottom, and with equal inclination of the sides, as the river course, at the time of the act passing, had in those parts which had not been excavated or embanked, and except such parts of the new course as had been cut through rock or stone:—Held, that the last part of the return was bad, as traversing matter of law, and also because a legal objection appeared. Reg. v. Bristol Dock Company, 3 Q. B. 64; 2 Railw. Cas. 529, 6 Jur. 216.

Held, also, that the second part was also bad, as not answering the mandatory part of the writ, but applying only to matter stated in the writ as a consequence of the omission to repair. Id.

A mandamus to a board of health, recited that the prosecutor had been injured by the exercise by the board of the powers of the act; that he had demanded compensation from the board, and that they had denied all liability; and enjoined the board to cause compensation to be made to him out of the general or special rate to be levied under the act. The return stated that the board had not denied all liability, and that the board was always ready to make compensation as soon as it had been duly ascertained under the act; that it had not yet been so ascertained, nor had the prosecutor taken any steps towards having it ascertained, nor given the board notice of the amount of his claim, nor informed it whether it was above 20*l.*, nor appointed nor given notice of his intention to appoint an arbitrator. This return was traversed generally; and on the trial it was found that the board had denied all liability; and a verdict was entered for the prosecutor. On a motion to enter the verdict on the rest of the return for the board, and to enter judgment for them:—Held, that under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 144, the mandamus was good, and that the prosecutor was entitled to a verdict on the whole return, and to a peremptory mandamus; for that, as it did not appear on the return that there was any dispute as to amount, the rest of the allegations in the return (beyond the traverse of the denial of liability, which had been found for the prosecutor) was immaterial. Reg. v. Burslem Board of Health, 5 Jur., N. S. 1394; 28 L. J. Q. B. 345; 7 W. R. 551; 1 El. & El. 1077.

To a mandamus to a corporation to restore a member, a return stating generally, that the body was duly assembled to remove, is sufficient. Rez v. Doncaster (Mayor, &c.), 2 Ld. Ken. 391; 2 Burr. 738.

In a return by a corporation to a mandamus to restore a member, who has been removed, it should appear that the body removing had proved the charge for which the member was removed; it is not sufficient to state merely that he was present when the charge was made, and did not deny it. Rez v. Faversham Fishermen's Company, 8 T. R. 352. And see Rez v. Carmarthen (Burgesses), 1 M. & S. 697.

Mandamus to enter a person on the burgess roll. Return that he was not duly qualified, and was disqualified by reason of his non-payment of the borough rate. The borough rate was invalid:—Held, that the former part of the return was distinct from the latter, and constituted a good return. Reg. v. New Windsor (Mayor, &c.), 7 Q. B. 998; 9 Jur. 798; 14 L. J. Q. B. 319.

Mandamus to the mayor, aldermen and burgesses of a borough, named in Schedule A. of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, and divided into wards, recited that no election of assessors to revise the burgess lists with the mayor in place of the last assessors had been made on or since 1st March, 1844, by reason whereof the offices were still vacant; and the writ commanded the mayor, aldermen and burgesses to meet and elect such assessors. Return, that they did meet, and were ready to elect and to deliver and receive voting papers, but there was not, at the time of such meeting, nor has there been thence hitherto any assessor of the borough, wherefore they could not elect. On demurrer to the return, for not stating how and under what circumstances it happened that there was no assessor for the borough:—Held, first, that the return was bad for that reason. Reg. v. Weymouth (Mayor, &c.), 7 Q. B. 46; 10 Jur. 67; 14 L. J. Q. B. 353.

Held, secondly, that the mandamus did not in itself show that the election could not be proceeded with. Id.

Held, thirdly, that any omission to appoint assessors might be remedied by an election under 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 73, s. 26, which extends to officers eligible under that act, and the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, the provisions of the 11 Geo. 1, c. 4, ss. 1, 2. Id.

Objections to writ after return; and what defects are cured by the return.—After a return has been made, the defendant cannot make any objection to the writ itself. Rez v. York (Mayor), 5 T. R. 60.

After a return to a writ which is set down in the crown paper to be argued upon a concilium, it is competent to the defendant to object to the writ for any defect in substance. Reg. v. Powell, 1 Q. B. 352; S. C., nom. Reg. v. Richmond (Steward, &c.), 5 Jur. 605.

The court had given judgment for a defendant upon a demurrer to a return to a mandamus:—Held, that an objection to the sufficiency of the writ might be taken at any time before issuing the peremptory mandamus. Clarke v. Leicestershire and Northamptonshire Canal Company, 6 Q. B. 898; 3 Railw. Cas. 730; 9 Jur. 215—Exch. Cham.

Mandamus to churchwardens and overseers to produce the parish rate books at a scrutiny of the polls taken at the election of churchwardens and overseers. The writ stated the refusal of the defendants to be to the damage of the parishioners, and the complaint to be by them. The return denied facts stated in the inducement respecting the polls. Two parishioners, for themselves and the other parishioners, traversed these denials, on which issues were joined, and found for the crown:—Held, that it sufficiently appeared that the two parishioners were the prosecutors of the mandamus. Reg. v. Full, 1 Q. B. 636; 2 G. & D. 803; 13 L. J. Q. B. 187—Exch. Cham.

A writ, which omits a necessary fact, cannot be cured by the return. Reg. v. South-Eastern Railway Company, 17 Jur. 901; 4 H. L. Cas. 471. S. P., London (Mayor, &c.) v. Reg. (in error), 13 Q. B. 30; 13 Jur. 33; 17 L. J. Q. B. 330—Exch. Cham. And see Reg. v. Hopkins, 4 P. & D. 550; 1 Q. B. 160.

Attorneys of the superior courts are entitled, by virtue of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 27, to be admitted to inferior courts of law. Where, therefore, a writ of mandamus was directed to the presiding officers of the Lord Mayor's Court to admit A., and described it as an inferior court, without stating it to be a court of law:—Held, that such writ was bad, and that the defect was not cured by such court being described in the return as a court of law. London (Mayor, &c.) v. Reg. (in error), 18 Q. B. 30; 18 Jur. 88; 17 L. J., Q. B. 330—Exch. Cham.

Amendment of writ upon return.—A mandamus to a company, incorporated by the name of "The D., S., and W. Junction Railway," was directed to them as "The D., S., and W. Junction Railway Company." Upon return, the court amended the writ by striking out the word "company." Reg. v. Derbyshire, Staffordshire, and Worcestershire Junction Railway, 2 C. L. R. 1653; 18 Jur. 1054; 23 L. J., Q. B. 833.

A mandamus cannot be amended after a return has been made to it. Reg. v. Stafford (Mayor, &c.), 4 T. R. 689.

Where a mandamus had, under the direction of a special pleader, been drawn with a teste out of term, and so issued, and a return had been made and demurred to, whereupon the defendant objected, that the writ was wrongly tested, the court, by its general authority, may amend; for the mistake was that of the officer, not the party, the officer being bound to see that a proper teste was affixed, and not adopt an irregular one given by the prosecutor. Reg. v. Conyers, 8 Q. B. 981; 10 Jur. 899; 15 L. J., Q. B. 800.

Quashing or superseding writ.—A mandamus for compensation, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 66, was moved for, on the ground that the prosecutor had, by the passing of the act, lost the emoluments of an office; and that, although he had since been re-appointed to another office at an increased salary, there had been no agreement between the prosecutor and the corporation that such increase should be deemed a compensation for the loss. On return and trial of an issue, bringing this fact into question, the judge and jury declared themselves of opinion that such an agreement had existed:—Held, no ground for quashing the mandamus. Reg. v. Stamford (Mayor, &c.), 6 Q. B. 433.

The mandamus required the corporation, by its corporate style, to assess compensation (instead of requiring the council to assess compensation, and the corporation to execute a bond) after return and issue in fact tried:—Held, that assuming the writ to be materially defective in form, the court ought not to quash it on motion. Ib.

After a mandamus has been granted, a return made, and an issue thereon tried, the court will not quash the writ on grounds which were or might have been discussed on showing cause against the application for it; as, that a suggestion on which the motion was made is untrue. Ib.

A notice of a motion to quash or supersede a mandamus or any other writ whatever, must always be given. Anon., 1 Wils. 30.

A college may interpose to stop a manda-mus to a visitor. Reg. v. Kely (Bishop), 1 W. Bl. 52.

Where a writ has been obtained for a mandamus to issue, and the mandamus is taken out in other terms than are warranted by the rule, and differing not merely by adding things incidental to a mandamus, but materially enlarging the terms, the court will quash the mandamus; notwithstanding, perhaps, they would have granted a rule as large if it had been applied for upon the same affidavits, and they will not, upon a motion to quash, amend the rule, to support the mandamus the party ought, if there is a mistake, to apply to amend his rule before the mandamus issues. Reg. v. Water Eaton (Mayor, &c.), Smith, 54. And see Reg. v. Tucker, 5 D. & R. 434; 5 B. & C. 545.

A mandamus to a company to summon a jury was obtained on affidavits, showing that the applicant had a claim for the value of land in his occupation taken by the company, and likewise for damage done to his remaining land by severing it, and had asserted both claims to the company. By mistake, the rule was drawn up for a mandamus to summon a jury who should assess the value of the land, and omitted to mention damages for severance. The mandamus was drawn including both, and was quashed, as varying from the rule. The court refused to amend the rule, so as to make it agree with the writ; but they afterwards, on the original affidavits, and on counsel's statement of the mistake, granted a mandamus, including both objects. Reg. v. East Lancashire Railway Company, 9 Q. B. 980; 11 Jur. 169; 16 L. J., Q. B. 127.

A company gave notice to B. G. and D., trading in copartnership, of their intention to take the premises occupied by them, for the purposes of their railway, under the powers of the act of parliament constituting the company, which incorporated the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18. A mandamus having been granted to the company, commanding them to issue their precept for summoning a jury to assess the amount of compensation to be paid to B. G. and D., the court refused to quash the writ, although it was alleged to have been obtained without the knowledge or assent of D., one of the copartners, but left the company to make a return of the facts, if they should think fit. Reg. v. London and Southwestern Railway Company, 13 Jur. 10—Q. B.

Pleading to return, generally.—The prosecutor may plead several matters to the return by leave of the court. Reg. v. Ambergate Railway Company, 17 Q. B. 937; 16 Jur. 777.

If there is in a writ of mandamus a defective statement of a valid claim, but that statement renders it necessary to establish facts which, if established, would support the claim in the writ, the defectiveness, though it might be fatal on demurrer, is cured by the verdict. Delamere v. Reg. (in error), 2 L. R., H. L. Cas. 419, 35 L. J., Q. B. 913; 17 L. T., N. S. 1.

To a mandamus, suggesting that trustees of a turnpike-road had carried the road over the private grounds of C., but had not (as directed by 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 60) fenced them on each side, and commanding them to do so, a return was made: 1. Denying that the land belonged to C. 2. Alleging that the trustees had made satisfaction to C. (under 3 Geo. 4, c. 120, s. 83) for the damage done by so carrying the road, which satisfaction C. had accepted, had taken security for the amount, and had proceeded to enforce the security. 3. Alleging that the trustees had no funds enabling them to execute the required work. C. pleaded, tendering issue on the denial of property, and leaving the other allegations unanswered. Issue was joined, and a verdict found for the crown:—Held, that the unanswered allegations were no valid return; that the want of funds was no excuse after the road had been made; and that the prosecutor, having succeeded on the plea, was entitled to a peremptory mandamus. Reg. v. Luton Roads (Trustees), 1 Q. B. 860.

Mandamus to the defendant, as vicar of a parish, to restore the prosecutor to the office of clerk and sexton of the parish. The return, after alleging the right of the defendant, as vicar, to remove for lawful cause, and upon any vacancy legally arising to nominate, appoint and admit a legal and discreet person, stated the dismissal of the prosecutor by the defendant for various acts of misconduct, alleging them to have been done by the prosecutor in the presence and hearing of the defendant, and also the appointment of another person by the defendant in his place. The prosecutor, in his first plea, admitted the right, as alleged by the vicar, and the appointment of another person as clerk in his place, but pleaded de injuria as to the residue of the return; and pleaded, secondly, that he was not, before the removal from his office, summoned by the defendant to answer or explain the charges and cause of dismissal:—Held, first, that the return was bad, for not showing that the prosecutor had had an opportunity of answering the charges made against him before dismissal. Reg. v. Smith, D. & M. 564; 5 Q. B. 614; 14 L. J., Q. B. 166.

Held, secondly, that the second plea only admitted the truth of the charges for the purpose of that plea, and that the whole record showed no such admission, as the truth of the charge was put in issue by de injuria. Id.

Mandamus to the lord and steward of a manor to admit P. upon payment of the usual fines and fees to copyhold estates, which were alleged in the writ to have descended to her as the heiress-at-law of T., deceased, who was her maternal uncle, and the person last seized. The return alleged that the estates did not descend to P. as the heiress of T., and that P. was a stranger in blood to T., and not entitled to the estates whereof T. died so seized. Plea, that P. was not a stranger in blood to T. as alleged:—Held, that the plea was to be considered as a distinct and single plea, and that it traversed an immaterial allegation in the return, and was therefore bad. Reg. v. Dendy, 1 El. & Bl. 829; 17 Jur. 970; 22 L. J., Q. B. 247.

Traversing facts contained in return.—The prosecutor of a mandamus, to which a return has been made, having moved for a concilium, and the court having, upon argument, adjudged that the return is sufficient in point of law, cannot afterwards traverse the facts contained in the return. Reg. v. London (Mayor, &c.), 3 B. & Ad. 253.

The prosecutor of a mandamus moved to take the return off the file, on affidavit, and on objections made against the validity of the return itself; the court, after argument on the law and facts, ordered, in general terms, that the rule should be discharged. The defendant then traversed the return. On motion to take the traverse off the file, because judgment had already been given in favor of the validity of the return:—Held, that discharging a rule under the circumstances was not equivalent to a judgment on concilium, and that the prosecutors were entitled to traverse, the court saying, that they did not intend, on the motion, to decide upon the validity of the return in point of law. Reg. v. Payn, 11 A. & E. 955; 3 P. & D. 623.

But where the court quashes part of a return to a mandamus on a concilium, they will allow the prosecutor to traverse the other part of the return after the judgment on concilium. Reg. v. North Midland Railway Company, 3 P. & D. 622; 11 A. & E. 955, n.; 2 Railw. Cas. 1.

A mandamus stated that L. was an inhabitant householder, and had paid all rates, including all such borough rates directed to be paid under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, as had become payable by him, except such as had become payable within six months next before the 31st of August; that the overseers inserted his name in the burgess list, and that at the revision of the list the mayor expunged it. The return traversed the allegation as to payment of rates, and alleged non-payment of a certain borough rate:—Held, that the title set up in the writ was answered, and that a general traverse of the allegation in the writ as to payment of rates was sufficient. Reg. v. Dover (Mayor), 11 Jur. 710; 16 L. J., M. C. 97; affirmed on error, 11 Q. B. 260; 12 Jur. 384; 17 L. J., M. C. 95—Exch. Cham.

Demurrer to return, and argument on demurrer.—Where, on return to a mandamus (to admit a copyholder), concilium has been obtained, and the return, on argument, held sufficient in law, and a peremptory mandamus awarded, the court will not, at the instance of the party making such return, direct the prosecutor to demur, in order that the case may go to a court of error. Reg. v. Oundle (Manor), 1 A. & E. 283; 3 N. & M. 484.

On demurrer to a traverse of the return, the defendant may impeach the validity of the writ. Clarke v. Leicestershire and North- amptonshire Canal Company, 6 Q. B. 806; 3 Railw. Cas. 730—Exch. Chanc.

Although the return may be in the nature of a demurrer, the counsel for the crown is entitled to begin. Reg. v. St. Pancras (Church Trustees), 1 N. & P. 507, 6 A. & E. 314.

The party demurring to a return is entitled to be first heard, as in an ordinary demurrer. Reg. v. Smith, 5 Q. B. 614; D. & M. 564; 13 L. J., Q. B. 166.

Upon demurrer to a plea to a return, the court refused an application of the prosecutor that he might withdraw his plea, and argue the question upon the return. Reg. v. York (Mayor, &c.), 6 Jur. 1082—Q. B.

Where a return is set down for argument on a concilium, the defendant may take objections to the writ in matters of substance. Reg. v. Powell, 4 P. & D. 719; 1 Q. B. 832.

Inspection of documents referred to.]—A mandamus, the object of which is to enforce a civil right in a proceeding, in aid of which the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6, a judge may grant an order for the inspection of documents by either of the litigant parties, when the return to such writ is traversed. Reg. v. Ambergate Railway Company, 17 Q. B. 957; 10 Jur. 777.

Amending or withdrawing return.]—A clerical mistake may be amended in the return, after the return has been filed. Reg. v. Lyme Regis (Mayor, &c.), 1 Dougl. 133.

Leave may be given to withdraw a return by consent. Reg. v. Barker, 3 Burr. 1379.

The court will not direct in what manner justices shall make their return to a mandamus; but if the return made to it is insufficient to raise the question intended to be agitated, the court will, at the instance of the party interested, make a rule, giving the justices liberty to amend in the manner required, if they wish so to do. Reg. v. Marriott, 1 D. & R. 166.

A rule for a mandamus to a magistrate, commanding him to issue a warrant of distress upon the goods of A., who showed cause against the rule, was made absolute, and a return was subsequently made. The court allowed A. to amend the return, no loss of time or other injury being occasioned thereby, but not to file a separate return. Reg. v. Paynter, 9 Jur. 926; 14 L. J., M. C. 182—Q. B.

The court would not allow the defendants in a traverse to amend the return to a mandamus by setting forth a different constitution, where the application was after verdict. Reg. v. Grampound (Mayor, &c.), 7 T. R. 699.

Quashing return.]—A rule for quashing a return to a mandamus need not go into the crown paper. Reg. v. St. Katharine's Dock Company, 1 N. & M. 121; 4 B. & Ad. 860.

It is discretionary in the court either to determine the validity of a return to a mandamus on motion, or to order the cause to be set down in the crown paper for argument. Id.

In showing cause against a rule for quashing a return, the defendant may shew that the writ was improperly issued. Id.

If a return consists of several matters, not inconsistent with each other, a part of them good in law and fact, the court may quash the return as to the bad only as is bad, and put the parties to plead to or traverse the rest. Reg. v. Bridge (Mayor), 2 T. R. 456; 4 Jur. 1081 P., Reg. v. York (Mayor), 5 T. R. 16.

The court may quash part of a return in concilium as well as on motion, and leave the prosecutor to traverse part of the return on the judgment on concilium. Reg. v. Midland Railway Company, 3 P. & D. 11 A. & E. 955, n.; 2 Railw. Cas. 11.

On showing cause against a return traversing the return, affidavits cannot be taken. Reg. v. Harham Roads (Trustees), 4 Jur. 2—Q. B.

When a return is not traversed on the face of it, its validity must be urged on concilium, and not on a rule for quashing the return. Reg. v. St. Nicholas, Salter (Wardens, &c.), 3 N. & P. 126.

Nor will the court, in such case, order a return to be taken off the file, on the ground of its being a contempt of court, as directed by affidavits. Reg. v. Payne, 3 N. & P. 1 W., W. & H. 105.

The court will not quash a return to a mandamus (which directs an inferior court to give judgment on an indictment) merely because it states an erroneous judgment below; but a writ of error must be brought to reverse that judgment. Reg. v. W. R. & A. (Justices), 7 T. R. 467.

Judgment.]—Under 9 Anne, c. 20, s. 1, Will. 4, c. 21, s. 3, judgment non obverdictio may be given for the party making return to a mandamus. Reg. v. Dr. School (Governors), 6 Q. B. 682.

When a mandamus had been issued, and ought not to have issued, against a company for making a road, and the company merely traversed a part, and the issue raised had been found against the company, and a peremptory mandamus had been awarded:—Held, that on a writ of error the court being satisfied that the mandamus ought not to have issued, had properly reversed the whole judgment. Reg. v. Eastern Railway Company, 4 H. L. Cas. 17 Jur. 931.

As to proceedings upon mandamus motions.—see this title, I., 1; upon peremptory mandamus, —see this title, II., 3.

As to costs in mandamus proceedings—this title, II., 4.

3. Peremptory Mandamus.

Issuing.]—By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 67, s. 1, "in any action or suit, or any other proceedings, commenced or prosecuted against any persons whatsoever, for or by reason of any done in obedience to any peremptory

Mandamus issued by any court having authority to issue writs of mandamus.]

The court, if it doubts whether a mandamus should or should not be granted, will not grant it to issue merely in order that justices make a return and be protected by this writ, if a peremptory mandamus should be made and be obeyed. Reg. v. Dartmouth, 5 B. 878.

A party, whose right to an office has been established by a verdict, cannot have a peremptory mandamus to restore him to his office until he has signed judgment in the action. Entle v. Bowles, 1 H. & W. 584.

A peremptory mandamus will not be awarded until the proceedings on the first mandamus are complete. Reg. v. Baldwin, 8 B. & E. 947; 3 P. & D. 124; 1 W., W. & H. 881.

The court granted a peremptory mandamus, in the first instance, to the bailiff of the Honor of Pontefract, to deliver up the corpse of a person who had been committed to his custody under a ca. sa., and which he detained on the ground of certain fees due to him remaining unpaid. Wakefield (In re Bailiff), 1 G. & D. 566; 5 Jur. 989; S. C., nom. Reg. v. Fox, 1 Q. B. 246.

An attachment was ordered against the mayor of a corporation, for not making a return to a peremptory mandamus within the time prescribed by the writ, though there was no personal service. Reg. v. Fowey (Mayor, &c.), 5 D. & R. 614; 2 B. & C. 584.

The court will not grant a peremptory mandamus to reinstate a person in a corporate office, though the return made may be objectionable or defective in point of form, if the facts stated on that return justify the court in refusing the mandamus as matter of discretion; such as to compel the corporation to restore an officer whom they would be bound immediately to remove in a more formal manner. Reg. v. Bristol (Mayor), 1 D. & R. 389; S. C., nom. Reg. v. Griffiths, 5 B. & A. 731. And see Reg. v. Bank of England, 2 B. & A. 620.

When a mandamus is addressed to churchwardens during their year of office, and disobeyed by them during that period, it is no reason for refusing a peremptory writ that their year of office has expired. Reg. v. Allen, 27 L. T., N. S. 707; 8 L., Q. B. 60; 43 L. J., Q. B. 87; 21 W. R. 190.

Quashing.]—After judgment for the crown on a return to a mandamus, the defendants having voluntarily, and with the prosecutor's consent, done the act enjoined, the court will quash a peremptory writ of mandamus as unnecessary and an abuse of the process of the court. Reg. v. Saddlers' Company, 4 B. & S. 570; 33 L. J., Q. B. 68.

Disobedience.]—A return, stating an excuse for non-compliance with a peremptory writ, is inadmissible. Reg. v. Poole (Mayor, &c.), 1 G. & D. 728; S. C., nom. Reg. v. Ledgard, 1 Q. B. 616.

There cannot be a return to a peremptory mandamus. Reg. v. Hudson, 9 Jur. 845—Q. B.

An attachment cannot be granted against the mayor, aldermen and burgesses of a borough, for disobedience to a peremptory writ requiring them to pay a sum of money secured by a compensation bond under the corporation seal, but the particular individuals who have been concerned in disobeying the writ must be named in the rule for the attachment. Reg. v. Poole (Mayor, &c.), 1 G. & D. 728; S. C., nom. Reg. v. Ledgard, 1 Q. B. 616.

Review.]—Upon the award of a peremptory mandamus error will not lie, there being no plea to it, and it therefore not being in the nature of a judgment. Dublin (Dean, &c.) v. Rex (in error), 1 Bro. P. C. 73.

A writ of mandamus is a prerogative writ, and not a writ of right, and the granting of it is, in that sense, discretionary. Reg. v. All Saints, Wigan (Churchwardens), 1 L. R., App. Cas. 611; 25 W. R. 128; 85 L. T., N. S. 881—H. L.

The exercise of this discretion cannot be questioned, but the grant of a peremptory mandamus is a decision upon a right, declaring what is and what is not lawful to be done, and such decision is subject to review. Id.

4. Damages and Costs.

Right of prosecutor to damages and costs, generally.]—An action will lie for a suppressio veri in a return, as well as for an allegatio falsi. Rex v. Lyme Regis (Mayor, &c.), 1 Dougl. 149.

Though, by 9 Anne, c. 20, s. 2, the prosecutor of a mandamus, to which there is a return, and issue taken on the facts therein, had an option to try the question in the same county in which he might have brought an action for a false return, yet, if all the material facts are alleged in one county, and issue taken thereon there, he cannot issue the venire facias into another county, though he might originally have alleged the facts there, and have there brought his action for a false return. Rex v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne (Mayor, &c.), 1 East, 114.

A party who has been removed from being a member of a corporation, and who has been restored by mandamus, cannot maintain an action for damages against the members of the corporation who removed him by an act done in their corporate capacity, nor recover the costs of the mandamus. Harman v. Tappenden, 1 East, 555; 3 Esp. 278.

All prosecutors of a mandamus are, by 1 Will. 4, c. 21, entitled to damages and costs, whether an action for a false return can be sustained by them or not. Reg. v. Fall (in error), 1 Q. B. 636; 2 G. & D. 803; 13 L. J., Q. B. 187—Exch. Cham.

third, that he was a householder. The first issue was found for the corporation, and the other two issues for the prosecutor.—Held, that he was not entitled to the costs of the issues on which he had succeeded, under Anne, c. 16; 9 Anne, c. 20; or Reg. Gen., H. T. 2 Will. 4, r. 74; or 4 Will. 4, Reg. v. Malmesbury (Mayor, &c.), 3 G. & D. 482; Q. B. 577; 6 Jur. 1107.

Judgment of ouster having been given in a quo warranto against a person exercising the office of an alderman of a borough, and the town council having failed to fill up the vacancy within ten days, and having subsequently declined to do so, the relator obtained a mandamus commanding them to hold an election for that purpose, which was obeyed. The court ordered the defendants to pay the costs of the mandamus to the prosecutor. Reg. v. Cambridge (Mayor, &c.), 4 Q. B. 801; 9 Jur. 11; 14 L. J., Q. B. 82.

Although the costs of obtaining a writ of mandamus, where cause is shown, are in the discretion of the court, yet they ought to be given to the successful party, unless there are strong grounds to the contrary. Reg. v. Harden, 1 B. C. C. 214; 18 Jur. 147; 28 L. J., Q. B. 127.

Where cause is shown against a rule for a mandamus, the court, in the exercise of its discretion, will in general order costs to be paid, by that party to the application who ultimately fails to that party who ultimately succeeds, but the rule is not invariable. Reg. v. Surrey (Justices), 9 Q. B. 37; 10 Jur. 422; 15 L. J., M. C. 117.

Where a mandamus has been applied for to justices at sessions, to compel them to perform an act they erroneously supposed they had no power to do, if the party, in whose favor such decision is given, opposes the application for the writ unsuccessfully, the general rule, that an unsuccessful party must pay all the costs, is applicable. Reg. v. Cumberland (Justices), and Reg. v. Lancashire (Justices), 3 New Sess. Cas. 202; 2 B. C. Rep. 287; 5 D. & L. 430; 12 Jur. 1048; 17 L. J., M. C. 188—Wightman.

The rule is, that where an application for a mandamus is made and opposed, the unsuccessful party pays costs, except under very particular circumstances. Reg. v. Surrey (Justices), 14 Q. B. 684; 2 New Sess. Cas. 377; 14 Jur. 457; 19 L. J., M. C. 171.

The court, in the exercise of its discretion, will generally order that the costs of a mandamus shall be paid to the successful party. This rule applies when, on the one hand, there has been a wrongful refusal to do the act which the court afterwards compels the party to do; or when, on the other hand, the party applying for the writ fails on a discussion of the merits. In either case, however, it is essential that no blame should have attached to the successful party. Reg. v. Langridge, 1 Jur., N. S. 64; 24 L. J., Q. B. 73—B. C.—Crompton.

A rule had been obtained calling upon B. and certain justices of the county of Suffolk to show cause why the justices should not issue a distress warrant against B. to levy the amount of a poor-rate. B. showed cause against the rule, upon the ground that the premises in respect of which he refused to pay the rate were not within the jurisdiction of the magistrates, as they were in the county of Norfolk, and not in the county of Suffolk. The rule was made absolute in order that the fact might be determined in some other way. A warrant was accordingly issued, and a levy made upon B.'s goods, which he replevied, and the cause went down for trial at the assizes, the issue being, whether or not the premises were in the county of Suffolk. The jury found in favor of B., and thereupon he applied for the costs incurred in resisting the original rule:—Held, that he was entitled to such costs. Reg. v. Great Yarmouth (Justices), 1 Jur., N. S. 476—B. C.—Coleridge.
